And the same is true of a constitution—

> everything necessary to the making of it effectual or requisite to attain the end is implied. "Quando lex aliquid consedit, consedere videtur et id, per quod devenitur ad illud." (1 Kent's Commentaries, page 464.)

I had supposed that question had long since been set at rest.

Before I leave this branch of the subject I may say that the case of Burnham vs. Morrissey, 14 Gray, 226, is authority on another point. In that case it was held that in the investigation before a legislative committee—

> It is no ground for the refusal of a witness to produce books or papers that they are private. (18 Howard, 71; Paschal's Const., note, 252, 258.)

My colleague [Mr. GARFIELD] on Saturday referred to the protection afforded by some clauses of the amendments to the Constitution. This case in Massachusetts was decided under a constitution giving all the guarantees of the national Constitution, and yet the Massachusetts court said that one branch of the Legislature could require the production of private books or papers.

I pass on to say a few words on another branch of this subject.

It is urged that the whole power of punishment has been transferred to the courts by section 104 of the Revised Statutes, which renders the witness liable to indictment as for a crime in a criminal court for his refusal to testify.

The Constitution says—

> No person shall be held to answer for * * * crime unless on a presentment for indictment of a grand jury, * * * nor shall any person be subject for the same offense to be twice put in jeopardy.

Now, a contempt is not a crime. The courts punish for contempts without indictment. It has never been objected that such punishment is unauthorized. So here, this House has not imprisoned Kilbourn for crime. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] has argued that the imprisonment is detention, not punishment. However that may be, it is not detention or punishment for crime. This House has not abdicated its jurisdiction, then, by authorizing an indictment for the wrong to the public, which is the indictable crime.

But there has been much discussion as to the effect of the statute relating to habeas corpus. It has been urged that the habeas corpus act requires the production of the body of Kilbourn. If so it is a mockery of the law and an insult to the court for this House to order what the statute requires. But neither section 758 of the Revised Statutes, which requires the production of the body, nor section 752, which authorizes judges "to grant writs of habeas corpus," has any relation to this case. My colleague [Mr. HURD] on Saturday showed us that the writ does not issue except by force of a statute. If the court had not so decided, I would say it would issue as a common-law right and by a judge ex virtute officii. But the court has so decided. Now, when the Constitution was adopted, this House immediately by the lex et consuetudo parliamenti had the right to imprison for contempt. No statute was required; none was ever passed. This was common parliamentary law. That is just as much law and as forcible law as a statute. If it be repealable at all it can only be done by a statute or the usage of the House.

On all questions of personal liberty it and the habeas corpus statute are laws in pari materia. Now the habeas corpus act was not intended to repeal the common parliamentary power of imprisonment for contempt.

Kent, in commenting on the rule that "acts in pari materia and relating to the same subject are to be taken together," says—

> That a code of statutes relating to one subject was governed by one spirit and policy and was intended to be consistent and harmonious in its several parts and provisions. (1 Kent, page 464.)

And he proceeds to say:

> "Statutes are likely to be construed in reference to the principles of the common law; for it is not to be presumed that the Legislature intended to make any innovation upon the common law further than the case absolutely required." This has been the language of the courts in every age; and when we consider the constant, vehement, and exalted eulogy which the ancient sages bestowed upon the common law as the perfection of reason and the best birthright and noblest inheritance of the subject, we cannot be surprised at the great sanction given to this rule of construction. (1 Kent, page 464.)

If by any fair construction of the habeas corpus act it is possible to retain in force the common parliamentary law, it must be done. This debate has shown abundant reasons for saying the statute does not apply to imprisonment by order of this House. The lex parliamenti then remains in force. By this law, as said by Chief Justice De Grey, an adjudication of this House for a contempt "is a conviction, and their commitment in consequence is execution; and no court can discharge."

By that common law which regulates courts, and parliamentary law which protects this House, a court has no jurisdiction by habeas corpus to reach a commitment in execution. This law has not been repealed. I know the danger of this power to imprison; but the Supreme Court of the United States has it with no authority to review its decisions, and no law to limit the time of imprisonment. There is a power to impeach the justices for an abuse of authority, and the members of this House can be reached by popular elections; but no law has said that any court can revise or reverse or defeat the adjudications of the House in the exercise of powers given by the Constitution. Where is the law that gives any court revisory power? There is danger, too, of permitting an interference with this power. If it can be annihilated, corruption can fester all over the land unchecked by investigation, public plunderers may well hold a jubilee, and the vilest mercenaries and criminals will escape impeachment. The whole people will bow to the "one-man power" of a single judge, and this land will cease to be a republic and become an autocracy.

This case will settle the practice of the House. I will bow to its decision as I do to that of courts. When the law is settled I will not disturb but will obey it and follow in the line of precedents. But I admonish the House that momentous consequences and results of the gravest character depend upon the deliberations and decision of this hour.

Mr. EAMES. I have prepared some remarks on this question, but having no opportunity to deliver them I ask unanimous consent that they be printed in the RECORD as a part of the debates.

There was no objection, and the leave was granted. [See Appendix.]

Mr. YOUNG. I desire to make the same request.

There was no objection, and the leave was granted. [See Appendix.]

Mr. W. B. WILLIAMS. I also have prepared some remarks on this question, and I ask leave to have them printed as a part of the proceedings.

There was no objection, and it was granted. [See Appendix.]

Mr. HURD. After the thorough and exhaustive discussion of the proposition involved in the report presented to this House by the Committee on the Judiciary I would regard it as trespassing upon the time of the House to say anything more upon this subject, were it not for the fact, that during the progress of the discussion several propositions have been maintained on the part of those who advocate the minority report to which I think it proper that an answer should be now given.

It has been urged that there has been no precedent for this action of the House as proposed by the report of the majority of the committee in the history of the Congress of the United States. I say to the House that a precedent upon a similar subject, and in the line of the precise doctrine as maintained by the majority of the committee, was made in the last Congress in the Irwin case. When the vote was taken on the first day in that case it was determined that the body should not be delivered by the House to the custody of the court. On the second day another vote was taken which required the Sergeant-at-Arms to produce the body before the court and yet to retain custody of that body. The subsequent order, under a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, was absolutely null and void. The Sergeant-at-Arms the moment the body was delivered to the court could by no possibility have had any authority over it at all, consequently the action of the House on the second day in revising and reviewing the action of the House on the first day did not change the principle then asserted, then supported by a large majority of the republican members of the House, that the House was not bound when the return was made to surrender the custody of the body.

It has been objected in the progress of the argument that we were anticipating the judgment of the court, and were insisting that the court when it comes to decide the questions of law involved will decide against the authorities and precedents and discharge the prisoner. We are not anticipating the action of the court. It is not the action of Judge Cartter that will release the prisoner if we surrender him. It is our own action that will release him. By delivering him to the court he passes from our control to that jurisdiction; he is discharged by our own act from custody when he has been adjudged in contempt of the authority of the House. The judge himself has made no decree upon the subject at all. It is asserted that a precedent in Massachusetts and one in Wisconsin as to the power of the courts settled the doctrine, so far as State authorities and State Legislatures are concerned, that there can be an interference with the authority of the House by the judiciary. As to the case in Massachusetts, it has been well said by the gentleman from Ohio that it was decided because of a peculiar provision of the constitution of Massachusetts. And in addition to that I desire the House to recollect that the distinguished gentleman who delivered that opinion stood upon the floor of this House last session and advocated the very doctrine on this point that the majority of the committee have reported. I say that does not imply that that eminent gentleman changed his opinion, but it does show that the decision made in Massachusetts was not inconsistent with the proposition maintained here to-day by the majority of the committee.

As to the case in Wisconsin I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that from the earliest days of their organization the courts of Wisconsin have been out of the line of precedent on the subject of the writ of habeas corpus. It was from the supreme court of the State of Wisconsin that the case of Ableman vs. Booth went to the Supreme Court, and they still insist in their courts in denying doctrines that have been asserted by the highest tribunals in the land; and if authority upon this subject may be found in the decisions of Wisconsin against the proposition which the committee maintain it is not in the line of precedents established either in the courts of the United States or in the courts of other States.

Underlying the arguments of the gentlemen who have opposed the proposition of the majority of your Committee on the Judiciary there may be said to be four fallacies. One is that the writ of habeas corpus is used at all times as a matter of right to release from imprisonment. Sir, the writ of habeas corpus possesses no such efficacy. In the statute of Charles II several plain exceptions were made to the general rule. Where parties were held under a warrant plainly charging either treason or felony, or where they were held in execution upon a sentence, the writ of habeas corpus could not issue, and, if it did issue, the court, upon ascertaining the facts, were bound to remand the prisoner.

What writ of habeas corpus is it that gentlemen are speaking of, to which they attribute such unbounded power? Not the writ of habeas corpus of England, not the writ of habeas corpus of our country, but a writ of habeas corpus which they have imagined for themselves.

The second fallacy is that a refusal to produce the body is a disobedience of the writ. It has never been so regarded. From the beginning a refusal to surrender the body accompanied by a proper return of the writ was regarded as an obedience to the writ in certain exceptional cases. If this case be within the exceptions, then we do not disobey the writ by refusing to return the body. As I showed the other day, this case is one within the exceptions.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. Right here, if the gentleman will allow me.

Mr. HURD. I have already yielded the gentleman ten minutes of my time, and I would be very much obliged to him not to interrupt me now.

The third fallacy which underlies these arguments is that the jurisdiction as asserted by the Committee on the Judiciary denies to the court in any case the right to inquire into the cause of the commitment of a person who has been ordered into confinement by the authority of this House. Now I do not believe that any gentleman has maintained any such proposition. We recognize the power of the court to issue the writ. We recognize the power and jurisdiction of the court to inquire as to the process issued by this House by which this person is confined. When that power has been reached, when that doctrine has been recognized, then we have recognized all the power the court possesses or that it can rightfully claim to possess. And when the process is exhibited, as I showed by the authorities the other day, the only inquiry for the court is, is it of legal efficacy now; is it of vital force now? If it be, then the matter is determined, provided this House has the power to pass judgment in cases of contempt.

As the Supreme Court of the United States has decided, the court of this District, which is bound by that authority, upon learning the fact of the process of this House in adjudication of this individual in contempt, and that the House is so holding him for contempt, must cease further inquiry. We do not deny the jurisdiction of the court. We recognize its jurisdiction to issue the writ and to inquire into the process of the House. But when that is done its power is exhausted.

Mr. BLAIR. Will the gentleman allow me——

Mr. HURD. The gentleman will pardon me, but I cannot allow myself to be interrupted now; I have not time.

The fourth fallacy of the arguments of gentlemen is that the judges of the supreme court of this District possess a revisory or appellate power over the decisions of this House. It is not a proposition that the Supreme Court of the United States or the supreme court of the District of Columbia has this power, but that one of the judges of the District court at chambers possesses this power.

It is the Congress of the United States that creates the court; it is the Congress of the United States that gives efficacy to the writ of habeas corpus. Although the Constitution of the United States provides that the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended except in certain cases, yet the Supreme Court of the United States has determined that without an act of Congress there is no writ of habeas corpus. Therefore can it be possible that this Congress that created the courts, this Congress that made the writ of habeas corpus efficacious in the United States—can it be possible that the body that gives life to both, that possesses the power to determine in reference to the wisdom and propriety of all legislation in regard to them, may have all its most necessary authority taken away by the one and through the interposition of the other?

In addition to what have been suggested as reasons for the adoption of the report of your committee, I suggest this additional reason for the consideration of the House: The time of the House ought not to be consumed in the discussion of these important questions which are liable to arise in cases similar to the present. It is important that there should be a final adjudication upon this question by the Supreme Court of the United States. And, while I am not willing to assert, as a proposition of law, at this time, that even the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States would be in all respects binding upon this House, as though we were a subordinate court and that was a court which possessed revisory and appellate jurisdiction, yet I do believe that this House would be governed by the decision of that august tribunal as to what were the limitations of its powers.

Now, the only way in which this question can be brought before the Supreme Court of the United States is by the course recommended by the majority of your committee. If the report of the minority should be adopted and the custody of the prisoner given to the court under this writ, he will be either remanded or discharged. If he be remanded, then there will be no question to go to the Supreme Court of the United States. If he be discharged it is not such a final judgment as would authorize a bill of exceptions or a writ of certiorari in order that the Supreme Court can revise the action of this House.

But suppose that we retain the custody of the prisoner, in either case we obtain a decision of the question. Either the judge orders our Sergeant-at-Arms into custody, or else he decides that the return is sufficient. If he decides that the return is sufficient without the body, that is all that is desired. If he orders the Sergeant-at-Arms into arrest then the whole matter can be brought before the Supreme Court of the United States, and we can, at a very early day, have an adjudication by which our conduct hereafter may be governed.

It has been objected that the power of this House has been taken away by the passage of the act last year giving to the courts of this District jurisdiction over offenses of this sort and enabling an indictment to be found against a man who is adjudged to be in contempt of the authority of the House. As I said the other day, that provision is merely cumulative. It is no objection to our power. We have not declared that we give it up; we insist upon exercising it; and we say to the courts, "You may punish likewise."

Why, Mr. Speaker, in the view which has been maintained by the majority of this committee, there is no object to be accomplished in this case by the delivery of the body. Under all the established authorities, nothing can be effected by such delivery. The object for which the writ of habeas corpus was devised was to relieve from unlawful imprisonment; and the body is given up, that the court may be enabled either to admit to bail or to discharge. But where under the authorities the imprisonment is found to be a lawful imprisonment, where the return will show to the court that it is a lawful imprisonment, then the body need not be produced, for the reason that the production of the body is not necessary to enable the court to exercise the jurisdiction and power which it properly possesses.

I deprecate the political allusions which have been made in this debate by the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. FRYE,] and I feel called upon in concluding to say a word or two upon that point. He said he had heard members of the democratic party at the last session maintain the right of habeas corpus; he referred to the grand record made by the democratic party during the war in vindicating the right of civil liberty and denying the power of the Executive to suspend the writ of habeas corpus and of the Congress of the United States to delegate that power to the President. That part of the record of the democratic party I am proud of and glory in to-day. For one, I would rather have been associated with an organization which devoted itself to the preservation of the civil liberty of the citizen by maintaining the great writ of habeas corpus during those hot and perilous times than to have been associated with a party whose victories have come through blood.

But, Mr. Speaker, the democratic party in denying this power to the President of the United States to suspend the writ of habeas corpus did not commit the party to any construction of the statute upon the subject of habeas corpus. It did not declare in its conventions what constituted a proper return to the writ of habeas corpus. The democratic party has never declared that it was necessary to present the body at all times with the writ. They simply maintained the efficacy of the writ; they declared that the power to suspend it was vested in the Congress of the United States; that it could not be suspended as the Executive authority arbitrarily might desire or direct. And we who are making this report from the majority of the committee are maintaining here on this floor the writ of habeas corpus as thoroughly and as completely as we maintained it during the time of the war when we were asserting that this Congress alone had power to pass a law authorizing its suspension.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time allowed for debate has expired.

Mr. HURD. With the permission of the House I wish to say that among members of the House who agree upon the general proposition there is a difference of opinion as to the particular course that should be pursued. I am inclined to think that harmony of action can be better promoted by the adoption of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] than by adopting directly the report of the committee. The whole object sought to be accomplished by the adoption of the proposition of the committee——

Mr. CONGER. I object to further debate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is first upon the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. TUCKER,] which the Clerk will read.

Mr. HURLBUT. That is an amendment to the report of the majority of the committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is.

Mr. FRYE. Does not the question on the substitute come up first?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question on the substitute will be taken after the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Virginia is voted on. This is a proposition to amend the original resolution. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "Kilbourn" where it occurs before the word "therefore," at the end of the preamble, and insert the following:

And whereas the facts stated in the petition and complaint of said Kilbourn present the question whether the said writ could lawfully and properly be issued, and whether the same was not therefore improvidently awarded: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms of this House be directed to appear by counsel before the said court, and make a motion to quash or dismiss said writ, or take such other procedure as he shall be advised is proper to raise the question of the legality and propriety of the issue of said writ upon the facts stated in the petition or complaint, and as preliminary to any return to the same; and in the mean time he is directed to retain the custody of the body of said Kilbourn, and not to produce it under the order of said writ without the further order of this House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment just read by the Clerk.

Mr. GARFIELD. That settles nothing.

The question being taken, the amendment was not agreed to; there being—ayes 86, noes 149.

The question then recurred on the following, offered by Mr. LYNDE, as a substitution for the resolution reported by the committee:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms be, and he is hereby, directed to make careful return to the writ of habeas corpus in the case of Hallet Kilbourn that the prisoner is duly held by authority of the House of Representatives to answer in proceedings against him for contempt, and that the Sergeant-at-Arms take with him the body of said Kilbourn before said court when making such return as required by law.

Mr. KASSON demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 165, nays 75, not voting 50; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Ainsworth, Anderson, Bagby, George A. Bagley, John H. Bagley, jr., John H. Baker, William H. Baker, Ballou, Banning, Bass, Beebe, Bell, Blaine, Blair, Blount, Boone, Bright, William R. Brown, Horatio C. Burchard, Samuel D. Burchard, William P. Caldwell, Campbell, Candler, Cason, Caswell, Cate, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Cochrane, Conger, Cook, Crapo, Crounse, Culberson, Cutler, Danford, Darrall, Davy, De Bolt, Denison, Dobbins, Douglas, Dunnell, Durand, Durham, Eames, Egbert, Evans, Farwell, Faulkner, Felton, Fort, Foster, Franklin, Freeman, Frost, Frye, Garfield, Goodin, Haralson, Hardenbergh, Henry R. Harris, Hartridge, Hatcher, Hathorn, Hays, Hendee, Henderson, Hoge, Hopkins, Hoskins, Hubbell, Hunter, Hurlbut, Hyman, Jenks, Thomas L. Jones, Kasson, Kelley, Kimball, Knott, Lapham, Leavenworth, Luttrell, Lynch, Lynde, Edmund W. M. Mackey, L. A. Mackey, Magoon, MacDougall, McClary, McDill, McFarland, McMahon, Meade, Miller, Milliken, Mills, Monroe, Morgan, Norton, O'Brien, Oliver, O'Neill, Packer, Page, Parsons, Phelps, Pierce, Plaisted, Poppleton, Potter, Powell, Pratt, Purman, James B. Reilly, Rice, William M. Robbins, Roberts, Robinson, Sobieski Ross, Rusk, Sampson, Savage, Sayler, Scelye, Singleton, Sinnickson, A. Herr Smith, William E. Smith, Strait, Stevenson, Stone, Stowell, Tarbox, Thompson, Thornburgh, Throckmorton, Martin I. Townsend Tucker, Tufts, Van Vorhes, John L. Vance, Robert B. Vance, Wait, Waldron, Charles C. B. Walker, John W. Wallace, Welling, Walls, Ward, Warren, White, Whiting, Wigginton, Willard, Alpheus S. Williams, Charles G. Williams, William B. Williams, Willis, Wilshire, James Wilson, Woodburn, Woodworth, and Young—165.

NAYS—Messrs. Ashe, Atkins, Banks, Barnum, Bland, Bradford, Buckner, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, Caulfield, Chapin, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, Clymer, Collins, Cowan, Cox, Davis, Dibrell, Ellis, Forney, Fuller, Gause, Gibson, Glover, Goode, Andrew H. Hamilton, Robert Hamilton, Hancock, John T. Harris, Harrison, Hartzell, Henkle, Hereford, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Hill, Hoar, Hooker, House, Hunton, Hurd, Kehr, Lamar, Lawrence, Lewis, Lord, Maish, Metcalfe, Money, Morrison, Neal, New, John F. Philips, Piper, Randall, Rea, Reagan, Riddle, John Robbins, Scales, Sheakley, Skemons, Sparks, Springer, Stenger, Teese, Terry, Thomas, Turney, Waddell, Gilbert C. Walker, Erastus Wells, Wike, James Williams, Jeremiah N. Williams, and Yeates—75.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Blackburn, Bliss, Bradley, John Young Brown, Burleigh, Cannon, Chittenden, Eden, Ely, Gunter, Hale, Benjamin W. Harris, Haymond, Abram S. Hewitt, Holman, Frank Jones, Joyce, Ketchum, King, Franklin Landers, George M. Landers, Lane, Levy, Morey, Mutchler, Nash, Odell, Payne, William A. Phillips, Platt, Rainey, John Reilly, Miles Ross, Schleicher, Schumaker, Smalls, Southard, Swann, Washington Townsend, Alexander S. Wallace, Walsh, G. Wiley Wells, Wheeler, Whitehouse, Whitthorne, Andrew Williams, James D. Williams, Benjamin Wilson, Alan Wood, jr., and Fernando Wood—50.

So the amendment was agreed to.

During the vote,

Mr. CUTLER stated that his colleague, Mr. ROSS, was detained from the House on account of a death in his family.

Mr. JAMES B. REILLY stated that his colleague, Mr. WOOD, was absent by leave of the House.

Mr. MUTCHLER stated that he was paired with his colleague, Mr. JOHN REILLY, who was absent from the House on account of sickness, and who, if present, would vote in the negative, while he would vote in the affirmative.

Mr. COX stated that Mr. HOLMAN, who was absent on account of sickness, would, if present, vote in the negative.

Mr. MILLIKEN stated that his colleague, Mr. JOHN YOUNG BROWN, was absent on account of sickness in his family.

Mr. KNOTT stated that his colleague, Mr. BLACKBURN, was absent from the House on account of illness.

Mr. WHITEHOUSE stated that he was paired with his colleague, Mr. PLATT, who was absent on account of illness in his family, and who, if present, would vote in the affirmative, while he would vote in the negative.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois, stated that he was paired with Mr. WELLS, of Mississippi, who, if present, would vote in the affirmative, while he would vote in the negative.

Mr. HENDEE stated that his colleague, Mr. JOYCE, had been called to his home by reason of the death of his mother, and that, if present, he would vote in the affirmative.

Mr. WIGGINTON stated that Mr. LANE was detained from the House by sickness.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

The report of the committee was then adopted as amended by the substitution of Mr. LYNDE's proposition.

Mr. KELLEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the report as amended was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PROCEEDINGS IN THE TRIAL OF IMPEACHMENT.

Mr. RANDALL, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That in the future proceedings of the impeachment trial of W. W. Belknap, late Secretary of War, the House appear, in the prosecution of said impeachment before the Senate sitting as a court of impeachment, by its managers only.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. WHEELER until next Thursday; to Mr. BRADLEY for two weeks; to Mr. ROSS, of Pennsylvania, indefinitely; to Mr. EDEN for one week; to Mr. PHILLIPS, of Kansas, for ten days; and to Mr. JOYCE for ten days.

UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. McCRARY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3138) to create a sinking fund for the liquidation of Government bonds advanced to the Union Pacific Railroad; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

CANCELLATION OF MORTGAGES.

Mr. McCRARY also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3139) in relation to the cancellation of mortgages; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

And then, on motion of Mr. CONGER, (at five minutes after six o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. DIBRELL: The petition of John L. Divine and heirs of William E. Kennedy, deceased, for compensation for damages by reason of a breach of a mail-contract made with Divine & Kennedy, to the Committee of Claims.

By Mr. DOUGLAS: The petition of William K. Lee, for compensation for three thousand pounds of bacon taken from him by United States marines in April, 1865, to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, the petition of Thomas E. Pullin, for the establishment of a post-route from Farmer's Fork to Warsaw, Richmond County, Virginia, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. DOBBINS: The petition of Eliza Herzberger, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DURHAM: Papers relating to the petition of Daniel Suddath, for a pension, to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions.

By Mr. GLOVER: The petition of 16 envelope manufacturers, printers, stationers, lithographers, and envelope dealers of Hannibal, Missouri, against the practice of the Government through the Post-Office Department in manufacturing and furnishing envelopes, newspaper-wrappers, and postal cards at or below their cost to the Government and delivering the same through the mails to all parts of the country free of charge, at a loss to the Post-Office Department of the cost of transportation, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. HARDENBERGH: The petition of citizens of Northport, New York, against compulsory pilotage, to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, the petition of citizens of New London, Connecticut, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of citizens of Belfast, Maine, of similar import, to the same committee.

By Mr. JACOBS: Papers relating to the establishment of a post-route from Skookum Church, by way of Mound Prairie, to Oakville, Washington Territory, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. LEAVENWORTH: The petition of R. N. Gere and others, that the present tariff laws remain unchanged, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. LUTTRELL: The petition of George H. Wells, for compensation for the use and value of the steamer Southern Merchant, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. LYNDE: The petition of G. A. Mansfield and 500 other citizens of Milwaukee, for the unconditional repeal of the resumption act and for all money to be issued by the Government, to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. MACKEY, of Pennsylvania: The petition of citizens of Union County, Pennsylvania, for a post-route from Mifflinburgh to White Springs, Pennsylvania, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, the petition of citizens of Centre County, Pennsylvania, against any change in the tariff laws, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. MACDOUGALL: The petition of envelope dealers in Auburn, New York, against the Post-Office Department manufacturing, selling, and printing envelopes, newspaper-wrappers, and postal cards at or below their cost, which, including the cost of transporting and handling, amounted in the year 1875 to a loss to the Government of $4,925,736, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. MAGOON: Remonstrance of Hon. J. W. Rewey and 38 other citizens of Iowa County, Wisconsin, against reducing the tariff on lead, zinc, and flaxseed, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Also, the petition of Joseph Bennett and Samuel Hoskins and 148 others of Iowa County, Wiseonsin, against reducing the tariff on lead and zinc, to the same committee.

By Mr. NORTON: The petition of citizens of Salamanca, New York, for the passage of House bill 2158, amending act of February 19, 1875, relating to sale of lands of Seneca Indians, to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. OLIVER: The petition of 220 citizens of Northwestern Iowa, that the law be so changed as to authorize the junction of the McGregor and Missouri River Railroad with the Sioux City and Saint Paul Railroad on or near the forty-third parallel of north latitude, to the Committee on Railways and Canals.

By Mr. RANDALL: The petition of envelope manufacturers, printers, stationers, lithographers, and other dealers, stating their objections to the existing mode of furnishing stamped envelopes to the public, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. RICE: The petition of J. E. O'Sullivan, for an increase of pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RIDDLE: The petition of Thomas O. Tilghman, for pay for property taken and used by the United States Army, to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, the petition of Z. A. Lyon and others, for a post-route from Hartsville to Austin, by way of Lockport, Tennessee, and for the change of the name of the post-office at Lockport to Lyonville, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. ROBBINS, of North Carolina: A paper relating to a post-route from Stony Fork to Elkville, North Carolina, to the same committee.

By Mr. ROSS, of Pennsylvania: Memorial of 22 citizens of Potter County, Pennsylvania, concerning the abolition of the Presidency, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, memorial of 22 citizens of Potter County, Pennsylvania, concerning the abolition of the United States Senate, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of citizens of Williamsport, Pennsylvania, against the reduction of the effective force of the Patent Office, to the Committee on Patents.

Also, the petition of 26 citizens of Lycoming County, Pennsylvania, against any change in the tariff laws, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Also, remonstrance of citizens of Tioga County, Pennsylvania, manufacturers and printers, against the manufacture by the Post-Office Department of envelopes, newspaper-wrappers, &c., at a loss to the Government, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, the petition of 60 citizens of Potter County, Pennsylvania, that one hundred and sixty acres of land be granted to soldiers who served thirty days during the late war and $200 to enable them to settle the same, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, memorial of 22 citizens of Pennsylvania, concerning the revocability of the people's legislative representatives and ratification by the people of all important legislative enactments, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. VANCE, of Ohio: The petition of Joseph Crabtree and 42 other workingmen of Jackson County, Ohio, that the present tariff laws be left undisturbed, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. WALDRON: The petition of Henry Romeyn, first lieutenant Fifth United States Cavalry, for a change in the date of his commission, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WALKER, of Virginia: The petition of wholesale liquor dealers of Richmond, Virginia, for the definition of the powers and duties of officers of internal revenue and to further provide for the collection of the tax on distilled spirits, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. WELLS, of Missouri: Memorial of the Merchants' Exchange of Saint Louis, that no legislation may be enacted that shall affect the efficiency of the Signal Service, to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. WILLARD: Remonstrance of Rufus H. Emerson and 19 other citizens of Jackson, Michigan, against placing soda and alum on the free list, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, April 18, 1876.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

RETURN OF A BILL TO THE HOUSE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the request of the House of Representatives for the return of the bill (H. R. No. 2799) to amend certain sections of titles 48 and 52 of the Revised Statutes of the United States concerning commerce and navigation and the regulation of steam-vessels; and, by unanimous consent, the request was granted.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 256) for the relief of Herman Hulman, of Terre Haute, Indiana; was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Public Lands:

A bill (H. R. No. 1765) respecting the limits of reservations for town sites upon the public domain;

A bill (H. R. No. 1947) granting to the city of Stevens Point, Wisconsin, a certain piece of land;

A bill (H. R. No. 2110) for the restoration to market of certain lands in the Territory of Utah; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3136) extending the time within which homestead entries upon certain lands in Michigan may be made.

MUTUAL FIRE-INSURANCE COMPANY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. No. 700) to incorporate the Mutual Protection Fire-Insurance Company of the District of Columbia, returned from the House of Representatives at the request of the Senate; and, on motion of Mr. INGALLS, it was ordered to lie on the table.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. INGALLS presented a petition of citizens of Delavan, Kansas, praying for an amendment of the homestead law so as to give patents to homestead settlers, irrespective of the time of residence, when the homesteader gives proof of cultivation; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. GORDON presented the petition of J. P. Major, praying the removal of his political disabilities; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WHYTE presented the petition of Andrew D. Worman, of Frederick County, Maryland, praying for compensation for certain supplies furnished to the Quartermaster's Department; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. DORSEY presented a petition of citizens of Arkansas, praying for the establishment of a mail-route from Malvern, in Hot Springs County, to Lea's Ferry, in Dallas County, in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. ALLISON presented a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, with accompanying papers, relative to the deficiency for the subsistence of the Southern Apache Indians in New Mexico; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORTON presented the petition of W. W. Norris, of Iowa, late lieutenant-colonel Forty-third Regiment Indiana Volunteers, praying compensation for services rendered as physician and surgeon in the rebel military prison at Tyler, Texas, during the late war; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. WITHERS presented a petition of citizens of Virginia and North Carolina, praying for the establishment of a post-route from Suffolk, Virginia, to Sunbury, North Carolina; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

SALE OF PUBLIC DOCUMENTS.

Mr. ANTHONY, from the Committee on Printing, reported a bill (S. No. 749) relating to the sale of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and other public documents; which was read and passed to the second reading.

Mr. ANTHONY. This bill relates merely to the convenience of the Senate and House, making the law as we thought it was and as I am inclined to think it is now; but the question has been raised and the Congressional Printer is unwilling to furnish speeches as he has been furnishing them without more authority than the committee can give him. I would like to have the bill read at length and I will explain it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read the second time at length.

The bill was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It makes it lawful for the Congressional Printer to furnish to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress copies of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and extracts therefrom at cost, and other public documents at cost with the addition of 10 per cent. thereon, and to collect the moneys due therefor after the same have been delivered.

Mr. ANTHONY. This bill merely allows Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress to order speeches or other documents without requiring them to pay in advance, as they have been ordering them up to a recent time, when the attention of the Congressional Printer was brought to the law and he has some doubts about his right to furnish them in that way. My own opinion is that he has the right; but still I appreciate his desire to act in strict conformity with the law. The law reads:

SEC. 3809. If any person desiring extra copies of any document printed at the Government Printing Office by authority of law shall, previous to its being put to press, notify the Congressional Printer of the number of copies wanted, and shall pay to him, in advance, the estimated cost thereof, and 10 per cent. thereon, the Congressional Printer may, under the direction of the Joint Committee on Public Printing, furnish the same.

Then there is this provision in one of the general appropriation bills of 1875:

It shall be lawful for the Congressional Printer to print and deliver, upon the order of any Senator or member of the House of Representatives or Delegate, extracts from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, the person ordering the same paying the cost thereof.

It seems to me that this later law covers the other, but if this act shall pass it will remove all possible objection. I think that no one can object to the provision. The Government has not suffered anything by trusting the members of Congress. So long as the Congressional Printer has furnished them under the apprehension that that was the law, there has not been a dollar lost.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to hear the bill read again.

The Chief Clerk read the bill at length.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I inquire of the Senator from Rhode Island the object of requiring 10 per cent. in addition to the cost upon other public documents furnished to members?

Mr. ANTHONY. Because that is the existing law, and I did not like to propose a law that should allow members of Congress to have documents at lower rates than other citizens.

Mr. SAULSBURY. That is what is paid for them now by the community generally?

Mr. ANTHONY. That is what is paid by the community in general; but speeches and extracts from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD are at cost. I think the 10 per cent. on documents should be stricken off anyhow. I think when we are in the habit of distributing so many documents gratuitously, if the people will pay the cost upon them, the Government ought not, poor as it is, to make money out of that transaction; but I did not like to embarrass the bill with anything which I thought might delay its passage either here or in the other House.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MERRIMON, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1256) to regulate the duties of constables and marshals in the District of Columbia where property is claimed to be exempt from execution, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. KERNAN, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1100) relative to the redemption of unused stamps, reported it without amendment.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I am directed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1585) to authorize the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to designate and fix the points at which collectors and supervisors of the revenue shall hold their offices, to report it without amendment. In connection with this bill I present a letter from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Finance of the Senate in relation to abolishing the office of supervisor of internal revenue; which I move be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BOGY, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 669) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to set aside a reservation for the Turtle Mountain band of Chippewa Indians, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the memorial of the Chippewa Indians of Turtle Mountain, Dakota Territory, praying for the segregation and confirmation of a certain tract of their land to them and that certain provisions be made for their protection, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a resolution of the Legislature of Minnesota, in favor of the adoption of legislation providing for the removal of certain bands of roving Indians from that State and their settlement upon proper reservations, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2133) to amend section 10 of the act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department for the year ending June 30, 1876, reported it without amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am instructed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was recommitted the bill (S. No. 263) to amend the laws relating to legal tender of silver coin, to report it back with certain amendments. I give notice that I will call up this bill on Thursday, if I can get the opportunity to do so.

TAX ON FERMENTED LIQUORS.

Mr. LOGAN. I am directed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 522) to define the tax on fermented or malt liquors, to report it without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for information, subject to objection.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear it explained a little, reserving the right to object.

Mr. LOGAN. I will explain. Under the law as it now stands the tax on malt liquors is so much per barrel, or parts of a barrel, in the same ratio. By a rule established by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue preceding the present one, he estimated two bushels and a half of malt to make a barrel of beer; and wherever there were more than two bushels and a half used the Commissioner of Internal Revenue made an assessment on the quantity, as though beer had been produced in excess of a barrel. The law authorizes no assessment at all on the quantity, but on the beer produced per barrel. The evidence was very satisfactory to the House, and also to the committee of the Senate, that the barley produced in the Northwest at certain times has been of such a character that two bushels and a half of malt made from it would not produce a barrel of beer. So it is in different seasons in reference to the cost of production of any other article. On that account the Senator will see that this bill provides that this act shall not apply to cases of fraud. Where there is fraud, then the Commissioner may assess the tax according to the evidence showing the fraud. For the satisfaction of any one who desires, I will have a statement read, which will explain the bill more fully than I can. This statement was made to the Congress of the United States, accompanying the statement of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and is signed by the president and secretary of the Brewers' Association of Milwaukee. It gives the facts in the case, and makes the statement a great deal better than I can make it, and these facts are not controverted anywhere.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

MILWAUKEE, February 1, 1876.

SIR: In behalf of the brewers of the county of Milwaukee, we beg leave to bring to your attention the situation in which they find themselves placed, without fault of their own, by reason of the excessive severity of the administration of the Revenue Bureau.

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue has made a general regulation to the effect that two bushels and a half of malt are sufficient to make a barrel of beer, and that for all malt used in excess of that quantity it shall be presumed that beer has been brewed in that proportion. In pursuance of this regulation he has assessed taxes against the principal brewers of the Northern States for beer assumed to have been manufactured by them in the months of August, September, October, November, and December, 1874. The sole ground of such assessment is that during those months they used in the manufacture of beer more than two bushels and a half of malt to the barrel. There is no other evidence whatever to indicate that they manufactured beer upon which they did not pay the tax. In fact, the evidence is incontrovertible that they actually did use more malt than two and a half bushels to the barrel; and they have since that time, and are now using more than that quantity to each barrel of beer. There is no act of Congress, or other authorized requirement, limiting the amount of malt to be used in the manufacture of a barrel of beer; and we believe that the regulation of the Commissioner is not only arbitrary but wholly unauthorized. Be that as it may, it is unjust in the extreme. The amount of malt necessary to manufacture a barrel of beer is by no means uniform, and more often exceeds (at least with us) the quantity mentioned than otherwise. The beer manufactured by us is strong, and necessarily must be. In the course of our business we ship this beer in large quantities to all parts of the United States, north, south, east, and west. It is frequently kept in store for months after shipment before it is used. In order that it may bear the vicissitudes of the climate and transportation we are forced to make it heavy and strong, and for that reason we are obliged ordinarily to use more than two bushels and a half of malt in the manufacture of each barrel. The saccharine principle, essential to a high degree in beer made for these purposes, is not sufficiently developed in the barley grown in the Northwestern States, and, in order to obtain enough of that element, we are obliged to use more barley than is required by brewers in some other parts of the country.

Furthermore, during the past two or three years the crops of barley in those States from which we draw our principal supplies have been indifferent in quality, much below the standard No. 1 barley, and for that reason we have found ourselves compelled to use more than the average quantity of malt in the manufacture of beer.

We declare in the most earnest manner that we do not manufacture and sell or remove any beer whatever which is not duly stamped. We invite the most rigid scrutiny of Government officers into our process of manufacture and into every portion thereof. Our books are always open to their inspection, and our operations are of a character where the least violation of the laws would be infallibly ascertained within a very short time. Our business is so extensive that even if we were so inclined it would be wholly impossible for us to defraud the revenue of the United States without speedy detection, and it would be in every way dangerous and unprofitable. We understand that it is not charged, nor even suspected, that we have been engaged in any such attempt, or that we have failed to pay the taxes upon the beer actually manufactured and sold. No such charge or suspicion can justly be entertained. The assessments, therefore, made against us are without any foundation in law or in justice, and are, we presume, certain upon investigation in the courts, if not elsewhere, to be overthrown. But months or years must elapse before the final decision can be reached, and meanwhile these illegal assessments will be seriously detrimental to our business, and we submit that it is an oppression of a gross character, however rightly intended, to burden our business with exactions not required by law.

We pray that relief may be granted to us by Congress, either by the passage of an act forbidding the adoption of such regulations as the one in question, or by such other means as shall seem best in the judgment of Congress. We cannot too earnestly impress upon your minds the annoyances, troubles, and expense which such regulations, and the consequent assessments, impose upon us. We think that you will recognize that we ought to receive liberal and encouraging treatment from the Government so long as we faithfully perform our duties toward it, and that measures unjustly oppressive or needlessly annoying to us should be discountenanced and forbidden.

We venture to request that the bill introduced by Mr. KEHR, of Saint Louis, or some similar measure, may receive your support. Mr. JONES, a member of the House of Representatives from New Hampshire, has a practical acquaintance with the whole subject, and can give you full information thereon.

We are, very respectfully, your obedient servants,

JACOB OBERMANN,
President Brewers' Association of Milwaukee.
EMIL SCHANDEIN, Secretary.

Mr. LOGAN. I will say that the bill is merely in accordance with sections 3337 and 3339 of the Revised Statutes, authorizing the assessment of the tax on beer, porter, or ale brewed. The law as it stands now imposes a tax on the quantity in barrels of the article, and not on the material used; but, as I stated, the Commissioner's regulation authorizes the assessment where a greater quantity than two bushels and a half are required to produce a barrel. It is a mere regulation of the Commissioner. The bill provides that the tax shall not be assessed on the quantity except in cases of fraud, and it is intended to prevent the trouble that has been incurred many times by reason of these assessments that have been made heretofore.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Why do they not resist the assessment if there is no authority of law for it?

Mr. LOGAN. I will read the law, and then the Senator will see that there is no authority for the assessment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not see that there is myself. I am asking the Senator why these gentlemen do not resist the assessment.

Mr. LOGAN. How can they resist if the assessment is made here by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue? If it is assessed upon them, how are they to resist it?

Mr. EDMUNDS. By refusing to pay the money when the officers come to collect it, or suing to recover the money.

Mr. LOGAN. Of course, but litigation is just what they want to avoid. They do not want to be assessed unless the law authorizes them to be assessed. Here is the section under which these assessments are made:

SEC. 3337. Every person who owns or occupies any brewery, or premises used or intended to be used for the purpose of brewing or making such fermented liquors, or who has such premises under his control or superintendence, as agent for the owner or occupant, or has in his possession or custody any brewing materials, utensils, or apparatus, used or intended to be used on said premises in the manufacture of beer, lager-beer, ale, porter, or other similar fermented liquors, either as owner, agent, or superintendent, shall, from day to day, enter, or cause to be entered, in a book to be kept by him for that purpose, the kind of such malt liquors, the estimated quantity produced in barrels, and the actual quantity sold or removed for consumption or sale in barrels or fractional parts of barrels. He shall also, from day to day, enter, or cause to be entered, in a separate book to be kept by him for that purpose, an account of all materials by him purchased for the purpose of producing such fermented liquors, including grain and malt. And he shall render to the collector, on or before the tenth day of each month, a true statement, in writing, taken from his books, of the estimated quantity in barrels of such malt liquors brewed, and the actual quantity sold or removed for consumption or sale during the preceding month; and shall verify, or cause to be verified, the said statement, and the facts therein set forth, by oath, to be taken before the collector of the district, according to the form required by law. Said books shall be open at all times for the inspection of any internal-revenue officer, who may take memorandums and transcripts therefrom.

That is the manner of keeping their books and showing the amount of beer, porter, or ale brewed, and the amount of material used. Then section 3339 authorizes the tax to be imposed:

SEC. 3339. There shall be paid on all beer, lager-beer, ale, porter, and other similar fermented liquors, brewed or manufactured and sold, or removed for consumption or sale, within the United States, by whatever name such liquors may be called, a tax of $1 for every barrel containing not more than thirty-one gallons; and at a like rate for any other quantity or for any fractional part of a barrel. In estimating and computing such tax the fractional parts of a barrel shall be halves, thirds, quarters, sixths, and eighths; and any fractional part of a barrel containing less than one-eighth shall be accounted one-eighth; more than one-eighth, and not more than one-sixth, shall be accounted one-sixth; more than one-sixth, and not more than one-fourth, shall be accounted one-fourth; more than one-fourth, and not more than one-third, shall be accounted one-third; more than one-third, and not more than one-half, shall be accounted one-half; more than one-half, and not more than one barrel, shall be accounted one barrel; and more than one barrel, and not more than sixty-three gallons, shall be accounted two barrels or a hogshead. The said tax shall be paid by the owner, agent, or superintendent of the brewery or premises in which such fermented liquors are made, and in the manner and at the time hereinafter specified.

It will be seen that there is no law making an assessment upon any material whatever that is used, but the assessment of the tax is made upon the liquid produced.

Mr. DAWES. Will the Senator from Illinois allow me to make an inquiry?

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly.

Mr. DAWES. I understand that this regulation adopted at the Internal Revenue Bureau is the method by which they propose to ascertain the number of gallons on which the tax is fixed?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. DAWES. I would inquire whether the bill prescribes any other assessment of the tax? How does the committee propose that the Internal Revenue Bureau shall be able to ascertain how many gallons are to be assessed?

Mr. LOGAN. The bill does not change the law at all in reference to ascertaining the assessment. It does not affect it. It only provides that the tax shall not be assessed under this regulation. The regulation is to assess the tax on the quantity of malt used, and the law does not provide for any such thing. This bill is to prevent the Commissioner from assessing the tax in violation of the law, except as the bill provides, in cases of fraud. He has the returns as to the amount of malt used; and if he believes that the brewers have defrauded the Government, he may take any means that he chooses in order to assess and collect the tax. This bill does not prevent that, but it only says that he shall not assess the tax on the quantity except in cases of fraud. In cases of fraud he may assess the tax on the quantity under the regulation. That is the whole of the bill. It is merely to prevent the Commissioner of Internal Revenue from assessing a tax in violation of law. It is a fact, for instance, as was read at the desk, that two bushels and a half of barley raised in Canada will produce a barrel of beer. Barley raised in the Northwest, at least in some seasons, is not of sufficient heft and weight to produce that quantity, and hence it requires more in the brewing of a barrel of beer. The Commissioner does not take into consideration the character or kind of barley used, but he says where they use more than two bushels and a half they must be taxed more.

Mr. DAWES. If the Senator will allow me a moment, I see the difficulty in practice and the need of legislation. I am not opposed to the legislation proposed, but the existing law was made after conference with the brewers. I think the brewers did not take into consideration this difference between Canada barley and the barley that is raised in the Northwest. I think the small quantities of barley raised in the East are like the Canada barley. They supposed then that this method which has been adopted would be a just method. I do not see how the officers are going to ascertain the number of gallons if you pass this bill. I wish to know whether the committee have contemplated any method of accomplishing this. I think the views of the president of the brewers' association would have great weight, and in any further legislation we should confer with these very men just as we did when the law originated.

Mr. LOGAN. If the Senator will read the bill he will see that it does not affect this regulation in the least particular whatever, except that it prohibits levying a tax on that quantity and quality which is in violation of law. The Commissioner himself will not pretend that he has any authority in law for levying the tax in that way.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Illinois to a clause in the middle part of the bill, which does seem to me to go further than the Senator has stated the effect of this bill to be. I entirely agree with him that there is no authority in the law now to tax the material out of which fermented liquor is made; but undoubtedly the assessor, inasmuch as the law requires the beer-maker to report the amount of his grain and malt used, is expected, with a view to see that there is a fair result, to take into consideration the circumstance, for instance, that a thousand bushels of barley have been used and only two hundred barrels of beer accounted for. That appears to be expected under the statute. That is one of the things which the maker of the beer is required to keep for the inspection of the tax-layer. This bill says, in the center of it:

> Nor shall the quantity of materials so used or purchased be evidence for the purpose of taxation.

That means, as I take it—I am quite sure it does in point of law and the Senator will agree with me—that it shall not be evidence of any kind for any purpose in respect of taxation. Therefore the result would be that the assessor, in the extreme case I have put of a thousand bushels of barley and only two hundred barrels of beer, would be at liberty to take no step except in the way of prosecution, none in the way of taxation. He would not be at liberty to take any step for pushing up his assessment based in any degree upon this circumstance, that a prodigious amount of barley had gone into the malt-house and a prodigiously small amount of beer come out. I submit to the Senator whether that clause ought not to be stricken out so as to leave this element that the statute evidently intended, and a very necessary one, of precaution, within the reach of the assessor, to be taken into consideration with other circumstances according to the weight it might justly be entitled to bear.

Mr. LOGAN. In reply to the Senator I will say that the quantity used now under the law is not evidence for the assessment of taxes. That is the law just as it is to-day. You cannot show in the sections of the statutes referring to the brewing of ale, porter, or beer that any authority is given for assessing a tax upon the quantity of material used. It differs in that from the assessment made on the material used for the purpose of distilling spirits. The law now does not authorize it. The bill now only means that it shall not be used as evidence for the assessment of taxation, not that it shall not be used as evidence in case a fraud is charged against the person, because there is a proviso inserted excepting cases of fraud. Then it may be used. If the Commissioner charges fraud against a brewer of beer, then this is part of the evidence, that the quantity is in excess of the quantity of the same character of material used by other brewers for brewing beer. For instance, if one brewer should use a thousand bushels of malt for the purpose of brewing a hundred barrels of beer, and that malt should be purchased in the Northwest, in Wisconsin or Minnesota, or any of the Northwestern States, and another brewer by the side of him should use five hundred bushels for the same purpose, it certainly would be evidence that the man who used the thousand bushels of the same character of material had acted fraudulently. There is no question about that; and this bill would not prohibit that. That would be evidence before a court. The object of this bill is not to require a man to go into court in order to prove that he is innocent before he can be excluded from taxation; but it is to require the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to prosecute the man for fraud if he believes he is guilty of fraud. It does seem to me that it is very strange that the man himself should be required to prosecute a suit all the time to get justice against the Government, instead of the Government prosecuting the man who has acted fraudulently. That is the only object of this bill.

I will state to the Senator that I have talked with the Commissioner on this subject, and I will read a letter from him. He does not claim that he has a right to assess a tax on this excess of quantity over his rule. He claims no such right. I had a talk with another gentleman there who has charge of this matter. They claim no such thing. But of course they give no opinion in reference to this question; they leave that as a matter for Congress to deal with. They do not claim that the law is any different from what I have stated it. I must say that the letter that was written looks a little as though the responsibility was not desired to be taken in reference to it; but I am satisfied, from information I have received, and from information that was presented and read before our committee, and information that was presented to the House of Representatives, that this bill is entirely fair and right. A committee of these men were here, went before the House committee or before portions of it—I do not know now exactly how that was, but I am told so—and they talked with me, and perhaps with others, in reference to this question, and stated the case just as they have stated it in the written statement they have made to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue or to the Congress of the United States. I will read the Commissioner's letter:

> TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF INTERNAL REVENUE.
> Washington, April 13, 1876.
>
> SIR: In accordance with your verbal request of yesterday I have examined House bill No. 522, to define the tax on fermented or malt liquors.
>
> The practice established by my predecessor, Mr. Douglass, upon information leading to belief in its correctness, has been to treat the excess shown by a brewer's material-account above two and a half bushels of malt to the barrel of fermented liquor as representing liquor which was unaccounted for, and to make assessment for the same, without any further or other imputation of fraud against the brewer.
>
> In the exercise of the duty resting upon the Commissioner to make inquiries, determinations, and assessments, this use of the brewer's material-account seems to be one not to be overlooked or disregarded; and were the proportion of material to the barrel of liquor positively established and beyond dispute the rule stated would afford a convenient method of ascertaining and fixing the liability of the brewer. Its reliability as a measure of production has been, however, strenously denied by representatives of the trade.
>
> The purpose of the bill is evidently to preclude assessments under this rule based upon the material used except in cases of fraud. Should it become a law in its present form I should consider it as preventing assessment save where fraud is charged to have been practiced, and to be shown either by the reports themselves or to be established by other evidence.
>
> Respectfully,
>
> D. D. PRATT, Commissioner.
>
> Hon. JOHN A. LOGAN,
> United States Senate.

That is exactly what the bill does mean. It does mean that, except in cases of fraud, the tax shall not be assessed, but in cases of fraud it shall be assessed on the material used. There is no pretense that there is any law or any authority for this thing whatever.

The paper already presented states the case briefly and better than I can state it. These facts were stated to me before I came to this session of Congress, and have been known to me as facts. Let me read from the paper:

> The Commissioner of Internal Revenue has made a general regulation to the effect that two bushels and a half of malt are sufficient to make a barrel of beer, and that for all malt used in excess of that quantity it shall be presumed that beer has been brewed in that proportion. In pursuance of this regulation he has assessed taxes against the principal brewers of the Northern States for beer assumed to have been manufactured by them in the months of August, September, October, November, and December, 1874. The sole ground of such assessment is that during those months they used in the manufacture of beer more than two bushels and a half of malt to the barrel. There is no other evidence whatever to indicate that they manufactured beer upon which they did not pay the tax. In fact, the evidence is incontrovertible that they actually did use more malt than two and a half bushels to the barrel; and they have since that time and are now using more than that quantity to each barrel of beer. There is no act of Congress, or other authorized requirement, limiting the amount of malt to be used in the manufacture of a barrel of beer; and we believe that the regulation of the Commissioner is not only arbitrary but wholly unauthorized. Be that as it may, it is unjust in the extreme.

Now the reason for it:

> The amount of malt necessary to manufacture a barrel of beer is by no means uniform, and more often exceeds (at least with us) the quantity mentioned than otherwise. The beer manufactured by us is strong, and necessarily must be In the course of our business we ship this beer in large quantities to all parts of the United States, north, south, east, and west. It is frequently kept in store for months after shipment before it is used. In order that it may bear the vicissitudes of the climate and transportation we are forced to make it heavy and strong, and for that reason we are obliged ordinarily to use more than two bushels and a half of malt in the manufacture of each barrel. The saccharine principle, essential to a high degree in beer made for these purposes, is not sufficiently developed in the barley grown in the Northwestern States, and, in order to obtain enough of that element, we are obliged to use more barley than is required by brewers in some other parts of the country.

There is the statement, plain and simple, that, our barley not being of the heft and not containing the same quantity of saccharine matter that barley raised in other portions of the country does, it requires the use of a greater amount of material to brew a barrel of beer; and for transportation purposes, it being shipped to warm climates, the brewers necessarily have to make a heavy beer, and that requires more than two bushels and a half of malt to the barrel. This is the statement of these men, and I believe that it is a truthful statement. It is a hardship on them that they shall be assessed on the quantity of the material used where no fraud whatever is charged, and that they should be required to pay a tax on that, when the law specifically provides that the tax shall only be levied on the quantity of beer brewed. That is the law; and if in violation of the law your officers can assess taxes unauthorized by law, and there is no remedy for it, it seems to me to be a strange mode of proceeding in a government of law.

This bill, as I have stated, will not interfere with this regulation in the least particular whatever, except that the Commissioner must charge fraud against the individual; and if he does, then he may use this evidence to show that that fraud has been committed. Then that evidence can be used in court, as a matter of course. As I have stated, if one brewer uses more materials than other persons using the same character of material, it will be good testimony. I think the bill is a fair and just one. It passed the House of Representatives almost unanimously. I do not remember now; I have the proceedings before me, but I have not time to look at them; I think there was no opposition to it. There was no opposition to it in our committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will remind the Senator that it is not in order to refer to the proceedings of the other House.

Mr. LOGAN. I beg pardon of the Chair for having made that reference. I have no right either to refer to our own committee; but I am satisfied that this is a satisfactory bill to every one who has examined the question, and I think it ought to pass.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am sorry to be an obstacle in the way of the passage of this bill even for a single day; but if it is so important as it strikes me in respect of this absolute exclusion of any reference to the quantity of material used in order to ascertain how much beer has been manufactured, I think we ought to consider of it for a day, and unless it will make a very great difference to my friend from Illinois, I object and let it go over.

Mr. LOGAN. It makes no difference to me. I only reported this bill and asked that it be taken up, because I did not suppose there would be any objection to it, as it provides the same as the law does now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made; the bill will go on the Calendar.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask that it shall not go on the Calendar, as I wish to call it up again. Let it lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will lie on the table.

PISTAKEE LAKE.

Mr. OGLESBY. The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 732) to dispose of the lands formerly covered by the waters of Pistakee Lake, in the State of Illinois, have instructed me to report it back without amendment, and recommend its passage. I should be very glad to have the present consideration of it for reasons I can state, and which I hope will be satisfactory to the Senate. I do not like to take up the time of the Senate in the morning hour, but the circumstances in relation to the subject-matter of the bill seem to demand its passage at an early day, if it is to be passed at all. I ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear it first explained.

Mr. OGLESBY. I supposed, if the Senate would pass the bill at all, it would do it perhaps as well on a five minutes' explanation as on one of five hours.

There are two townships of land, lying in two northern counties of the State of Illinois, adjoining Wisconsin, through which a river runs called the Fox River. As it gets into those two counties it spread out formerly into a large lake called Pistakee Lake. All around the border of the lake the people settled from time to time as close up as they could, to get agricultural land. It was surveyed by the Government of the United States, and a meandering line was run around the outside. The surveys of course stopped there. It was then unsurveyed land, but covered by this lake. People took forty acres, or eighty acres, or sixty acres, and so on, as they could; and then as the waters would recede, being drawn off by Fox River, they would go on and cut the grass and gather it, but could not, in the sense of preemption or homestead settlement, get possession, because it was still covered by the waters, although receding. They have been going on there for a series of years, some of them claiming that it belonged to the State under the swamp-land act, and believing that in time it would be disposed of in that way. So they have gone on until now, not being particularly on their guard, the waters having receded from time to time until the grass can be cut by a man putting on broad shoes and wading out and gathering the hay. But all at once it turns out that a body of speculators, unknown to the farming community there, develop themselves in the city of Chicago, apply to the Commissioner of the General Land Office in agreement with existing law to have the land surveyed, describing the land as agricultural land, swear to it, file affidavits with the Commissioner of the General Land Office that it is agricultural land fit for cultivation, and pray for power to survey it. The Commissioner of the General Land Office grants the power, appoints a surveyor, and they pay the expense, some $125. A survey is quietly made of the ground; the plat is returned to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and is then by him sent to the register of the land office in the State of Illinois, the only one there is now; for there are really no public lands in the State. The register takes the plats and surveys into his office, and, apparently, the land is open to entry, homestead settlement, cultivation, and so on.

The trick of the thing is that the persons who have been so liberal as to file these petitions, make these affidavits, and get this survey, have, as the Commissioner of the General Land Office supposes, and as I suppose the truth will turn out, secured land scrip of various denominations, possibly agricultural scrip; and far back beyond that various classes of scrip are still outstanding, and when in the possession of a person, he may lay it upon land and take it without purchase, without pre-emption, and without homestead settlement. The apprehension of the people of these two counties and my apprehension (and I am sure my colleague has the same view about it) is that the moment this land gets in the register's office these men will take this scrip, locate it upon it, and up-trip the people there, get possession of this land under the claim that it is agricultural and farming land, and not a dollar will come to the Government, not a cent, not a picayune. They will get control of it, and the land which is absolutely swamp-land and can never be anything else—you can scarcely go upon it at all—will go to speculators. The Commissioner of the General Land Office, on having the facts explained to him, telegraphed the register to suspend locations as far as he could.

This bill simply proposes, as it is swamp land in fact, that it be conveyed to the State of Illinois for the benefit of these two counties as swamp land, and a provision is in the bill requiring these two counties to protect the people who have been living along the margin of this lake for years and years, with forty or sixty or eighty acres of land, as they could pick it up, by allowing them to go forward into the lake where the waters have subsided or receded, and finish out the location of an eighty or a one-hundred-and-sixty acre tract, as their claim may be or as their purpose may be, and pay for it. That privilege is to be given to those actual inhabitants upon the margin, so that they may add to the land they occupy fractional portions of the bed of the lake, and get the ownership by paying $1.25 an acre. The balance of the bottom of the lake will go to the counties as swamp land, to be expended in draining it off and then for common-school purposes.

The Government can lose nothing by it; and if it permits it now to go off under this strategy, under this secret plan of men who do not live around it, who have nothing to do with it, but who have slipped in and taken these preliminary steps, my opinion is that the Government will never get a dollar. Some of the old scrip that is floating around, and seems to gather around Chicago as much as any other place in the country, will be put upon this land; a body of speculators will go in there and get four or five thousand acres of land for the purpose of profit, and the people living around the lake, the people interested in these counties, will lose the benefit of it, although they have been there for a quarter of a century by this lake, watching for the time to come when the waters would recede, so that the land could be got as swamp land and applied to educational purposes. All there is in the bill is to give it to the State for the benefit of the two counties, to be disposed of under the legislation of the State, and to compel the two counties to let the actual settlers around the margin come in and complete their titles.

Mr. BOUTWELL. The Senator understands that these shore-owners obtain title by watching?

Mr. OGLESBY. Very largely; that is, they actually entered forty acres, or eighty acres, proposing of course to extend the entry eighty acres or forty acres more, as the water would recede; and now that it has receded, and they have been waiting and hoping to get it as swamp land, these interlopers come in, and in a quiet and stealthy manner, proceeding in exact compliance with the law, have nearly torn it away from them. It is only within a few days that they found out the facts. I have a resolution of the board of supervisors of one of the counties. They were utterly astonished and taken by surprise. The purpose of the bill is right and proper; and I ask the Senate to pass it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Before I decide whether or not to object, I should like to make an inquiry or two. I see that this bill states in the preamble that Congress has already conveyed to the State of Illinois "the swamp and overflowed lands lying therein." This land, according to the statement of the Senator from Illinois, was overflowed land at that time, and is swamp land now. It seems to follow then that the land has already been conveyed to the State of Illinois.

Mr. OGLESBY. I will state to the Senator that the statute which provided for donating to the States the swamp and overflowed lands, as to our State was construed at the time as having relation to surveyed lands. This lake had not then been surveyed. Around the margin of the lake the surveys had been run, but the parallel lines had never been run across it. I am very frank to say that the people there have had some hope that they could get it as swamp land; but out of abundant caution, and to cut off this effort which they believe is an insidious one, it was thought that an act of Congress would make the right certain in them, stop litigation, and get rid of a troublesome matter.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Do I understand the Senator to mean that in his opinion these lands already belong to the State of Illinois, or do not?

Mr. OGLESBY. I do not undertake to say what the construction of the supreme court of the State of Illinois or of the United States courts would be under the swamp-land act. There is this trouble:

this was not surveyed land when that act passed. Now, it has been surveyed recently, and the survey paid for by these men, and there is a question as to whether the land goes as swamp land to the State or not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour has expired.

Mr. OGLESBY. Let the bill pass.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to continuing the consideration of this bill?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have no objection, subject to objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection, subject to objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. DORSEY. I must object to the continuance of debate.

Mr. OGLESBY. I hope the Senator from Arkansas will let the bill pass. The bill will pass in a very few minutes.

Mr. DORSEY. I have no objection, unless the bill is going to lead to debate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It will not be debated long. We only want to ascertain what it is. It must be debated to that extent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposition of the Senator from Vermont is that the bill continue under consideration, still subject to objection. Any Senator will have a right to object at any time.

Mr. DORSEY. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The objection is withdrawn; and the bill reported by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. OGLESBY] remains, the question being whether the Senate will consider it at this time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I was merely going to say that the Senator from Illinois as he states the case is, I am afraid, likely to lead us into future difficulty. I have no objection that I know of to these people having this land; but if other people under the existing laws of the United States have already acquired any right in any part of it, then we ought not to be ground between the two mill-stones and give it to these counties and these people now and then be obliged to indemnify those who have already acquired rights in it, or if their rights turn out to be paramount, to indemnify these counties for the land they have lost that we have undertaken to convey to them. We ought not to be asked to do that, I submit to the Senator.

Mr. OGLESBY. Not at all.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The effect of this bill is to make an out and out grant of all the area of this lake to the State of Illinois for the benefit of these counties, and to provide a particular method by which private claimants may obtain priority in its purchase. So far as there are any existing claims by way of pre-emption entries, or homestead operations, or bounty claims, or whatever, those so far as they have gone would naturally under the law override this bill. They ought to do so, in justice. On the general principles of legal justice, anybody who has acquired the first right under the laws of the United States ought to have it, and the courts would undoubtedly give it to him. Then passing this bill as it stands we find ourselves having made a double grant of this land, first under the grant to the State of Illinois and under this act, and second under the general laws of the United States to the people who have been attempting to get on, as the lake has receded, by fresh operations at the land office; and it will result as it did in Indiana in just such a case as this of a lake there which dried up or was drawn off, or at any rate went out of the way when we undertook to do the generous thing, as this bill asks us to do, and we found in two years that we had to do the generous thing twice; we had to secure it to the people to whom we had given it first, and then give as much more to the people whom we tried to give it to the second time. That is not right. The Senator does not wish to accomplish that. Now if he will consent to have added to this bill a provision that this shall merely operate to release whatever title we possess at this moment, subject to everybody's legal rights, I shall have no objection.

Mr. OGLESBY. I will do that. I will consent to that amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then I move to add at the end of the bill these words:

That nothing in this act shall be construed to convey any other title than a release of all interest of the United States now existing in and to said lands.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move the amendment I have indicated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. C. C. SNIFFEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had, on the 13th instant, approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. No. 326) for the relief of the widow of L. H. Rousseau, deceased, late brigadier-general and brevet major-general of the United States Army; and

An act (S. No. 431) granting a pension to Elizabeth B. Thomas, widow of General Lorenzo Thomas, late of the United States Army.

The message also announced that the President had, on the 17th instant, approved and signed the act (S. No. 235) providing for the sale of part of the custom-house lot in Rockland, Maine.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. INGALLS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 750) granting a pension to T. B. Murdock; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

He also (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 751) granting a pension to E. O. Nye; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SPENCER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 752) authorizing the recorder of the District of Columbia to appoint an assistant with certain powers; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CRAGIN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 753) to extend the jurisdiction of the supreme court of the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 754) granting a pension to John H. Glidden; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CLAYTON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 755) to establish a post-route from Dallas, Arkansas, to Stringtown, Choctaw Nation, Indian Territory; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WITHERS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 756) for the establishment of a post-route between Suffolk, Virginia, and Sunbury, North Carolina; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

ACTIONS UPON OFFICIAL BONDS.

Mr. MERRIMON submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing a reasonable statute of limitations barring all right on the part of the United States to sue upon official bonds, with leave to report by bill or otherwise.

REPORT ON THE BLACK HILLS.

Mr. ALLISON submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be requested to furnish a copy of the report, dated April 15, 1876, of Professor Walter P. Jenney upon the agriculture, climate, and other resources of the Black Hills, which he surveyed under orders of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

RESERVED GALLERIES OF THE SENATE.

Mr. EDMUNDS submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Rules be directed to inquire and report as soon as may be what further provision, if any, is necessary in order to secure the use of the reserved portions of the galleries to those for whom they are designed.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DORSEY and Mr. SAULSBURY submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them to the bill (H. R. No. 3022) making appropriations for the construction, repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SPENCER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 3128) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and for prior years, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

HARBOR AT BRUNSWICK, GEORGIA.

Mr. GORDON submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to communicate to the Senate all information now in possession of the Department or of the engineer in charge of the district of Georgia, relating to the importance of the harbor of Brunswick, Georgia, and the necessity for the improvement of said harbor.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. G. M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 34) to confirm pre-emption and homestead entries of public lands within the limits of railroad grants in cases where such entries have been made under the regulations of the Land Department; and

A bill (S. No. 701) further to provide for the administering of oaths in the Senate.

TAX ON FERMENTED LIQUORS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. At the suggestion of the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. LOGAN,] touching the beer bill, I wish to withdraw the objection I made to it. I do not desire to debate it any further, but only to suggest two little amendments. If it is agreeable to other Senators I will withdraw the objection I made to its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont withdraws his objection, and the Senator from Illinois moves to take from the table the bill (H. R. No 522) to define the tax on fermented or malt liquors. Is there objection?

Mr. DORSEY. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill cannot now be considered, objection being made.

REPAVEMENT OF PENNSYLVANIA AVENUE.

Mr. DORSEY. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will lay before the Senate the unfinished business of yesterday.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 680) for the repaving of Pennsylvania avenue, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. BAYARD, which was in section 3, line 7, after the word "repair," to insert:

The cost of paving the intersections of all streets and avenues and all public parks lying and abutting upon said avenue to be paid out of the general revenue of the District, except the portions of such intersections lying between the tracks of the said railroad company and two feet on each side thereof, which shall be paid by the said railroad company. The cost of the said pavement lying between the Botanic Garden and a line two feet outside of the said railroad tracks to be paid by the United States; and, after the aforesaid deduction, the residue of the cost to be as follows: by the owners of private property lying and abutting on said Pennsylvania avenue.

And in line 13 to strike out "one-third" and insert "one-fourth;" in line 15 to strike out "one-third" and insert "one-half;" and in line 17 to strike out "one-third" and insert "one-fourth;" so as to make the section read:

That the cost of laying down said pavement shall be paid for in the following proportions and manner: The Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company shall bear all of the expense for that portion of the work lying between the tracks of their road, and for a distance of two feet from the track on each side thereof, and of keeping the same in repair. The cost of paving the intersections of all streets and avenues and all public parks lying and abutting upon said avenue to be paid out of the general revenue of the District, except the portions of such intersections lying between the tracks of the said railroad company and two feet on each side thereof, which shall be paid by the said railroad company. The cost of the said pavement lying between the Botanic Garden and a line two feet outside of the westerly side of the said railroad tracks to be paid by the United States; and, after the aforesaid deduction, the residue of the cost to be as follows: By the owners of private property lying and abutting on said Pennsylvania avenue, in proportion to their frontage thereon, one-fourth of the expense, after deducting the amount paid by said Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company; one-half to be paid by the United States out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; and the remaining one-fourth to be paid out of the general revenue of the District of Columbia from any funds in the hands of the commissioners or the treasury of said District, upon the warrants or orders of said commission, when the same shall have been passed in the Treasury Department, as in case of the disbursement of public money.

Mr. DORSEY. When this bill was last under consideration the amendment of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] was pending. That amendment places a large part of the burden of this pavement upon the United States Government, a very much larger part in my judgment than ought to be charged to the Government. I conferred with many of the citizens owning property on the Avenue before this bill was prepared, and I have also conferred with them since it was reported, and since the discussion has begun in the Senate, and I am satisfied that the great majority of the property-holders would prefer to pay the entire cost rather than not have the Avenue paved until next winter. I do not believe that there is a respectable number of property-holders on the Avenue who object to the proportion allotted to them by this bill, which as we all know is one-third. I hope the amendment of the Senator from Delaware will not be adopted.

Mr. SHERMAN. I submit an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Delaware, and I am not sure but that the Senator will accept it. I move to strike out all after the word "repair," in lines 6 and 7, of section 3, to the end of the section, and to insert the following:

The United States shall pay the cost of paving the spaces between its property and the part of the Avenue to be paid for by the said railroad company, and one-half of the cost of paving the intersections of the streets and avenues, less that to be paid by the railroad company, and the other half shall be paid out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, and the residue of the cost of such paving shall be paid as follows: One-third by the owners of private property lying and abutting on said Pennsylvania avenue in proportion to their frontage thereon as hereinafter provided; one-third by the United States; and one-third out of the general revenue of the District of Columbia; and the amount required to pay the part of said cost assumed by the United States shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; and the amount required to pay the part of said cost charged to the District of Columbia shall be paid by the commissioners of said District from any funds in the treasury of said District, upon the warrants or orders of said commission duly audited in the Treasury Department.

Mr. SHERMAN. I drew this amendment after listening to the discussion on the subject without any intention of participating in it, for the purpose of meeting what I suppose to be the equities of the different parties. I believe it charges less on the Government of the United States than the amendment of the Senator from Delaware, and I believe makes a fair distribution of the cost of this improvement. The Government of the United States pays all the expense of paving in front of its own property up to the line that the railroad pays for. Then the Government shares with the District of Columbia in paying for the intersections of the streets, half and half. Then the Government pays one-third of the residue. It seems to me that that is a fair adjustment of the matter, and throws, as I understand, upon the Government of the United States about $130,000 probably—I am not precise in my figures—on the District of Columbia about $80,000, and the balance on the property-holders on Pennsylvania avenue.

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] seemed to think that the Government of the United States ought not to contribute to this expense. I do not agree with him. Pennsylvania avenue is the great thoroughfare between the executive and legislative departments of the Government. I suppose that at least one-third, or perhaps one-half, of all the transit over this avenue is for Government purposes, or by employés of the Government; and it seems to me that as the thoroughfare is so wide, far wider than is necessary for business purposes, the Government of the United States ought at least to pay one-half of the expense of paving it. This amendment does not put quite one-half the expense on the Government, but a little less than one-half. Still it is a fair proportion to be paid by the Government.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. SHERMAN. My amendment is a substitute for that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. But the Senator from Delaware proposes to perfect the text of the section, which comes first.

Mr. BAYARD. I do not object to the substitute for this plain reason: It still further diminishes the cost of this improvement to the citizens who own property along its route. As I said yesterday when this matter was under discussion, the object of my amendment was to diminish the cost of this expensive outlay to the people who happen to own property along the route, and who have no voice whatever in regard to the expense. They are unrepresented in Congress; they are compelled to pay for improvements in the expense of which they have no voice, in regard to which they are not consulted; and therefore every measure that tends to diminish their burdens I favor. I believe that the proposition of the Senator from Ohio lessens the cost to them, and therefore it is that I favor it.

The difference between his amendment and mine is this: The amendment offered by me threw upon the District of Columbia the cost of paving the streets at their intersections where there was no frontage whatever upon private property, and, knowing the great width of the streets, the unusual width of the avenues of this town, that portion of the cost is very great. It is now proposed by the amendment of the Senator from Ohio to divide the cost of paving the intersections between the United States and the District of Columbia, leaving the owners of private property, who of course cannot abut upon intersections, no portion of that expense. That lessens the amount to be paid by the citizens of the District generally, and so far as that is concerned I approve it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Delaware, as the Chair understands, accepts the amendment of the Senator from Ohio in lieu of his own.

Mr. BAYARD. I do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN.]

Mr. DORSEY. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Ohio if that is a substitute for the third section?

Mr. SHERMAN. For all except the first part, which relates to the railroad company. It comes in after the word "repair," in line 7.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 26, nays 15; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Bogy, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Caperton, Cooper, Cragin, Davis, Dennis, Eaton, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hamlin, Kelly, McCreery, Morrill of Maine, Norwood, Randolph, Ransom, Sargent, Saulsbury, Sherman, Stevenson, West, and Withers—26.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Cameron of Wisconsin, Clayton, Cockrell, Conkling, Dorsey, Edmunds, Hitchcock, Kernan, Logan, Merrimon, Morrill of Vermont, Oglesby, Robertson, and Windom—15.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Anthony, Booth, Boutwell, Bruce, Burnside, Christiancy, Conover, Dawes, English, Hamilton, Harvey, Howe, Ingalls, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Jones of Nevada, Key, McDonald, McMillan, Maxey, Mitchell, Morton, Paddock, Patterson, Sharon, Spencer, Thurman, Wadleigh, Wallace, Whyte, and Wright—32.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DORSEY. Now, in order to perfect the amendment just inserted, as an amendment inserted yesterday to the section has been stricken out by its adoption, I move after the word "avenue," in line 9 of the amendment just adopted, to insert:

Including the frontage of the ground occupied by the Washington Market Company.

Mr. WEST. That conflicts with the first line of the amendment just adopted.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think not.

Mr. DORSEY. I do not see how it conflicts with the first line of the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. WEST. Perhaps it does not; but I will merely read that amendment:

The United States shall pay the cost of paving the spaces between its property and the part of the Avenue.

"Its property" is the market space; and in a subsequent part of the amendment you stipulate that the market company shall pay.

Mr. DORSEY. The property on which the market is located may belong to the United States, but very remotely indeed. As I remember, the market company has a lease of that property for ninety-nine years; and it seems to me they ought to pay for the paving in front of their property.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. SHERMAN. I suggest the addition to the amendment of the words:

The cost of which shall be paid by the said company.

Mr. DORSEY. I accept that.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I think the amendment as modified ought to prevail.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas as modified.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAYARD. I move that section 5 be amended in line 7 by striking out the words "and sixty cents."

The taxable cost by this bill is limited to $4.60 a square yard. I remember very well that the most expensive and certainly the best piece of pavement in this District, laid in front of the Arlington Hotel, was said to have cost $5 per square yard. I lived near by at the time and saw it in the course of its construction; and I believe it to have been very thoroughly and well done—much better than any other pavement that I have seen in this place. I understood that the cost of that at the time was $5 a square yard. Since that time it is well known that the cost of material and labor has very considerably declined, and what would have cost $5 per square yard in 1870, or 1871, or 1872 can reasonably be accomplished for one-fourth less in 1876. I do not say that the very competent gentlemen to whom is proposed to be confided by this bill the paving of this Avenue will spend even as much as $4 per square yard; but $5 was considered then a most expensive pavement, and I am sure that it can be supplied now for $4 per yard. Therefore it is that I think it safer that the limitation of $4 should be imposed.

Perhaps it is worth while for me to say further that I have great question in regard to incurring this expense, or anything near this expense, for this street; but supposing that it was the intention of Congress to repave this avenue, I have offered the amendments which have been in substance adopted here diminishing the cost to the people of the District. I still feel that in the present condition of the finances of the country, and with the amount of suffering that exists in the country from poverty, it is very questionable whether so large an amount of money as this should be expended either under the United States authority or that of the District; but at any rate the restriction of the cost of this improvement to $4 per square yard strikes me as being entirely reasonable in view of the cost of materials a few years ago and their cost at this time. I hope therefore the amendment that I have offered will receive the approval of the Senate.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I do not see any necessity for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware. If these men are fit to be trusted to select a pavement and to make the contract, it seems to me that they ought to be of such character that we are willing to trust them as to the amount to be paid for this pavement. I suppose it will cost something to remove the old material, something to clear out the street so as to make it possible for it to be repaved. I do not know precisely what the Neuchâtel pavement can be obtained for. I should be unwilling that any kind of concrete or asphalt should be used except the Neuchâtel. I do not believe that the other kind of concrete and asphalt that is used here, made partly of coal-tar and partly of Cuban asphalt, will answer any good purpose, and this Neuchâtel pavement I understand can be obtained for less even than $4; but at the same time I would not like to limit the bill at a less rate for the entire cost than what is proposed by the committee.

Mr. DORSEY. I understand the amendment of the Senator from Delaware to be to strike out "sixty cents." Is that it?

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, in the chair.) It is.

Mr. DORSEY. That amendment was proposed by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WHYTE] yesterday evening and voted down by the Senate. The fact is that the base of this pavement on Pennsylvania avenue, where as it is well known there is a marshy, soft, uncertain foundation to be built on, has got to be very heavy; there must probably be sixteen or eighteen inches of hydraulic concrete laid, which may cost more than the whole pavement on some other streets where the land is higher.

Again, it is not the intention of the Senate, as I understand, and I am sure it will not be of the commission appointed under this bill, to select anything but a pure asphaltum pavement; and if a pure asphaltum pavement is laid down there with a proper foundation it cannot be done for less than four dollars and a half a square yard, in my judgment. Such a pavement as ought to be laid on the Avenue cannot be laid much under the limitation of this bill; but if it can be, the commissioners will not exceed the price for which they can get a good pavement. I have no doubt the Senate and the country will have faith in the integrity and good sense of the commissioners appointed under the bill, let their action be what it may; but it was thought best to limit it so that the entire expense, including the clearing out of the Avenue, the removing of the old pavement, and laying the new pavement on a proper foundation, should not exceed in the aggregate $4.60 a square yard, and I think, if it is done for that, it will be very cheaply done, and if it is done as this commission no doubt will require it to be done, will be done in the most thorough and satisfactory manner.

I hope the amendment will not be adopted. I think it is against the interest of the Government, the interest of property-holders, and the interest of the District.

Mr. BAYARD. I do not care to prolong this debate, but I fail to see the reason in what is urged by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] in reply to my proposed restriction as to the amount, that in all probability the pavement will cost less than I am disposed to state as the maximum for it. If he is right about that, we might as well strike out all limit whatever. If it is for us to judge, if we mean to exercise any discretion and to impose our discretion upon those who are to construct this pavement, then we should fix it according to the lights we have. I am by no means satisfied that if the members of the Senate of the United States, or of both Houses of Congress, owned this property themselves, and owned the Avenue, they would resort to one-fifth of the proposed expense of paving. I am not sure that a careful and sagacious economy would not dictate the paving of the Avenue in a very much less expensive manner than is proposed; but it appears to me that there seems to be a very fine and generous spirit abroad when the expenditure of public money is concerned. I think it has run to an expense that is certainly dangerous. I do not like rigid small economy, I do not like rigid false economy; but, at the same time, I think we cannot by this system of unlimited expenditure preserve our public credit, and I do not see why the attempt to restrict it should not be applied as much to the paving of this single street as on any other larger scale. The truth is the expenditures in this District have been almost fabulous. Millions of dollars have been poured out on the streets of this District in a manner that sometimes seems to me bordering on insanity. There have been miles upon miles of the most luxurious and extensive avenues I ever saw in any city created for the use of no adjacent residents. Any man who will walk or drive through the suburbs of this town—or what I call the suburbs, the unbuilt portions of Washington—will see an outlay that is almost incredible, and which is, for the purposes of the present generation, absolutely useless, for, being created of a most perishable material, these wooden pavements will not be in existence when houses shall be built along their route; and here now comes the proposition to replace by an expenditure of $300,000 a miserably constructed pavement laid down at a cost of $300,000 barely five years ago.

Mr. President, as this pavement is in such a condition as to need repair, and as sound economy may require that it should be removed altogether and a good pavement take its place, it is evident that as a prerequisite and as a necessary prerequisite to it all, it should be placed in the hands of competent and honest gentlemen to see that the moneys which are expended are faithfully bestowed and do not float off into the pockets of fraudulent contractors. But not only should we take that precaution, which I think this bill does, but we should take the second precaution of seeing that even under their administration the cost of this undertaking should be kept down to the lowest reasonable figure. Three hundred and three thousand dollars is the estimated cost of this pavement between the Capitol and Fifteenth street at the rate of $4.60 per square yard. If, as I said, $5 in labor and building material expended in 1872 or 1873 can be equalized by an expenditure of $4 for the same purpose in 1876, why should it not be impressed upon this bill? The sixty cents will be about the one-seventh, roughly calculated, of the whole. One-seventh of $300,000 is about $40,000, and I certainly think that for $260,000 an excellent enduring pavement can be laid over the route proposed. I have heard no one here deny the fact that there has been a great diminution in the cost of labor and material in the last three years, fully equal to 25 per cent. Any man who has had anything to do with building knows that fact. Whether it is his own experience or from others, he can easily ascertain it. Labor is exceedingly low; materials are low; business is dull. Therefore I cannot understand why it is that we should not, having a duty to perform, the duty of guarding other people's money, establish a limit to this expense and reduce it if we can. I confess that, although I believe the Avenue sadly needs repair, I should have great hesitancy in voting for any further expenditure upon it; but, if I do so, it must be because the measure proposing any outlay is coupled with every guard upon the cost and upon the expenditure. I think it perfectly reasonable to say that $4 in 1876 will do all that $5 did in 1872; and I cannot see why gentlemen should object to voting a limit upon the expenditure.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I am sure the Senator from Delaware cannot be more strait-laced about economy than I am myself. What he proposes here is to limit the amount to $4 for the entire expenditure. I do not know that it will cost any more than that sum, but I am sure that we have a security in the character of the men whom we select to make this contract. The Senator from Delaware assumes that we know more about doing this work, the cost and the value of it, than the men whom we are to select.

Mr. BAYARD. I think we do know enough to put on this limit.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I do not believe that is so. Under the denunciations of the Senator from Delaware in relation to the past work, I do not wish that we should pass a bill here that will secure us precisely the same result which we have had in the past. That is to say, this commission shall be so hampered by the limit that they cannot select the best pavement for the Avenue. I know it is true so far as labor is concerned that you can obtain it at a less price than you could five years ago; but it is not true so far as this Neuchâtel asphalt is concerned, which is only to be obtained in one place, and the use of it in England and France is so great that the price has not gone down. Yet the labor of preparing and mixing it properly for the purpose of a pavement has gone down so that the price is diminished almost one-half as compared with a few years ago.

Mr. BAYARD. I should like to ask my friend from Vermont, does he not believe as a matter of fact that the people who laid down the pavement in front of the Arlington Hotel in 1870 or 1871 for $5 a yard would be very glad to repeat the operation now at $4?

Mr. DORSEY. If the Senator will allow me, I will state that I have been informed by the authorities of this District that the pavement laid down in front of the Arlington Hotel was laid down as a sample, and that its actual cost was $7 a yard; and that the same party who laid down that pavement has laid down a great deal of pavement in the streets of this city of the same material as there is on other streets.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Let me say another thing in relation to this avenue. It will be noticed by Senators in traveling over the city that there are defects arising from inferior concrete or asphalt in a great many places. Where the foundation is damp, where there are springs beneath, the pavement is at once destroyed. Many of these places are being repaired, and it is done at a very considerable expense, whereas if we shall now authorize a pavement that can be put down of the Neuchâtel character, whenever it decays or needs repair it will be of some service, while this ordinary concrete that we have here can never be reworked at all. It is a total loss from the start, and yet the asphalt is not destroyed but can be reworked. Therefore it seems to me that it is the wisest economy, if we wish to put down a pavement that is going to last for a long series of years, that we should authorize such an expenditure as will secure that kind of pavement. I am not for any sort of experiments in trying these fifteen, twenty, or thirty different kinds. I desire that we shall be able to have the very best. I do not wish to have a bill here again in another five years for the same result.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I shall vote for the amendment because I have no doubt, from the best information I can get, that the amount it allows is fully ample to lay down a pavement in any condition and out of any material of which it shall be the pleasure of the Senate to have it made. The cost of the improvements in this city, I have been told, amounts to between $30,000,000 and $40,000,000. I was informed by one of the oldest and most respectable citizens, and one of the heaviest tax-payers in this city, that every part of the improvements made in this city, in his judgment, including the laying of streets and including the sewerage system, could have been done, by proper economy, at an expense not exceeding $8,000,000. I do not know whether that is correct or not; but that is the assertion of a gentleman in whose judgment I place great confidence. He himself has been here witnessing all the time the improvements that have been made in this city and contributing out of his large substance by the payment of taxes to the expenses that have been incurred; and yet he assured me that, in his judgment, all that had been done could have been done, and as well done as it has been done, at an expense not exceeding $8,000,000. If that judgment is correct, it does not require $4 to the square yard to lay a pavement.

I feel some hesitation about voting for this bill at all. Pennsylvania avenue is in a very dilapidated condition. I have no doubt the property-holders upon the street feel justly aggrieved at the fact that it is in the condition it is. The business men upon the street claim that the carriage trade, as they call it, is now leaving them because the street is in such a condition that ladies and persons using carriages do not like to drive over it, and hence their business is being seriously injured by the condition of Pennsylvania avenue. That is an evil which they have a right to expect to be remedied; but who is the proper party to pay for it? That is a question which I have thought something about, and about which I confess that I feel somewhat at a loss. I am unwilling, with my friend, the Senator from Illinois, that my constituents, a large proportion of whom never come here, never look at the Capitol, never ride on Pennsylvania avenue, should be taxed to any serious extent to keep it up; and yet, when I take into consideration the fact that in 1871 the Congress of the United States, of its own volition, of its own motion, without consultation with the property-holders upon the Avenue, without consulting them in reference to how the street should be paved, without consulting them as to the material of which the pavement should be made, without giving them any voice in the formation of the contracts by which it was laid, and when I consider that under that law they were compelled, without a voice in the question, to bear the burdens imposed upon them, and that they have been sadly cheated by the manner in which the work was done, and that their property has been rendered less valuable, and the business driven from their street, I can see very well how they think that in common justice and common honesty the street should be paved in part at least at the expense of the Government of the United States represented by the Congress of the United States.

I say again that I do not like to vote to tax the people of this country for improvements in this city or on this avenue unless according to the proportion of property the Government owns on the Avenue. Under the provisions of the bill as amended, I understand the Government of the United States is to pay one-third of the expense of paving the Avenue adjacent to the property of private owners and to pay one-half the expense of paving all the crossings. There are some fifteen or more crossings of streets of the paving of which the Government of the United States is to pay one-half; and then we are to pay one-third of the residue. I am not sure but that that is an undue proportion. I am willing that the Government of the United States shall contribute something, because I think in the first place we are bound to contribute according to the property which the Government owns, and I think in justice to the property-holders we are bound to contribute some of the expense that might otherwise fall on them because of the fact that without their consent, against their protest in many instances, we caused a pavement to be laid down in front of their property which has become rotten and which is driving business away from their stores and places of business.

Under all the circumstances I may perhaps vote for this bill, but I say it is with great reluctance that I vote for it, and especially when it will become a precedent for the further action of the Senate. There are about a hundred miles, as I understand, of public streets improved in this city; I do not know the precise amount, but I am told in the neghborhood of one hundred miles of improved streets. Your action in reference to this bill will become a precedent, and will be pressed upon you in the future as such when these other streets need repairs, many of which are beginning to need them already. According to the present calculation of the expense of the Government in reference to Pennsylvania avenue, which will be in excess of $100,000 if you apply the same ratio of appropriation to the improvement of the other streets, in less than five years, in less than ten years at the furthest, you will be called upon to appropriate from five to ten million of dollars out of the public Treasury of the United States to repair streets in this city.

Is this expense of this Government for the national capital never to end? Are the people of the United States, who have already contributed from twenty to thirty million dollars toward the expenses of this capital, still to be saddled with expense from now to the end of time in order to maintain the streets of this city? While I may possibly vote for this measure, I do it with the understanding that it is only because of the peculiar circumstances existing; that the property-holders on this street have actually been damnified by the action of Congress, and have therefore an equitable claim to be remunerated to some extent for the injury we have inflicted upon them. I am not sure that I shall hold myself bound by any action of mine in reference to this street to apply the same rule of action to any other. I shall hold that question in reserve until the time shall come; and yet I can see very well how it will be pressed as a precedent on the Senate of the United States when the necessity arises for the repair of other streets in this city. At any rate, at the present time I am in favor of limiting the expense not to exceed $4 a square yard, and I shall therefore vote for the amendment of my colleague.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, in the chair.) The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD.]

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 15, noes 16; no quorum voting.

Mr. DORSEY. Let us have the yeas and nays, and then we shall have a quorum.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SARGENT. I shall vote against this amendment because I fear that the difference between $4 and $4.60 may be just enough to give us so poor a pavement that in the course of four or five or six years we may be compelled to do this work all over again. The wooden pavement which was laid down five years ago now needs to be replaced obviously; we all agree upon that; whereas if a good pavement had been put down then there would have been no necessity of doing the work over again and incurring this expense of $300,000. I am well aware that at that time wooden pavements were supposed to be a success. The property-holders to a very large extent influenced the choice of that pavement. Experience since that time has shown that it was entirely inadequate, and that several other pavements are not what they were at that time thought to be. It may be that this difference of sixty cents, which will make very little in the gross cost added to the $4, will be enough to give us a pavement that will last twenty or thirty years. I therefore think it is bad economy to strike off the sixty cents.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 19, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Bogy, Cameron of Wisconsin, Caperton, Cockrell, Cooper, Davis, Eaton, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Harvey, Kelly, Key, McCreery, Ransom, Saulsbury, Wallace, Whyte, and Withers—19.

NAYS—Messrs. Booth, Boutwell, Burnside, Clayton, Cragin, Dawes, Dorsey, Edmunds, Frelinghuysen, Hamlin, Howe, Jones of Nevada, Merrimon, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Paddock, Patterson, Randolph, Robertson, Sargent, Sharon, Sherman, Spencer, and West—25.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Allison, Anthony, Bruce, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Christiancy, Conkling, Conover, Dennis, English, Ferry, Hamilton, Hitchcock, Ingalls, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Kernan, Logan, McDonald, McMillan, Maxey, Mitchell, Norwood, Oglesby, Stevenson, Thurman, Wadleigh, Windom, and Wright—29.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment adopted in relation to the market company shall be stricken out and inserted in a proviso. There seems to be a little confusion about it, as it might possibly be included in the first part of the section; and so we should be providing for the payment of the expense twice. I therefore offer the following proviso, to come in at the end of the third section, and let the amendment included in the preceding part be stricken out:

Provided, That the expense of paving the space opposite the locality occupied by the Washington Market Company shall be paid by said company in the same ratio as is paid by the owners of private property on the line of said avenue.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont asks unanimous consent that the amendment just proposed be adopted in lieu of the provision heretofore inserted in regard to the market company. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the amendment is adopted.

Mr. WEST. Now, for the purpose of preventing any possible misapprehension as to the obligation of the railroad companies as to the extent of their pavement, I move in line 5 of section 3, to insert before the word "tracks" the words "exterior rails of the." As the bill now reads, the companies are obliged to pave "between the tracks." There is a very great difference between the expressions "between the tracks" and "between the outer rails of the tracks." "Between the tracks" would be the space between the two tracks. To prevent that misunderstanding, I move to insert before the word "tracks," in line 5 of section 3, the words "exterior rails of the."

Mr. DORSEY. I think that is a necessary amendment.

Mr. CLAYTON. Does not the bill now provide "between the tracks?" There are two rails to each track. If you say "between the tracks," is not that sufficient? When you speak of a double-track railway, you mean a railway with four rails. If you say "between the tracks," it is all you require, it seems to me.

Mr. WEST. The proposition is to make the bill read just in this way: "between the exterior rails of the tracks of their road." Nobody can fail to understand what that means.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Louisiana, [Mr. WEST.]

The amendment was agreed to.

Now, to perfect that, I move also to amend on line 6 of section 3 by inserting before the words "the track" the words "and exterior to the track on each side thereof;" so as to read:

And for a distance of two feet from and exterior to the track on each side thereof.

Mr. EDMUNDS. After "from" insert "exterior to;" that will do.

Mr. WEST. Very well; I will put it in that form.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I wish to move an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN,] which is now a part of the bill. In line 6 of that amendment, after the words "District of Columbia," I move to insert "derived from taxation." Inasmuch as we have provided now for the portion the United States shall pay and the District of Columbia, I think we had better insert the words "derived from taxation;" so as to read: "out of the revenues of the District of Columbia derived from taxation."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. The same words should be inserted in line 12. After the words "general revenue of the District of Columbia" add "derived from taxation."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. The same amendment should be made in line 17. At the end of the line the words "derived from taxation" should be inserted.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LOGAN. The amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio and adopted by the Senate is now, I believe, a part of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair so understands.

Mr. LOGAN. I move to strike out of that portion of the bill which that amendment makes lines 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7. I will state my reasons for this very briefly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. LOGAN. My motion is to strike out the first seven lines of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Let it be reported, that we may know how the bill will read.

Mr. WEST. I rise to a question of order. This amendment that the Senator now proposes to change having been adopted by the Senate, I contend that no one has a right to further amend it. I should like the ruling of the Chair on that point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order. The amendment was adopted in the Senate; and that being so, as the present occupant of the chair understands, it is not in order to move to strike out the amendment or any portion of it.

Mr. LOGAN. Or any portion of the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Any portion of the amendment adopted in the Senate.

Mr. LOGAN. I believe it is in order to add to the bill, is it not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is.

Mr. LOGAN. I move to add the following proviso:

Provided, That this act shall not be so construed as to require the United States Government to pay any more than one-third of the whole cost of the said pavement, the residue to be paid by the property-owners and the District of Columbia in equal proportions, and by the railroad company in the proportion hereinbefore provided.

I will detain the Senate but a moment. I have no idea that the amendment will be adopted by the Senate, but I offer it to give me an opportunity of saying what I desire to say.

The amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio does more than yesterday evening I said the bill with its amendments then did. It now requires the Government of the United States to pay the entire cost of the paving in front of its own property; not half, as was proposed yesterday, but all, and then one-third of all the residue. Besides, it makes the Government of the United States and the District in equal proportions pay the cost of the pavement of all the cross-streets except that portion paid by the railroad company. If there is anything that could have been added to this bill as it was yesterday, that was known to be by every Senator who voted for it as having the object to require the Government to pay more than it ought to pay under any rule as principle that could be laid down, this amendment does that very thing.

The principle advocated by Senators yesterday was that Pennsylvania avenue, being used by the Government, should be paid for by the Government in greater proportion than it should be paid for by citizens, but now they add to that that the Government shall pay one-half of paving all the cross-streets. What effect does that have? What interest has the Government in the cross-streets, I should like to know? Now we require the Government to pay one-half the cost of paving at the cross-streets, all in front of its own property, and one-third in front of all other property.

I merely enter my protest against this thing, which I look upon as a legal robbery of the people of the United States of America for the benefit of the people of the District of Columbia. That is all it is. I shall call for the yeas and nays on this question. I do not know whether I shall get more than a half-dozen votes, but I want to see how many there are who are in favor of the Government paying for the paving of streets in the city of Washington without reference to the citizens of the city.

Mr. MCMILLAN. May I ask the Senator what proportion his amendment imposes upon the railroad company?

Mr. LOGAN. The same as is proposed in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator call for the yeas and nays?

Mr. LOGAN. I did not mean to call for the yeas and nays on this amendment, but I meant that I would call for them on the passage of the bill if this amendment be not adopted.

Mr. WITHERS. I ask the Chair if the amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois has not been acted on adversely already by the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not understand that it has been.

Mr. LOGAN. While I have been in the Senate it has not been.

Mr. WITHERS. It provides for a different proportion of the amount to be paid by the United States Government from that which is provided in the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio and adopted by the Senate.

Mr. LOGAN. Yes, it provides differently from that.

Mr. WITHERS. It is antagonistic to what the sense of the Senate has already declared, and I was under the impression that for that reason it would not be in order.

Mr. LOGAN. That is not the rule. Being antagonistic in principle does not affect it. The amendment itself has not been voted upon. I have concluded to ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment itself.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 16, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Cameron of Wisconsin, Cockrell, Dawes, Edmunds, Hamilton, Hitchcock, Key, Logan, McCreery, McMillan, Maxey, Merrimon, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Robertson, and Sharon—16.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Bogy, Booth, Boutwell, Burnside, Caperton, Clayton, Cooper, Davis, Dennis, Dorsey, Eaton, Frelinghuysen, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hamlin, Howe, Morrill of Maine, Norwood, Sargent, Saulsbury, Sherman, Spencer, Stevenson, West, and Withers—26.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Allison, Bayard, Bruce, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Christiancy, Conkling, Conover, Cragin, English, Ferry, Harvey, Ingalls, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Jones of Nevada, Kelly, Kernan, McDonald, Mitchell, Oglesby, Paddock, Patterson, Randolph, Ransom, Thurman, Wadleigh, Wallace, Whyte, Windom, and Wright—31.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. EATON. I know, Mr. President, that the Senate as a body have no discretion in regard to the material to be used or the manner in which the work is to be done; but in order that certain information which I have received may go to this very respectable board that we create by this bill, I desire to say a word or two in regard to the exterior pavement.

There has been one great difficulty in regard to the construction of horse-railways and the paving from the outside of the rails in every section of the country where these horse-railways have been used. Senators will remember in passing about our streets here that there are to be perceived gutters directly on the outside of the rails, especially where the asphalt pavement is used. In talking recently with a very distinguished engineer, he spoke of a plan which he had in view, having given the subject a good deal of thought. He communicated with me on the subject, thinking the Senate had the entire power to determine the manner of construction, and I give it here that these commissioners may have the opinion of an engineer as distinguished as any in the United States Army, in my judgment.

His idea is, taking the blocks of granite on the outside, that they should be laid, not all of an even width, but like teeth; that is to say, if it is to be two feet let the first line be twenty inches and then alternate with blocks of twenty-six and twenty, twenty-six and twenty, so that no matter at what angle a wagon may cross the track it will meet with a solid opposition, and no matter whether it be directly at right angles or whether it be in any other direction it will strike at right angles with this alternate layer of materials. I think all Senators who have noticed will agree with me that the cause of the rut is that in taking the track not at right angle the wheel of a heavy vehicle rolls along between the track and the pavement, and thus you cut off the rut; but in the opinion of this engineer the laying of the outside pavement in this manner will entirely heal this difficulty.

I take the liberty of making these remarks in regard to that subject here so that this plan may go before this commission if the bill should pass.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 37, nays 11, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Bayard, Boutwell, Burnside, Cameron of Wisconsin, Caperton, Clayton, Conkling, Cooper, Davis, Dawes, Dennis, Dorsey, Eaton, Edmunds, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hamlin, Howe, Jones of Nevada, Maxey, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Norwood, Patterson, Randolph, Ransom, Robertson, Sargent, Sherman, Spencer, West, Whyte, Windom, and Withers—37.

NAYS—Messrs. Bogy, Booth, Cockrell, Hamilton, Kernan, Key, Logan, McCreery, McMillan, Merrimon, and Oglesby—11.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Allison, Bruce, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Christiancy, Conover, Cragin, English, Harvey, Hitchcock, Ingalls, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Kelly, McDonald, Mitchell, Morton, Paddock, Saulsbury, Sharon, Stevenson, Thurman, Wadleigh, Wallace, and Wright—25.

So the bill was passed.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 3128, being a bill making appropriations for sundry deficiencies for the current year.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3128) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I ask that the amendments reported by the Committee on Appropriations be acted on as they are reached in the reading of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That course will be pursued, if there be no objection.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill. The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to insert after the word "dollars," in line 35 of section 1, in the clause appropriating for the expenses of the special committee of the Senate to inquire into the Mississippi election, the following words:

And the disbursing officer of the Senate shall advance such parts of said sum to the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate as the chairman of said committee shall in writing direct for the purposes aforesaid; and the Sergeant-at-Arms shall, as soon as may be, make a detailed report of the expenditures thereof, with proper vouchers, which, when so made, shall be received by said disbursing officer and returned with his accounts to the proper officer of the Treasury Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to insert after line 43 of section 1:

SENATE.

For compensation of Senators for the fiscal year 1875, $83.19.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to know what the object of that is.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That is a balance due a particular Senator whose pay is short that much. That is all.

Mr. DAVIS. I understand that there was an error, probably in the calculation of the mileage of a Senator. It is less than $100.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Exactly this sum, $83.19.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to insert after the amendment just adopted the following clause:

For the payment of mileage to Senators who took their seats at the session of the Senate convened on the 5th day of March, 1875, by proclamation of the President, and who were not members of the previous Senate, $6,336.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I move to amend by striking out the word "Senate," in the last line, and inserting "Congress;" so as to read:

And who were not members of the previous Congress.

The object of the amendment is to provide mileage for Senators who, not being members of Congress and not being here in attendance on Congress at the capital, were called here, as otherwise they would not have been but for the extra session.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not understand the Senator. What other officers of Congress besides Senators were called here?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I am not aware of any.

Mr. COCKRELL. Were any of the officers of the Senate called here that this appropriation is to meet?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. There were undoubtedly.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is this appropriation intended to meet their expense too?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. No, sir; it does not reach them.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then why change "Senate" to "Congress?"

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I have just explained.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have tried to hear.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. As it now stands, members of the other branch of Congress becoming Senators, under a sharp construction of the original amendment, might draw their mileage although they did not travel. The object of the amendment is to provide mileage for the travel of Senators who were summoned here on the proclamation of the President in March of last year who otherwise would not have come until December. It originally read "and who were not members of the previous Senate." If any portion were members of the other branch, and came up from that House to this, although they had not traveled, they might be included in this amendment, as has been suggested to me, and I think it is obvious enough; and as that would not be within the general scope of the amendment, this modification is deemed proper. It is simply to provide for such Senators as under the President's proclamation were required to come here on the 4th of March, when otherwise they would not have had to come until December. My honorable friend I trust by this time will see the pertinency of this amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand it now, sir. [Laughter.]

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I hope it is not offensive to my honorable friend from Missouri.

Mr. COCKRELL. I was not a member of the lower House at the time I came here.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Then certainly my honorable friend has no solicitude on that subject. [Laughter.]

Mr. ANTHONY. Does that say "previous Senate?" What is the phraseology?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Let the Clerk read the whole clause.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment and the amendment will be read.

Mr. ANTHONY. I have it before me. It reads: "And who were not members of the previous Senate." Should not that be "who were not previously members of the Senate?" We never have had but one Senate. That commenced in 1789 and has continued ever since.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. What it means is "the previous Congress."

Mr. ANTHONY. That would be proper; but I think it should be "not previously members of the Senate."

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That might be a little comprehensive, because once in a while a man who has been in gets back.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is rare. [Laughter.]

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Very rare, to be sure; but that might be a little hard on some of us. [Laughter.]

Mr. ANTHONY. "Members of the previous Congress" will do. I do not like the expression "previous Senate;" as though the Senate expired at a particular time.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That is what I propose to strike out.

Mr. ANTHONY. My friend from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS,] who is always accurate, suggests "who were not members of the Senate at its next preceding session."

Mr. SARGENT. It seems to me that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine is very apt. It simply strikes out "Senate" and inserts "Congress." We do not intend that this shall apply to any one who was a member of the previous Congress, because he, being here, did not perform the travel. If he was not a member of the previous Congress, he will be entitled to it.

Mr. ANTHONY. All I object to is the phraseology, which implies that the Senate expires with every Congress. If you avoid that, I am satisfied.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I propose to use the word "Congress."

Mr. ANTHONY. I move to make the latter clause read "who were not members of the Senate at its next preceding session."

Mr. SARGENT. That does not cover the case, because then if they were members of the previous House of Representatives they might receive this mileage though they did not perform the travel. Therefore by saying "members of the previous Congress" we cover the whole case. Then the amendment will read:

For the payment of mileage to Senators who took their seats at the session of the Senate convened on the 5th day of March, 1875, by proclamation of the President, and who were not members of the previous Congress.

That is the way we propose it to read. If they were members of the previous Congress in either branch, they will not be entitled to the money; and therefore we say they shall not have been members of the previous Congress.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think a man who is a member of the House and is elected a member of the Senate is entitled to mileage.

Mr. SARGENT. For an extra session, when he was sitting on the 4th of March in the House of Representatives?

Mr. ANTHONY. Although I think this provision is perfectly right, it is a departure from the precedents certainly. It has not been customary to pay Senators mileage for attendance at a called session. When a session has been called on the 4th of March, at the beginning of the term of a Senator, it has not been customary to pay him mileage; but I think it ought to be done. It was not done in my case, I know.

Mr. SARGENT. For a number of years past it has been the custom where new Senators have come in on the 4th of March, at an extra session, to pay them mileage. I remember distinctly, and can call my friend's attention to the statutes where this appropriation has been made, and it is just that it should be made.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think it is.

Mr. SARGENT. But if they were members of the previous Congress, either in the Senate or the House, and performed no travel at all, we have ceased for a number of years to pay mileage. I remember that when I came over from the House of Representatives I received no mileage, and I ought not to have received any. It had not been done then for several Congresses. It is one of the reforms that we have wrought in this department of expenditure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations as amended.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to insert after the word "mileage" the words "for actual travel only;" so that, if thus amended, the amendment will read:

For the payment of mileage for actual travel only to Senators who took their seats at the session of the Senate convened on the 5th day of March, 1875, &c.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. There can be no objection to that; but whether it is not supererogatory matter altogether is another question. Of course not being members of the Senate before that time, they would necessarily travel to get here. That was our idea about it. However, there is no objection to the Senator's amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have been under the impression from some observation that in order to prevent money from getting out of the Treasury it is necessary that a law should be as carefully drawn as a plea in abatement; that it should absolutely exclude every possible means of guessing that it could possibly include something else. Therefore, out of abundant caution, I would put this in, particularly as it applies to people who I know in this instance would never think of taking money except for actual travel, so that there can be nothing invidious in beginning the example on this particular class.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the committee, as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was after the amendment just adopted to insert:

For labor, $18,000; and $1,000 of said sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be used to pay the laborers employed in the Secretary's office.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after the amendment just adopted to insert:

For folding documents, $1,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after the amendment just adopted to insert:

For horses and wagons, $565.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after the amendment just adopted to insert:

For furniture, and repairs of the same, $6,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after the amendment just adopted to insert:

For advertising proposals for reporting congressional proceedings for the fiscal year 1872, $36.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk continued the reading of the bill.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in line 285 of section 1 to strike out "Office" and insert "Bureau;" and in line 286, after "Education," to insert "exclusively;" so as to make the clause read:

For rent of rooms for the use of the Pension Bureau and Bureau of Education exclusively, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, $9,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert after line 288 of section 1:

For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to pay the compensation and necessary and incidental expenses of the commission appointed June 18, 1875, to treat with the Sioux Indians for the relinquishment of the Black Hills country in Dakota Territory, $25,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear that explained.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs [Mr. ALLISON] can explain it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am asking the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to explain it.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I will respond to the Senator from Vermont. This deficiency arises in this way: Apprehending troubles, or in the presence of troubles already existing on the frontier, growing out of the Black Hills expedition, the Sioux Indians were found to be in a state of great disorder, and the President of the United States deemed it expedient to institute a commission to treat with the Indians for the pacification of that question by settlement, by treaty, or otherwise. A commission was instituted to go out and treat with those Indians, at any rate to endeavor to postpone, until Congress should meet or until something further should be done, a collision between the Black Hills people and the Indians, which was deemed to be imminent. This expense grows out of that general fact. A commission was instituted by the President on the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior; the commission went out; and this appropriation is for the personal expenditures of the commissioners, their incidental expenditures in negotiating and in communicating with the Indians. It turns out that one of the commissioners is now the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and if any more definite statement or substantial evidence is necessary I shall be obliged to refer to him.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is definite enough for me. I should like to ask the Senator from Maine further whether there has been any previous appropriation out of which any of these expenses could have been paid?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. None at all. The Senator is aware that under our present mode of making appropriations there is no authority for an expenditure out of any specific appropriation for any other purpose. I am not aware of any fund out of which they could have been paid unless it might have been a contingent fund, and latterly we have not appropriated a contingent fund to the Department of the Interior for this purpose.

Mr. EDMUNDS. So that the Senator understands there has as yet been no expenditure of public money for the class of objects named in this amendment?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. None at all that I know of. I have no reason to believe that there has been any expenditure for this purpose.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move, in aid of this amendment, to insert after the word "the" in line 290 the word "lawful;" so that the clause, if amended, will read:

For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to pay the lawful compensation.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move in the same line to strike out the word "and" after the word "necessary." It now reads "the compensation and necessary and incidental expenses," so that the word "necessary" does not apply to the word "incidental." You have provided for the compensation, and if you then provide also for the necessary incidental expenses, it covers the whole subject and limits the authority for allowance of accounts to necessary incidental expenses and compensation.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I suppose as it stands it means necessary expenses and incidental expenses——

Mr. EDMUNDS. Whether necessary or not?

Mr. ALLISON. I think there is no objection to the amendment. Indeed, I think it is rather an error to have the word "and" before "incidental."

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think so, too.

Mr. ALLISON. Of course it ought to be confined to the necessary incidental expenses.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I do not know what the idea was, but I supposed a distinction was intended to be drawn between the compensation of the commissioners, their personal expenses, and the expenses incidental to the negotiation with the Indians.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But I submit to my friend from Maine that the personal expenses of the commissioners are incidental to the object they have in view; perfectly so.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Very well.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Whereas, if you leave it as it stands in the committee's amendment, the necessary expenses of the commission are to be paid, and besides that whatever incidental expenses they may have incurred, whether necessary or not. Of course the Senator does not mean that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On the motion of the Senator from Vermont, in line 290, before the word "compensation," the word "lawful" was inserted. I do not know precisely what object the Senator had in view in inserting that word. I do not know that there is any objection to it, but I should be glad to have some little explanation of it, if it is not too late.

Mr. EDMUNDS. My object was to make this appropriation bill keep within the scope of the law and that this provision should not allow the accounting officers of the Treasury Department to pay any unlawful claims, and to confine this definition of the expenditure of money to any lawful compensation and to allow none that may be unlawful. That was the object, and it was so manifest that I did not think it necessary to make a speech upon it.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. President, under the provision as amended by the Senate could any compensation be paid if there was no statute in existence authorizing the appointment of this commission and fixing the compensation of the members?

Mr. EDMUNDS. You must ask the President, not me.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Allow me to answer that.

Mr. HOWE. I do not care who answers it.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I raised no question as to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont because I did not think it affected the amendment. I have no doubt at all that the appropriation is perfectly legal. I think the President, having by the Constitution of the United States the authority to negotiate a treaty with the Indians, is authorized to institute proceedings to that end. Obviously enough, that is the province of the President, and in this particular instance I have no doubt that the exigency existed which called upon him to do that thing, not by himself but by his embassadors. These commissioners were in that nature; they were instituted a commission to go into that country and negotiate a treaty with these Indians, as has been done heretofore. Would not that create an obligation on the part of the Government to pay them?

Mr. HOWE. But to pay how much, may I ask my friend?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. To pay a reasonable compensation.

Mr. HOWE. Who is to be the judge of what is a reasonable compensation?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Congress. We say it is reasonable that they should be paid $25,000, if it was lawful to incur it. The only question here is as to the amount which we will sanction by fixing a sum. As to the qualification of the amendment by the term "lawful," that applies simply to the character of the transaction, whether legal or illegal.

Mr. HOWE. Of course the appropriation is limited. No more than $25,000 can be disbursed both for compensation and expenses. Suppose it should turn out that the expenses are only $5,000, would the disbursing officers be at liberty to disburse $20,000 for compensation?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I do not think there is the slightest limitation as to that. Certainly there is no limitation on the authority of the disbursing officers as to how much of it shall apply to the compensation and how much to the incidental expenses. Twenty-five thousand dollars is appropriated to this particular object, that is for compensation and incidental expenses. The only question that could arise possibly, it seems to me, in the case is, Was it lawful? That it was lawful, I submit, is clear because the President is by the Constitution authorized precisely to do this thing, to make a treaty. That he undertook to do, and whether it failed or not does not become important. I suppose the idea of the Senator from Vermont in inserting "lawful" was to fortify the amendment. I think it does fortify it, and without it I confess I think there would be an omission.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If a private citizen were appointed on this commission to negotiate a treaty which the President, as the Senator says by the Constitution, if any of it is left yet, apparently may do, whatever compensation may be thought proper, any amount that is reasonable pay, it would be lawful to pay him, if Congress provided the money, undoubtedly. But supposing that the President should have selected the General of the Army, the Secretary of the Navy, the Attorney-General, and so on around, to negotiate this treaty, then there is a statute of the United States which declares that no officer of the United States shall draw double pay. Therefore leaving out the word "lawful," if the Secretary of War and the General of the Army and so on had been selected, this would be making a fresh provision of the law that would authorize those gentlemen to draw their salaries as heads of Departments and officers of the United States and in addition thereto to receive compensation and reasonable compensation for this special service. That is contrary to the express statutes of the United States, and is contrary, in my opinion, to sound principles of administrative government. Leaving the word "lawful" in, as it has been agreed to, you obviate that difficulty and apply same principles of law to this case that the general statutes of United States already existing apply to other cases.

Mr. ALLISON. I happen to know something about this particular provision. I know that the President of the United States designated certain private citizens and also certain public officers. The letter of designation and instruction provided that the private citizens appointed upon the commission should receive $8 per day for their services and expenses; and it also provided that those who were in office—I believe two of the commissioners were already holding office—should receive no compensation, but should be allowed their ordinary expenses.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is according to the law.

Mr. ALLISON. That I understand to be in exact accordance with the law. Therefore, I understand the effect of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont simply to be that those persons who served upon this commission who were already in office shall not again be paid out of this appropriation. If that is the object of it, I entirely concur with the Senator; and I can assure him that no officer upon that commission will ever make any claim for any portion of this fund.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope the Senator did not suppose that I thought he was going to make any claim.

Mr. ALLISON. No; I did not for a moment suppose that.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think Senators ought to understand the precise effect of their action. I think the case is covered by section 1765 of the Revised Statutes, which provides that—

No officer in any branch of the public service, or any other person whose salary, pay, or emoluments are fixed by law or regulations, shall receive any additional pay, extra allowance, or compensation, in any form whatever, for the disbursement of public money or for any other service or duty whatsoever, unless the same is authorized by law and the appropriation therefor explicitly states that it is for such additional pay, extra allowance, or compensation.

Without the word "lawful" the clause would prevent any officer of the Government from receiving the compensation or pay. I do not think the word "lawful" would make any change in any particular.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It has been sometimes claimed, let me suggest to the Senator from Ohio, that the later act which contained no limitation has been construed to be additional to the old law, and to change the effect of the standing statutes, as all new laws are generally expected to do either by way of addition or alteration. Therefore, to guard against what has sometimes, as I have known, been claimed, I thought it desirable to put in that word.

Mr. HOWE. With the operation of the word "lawful," as limited by the Senator from Vermont and by my friend from Maine, of course there is no exception to be taken; but it struck me that the use of the word "lawful" would prevent the paying of any compensation whatever. I am doubtless mistaken about it. If the Senator from Vermont and the Senator from Maine are right in supposing that the President has at any and at all times the right to muster into his service in the negotiation of treaties, either with Indians or with foreign powers, any number of citizens that he chooses to employ, and by doing that can create a liability on the part of Government to pay for those services——

Mr. EDMUNDS. If by "liability" you mean "duty," I agree with you.

Mr. HOWE. Of course if there is a liability, there is a duty. If that can be done, as there were some citizens on this commission, I believe, who were drawing pay from the Government as officers—if the designation of those gentlemen to that duty creates an obligation on the part of the Government, a legal obligation to pay them for doing it, and fixes the sum that should be paid to them, then there is no sort of objection to the use of the word "lawful." I thought there was no provision of law—I know of none—which authorized the appointment of those men.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does the Senator from Wisconsin mean to intimate that he believes that the action of the President on this occasion was contrary to law?

Mr. HOWE. I meant to say that I believed there was no law, that I knew of no law, authorizing their employment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And he therefore had no authority to do that thing?

Mr. HOWE. No authority to do that thing.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then it was a violation of the duties of his office?

Mr. HOWE. If there was a law, where was it?

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator from Maine has stated that it was in the Constitution, authorizing the President, by and with the consent of the Senate, to make treaties, &c., and as necessary to that to enter into negotiations with the people with whom he is to treat.

Mr. HOWE. I am undoubtedly wrong, because I am at variance with the Senator from Vermont and with the Senator from Maine; but when the Constitution confers upon the President the power to make treaties, I did not suppose that that of itself carried the power to employ all the citizens of the United States to help him make treaties. The law from time to time provides for re-enforcing him, sometimes by Indian commissioners, sometimes by Indian agents, sometimes by special agents, sometimes by foreign ministers, and when the law authorizes such re-enforcement, it provides the compensation to which they shall be entitled. However, this is not a matter that interests me at all. I simply thought the disbursing officers would be a little embarrassed in paying anybody connected with that commission. There were some gentlemen who were not to get pay at all, and I thought they ought to be paid a fair sum.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think so, too.

Mr. HOWE. If they can be paid under the clause as it stands, I am entirely content with it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk continued the reading of the bill.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to insert after line 311 of section 1:

For the purpose of paying the expenses of transportation, care and custody, arranging and exhibiting, and safe return of articles belonging to the United States to be presented and exhibited in the United States building at the centennial exhibition at Philadelphia, during the year 1876, in pursuance of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1875, the following sums are hereby appropriated, namely: For the Interior Department, $15,000; for the War Department, $18,500; for the Smithsonian Institution, $21,000; for the United States Commission of Food-Fishes, $5,000; for the Treasury Department, $14,000; the same to be disbursed by the board on behalf of the United States Executive Departments appointed in pursuance of the order of the President of January 23, 1874: Provided, That for contingent expenses any surplus arising from appropriations made to either of said Departments by act of March 3, 1875, is hereby authorized to be used for the purposes herein mentioned.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to have an explanation of the reason why this amount is placed in the hands of the board to be disbursed, instead of being disbursed by the heads of Department themselves.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The board is the agent of the Depart ments, appointed by the President for that particular purpose. We appropriated $500,000 last year to enable the Departments to make this exhibit, and the President appointed a board, at the head of which is a general of the Army, to make the disbursements. That is the particular reason why it is done.

Mr. COCKRELL. A board of officers?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. General Lyford is at the head of it.

Mr. COCKRELL. And the other members of the board are civilians?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I am told they are officers detailed from the different Departments, probably representing each Department.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then the proviso makes an additional appropriation.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That does not make an additional appropriation. That provides that any of the unexpended appropriation for any one of these Departments may be used. That is all that it provides for.

Mr. COCKRELL. Suppose there is a surplus due to any or all of these Departments. Five hundred thousand dollars might be appropriated by this amendment.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The specific appropriations for the purpose of exhibiting have all been exhausted except in one instance, and that is in the Navy Department. It will be perceived that these specific sums are for expense of transportation &c. If it should turn out that there should be a surplus, then we give them authority to use it; that is all.

Mr. ALLISON. If I understood the objection of the Senator from Missouri, it is to the last proviso.

Mr. EDMUNDS. He has no objection now.

Mr. ALLISON. Then he waives his objection. I only wanted to say that the former appropriation for the contingent expenses was only $25,000.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understood the chairman of the committee to say $500,000.

Mr. ALLISON. That was the total appropriation. The appropriation for the contingent expenses was $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk in reading the bill read the following clause, lines 334 to 342 of section 1:

For defraying the expenses of the Supreme Court and circuit and district courts of the United States, including the District of Columbia; and also for jurors and witnesses, and expenses of suits in which the United States are concerned, of prosecutions for offenses committed against the United States, for the safe-keeping of prisoners, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1875, $65,000.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in line 346 of section 1, to reduce the appropriation "for the defraying of the expenses and fees of the United States marshal of the Territory of Utah and of summoning jurors and witnesses, of keeping and transporting prisoners and caring for the penitentiary," from $6,000 to $5,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. While we are on this amendment I should like to ask the chairman of the committee to explain (although it is not perfectly regular to do so, but it may as well be done for convenience) these expenses under the head of "judicial." I find on looking into the estimates that they are only estimated for in this same general way, almost in the words of the bill, without giving any statement of details or causes which have led to this deficiency of $65,000, and also to this deficiency in the Territory of Utah. I should be glad to have the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations explain it, as I have been unable, after some little effort, to get any explanation about it, probably because I did not begin in time.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I have here some figures, but they are not so specific as I think would be satisfactory to the Senator from Vermont. I will send to the Chair, with the request that they may be read, items constituting over $60,000 of this deficiency.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Balances found due or claimed by officers of United States courts for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875.

John Hall, United States marshal, Western Pennsylvania	$3,818 02
S. P. Evans, United States marshal, Eastern Tennessee	5,941 84
John Pratt, United States marshal, New Mexico	3,294 07
John Usher, United States marshal, Massachusetts	6,833 94
J. F. Fagan, United States marshal, Western Arkansas	14,673 88
L. B. Eaton, United States marshal, Western Tennessee	11,400 00
William Spence, late United States marshal, Middle Tennessee	1,721 00
W. H. Smyth, United States marshal, Georgia	2,196 92
R. N. McLaren, United States marshal, Minnesota	1,884 71
C. A. Newcomb, late United States marshal, Eastern Missouri	2,500 00
S. B. Packard, United States marshal, Louisiana	1,280 00
J. W. Chapman, United States marshal, Iowa	2,374 00
John G. Stetson, clerk United States circuit court, Massachusetts	2,187 80
Total	60,106 18

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I will now send to the Chair a letter from the First Comptroller of the Treasury on this very point, and ask that it may be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, FIRST COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., January 21, 1876.

SIR: The expenses of the United States courts during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, proved to have been in excess of the amount appropriated to defray such expenses. On accounts now in this Department the unpaid balances due from the United States amount to $61,288.96, and all are not yet rendered.

It is estimated that there will be required to close the accounts the sum of $65,000, in addition to balances due from a few marshals whose accounts are not yet adjusted.

I respectfully suggest that application be made by you for an appropriation of that amount to supply the deficiency for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875.

Your obedient servant,

R. W. TAYLER, Comptroller.

Hon. EDWARDS PIERREPONT,
Attorney-General.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee, if I am not trespassing too much upon his time, whether under the head of "expenses of suits in which the United States are concerned," in lines 337 and 338, is included, or could be, the expense of the employment of special counsel, which goes to make up this $65,000, or any part of it? I do not mean by this inquiry to say that special counsel ought not to be employed. They must be employed, as a matter of course, very often; but I merely ask for information.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I suppose the expenses of special counsel would come under that term. "Expenses" is a pretty broad word.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is this sum adequate, supposing the payment of special counsel would fall under that expression, as I think it would, looking at the face of the law alone? Is this sum of $65,000, which seems to be chiefly accounted for in some other way, adequate?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. It occurs to me that the counsel fees are really not included in that item.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I imagine so.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Because what I have had read runs up to $60,000 and a little more for other than counsel fees. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] suggests a solution of the whole thing. He says that counsel fees are always paid first, and therefore there is no occasion to appropriate for them.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That unhappily is not the case in my experience, but I have never had any with the United States.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. They do not do that way up in Vermont perhaps. [Laughter.]

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is not according to my experience. Will the Senator be kind enough to tell us in respect of this second item how it happens that these territorial expenses have run up in this way, when according to our territorial system, as I understand it, the Territories are expected to bear the expense of summoning jurors and witnesses so far as respects the administration of the law of the Territory, setting aside for the time being the United States law per se, just as is the case in the States? Why has not this Territory, if it has not, made provision for these expenses? If it has not, why is it not required to do it instead of its being paid out of the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I do not know that I can recall with entire accuracy the fact about this matter, but last year the Senator may remember the proposition was referred to his committee. There was some difficulty about the Territories not having made appropriations to pay for legal expenses, as they are ordinarily bound to do; and in order to correct that it was suggested that the appropriations which Congress usually made for the legislative expenses should be upon the contingency that these judicial expenses might be paid out of that fund.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Has the Senator the statute before him?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I have. The law reads:

For legislative expenses, namely, for compensation and mileage of members of the Legislative Assembly, officers, clerks, and others, $23,400; and this appropriation may be used under the direction of the Department of Justice to defray the judicial expenses of the supreme and district courts of said Territory.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That being the state of the law, as I thought it was as to this particular Territory, the only one in which any difficulty appears to occur, I wish to inquire of the chairman of the committee whether the sum appropriated by the act which he has read has been used for that purpose or whether it has been used for paying the legislative expenses of the Territory; so that in result we pay the legislative expenses of the Territory, and also pay for administering their local law?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. We have used so much and want so much more.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the Senator is sure of that, then we are right, except that we ought to impose a tax upon the people of that Territory to make it up.

Mr. SARGENT. I am sure that the Legislature refused to receive any pay. They refused to themselves any pay, and they served without it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Of course, for aught I can see, this appropriation must be made, but the result is that in this Territory, as distinguished from the other Territories of the United States, we contribute the sum of $5,000 for this last year as a deficiency toward paying the expenses of the local administration of the law out of the Treasury of the United States, which we do not do to other Territories.

Mr. SARGENT. This is for prosecutions under United States laws, by United States officers, and before jurors selected under a peculiar jury law which we have applied to Utah and to which they have objected.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is perfectly true, because we found we could not have a jury law in Utah which would do anything without it; but the result is exactly the same, and that is, for administering the local law of Utah in the way that Congress believed it ought to be administered, by this means, instead of the people bearing the expense as they do in the other Territories, the Treasury of the United States to that extent, in addition to what we have appropriated for their legislative expenses, is to bear it.

Mr. SARGENT. It grows out of the anomalous condition of Utah, unquestionably.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That does not make it any better in point of taxing the people of the United States for it.

Mr. SARGENT. I admit it is very bad.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations was in section 2 to insert the word "dollars" after "thousand" in line 2; so as to read:

That the sum of $1,165,000 remaining to the credit of the appropriation for pay of the Army, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued and concluded.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the committee how came these deficiencies for all these back years which are provided for in the third section on pages 18, 19, 20, and 21? What new process in the War Department has developed these deficiencies?

Mr. MORRILL of Maine. If the Senator will excuse me, I do not quite understand the inquiry.

Mr. DAWES. I see that these are deficiencies occurring six, seven, or eight years past in the War Department. Take the one hundred and thirteenth line of section 3; there is a deficiency that occurred in the "year 1871 and prior years." I simply desire information on the subject.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. If the Senator will look to Executive Document No. 151, he will find all these balances stated. They are small balances resulting from the settlement of the accounts of former years, the accounts not having been settled before, and so the balances were not ascertained. They accrued in that year, but as by our recent legislation nothing can be paid except what accrued in the current year, the House of Representatives have, as the Senator will see by turning back, provided for settling these balances by reviving the appropriations applicable to their payment.

Mr. DAWES. I get an idea. How have these unpaid accounts been lingering along?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. There is no other explanation of it, and probably it is susceptible of no other explanation than that these accounts had not been settled and the balances stated before the appropriations applicable to them were carried to the surplus fund. The Senator is aware that from year to year we have been in the habit of doing something like this, but not on so large a scale as at present.

Mr. DAWES. These are rather unusual items to me.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. They are unusual in the number, but not in the fact.

Mr. DAWES. It is very rare that they cover so many years back.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am very glad to see these items. They all grow out of the law we passed three or four years ago, carrying all balances of appropriations to the Treasury at the end of the fiscal year and forbidding the payment of lapsed funds. As a matter of course these balances accrue and are shown by the accounting officer of the Treasury Department in settling officers' accounts, and as they cannot pay them out of the old lapsed appropriations, as they formerly did, they have to come to us for an appropriation, and this bill is the best evidence of the wise operation of that law.

Mr. DAWES. It did not seem to me possible that these accounts could exist six or seven years undisposed of, and hence I made the inquiry.

Mr. SHERMAN. They are very small items. An officer's account might not have been settled up so as to show the exact sum due him.

Mr. DAWES. Some of the items are forty or fifty thousand dollars.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is one item rather large, and I was going to inquire about that.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. These items grew out of the operations of the Quartermaster's Department and the Commissary Department and out of the general service. Take the Indian service, for instance: Here are half a million of balances not provided for in this bill either by the House or by the Senate which grow out of the Indian service and which fall under this general explanation which I have undertaken to give. The whole case before us now, as the Senator from Massachusetts observes, is novel to him, and it is so because these balances heretofore have never come to the attention of Congress; they have been paid out of the general appropriations which the Departments at one time or another had on hand; but since the Departments have been reined in by the legislation of Congress requiring them to pay nothing except out of specific appropriations, and providing that all moneys not expended in the current year shall go into the surplus fund of the Treasury, these things come to light.

Mr. DAWES. They have not had that power for five or six years.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That act, I believe, was in 1870.

Mr. DAVIS. Some of these items, especially the large one that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] speaks of, grew out of unsettled accounts. For instance, a man had been quartermaster and had not accounted for certain articles which were charged to him, and his account was refused to be settled for his compensation until he accounted for all the articles that were charged to him during his term of service. One case I know especially, where there was a charge of perhaps $300,000 against a former quartermaster, and there was compensation due him of about $1,800. He had to settle his accounts and pay whatever he could not satisfactorily explain into the Treasury before his account for pay could be settled. These balances grew out of such differences as that.

Mr. DAWES. That evil arises—I do not know that any one is to blame for it—from the fact that accounts remain unsettled in the Treasury Department year after year, and in the War Department particularly. Often a man's representatives are called on to pay upon accounts after he is dead and gone, and so sureties on bonds are held responsible for accounts that have lain year after year in the Departments and been supposed by parties and by their representatives and their bondsmen to be settled. Now I hope this is an indication of the fact that they are settling up these accounts, and closing the books, and opening up new books, which was the intention and the purpose of the act of 1870, to which the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has alluded. The purpose of that was to open new books at the beginning of every fiscal year, and to carry that out it was necessary to settle up the old books.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. In lines 166 and 167 of section 1, after the words "secretary's office," I move to insert "of Wyoming Territory."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations further to move to amend the bill by striking out in line 169 of section 1 "$2,500," and inserting "$2,839.53;" and adding to the clause:

Provided, That the sum of $1,710, appropriated by act of March 3, 1875, for legislative expenses of said Wyoming Territory, having been actually appropriated for the current expenses for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and expended accordingly, shall be so regarded by the accounting officers of the Treasury Department.

For amount due George W. French, secretary of Wyoming Territory, for salary from the 24th day of February, 1875, to April 29, 1877, $499.20.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I submit an amendment to the consideration of the Senate proposed by the Committee on Finance:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay for stone delivered under contract for the post-office building at Parkersburgh, West Virginia, $10,000.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ought to correct a misapprehension. That does not come from the Committee on Finance. It is based on an estimate from the Treasury, showing a deficit in the appropriation for a public building in West Virginia of $10,000. The papers are in the other House.

Mr. SARGENT. Would not the proper place for that class of cases be the sundry civil bill?

Mr. WEST. Let it go now.

Mr. SARGENT. I shall not object.

Mr. DAVIS. I understand that the stone has been delivered and is on the ground, and the party is badly in need of his money.

Mr. SARGENT. I will make no objection if the Senator from West Virginia is satisfied with the proposition.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I move to strike out the proviso in lines 163, 164, and 165 of section 1.

The Chief Clerk read the words proposed to be stricken out, as follows:

Provided, That all officers appointed by the President for the Territories shall be bona fide citizens of the Territories, respectively, for which they shall be appointed.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. In some of the Territories that might very well be done, but not in all, and especially not in the new Territories with a sparse population. I think it only needs to call the attention of the Senate to it to show the propriety of striking out the proviso.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, to strike out the proviso.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I offer the following amendment, to come in after line 333 of section 1:

For the subsistence of the Apache Indians at the Southern Apache agency, New Mexico, $36,000: Provided, That the Indian agent located at said agency may, under instructions from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, exchange sugar belonging to said agency for beef or flour.

I ask the Secretary to read the letter of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the letter of the Secretary of the Interior which I send to the desk.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, April 17, 1876.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a communication, with accompanying papers, from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in relation to the present condition of the Apache Indians in New Mexico, and asking for an appropriation to enable the Department to meet the necessities of these Indians during the balance of the present fiscal year.

The recommendations of the Commissioner are approved, and I would respectfully urge that early action may be taken by Congress in the matter.

I have the honor to be, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. CHANDLER, Secretary.

Hon. WILLIAM B. ALLISON,
Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs,
United States Senate.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, D. C., April 13, 1876.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a copy of a letter of the 7th instant, from Hon. S. B. ELKINS, inviting attention to a letter dated the 29th ultimo, addressed to him by J. M. Shaw, agent for the Apache Indians at the Southern Apache agency, New Mexico.

In his letter Agent Shaw details the dangerous condition of affairs at his agency on account of the limited quantity of supplies at his disposal, which, at the date of his letter, were nearly exhausted, and setting forth the disastrous consequences to result from a stoppage of issue of supplies to his Indians.

I also inclose a copy of a letter from Agent Shaw of the same date, addressed to this Office, upon the same subject, in answer to a telegram of the 28th ultimo, and copies of Office letter of the 19th February last, and telegram above referred to.

In referring this matter for your consideration, I will state that the amount appropriated for the Apaches in New Mexico for the current fiscal year was $100,000—$25,000 less than was appropriated for the same purpose for the past fiscal year; that according to the annual reports of the several agents in New Mexico for 1875 four thousand and fifty Apaches were on reservations during that year and cared for and subsisted; while the reports of said agents for 1874 show that only three thousand one hundred and sixty of said Indians were on reservations; thus showing a decrease of 20 per cent. in funds and an increase of over 28 per cent. in the number of Indians to be cared for, against the service for the present fiscal year; or a per capita of $39.55 for the past, and of only $24.69 for the current fiscal year.

This latter sum was deemed inadequate, and my predecessor entered into contracts for a larger purchase of supplies than was warranted by the appropriation. A deficiency which had accrued before my entering into the service, and which now exists, of about $24,000 was thus created.

Every effort has been made to carry on the service in New Mexico without appealing for congressional aid, but as there is already a deficiency of the amount named, thus leaving the Department powerless to comply with the requirements of the sixth section of the act of March 3, 1875, which provides that no deficiences shall exist, and in view of the urgent demands for additional supplies for the Indians, not only at the Southern Apache agency, but at all the agencies in New Mexico, I am constrained to lay the matter before the Department, with the hope that the same may be forwarded to Congress with favorable recommendation for early action thereon by that body.

There will be required to meet the present deficiency, as before stated, about $24,000; to pay for the actual necessary cost of running the several agencies to the close of the fiscal year, $6,000, and for the purchase of additional supplies, $10,000, making in all $40,000.

Agent Shaw reports that he has a surplus of about twenty thousand pounds of sugar, which will not be needed, and has asked that he be authorized to sell or exchange the same for beef, flour, &c. As there is no law which would authorize a transaction of this character he was notified that authority could not be granted him to do so.

I recommend, however, that Congress be asked to authorize the Department to sell the said sugar and use the proceeds in the purchase of supplies for the Southern Apache agency; or grant the requisite authority to exchange the same for beef, bacon, flour, &c., (which can be done for its full value.)

This sugar cost nearly twenty cents per pound delivered at the agency, and should Congress authorize its disposal in the manner indicated, the amount necessary to be appropriated for the objects herein named might be reduced to $36,000.

I have the honor to be very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. Q. SMITH, Commissioner.

To the Honorable THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

Mr. ALLISON. Only one word of explanation in reference to this appropriation. I have in my hand a number of other papers showing the necessities of the Indians at this agency. The reading of the document just presented discloses the fact that whoever purchased supplies for this agency seemed to think that a large amount of sugar was necessary, so that the report indicates that there is a surplus of 20,000 pounds of sugar at this agency, with no beef or flour. The agent thereupon applies to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for authority to exchange this unnecessary article of sugar for the very necessary articles of beef and flour, and receives a reply, which I have here, stating that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs has no authority to authorize such exchange. I have read these papers very carefully. They disclose I think the necessity for this appropriation. The papers only reached me last evening, and I have consulted with such members of the Committee on Appropriations as I could consult during the day, and they have agreed that I should offer this amendment. I do so believing that it is absolutely essential to carry on the Indian service in this remote region.

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. COCKRELL. When was this report of destitution made? Was it back in the cold weather?

Mr. ALLISON. The first paper that I have here is dated February 19.

Mr. COCKRELL. That was in midwinter, I suppose.

Mr. ALLISON. I presume so.

Mr. COCKRELL. Cannot they subsist themselves now in hot weather when they can roam and range at will?

Mr. ALLISON. I think there is no way of subsisting these Indians unless they use the sugar. They have sugar there, and, unless it should be eaten up by the ants, they probably could subsist themselves a short time on the sugar.

Mr. COCKRELL. The same agent, I suppose, that is there and asks for this appropriation is the man who bought the 20,000 pounds of sugar more than were necessary.

Mr. ALLISON. It may be so. I know nothing about the facts except what I find in these papers; but I am satisfied that it is true economy for the Senate to appropriate this sum of money in order to save the expenditure of a much larger sum in the future.

Mr. DAWES. The papers very likely do disclose the necessity, but they disclose two other interesting facts. One is that with an appropriation of $100,000 against $125,000 the year before the officer in charge deliberately exceeded his appropriation, and he seems to have exceeded it in the purchase of sugar. He has an excess of sugar of 20,000 pounds, when he knew that he had not enough money to meet the necessities of the Indians. That is an interesting fact that should go along with it for our consideration, I take it.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator will pardon me, he makes a mistake when he says the Commissioner knew that he was exceeding the appropriation. I doubt very much whether the former Commissioner did know that fact.

Mr. DAWES. The former Commissioner knew that there was $125,000 appropriated the year before and he knew that there was only $100,000 appropriated last year, and he knew there were more Indians the last year than there were the former year; and with that knowledge he felt compelled to exceed his appropriation. The curiosity of the thing is that, knowing that he was obliged to exceed his appropriation, he should indulge in this excessive purchase of sugar. One would suppose that if he were obliged to exceed his appropriation he would have taken care to have it in the line of the absolute necessities of the Indians. Now they have the sugar on hand, and the chairman of the committee is solicitous for fear the ants will eat it. That is an interesting feature of the case that I should like to hear the chairman of the committee upon.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no solicitude on the subject whatever. I only suppose that New Mexico is a reasonably hot place, and I know that ants light upon sugar as well as on other things. I have no interest in this matter other than any other Senator. It is true that the former Commissioner of Indian Affairs did purchase more sugar than was needed. It is also true that he has already exceeded the appropriation. It is also true that that was in violation of a statute. But that Commissioner has passed away and a new Commissioner is now discharging the duties, and he tells us that this appropriation is absolutely necessary to carry on the operations of his office. I have faith in his integrity, and I have faith that this appropriation will be properly administered; and having had these papers presented to me and having consulted the proper persons connected with the Committee on Appropriations in reference to it, I have discharged any duty that I have in the matter, and now leave it with the Senate to decide.

Mr. DAWES. It is true the Commissioner has passed away, but I have seen somewhere some observations of a commission that were sent out to review his great work, commending that work as worthy of commendation and approval.

Mr. ALLISON. That was as to civilizing and Christianizing the Indians, and not so much in reference to the materials supplied.

Mr. DAWES. It may have been that the approval was intended to cover simply the work of civilization; but the community have failed to make the distinction.

Mr. STEVENSON. May I ask the Senator from Iowa if this is an amendment offered by the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. ALLISON. I may say, in answer to the Senator from Kentucky, that it is an amendment offered rather informally by the committee. It was not considered in the committee-room by the committee, but the various members of the committee were consulted, and it was regarded as so obvious a matter that so far as I did consult the members of the committee they agreed to it.

Mr. STEVENSON. May I ask further whether it is recommended by the Indian Committee?

Mr. ALLISON. No, sir.

Mr. STEVENSON. Then I raise the question of order. It must come from some committee, as I understand the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. MERRIMON in the chair.) The amendment is not in order.

Mr. ALLISON. I trust the Senator from Kentucky will not raise that question.

Mr. SARGENT. It seems to me my friend from Kentucky is rather late in raising the point of order.

Mr. STEVENSON. I will withdraw it. I think it is in time, but still I will not insist on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is withdrawn. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. ALLISON.]

The question being put, a division was called for, and the ayes were 22.

Several SENATORS. Give it up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and days were not ordered.

Mr. PADDOCK. Mr. President, I wish to offer an amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. What has become of the amendment of the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. ALLISON?]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has been agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. How was that amendment agreed to, I should like to know? I called for the yeas and nays, and I thought the call was sustained.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The call of the Senator from Missouri was not seconded.

Mr. COCKRELL. Has there been a quorum voting?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Twenty-two voted in the affirmative, and the negative yielded the question.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine, [to Mr. COCKRELL.] Make the point in the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is immaterial with me. I simply desire to say that I am opposed to this amendment, and record my vote in that way. Others may do as they choose.

Mr. PADDOCK. In line 290 of section 1, I propose to strike out the word "lawful," inserted on the motion of the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS,] and in lieu thereof insert at the end of the section——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator proposes to strike out a word which the Senate has agreed to insert. That is not in order. The Senator can move to do that in the Senate on the question of concurrence.

Mr. PADDOCK. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator propose to add to the section?

Mr. PADDOCK. Yes, sir. I move to add, at the end of line 294 of section 1, the following:

Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to allow compensation to the members of such commission, who are prohibited from receiving the same by the provisions of section 1765 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There are two sections of the Revised Statutes which apply to that subject.

Mr. PADDOCK. If I name one that will be sufficient. I think my amendment will better guard the disbursements under that subdivision of the bill than the amendment which prevailed, offered by the Senator from Vermont. The word "lawful" I think is not so judicious a word to use as the proviso.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MERRIMON. I gave notice of an amendment providing for a very small claim. It is $9 to pay the claim of A. N. McKimmon for services rendered to a general court-martial which sat at Raleigh. It is duly certified. It was taken before the Department, and I will read the statement made by the Department upon which the claim is based. A letter was addressed by a bank officer in this city, to whom the claim was sent, to the Quartermaster-General, in reply to which he says:

QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL'S OFFICE, January 8, 1876.

Respectfully returned to Mr. George H. B. White, cashier National Metropolitan Bank, Washington, D. C.

The within account should be presented to the Paymaster-General of the Army.

RUFUS INGALLS,
Acting Quartermaster-General, Brevet-Major General United States Army.

It was then referred to the Pay Department, whose action was this:

Respectfully returned to Mr. White.

This account was payable from the appropriation for general expenses of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1872.

Under the law the balance of that appropriation has been turned in to the credit of the surplus fund. There is therefore no appropriation from which the account can now be paid.

The bar to the payment of this claim is due to the long delay in its presentation.

CHARLES T. LARNED,
Acting Paymaster United States Army.

PAYMASTER-GENERAL'S OFFICE, January 19, 1876.

RALEIGH NATIONAL BANK OF NORTH CAROLINA,
January 24, 1876.

Respectfully returned to the Paymaster-General of the United States, and asks if the voucher is correct and would be paid were there funds to the credit of the appropriation.

C. DEWEY, Cashier.

Repectfully returned to the cashier National Bank of Raleigh.

The within voucher appears to be correct and was properly payable by this Department had it been presented in a reasonable time.

BENJAMIN ALVORD,
Paymaster-General United States Army.

PAYMASTER-GENERAL'S OFFICE, January 28, 1876.

The money out of which this ought to be paid was turned into the Treasury. It is a deficiency of $9. The amendment is to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the claim of A. N. McKimmon, $9.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is not that a private claim?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont makes the point of order. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MERRIMON. I trust the Senate will not sustain that point. This money is due to the young man who did the service.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have not the slightest doubt that it is due, and I have not the slightest doubt that the claimant is a young man, because my friend from North Carolina says he is; but it will do this young man less injury to make the point of order on this claim for $9 than on one for $9,000. Therefore, if we can make the point of order at all, under the rules, against private claims, it is the most gracious thing to do to make it on very small ones, because it does much less injury, as the Senator will see.

Mr. MERRIMON. It is a very small claim, and I present it because the claimant urges me to do it. I offered it because the money is due, and this is the deficiency bill, and it is proper here, as it seems to me. Then I see that other private claims are provided for in this bill; and why discriminate against this young man for $9? I trust the Senator will withdraw his objection and let it go. I appeal to the Senator from Vermont to withdraw his objection. There are other private claims provided for in the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. So there are; and when I can get the floor I am going to move to strike them out, for it is an outrage on all appropriation bills. As the bill itself comes from the committee, it appears to provide for any amount of private claims, which I propose to strike out if I can get the Senate to agree with me.

Mr. SARGENT. The committee has not reported any private claim. We took the bill as it came from the House, and did not see fit to strike out items which may be regarded perhaps as claims.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The committee reported the bill containing private claims.

Mr. SARGENT. I doubt if there are really any private claims in the bill.

Mr. MERRIMON. I trust the Senator from Vermont will find it consistent with his conscience and judgment to let this matter go in.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will pay it myself with great pleasure if I can borrow the money of somebody. [Laughter.]

Mr. MERRIMON. This claimant does not want the Senator or myself to pay it. He wants it because the United States owe it to him justly and honestly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. He ought to have it, and the Committee on Claims, if he makes his application in the proper quarter, will report a bill which will pay him.

Mr. MERRIMON. There is no money to pay him. The officer says the fund out of which he ought to be paid was turned over into the Treasury.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is the case in respect to every private claim. That is just the trouble. There is not any money to pay it until Congress appropriates it and allows it.

Mr. MERRIMON. The Senator's objection cuts it out. Let it go.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not wish it to be let go. I will vote for a bill with great pleasure that provides for it; but the point which I always endeavor to make on these bills and that I make now is that the appropriation bills ought not to be loaded with legislation or with private claims. I believe that to be vicious legislation, and therefore I hope the Senator will not feel that I am ungracious in making the point upon him and his small proposition.

Mr. MERRIMON. I certainly should not think so if there were not so many private claims provided for in this bill; and what is manifest is that they are going to stay. This is a trifling matter that this young man is anxious about because the Government owes it to him. He will never get it in any other way. He does not care so much about the amount as that he wants to have what is due him for service that he rendered the Government as clerk to this court-martial. I might introduce a bill, but I do not want to introduce a bill simply to pay $9, his claim. I thought that as other claims were on this bill, surely no Senator would object to allowing this little one to go on.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the Senate has, either on the report of a committee or the motion of any Senator, authorized any claim to be put on the bill, then I shall not stand in the way.

Mr. MERRIMON. Not ten minutes ago a claim for several hundreds, if not thousands, of dollars was put into the bill when a single objection would have excluded it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to have that clause of the bill read that has been put in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator asks for a clause to be read. Will the Senator indicate what it is?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I refer to the clause named by the Senator from North Carolina, put in by way of amendment as I understand him.

Mr. MERRIMON. The amendment of the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. ALLISON.] One Senator raised the point of order on it, and then on appeal of the Senator from Iowa he withdrew it.

Mr. SARGENT. That was not a claim, as I understand.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear that clause read.

Mr. ALLISON. The amendment I offered was to come in after line 233. That is not a private claim.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We will hear what it says.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I inquire what is the question before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont has asked to have a certain portion of the bill read. There is no question pending except the consideration of the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am discussing the bill.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

For subsistence of Apache Indians at the southern Apache agency, New Mexico, $36,000: Provided, That the Indian agent located at said agency may, under instructions from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, exchange sugar belonging to said agency for beef or flour.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is that the private claim referred to by the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. MERRIMON. I said it was a claim that could not properly go into the bill if an objection was raised. An objection was raised, and upon the appeal of the Senator from Iowa it was withdrawn. It did not come from the committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now, in order to test the sense of the Senate on the question of having private claims in these bills, I move to strike out lines 188 to 192, inclusive, of the first section, which I ask may be reported.

The Chief Clerk read the words proposed to be stricken out, as follows:

For amount due Continental Bank-Note Company for printing national currency as per letter of the Comptroller of the Currency, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1875, $22,574.94,

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to strike out that clause on the ground that it appears to me to be clearly a private claim that there does not happen to be any money in the Treasury to pay. We owe this much, as is stated, to this particular corporation. I make the motion, not upon the ground that the claim is not due—for I do not know that it is not, and I presume, on the other hand, that it is—but in order to see whether the Senate in the state that the appropriation bills are in at this session in particular—and this is no new motion with me I will add—is willing to let this bill pass without an effort to make it what it purports to be, an appropriation for the general deficiencies of the service of the Government, instead of a bill providing for a number of private claims.

Mr. WITHERS. I would ask the Senator if that item is not properly included under the general deficiency in the amount provided for printing the national currency? There is a deficiency which this provides for.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Of course that is perfectly true; but I repeat what I said a moment ago, that every just claim on the United States for which money sufficient has not been appropriated grows out of a deficiency of appropriations; that is to say, there are not appropriations enough to pay the debts of the United States. But the rules provide and the course of legislation has attempted to provide that, in respect to sums of money due particular individuals on account of their dealings with the United States, their place is to go to the Committee on Claims for the sums that are due to them, instead of putting them in as items in general appropriation bills. That is the difference.

Mr. ALLISON. I wish to ask the Senator a question. Is not the distinction between a claim and a deficiency this? Where a claim, such as the one now under consideration, is passed by the proper accounting officers of the Treasury, where it is in such a position that it has passed through all the accounting officers and is allowed, it seems to me then it is a deficiency; but where it is a claim that has passed none of the accounting officers, then it is a mere claim against the Government. It seems to me there is a distinction there that might be made between a claim and an adjusted account, as this certainly is.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If I had a private claim on the Treasury for services which I have performed for the Government and came here at the last session and asked to have it allowed, and it was rejected in the appropriation bill on the ground that it was a private claim, and I go to the Treasury before this session and get it allowed, does the Senator mean to say that it ceases to be a private claim and falls within the rule?

Mr. ALLISON. Not at all. But suppose this had passed through all the proper accounting officers of the Treasury last year, but exceeded the appropriation, and now the Secretary of the Treasury asks us to appropriate for the balance remaining unpaid of this adjusted account by the proper accounting officer.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That was exactly the case I put to the Senator. Suppose I have got my account against the United States allowed since the last session, when it was ruled out on the point of order; now it being allowed by the auditing and accounting officers of the Treasury, the Senator says it ceases to be a private claim and becomes a deficiency. I repeat that I do not observe the difference. It is a private claim all the time. A private claim is a demand which a particular individual actually has against the United States, and the fact that it has passed the accounting officers of the Treasury is only a piece of evidence to show that he has a good private claim instead of one that is doubtful.

Mr. PADDOCK. I simply wish to inquire if the Senator from Vermont ought not, under his theory, to extend his amendment so as to embrace the next two paragraphs down to line 204?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I certainly propose to follow it up with that motion.

Mr. DAWES. I am afraid the Senator from Vermont may overlook some of these claims. I will call his attention to the seventeenth page:

For amount required to pay claims of officers and enlisted men of the volunteer service, or their heirs and assigns, for arrears of pay that may be certified to be due them by the accounting officers of the Treasury Department, being for the service of the fiscal year 1871 and prior years, $609,946.79.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I can only do one thing at a time.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The Senator from Vermont makes the statement that this bill is pretty well charged up with private claims and illustrates by the motion that he puts to strike out. I am not aware of any such state of things in this bill. Here is the document which is the authority for this bill. [Exhibiting a printed document.] We follow the House of Representatives upon this item, with no suspicion whatever that this is a private claim, and I think the facts will not justify any such inference. By the statute of 1874 it will be seen that we made an appropriation for paper, engraving, printing, &c., of bank-notes. There is the authority of law, and we authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to contract with bank-note companies to do that work, and we made a distinct appropriation of $100,000 to cover that. He made the contract with the company, and there is found to be a deficiency in that service. Is that a public service or private service? The Secretary of the Treasury advises us in this wise:

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 24, 1876.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith the estimates of appropriations required by the various Departments to complete the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876.

Which service in this respect is founded on the statute to which I have referred, to wit, the authority to print and the authority also to do this particular thing. Now, I submit that is not a private claim by any means. There may be something that I have not noticed in the bill, but I do not understand that to be in the nature of a private claim.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I withdraw the objection that I made to the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina, which is no more a private claim than the one which the Senate has voted shall stand in the bill.

Mr. MERRIMON. I offer the amendment:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the claim of A. N. McKimmon, $9.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I have no judgment about that; but if it is a private claim I shall object.

Mr. LOGAN. I think we had better just pay it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina. Does the Senator from Maine object?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I do not like to object unless I find that it is objectionable. I suppose it is too small to object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. DAVIS. I want to reserve the amendment in regard to the appropriation of $36,000 for the Apache Indians.

Mr. PADDOCK. My amendment having been adopted to add a proviso at the end of line 294, the word "lawful" inserted before "compensation" in line 290 is surplusage, and therefore I move that it be stricken out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment will be reserved. Are there any other reservations?

Mr. ALLISON. I think I shall have, out of courtesy to my friend from West Virginia, to reserve the amendment about the Parkersburgh post-office. That may be all right, but I should like to look into it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the other amendments than those excepted be concurred in?

The remaining amendments were concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reserved amendments will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The first reserved amendment is after line 28 of section 1 to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay for stone delivered under contract for the post-office building at Parkersburgh, West Virginia, $10,000.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I am not sure that the Senator from West Virginia understood the amendment just passed upon.

Mr. DAVIS. Did the Senate non-concur in the amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was non-concurred in.

Mr. DAVIS. Who reserved it?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. ALLISON. I reserved it out of courtesy to the Senator.

Mr. DAVIS. All right. If the Senator from Iowa does that as a lick back at me, I accept with pleasure. If, on the contrary, he does it through——

Mr. CONKLING. If the Senator will allow me, I rise to make a suggestion. Evidently the Senator from West Virginia was diverted at the moment the vote was taken. I presume nobody will object to taking the vote again, which is what he would like. I therefore make that suggestion for the Senator. He was not attending but was diverted by somebody else at the moment and was taken by surprise.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It may be done by unanimous consent. Is there objection to a repetition of the vote?

Mr. CONKLING. I am sure there will be no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection. The question will be put again on concurring in this amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DAVIS. This amendment looking to an appropriation of $10,000 for a deficiency for stone delivered at Parkersburgh was offered by the Senator from Ohio, and not by the Senator from West Virginia. The amount is due and it ought to be paid. I should not have offered the amendment on this bill, not knowing all the particulars connected with the case; but the Senator from Ohio, who is not now in his seat, offered the amendment, and with the approbation I believe of the Committee on Appropriations, or at least a majority of the committee, and it was accepted by the Senate. I have no particular interest in it further than any other member. If it is the desire of the Senate, especially of the Senator from Iowa to non-concur, let it be so. I hope it will remain as it was agreed to in Committee of the Whole. I understand the bill is now in the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in this amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to inquire whether there is any report from the Treasury Department on the subject of the particular topic embraced in this amendment?

Mr. DAVIS. The papers, I understand, from the Senator from Ohio, who had the amendment in charge, are in the House. There were some special reasons why that Senator desired the appropriation of this amount to pay for stone already delivered, and which is now past due; some special reason which I cannot assign myself, because I did not look into it carefully, but there are some recommendations.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Recommendations from the Department?

Mr. DAVIS. From the Department. At the same time there is a communication from the Treasury recommending a still further appropriation, but the amount I do not recollect, for I have not examined the matter.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I ought to say in reply to the inquiry of the Senator from Vermont that this amendment was sent to the Committee on Appropriations yesterday. The committee had no papers in regard to it and took no action upon it, but it was handed to me by the Senator from Ohio, not now in his seat, [Mr. SHERMAN,] and I presented it to the Senate as coming from the Committee on Finance, as I supposed it did; but the Senator from Ohio corrected me in the presence of the Senate, saying that it did not come from the Committee on Finance, but was an amendment offered by him in the Senate and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then we have no official information before us at all.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The Senator from Ohio then addressed himself to the Senate, stating that the papers in the case were with the committee of the House of Representatives and stated his knowledge or information on the subject; and upon that state of the case the Senate acted.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the amendment read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment is:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay for stone delivered under contract for the post-office building at Parkersburgh, West Virginia, $10,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to amend the amendment by inserting at the end:

If he shall find the same to be a lawful claim.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next reserved amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The next reserved amendment is on page 13. The Senate as in Committee of the Whole inserted the following clause:

For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to pay the lawful compensation and necessary and incidental expenses of the commission appointed June 18, 1875, to treat with the Sioux Indians for the relinquishment of the Black Hills country in Dakota Territory, $25,000: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to allow compensation to members of such commission as are prohibited from receiving the same by the provisions of section 1765 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. PADDOCK. I move to amend by striking out the word "lawful." I desire to state that my proviso takes the place of the word "lawful," and, as I think, more carefully guards the disbursement than the word "lawful" does.

Mr. DAWES. Was not the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska adopted?

Mr. PADDOCK. Yes, sir; the proviso. That proviso meets the purpose sought to be accomplished by the Senator from Vermont, and therefore the word "lawful" is surplusage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment to the amendment, striking out the word "lawful."

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 19, noes 15.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 21, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Bogy, Booth, Bruce, Cameron of Wisconsin, Clayton, Cooper, Davis, Dawes, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Gordon, Hitchcock, Howe, Logan, McCreery, Oglesby, Paddock, Ransom, Sargent, and Windom—21.

NAYS—Messrs. Bayard, Burnside, Cockrell, Conkling, Cragin, Dennis, Edmunds, Goldthwaite, Hamilton, Kelly, Key, McMillan, Maxey, Merrimon, Morrill of Vermont, Robertson, Saulsbury, Stevenson, Wallace, and Withers—20.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Anthony, Boutwell, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Caperton, Christiancy, Conover, Dorsey, Eaton, English, Hamlin, Harvey, Ingalls, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Jones of Nevada, Kernan, McDonald, Mitchell, Morrill of Maine, Morton, Norwood, Patterson, Randolph, Sharon, Sherman, Spencer, Thurman, Wadleigh, West, Whyte, and Wright—32.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move now to amend the amendment by inserting after the word "compensation" the words "not exceeding $8 per day for time actually employed."

Mr. PADDOCK. I would state that I understand the accounts which the Department of the Interior sent to the other House are made up on that basis, $8 per day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on concurring in the amendment as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was concurred in.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator from Nebraska has called my attention to the amendment just adopted about the Indian commission. It says, "not exceeding $8 per day for the time actually employed." It may be construed to mean $8 per day for the whole body of gentlemen. Of course it is intended to mean $8 for each member. I ask unanimous consent to add to it, so as to read, "$8 per day for each member of said commission for the time actually employed."

Mr. OGLESBY. I understood the amendment to be $8 a day for the whole commission, and voted for that. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Illinois object to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. OGLESBY. No, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. By unanimous consent that amendment will be made. The Chair hears no objection, and it is concurred in.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. If it is in order, I wish to call the attention of the Senate at this time—perhaps it may be done by general consent—to the amendment on page 15, line 346, where the committee proposed to strike out "six" and insert "five," so as to make it read "five thousand" instead of "six thousand." Since I have been sitting in my seat here, on an examination of the papers, I have satisfied myself that a mistake was made in the committee in making that amendment. At the time it was made I had in my hands the wrong paper; and as the amendment has been agreed to in Committee of the Whole and again in the Senate, I suppose it can only be reached now by general consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. By unanimous consent it can be done; but, before it is done, the Chair will put the question on concurring in the last reserved amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the last reserved amendment, which was to insert after line 333 of section 1:

For subsistence of Apache Indians at the Southern Apache agency, New Mexico, $36,000: Provided, That the Indian agent located at said agency may, under instructions from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, exchange sugar belonging to said agency for beef or flour.

Mr. DAVIS. In consideration of a certain amount of sugar which can be converted into necessary supplies, and $36,000 being a large sum, it has been suggested by more than one Senator that the amount ought to be reduced. I therefore move to strike out "36" and insert "25" before "thousand." I hope that will not be objected to by the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no objection whatever to it. I accept that proposition. Of course if $25,000 proves not to be enough, the conference committee, and there is likely to be one on this bill, can arrange it. I want it thoroughly examined, and of course I do not want an excessive amount fixed. I have no objection to the proposition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to this modification? The Chair hears none. The question is on concurring in the amendment as modified.

The amendment, as modified, was concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine now asks unanimous consent to change "5" to "6" in line 346 of section 1. Is there objection? The Chair hears none and that amendment is made.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

PROTECTION OF WITNESSES.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 2572, to protect witnesses who shall be required to testify in certain cases. I merely want to get it up to-day.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CONKLING. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I will ask the Chair if there is not a message from the President of the United States on his table?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I ask that it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey asks that a message from the President be laid before the Senate. Does the Senator from New York insist upon his motion?

Mr. CONKLING. I suggest to the Senator from New Jersey that it may not be convenient to-morrow to have an executive session, and it is late now. The reading of the paper he refers to will take some time. If the Senator from New Jersey prefers to have it read to-day, I will not stand in his way; but I should like to have an executive session.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I do not insist upon my request. I merely wanted to call attention to it. I thought it would be no more than respectful to read it at once.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were re-opened; and (at five o'clock and seventeen minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, April 18, 1876.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. I. L. TOWNSEND.

The Journal of yesterday was read.

CORRECTION.

Mr. ADAMS. Yesterday on the question to substitute the amendment of Mr. LYNDE for the proposition then pending from the Committee on the Judiciary in the habeas corpus case of Hallet Kilbourn, I am recorded as not having voted. I did vote most distinctly in the affirmative, and ask the correction be made accordingly.

The correction was made accordingly.

The Journal was then approved.

ENROLLLD BILLS.

Mr. HARRIS, of Georgia, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 34) to confirm pre-emption and homestead entries of public lands within the limits of railroad grants in cases where such entries have been made under the regulations of the Land Department; and

An act (S. No. 701) further to provide for the administering of oaths in the Senate.

ESTIMATES FOR MILITARY ESTABLISHMENTS.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to resolution of the House of the 17th instant, report of estimates for the military establishment; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REPORT OF GENERAL CUSTER.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, in answer to request of the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department for a report of General Custer in reference to supply of corn for Fort Abraham Lincoln and which he refused to accept; which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department.

DISCRIMINATING DUTY ON PRODUCTS OF SLAVE LABOR.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from H. S. Sanford, advocating imposition of discriminating duty on products of slave labor, and one from the Secretary of State on the same subject; which were referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

INDIAN AFFAIRS, NEW MEXICO.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting papers from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in relation to Indian affairs in New Mexico; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

BILLS UPON THE SPEAKER'S TABLE.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House the following bills from the Senate; which were severally read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and referred as indicated below:

An act (S. No. 650) fixing the rate of postage on third-class mail matter, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

An act (S. No. 435) to amend section 5546 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, providing for imprisonment and transfer of United States prisoners—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

An act (S. No. 336) to authorize the construction of a ponton-bridge across the Mississippi River from some feasible point in La Crosse County, in the State of Wisconsin, to some feasible point in Hudson County, in the State of Minnesota—to the Committee on Commerce.

An act (S. No. 293) authorizing the commissioners of the District of Columbia to cancel and annul the condemnation of ground in square 762 in the city of Washington for a public alley, and for other purposes—to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

The following House bills, returned from the Senate with amendments, were referred as indicated below, and the bills and amendments ordered to be printed:

An act (H. R. No. 2951) to provide for the separate entry of express packages contained in one importation—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

An act (H. R. No. 1922) providing for the recording of deeds, mortgages, and other conveyances affecting real estate in the District of Columbia—to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

DISTRICT COURT OF WEST VIRGINIA.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a bill (S. No. 472) changing the times of holding terms of the district court for the district of West Virginia, returned from the Senate with the amendments of the House disagreed to.

Mr. FAULKNER. I move to insist on the amendments of the House, and to ask a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON EXPENDITURES IN DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio, Mr. MCMAHON, now a member of the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice, asks to be excused from further service on that committee on the ground that his other committee duties are such as to absorb all his time. Is there objection to excusing the gentleman from Ohio? [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

The Chair appoints the gentleman from New York, Mr. MEADE, to the vacancy thus occasioned in the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice.

The Chair also appoints the gentleman from Connecticut, Mr. WAIT, to the vacancy in the same committee caused by the death of Mr. Starkweather.

TEXAS AND PACIFIC RAILWAY.

Mr. CULBERSON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3140) to extend the time for the construction of the Texas and Pacific Railway; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ATKINS. I rise to a privileged question. As we did not have the call of States and Territories yesterday for bills on leave and joint resolutions, I ask the Chair would it be in order to move to have that call to-day?

The SPEAKER. It would be in order by unanimous consent, but not otherwise.

Mr. ATKINS. Then I ask unanimous consent that the States and Territories be called for bills on leave and joint resolutions for reference.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I object. I am compelled to object by the necessity I am under of calling up the reports from the Committee of Elections. Last week I gave notice that immediately after the reading of the Journal to-day I would call up the election cases now before the House.

Mr. CONGER. I ask the gentleman from Virginia to allow those who have bills to present them for reference.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I am willing to yield ten minutes for that purpose.

Mr. ATKINS. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made, the gentleman from Virginia must proceed with the matters of privilege which he desires to call up.

CONTESTED ELECTION—BROMBERG VS. HARALSON.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I desire to call up the case of Bromberg vs. Haralson, from the first congressional district of Alabama.

In this case, Mr. Speaker, I am happy to inform the House that the committee are unanimous in their report, and that, too, in a full committee composed of all its members; and therefore the committee deem that no debate would be necessary upon this question to enlighten the House. But I must add that I desire the House and I desire the country to read the report which the committee have made in this case. While it retains the sitting member in his seat, it will show frauds as flagrant and abuses as violent as ever have been committed in this country upon the elective franchise. Moreover, it will show that when two years ago this House was called upon to extend its charitable hand to relieve the sufferings of the colored people of Alabama caused by the floods in their rivers, and large quantities of bacon were provided for them, that bacon was taken by the Government officials and used, not in the district where the distress existed, but in the high lands where the people were prosperous, to influence and control the elective franchise.

It will be shown, moreover, that the colored voters were intimidated by their own race against voting for the contestant in this case. It will show, also, undue and unwarrantable interference on the part of the military to secure the election of the sitting member.

But notwithstanding all these acts of fraud, of undue military interference, and of the perversion of the bounty of the Government, still the large majority of the sitting member of 2,700 could not, in the opinion of the committee, be legitimately and properly overcome. Had the committee been disposed to act in a partisan way, there was a case of much more plausibility than has characterized decisions heretofore in this House to have unseated the sitting member and to have seated the contestant. But the committee acting in the spirit of judicial officers, strictly analyzed the vote, and having thrown out a large number of votes illegally and improperly cast, they still found that the sitting member was entitled to his seat, and therefore they offer the resolutions which I desire the Clerk to read, and on which I call the previous question.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Frederick G. Bromberg was not elected a member of the Forty-fourth Congress from the first congressional district of Alabama, and is not entitled to a seat in this House.

Resolved, That Jere Haralson was elected a member of the Forty-fourth Congress from the first congressional district of Alabama, and is entitled to a seat in this House.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I ask permission of the chairman of the committee to say a single word.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I should have said nothing but for the remarks of the chairman. I deem it my duty to say, after what has been said by the chairman, that he is right in stating that the report of the committee is unanimous. But I wish to state to the House and to the country that in this case, in my opinion, the committee are unanimous because the perjuries, glaring and flagrant, that were committed by the witnesses who undertoook to testify in this case were such as condemned the men that testified, and that the witnesses themselves showed that the allegations which they undertook to maintain were impossible; that they could not be true. I have had an experience of three-and-forty years as a lawyer, and I owe it to myself and to the case to say that in all my life I have never seen such infamous, such glaring, such self-confuted perjury as was attempted in opposition to the sitting member.

Mr. CALDWELL, of Alabama. Will the chairman of the committee allow me one moment? I desire to say a word in reply to the gentleman from New York who has just taken his seat.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. It will be difficult to keep down discussion if it is once entered upon. I desire that the case shall not be thrown open to discussion, but I will yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. CALDWELL, of Alabama. I desire to occupy just one moment. I had intended, Mr. Speaker, when this case was first reported to ask the privilege of being heard and to take part, on behalf of contestant, in this debate.

During the last few days, as far as I have had opportunity from other labors, I have given the subject a calm, careful, deliberate, honest, and conscientious investigation; and, as the result of that investigation, I have reached the conclusion that my judgment and conscience, under the evidence, would not allow me to antagonize the report of the committee so far as relates to the first resolution.

But, sir, the gentleman from New York [Mr. TOWNSEND] has stated a truth, a truth that will impress itself upon the understanding of every member on this floor and every citizen of the country who will take the trouble to read the evidence and report in this case, that much of the testimony that has been submitted to the committee bears upon its face willful falsehood and has within it internal evidence of deliberate perjury upon the part of some of the witnesses. But I state to the gentleman from New York, to the House, and to the country that every witness whose testimony is tainted with falsehood and perjury is an active, energetic, working member of the republican party and the partisan friend of the sitting member; that all the false swearing, all the vile machinations that have been disclosed to the country in this investigation were perpetrated by and had their origin in the brain of active, leading members of the republican party in Alabama.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. And friends of the sitting member.

Mr. CALDWELL, of Alabama. Yes, sir. I ought to have added they were active friends of the sitting member.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I now insist on the previous question.

Mr. LEWIS. I wish the gentleman would allow me a few moments.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I cannot.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolutions reported by the Committee of Elections were agreed to.

ELECTION CONTEST—FINLEY VS. WALLS.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I now call up the contested-election case of Finley vs. Walls, from the second congressional district of Florida. In this case, Mr. Speaker, I refer its conduct to the subcommittee who examined the case by the authority of the committee, and who ought, therefore, to have the conduct of it upon this floor. I yield, therefore, to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. THOMPSON,] who was chairman of the subcommittee which reported the case.

The Clerk read the resolutions reported by the majority of the committee, as follows:

Resolved, That Josiah T. Walls was not elected, and is not entitled, to a seat in the House of Representatives in the Forty-fourth Congress from the second congressional district of Florida.

Resolved, That Jesse J. Finley was elected, and is entitled, to a seat in the House of Representatives in the Forty-fourth Congress from the second congressional district of Florida.

The Clerk then read the resolutions reported by the minority of the committee, as follows:

Resolved, That J. J. Finley was not elected, and is not entitled, to a seat in this House.

Resolved, That Josiah T. Walls was elected, and is entitled, to a seat in this House.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, to a clear understanding of this case it will not be necessary to go into the details with reference to all of the questions which have been considered by the committee. There was upon many of the questions that arose but little difference between the majority and the minority, and I propose very briefly to state those points upon which we differ and to give the views of the committee as we have reported them in the report which is now before the House.

The election laws of the State of Florida give the right of suffrage to nearly every citizen of the State, and the mode of conducting elections is all that it will be necessary for the House to understand. The election was held on the 3d day of November, 1874, and in that State the elections are conducted by three inspectors of elections who are appointed by the county commissioners at a session held by the county commissioners within thirty days before the election. They are to be three discreet men; and they are, in connection with the clerk, to act in conducting the election. The clerk is elected by the inspectors, so that the board is organized thus: Three inspectors appointed by the county commissioners and a clerk chosen by the inspectors. There is a registration-list made up by the county commissioners within thirty days of the day of the election, and a person whose name is not upon that registration-list six days before the date of the election has not a right to vote. The registration-list is furnished from the county commissioners by the sheriff to the inspectors of election, as it has been corrected by the board of county commissioners, so that in conducting the election the inspectors and clerk have before them a registration-list giving the name of each individual voter. The vote is by ballot, and at this election they voted for Representative in Congress and for State senator, and also for a member of the State Assembly.

A person who was challenged at that election was, under the laws of Florida, obliged to take the oath which is set forth in section 16 of the election laws of that State; and it is as follows:

> You do solemnly swear that you are twenty-one years of age; that you are a citizen of the United States, (or that you have declared your intention to become a citizen of the United States, according to the acts of Congress on the subject of naturalization;) that you have resided in this State one year and in this county six months next preceding this election; that you have not voted at this election, and that you are not disqualified to vote by the judgment of any court.

That is the oath that a person who is challenged is compelled to take, whether his name be on the registration-list or not. But if his name is not found on the registration-list then he also has the right to vote by taking the oath which is prescribed in section 9 of that law, which is as follows:

> That if any person whose name may be erased shall, on offering to vote at any election, declare on oath that his name has been improperly struck off from the list of registered voters, and shall take the oath required to be taken by persons whose right to vote shall be challenged.

So that when a person presents himself to vote and his name is not found on the registration-list, before he is entitled to vote he is not only compelled to take the oath prescribed in section 16, but is also compelled to take a further oath prescribed in section 9, that he has been registered and that his name has been improperly stricken from the registration-list.

Now one of the questions which the committee had to pass upon, and a question of very considerable importance, is this: what shall be done with those votes, if any, cast by persons whose names were not found upon the registration-list at the election precinct; what shall be done with them when they fail to take the oath prescribed by section 9? The committee were unanimously of the opinion that unless a person took the oath prescribed in section 9 he could not vote; that that oath had reference to the qualification of the voter, and was material and mandatory. But in many precincts it is shown that a large number of persons voted who did not take the oath prescribed in section 9 and whose names were not on the registration list.

This singular fact appeared also, and the committee were unable to explain it, and cannot account for it now, except upon the ground that there was gross negligence or inefficiency on the part of the clerk of the circuit court who was ex officio clerk of the county commissioners, and whose duty it was to make out a certified copy of the registration-list which was used at the voting-precinct. The committee found, upon a comparison of the poll-lists kept at the voting-places, that the names of many persons who had been challenged and who had voted without taking the oath prescribed by section 9 were actually on the registration-lists at the office of the county clerk. The committee were satisfied that there was a mistake on the part of the county clerk in making out those lists.

The majority of the committee said that it was unfair to reject the vote of a party whose name was not on the registration-list at the polling-place, and who had failed to take the oath required by section 9, when his name was actually on the registration-list at the county clerk's office. The committee said it was not his fault, and as they believed he was actually entitled to vote, if deprived of that right it was only through the action of the county clerk in not making out a proper registration-list. And as there had been a mistake in that respect, and also a mistake by the inspectors in not administering the oath, the committee held that they should not say the party was not entitled to vote because he had not taken the oath prescribed in section 9, when if his name had been where it should have been put by the county clerk he would have been entitled to vote without taking the oath required by section 9, and if challenged would only be required to take the oath in section 16.

We considered it too harsh a rule to be applied to disqualify those parties from voting and to say that their votes were not legal where at most they had been deprived of their apparent right to vote by the action of the county clerk. In those cases the committee have applied this rule; they have said that where the names appeared on the registration-list in the county clerk's office they would count those votes, rejecting only those in cases where there was a failure to take the oath prescribed by section 9 by those whose names were not found upon the registration-list in the clerk's office of the circuit court.

And they applied this rule so as not to take the whole number from the candidate having the highest number—from the sitting member; but so as to take proportionately from each, which they considered was certainly a liberal rule for the contestee. Therefore, in those cases where that state of facts existed they have applied that rule, and have taken proportionately from the contestant and the contestee. Certainly no objection can be found with that rule.

There is one other question that is quite material. It is provided by the laws of the State of Florida that where the votes in the ballot-box shall be found to be in excess of the names on the poll-list, then the inspectors of election—the votes having been taken out of the box, counted, the fact of an excess ascertained, and the votes placed back again—the inspectors shall then draw out from the ballot-box and destroy unopened the number of votes in excess of the names on the poll-list. This is to be done by the inspectors of elections.

Now, it becomes a question, as the law specifies the party who shall perform that duty, whether the Committee of Elections of this House have a right to substantially perform that duty themselves; that is, where the inspectors of elections have failed to perform that duty, whether the committee ought to say, "It is uncertain for whom the excess of votes was cast; it is impossible for us to determine what the real vote of that precinct is, and therefore the whole vote must be rejected," or shall they undertake to perform the duty which the inspectors of elections were called upon to perform? The majority of the committee believed that it would be a severe rule to say that by reason of that duty not having been performed by the inspectors, therefore the entire vote should be thrown out.

They came to this conclusion; that there were two things established by the law. One was the principle, and the other the mode by which the object which was designed to be effected should be carried out. We acted upon this assumption, which we believed to be the assumption of the law, that that excess appeared through mistake; that there was not sufficient proof to vitiate the entire poll on account of actual fraud; that the excess occurred through mistake, and therefore a drawing out of the excess in the mode prescribed by the statute would draw out a proportionate number from each candidate. The committee therefore said, "We will perform that duty; we will throw out a proportionate number ourselves; we will not discard the entire poll, but will substantially perform the duty which the inspectors through some reason or other have neglected to perform." That is the way in which we have disposed of cases of that kind. Then we have in this case given the most liberal construction to the law in favor of the contestee in all matters which are merely directory.

Now, as to one of the precincts, (which is the main one where there is a contest and the decision of which in the view I take of it is conclusive of this case,) the committee find that the vote at that precinct ought to be rejected on the ground of fraud, gross fraud. That is the colored academy precinct, in Columbia County. In that county the vote between the conservatives and the republicans is very close. Dr. Johnson, who was a candidate for the senate on the part of the republicans, had great anxiety as to his election. He was declared elected I think by some 16 votes. But he, knowing that the vote would be very close in that county, set to work before election day to take control of the polls, to manage in his own interest that election in the colored academy precinct, (where the larger number of the colored men voted,) and to aid in making up any deficiency which he thought by any possibility might exist if a fair and free vote were had.

In that precinct, instead of having three men regularly and legally appointed to act, two of them were substantially appointed by Dr. Johnson himself. The law of the State of Florida provides that the polls shall be opened at eight o'clock in the morning; but under the direction of Dr. Johnson the poll was opened at seven o'clock in the morning, as the testimony most clearly shows. The poll was open one hour at least before the time fixed by law, before the inspectors or electors were called upon to be present.

I know it has been decided in election cases that the polls may be opened for a few minutes after or a few minutes before the appointed time without the election being thereby vitiated. That undoubtedly is good law. But here is the point in reference to which the fact that the polls were opened an hour before the time fixed by law is very material. The law of the State provides that if an inspector shall fail to serve, then the vacancy shall be filled by an election from the electors present. In this case two of the inspectors failed to appear at seven o'clock, so that a majority of those inspectors were elected, or there was a pretense of electing them, at seven o'clock that morning, an hour before the voters were called upon to be present. I submit that such an election could not qualify them to act. Why, sir, it is as bad as if a ballot were held on the day before the day appointed. The people had a right to pass upon the question who should have control of the ballot-box on that day. It was an important question, a vital question, to them. They had a right to be present. They understood the law of the State. They knew perfectly well that if the parties who had been appointed by the county commissioner failed to make their appearance at eight o'clock in the morning, not at seven, new inspectors might be chosen. The common, ordinary course would be to wait till a little after eight o'clock for the regularly-appointed inspectors to make their appearance. I submit that if as early as eight o'clock, without waiting a moderate time, the parties then present had proceeded to elect inspectors, they would have been guilty of great wrong in taking it for granted that the inspectors regularly appointed did not intend to appear. But certainly to go there at seven o'clock and pretend to make an election not only rendered that election of no account, but it was evidence itself of gross fraud.

The testimony shows that Dr. Johnson had those persons at his house, some of them over night—all, I think, at breakfast; that he had made arrangements with them before that day to be present and to act as officers of election. This appears also with reference to Mr. Carroll, who was chosen as clerk by the newly-chosen inspectors. There being no legally-elected inspectors, there could be no legally-elected clerk. He also said to Mr. King and Mr. Tompkins, two of the inspectors, "We shall want you to act." So this man who was a candidate for the State senate, who had such a vital interest in this election, himself appointed the parties who were to preside at the election and to have the full and entire management, manipulation, and control of the vote. That of itself was such a gross fraud, that no reliance could be placed upon the action of those pretended officers. They consented to it; and when a man assists in placing himself in a fraudulent position, his acts cannot be relied upon. They consented to be there; they must have been there at seven o'clock in the morning, because the voting commenced as early as that. They knew perfectly well that no one there had a right to elect them; they knew perfectly well that they could not be legally elected. The clerk knew perfectly well that he could not be legally chosen. Notwithstanding all this they went to work, took possession of the ballot-box, and conducted that election. They were persons acting without any authority, and their acts have no validity, and the party who claims any benefit from the votes cast at that precinct must show in some other way than by the returns of those officers the vote which was actually cast for him.

But we have further proof. The clerk himself admits he was ready to commit fraud. He says that on the evening before the election, at the house of Dr. Johnson, the latter called off from what he believed to be the registration-book some fifty-two names, which he supposed to be the names of parties not living in the county, persons whom he understood himself were not entitled to vote, and that he gave Dr. Johnson to understand he would assist him in enabling them to vote. Here you have the clerk acting at this election who is shown to be in conspiracy with one of the parties who was a candidate for office and who had so great an interest in the result.

It appears furthermore, Mr. Speaker, that at this place at least from seventy-five to one hundred persons voted whose names were not upon the registration-list without taking the oath provided for in section 9, and without being legal voters. It is impossible exactly to tell how many, but the testimony is from seventy-five to one hundred, and that, too, from the parties who presided at that election; that is, from the very inspectors themselves. They admit themselves that they permitted from seventy-five to one hundred persons to vote who had no legal right to vote. Can you place any reliance upon returns made by parties who have been guilty of such an act as that? You cannot determine how many voted illegally.

It also appears by looking at the registration-list sixteen persons voted at the colored academy precinct and the market-house precinct, another voting-place in the same county. Fraud will not be presumed at the other precinct where they were legally organized, but it will certainly be presumed at this place which was fraudulently organized.

Nothing will be presumed in favor of the fairness of the election at this precinct. It is shown that other persons not entitled to vote were permitted to vote at this precinct.

It appears furthermore that the registration-list was burned up, so that it is impossible now to compare the poll-list with the registration-list. The committee had before them nothing by which they could ascertain the correctness of this vote. If they had, they would have gone to work and attempted to purge the poll. They would have been unwilling to throw out a poll which possibly might be purged. They were disposed to give the rule of law in favor of the contestee, and to ascertain if possible, if it could be done with any probable certainty even, the actual vote which had been cast. But, as I have said, it was impossible to do it, because they find that the election was commenced in fraud, was carried on in fraud, and that there is nothing by which they can determine the extent of the fraud, and the fraud being on the part of the persons having charge of the election, it is of that character which makes their acts wholly unreliable. The committee, therefore, were compelled, although reluctantly, to throw out this precinct. They have done it, and we believe the House, reading the testimony fully—and the testimony is substantially reported in the report of the majority of the committee—so as to give the fullest opportunity for examination while the case is being heard, will find that it was impossible for us, acting with just regard to our duty, to do otherwise than report in favor of the contestant.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. I move to substitute for the resolutions reported from the majority of the committee those which I send to the Clerk's desk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That J. J. Finley was not elected, and is not entitled, to a seat in this House.

Resolved, That Josiah T. Walls was elected, and is entitled, to a seat in this House.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, in my judgment, the simple question presented by the resolutions now depending before the House is whether or not a member who shall occupy a seat upon this floor is to be elected by the people or whether he shall be elected in defiance of the will of the people by the action of a majority of this House.

With reference to many questions which have been determined by the majority of the committee, I have no disposition to dissent from them. I desire, however, to say, before passing on to one question which will occupy the greater portion of the time I wish to consume in this discussion, that I do not agree with the committee in reference to one or two propositions, although these questions, however found, are not essential to the determination of the question now depending before the House.

In the first place, Mr. Speaker, by the laws of the State of Florida a registration of voters is required to be made and corrected by the board of county commissioners at least six days before the day of election. That corrected registration-list is required to be deposited in the office of the clerk of the circuit court and the clerk of that court is required to send a duly-authenticated copy of the original list to each voting-precinct in the county. And inasmuch, Mr. Speaker, as by the laws of Florida a citizen is entitled to vote at any election precinct within the county, it follows that each certified copy of the registration-list which is sent to the various polls must contain the names of each voter registered within the county. The law further requires that when a voter offers himself at the polls, and his name is not found on the certified copy of the registration-list, he shall take an oath, among other things swearing his name has been improperly stricken from the registration-list.

I desire to say that, in my judgment, the registry list that must be referred to is not the certified copy that is sent out by the clerk to the various precincts, but it is the registration-list found in the clerk's office at the county seat. That is apparent from the ninth section of the statute, which provides:

> That if any person whose name may be erased shall, on offering to vote at any election, declare on oath that his name has been improperly struck off from the list of registered voters, and shall take the oath required to be taken by persons whose right to vote shall be challenged, such person shall have the right to vote, and, on making oath before the clerk of the court that his name has been improperly erased from the list of registered voters, may have his name again entered upon said list.

The oath, then, that he is required to take is that his name has been improperly stricken from the registry-list; and there is only one registry-list, the list at the county seat. Now I desire to say, as regards the evidence with reference to several of these election precincts, that where objection has been made in the report of the majority to the vote which was there cast, it is made to appear by the same evidence that shows that the names of the voters were not in the certified copy of the registry-list, that the great majority of them were found on the registration-list at the county seat. So much is shown in this regard that I venture to say there is no gentleman of the majority of this committee that will dare to affirm on the floor of the House that the certified copies of the registration-lists that were sent down to the various voting precincts were on their face honestly and truthfully made. The minority of the committee believe that where the certified copies sent down to the various voting precincts are thus shown not to be correct copies of the original registration-lists found at the county seat, the one at the county seat controls, and that no vote can be thrown out or rejected on the ground that the party is not a legal voter, simply because his name is not found on a certified copy of the registration-list at the voting-place, which is proven by the evidence of the contestant himself to have been grossly and flagrantly incorrect.

I do not desire, however, to dwell longer on this point, because, Mr. Speaker, the whole contest circles around the vote of the colored academy precinct, Lake City, in the county of Columbia. That county is very nearly equally divided between the two parties that are now dominant in the country; so nearly so that in the election in 1874 there was a difference of only thirty-eight votes. It further appears in evidence that in consequence of the implacable hatred of the white conservatives toward their colored fellow-citizens, almost the entire colored vote of Columbia County was cast at what is known as the colored academy precinct. It further appears in evidence here that at this county seat in which the colored academy precinct was located the deputy clerk of the circuit court was a candidate on the conservative ticket for the office of State senator, and it appears that a Dr. Johnson, residing in the same town, was a candidate on the republican ticket for the same office of State senator.

The election was held on the 3d of November, 1874. By some inscrutable dispensation of Providence the court-house, with all the records of the election—these records being in the custody of a man by the name of Waldron, the democratic clerk of Columbia County—was on the 20th day of December, 1874, destroyed by fire.

Another circumstance that to my mind is of great significance is this: that the evidence of the contestant was not taken until almost ten months after the election was held. The majority of the committee predicate their report in favor of throwing out the vote at the colored academy precinct, and in favor of disfranchising the whole colored population of that county, upon the ground that a conspiracy had been formed by one Dr. Johnson, the republican candidate for State senator, in order to perpetrate a fraud upon the election at the colored academy precinct. I have said that the taking of the testimony by the contestant, for some reason, was postponed until the 13th day of August, 1875; and Dr. Johnson, the man who was charged with having organized this conspiracy, on which the whole vote of the colored population of Columbia County is asked to be thrown out, was on the 5th day of June, 1875, conveniently murdered and his lips are sealed; so that he is unable to make answer to this report that charges him with attempting infamously to corrupt the purity of the ballot at the colored academy precinct. I do not say, Mr. Speaker, that the contestant or any of his friends are in any way answerable for the destruction of the court-house and of the records of election. I do not say they are in any wise answerable for the fact that Dr. Johnson himself, whose memory is blackened now by the report of the majority of the committee, was conveniently taken out of the way by the shot of an assassin before the contestant found it convenient to take his evidence at the colored academy precinct. I allude to that for the purpose of showing that the circumstances surrounding the taking of the evidence at a period ten months after the election had been held are of such a character as to require that every scintilla of evidence that was offered by the contestant in this case should be jealously and rigidly scrutinized, and that the mere hearsay evidence of self-convicted, self-confessed villains and conspirators shall not be taken, as it has been by the majority of the committee in making up their report, as sufficient.

There is another consideration which, in the minds of members on the floor of the House who are desirous of deciding this case on the law and the evidence, must not be passed over and is entitled to great weight. That is the fact that the evidence in this case is wholly ex parte. A notice was given by the contestee, as the minority report shows, that he would take testimony. Counsel was employed for that purpose, and in consequence of the sickness of that counsel and the failure of another counsel to attend, who was telegraphed to by the sitting member, who resided in a distant part of the district, and who was unable to be personally present at the time the testimony was to be taken, the contestee failed to have an opportunity to take any testimony at this precinct. I say in consequence of these facts the sitting member is here without having had an opportunity of offering one single word of evidence for the purpose of explaining either the testimony that may be calculated to raise a suspicion against him or the hearsay evidence that is relied upon by the majority of the committee in order to sustain their report, as I shall have occasion to show before I have got through with what I have to say on this subject.

The contestee presented these facts to the committee in a sworn application for leave to take evidence, in order that he might show that the colored people of Columbia County were being robbed of the new-born right to vote. He was denied the privilege of going into that precinct and taking evidence for the purpose of meeting this ex parte case made by the contestant ten months after the election had been held, and which was of such a character as to demand that an explanation should have been given, unless there was something rotten and corrupt in the case made in behalf of the sitting member.

Now then, Mr. Speaker, what are the issues with reference to the colored academy precinct in Columbia County? The issues are reduced to four, and I propose to discuss them in their order.

The first is that a majority of the inspectors of election was not appointed by the board of county commissioners, but they unlawfully and fraudulently assumed to act as such, and were mere intruders.

The second is, the polls were opened more than an hour before the regularly-appointed time, and a large number of votes were polled before the legal hour for opening the polls had arrived.

The third is, many persons not registered were allowed to vote without taking the oath that their names had been improperly stricken from the registry-list.

And the fourth is, that the illegal conduct of the inspectors was such as to indicate a fraudulent purpose to defeat the legal result of the election.

One word with reference to the last ground. It does not contain a single affirmative fact; it is simply a loose, naked deduction of law from a statement of facts which are not set out. It is a character of pleading that would not be respected on a demurrer to it in any court in all the land, and yet it is gravely presented here before the House which has been characterized as the grand inquest of the nation, the grand tribunal of the country, as an issue of sufficient weight and gravity to justify the introduction of evidence to sustain. But bald and naked as this statement is, it is still more bald and more naked so far as the proofs are concerned that are introduced for the purpose of supporting it. I refer now to the first question, namely, that the majority of the electors were mere intruders; and I preface what I have to say on that subject by observing that the law is universal in its application and sustains this as the correct rule: that wherever men are found exercising the functions of office the law presumes that they are rightfully in office, and that whenever any one challenges the authority of such an officer he is compelled to introduce evidence in order to establish the fact that the man is improperly exercising the functions of the office. To establish that fact, we find here three persons were acting as inspectors all day in the presence of all the voters who voted there; in their presence without objection, and also in the presence of the democratic candidate for State senator, and that democratic voters were there all taking part without challenging the sufficiency of the election board.

Now, then, what is the evidence on which the majority of the committee say that they will strike down these officers on the ground that they were not legally appointed? I want to make that point so that it shall be clear and well understood. I say that these men having exercised the functions of this office during the whole day, whenever the contestant seeks to challenge their right to do it he has got to do it by clear affirmative proof. Now, what is the proof he introduced for the purpose of showing that these men were not originally appointed by the county commissioners? The evidence of Mr. Tompkins, which will be found upon page 83 of the record, states:

I was at the colored academy precinct in Lake City, Columbia County, Florida, in the second congressional district, on the 3d day of November last, and served as one of the inspectors of election there. I was nominated as inspector by Dr. Johnson. Dr. Johnson asked me the night before the election to act either as clerk or inspector. Mr. Cleaveland had declined to act. Mr. Cleaveland was the regularly-appointed inspector. Dr. Johnson told me that Mr. Cleaveland had declined to act, and that Mr. Cleaveland had suggested to him (Johnson) to get me.

There is the testimony of Mr. Tompkins, the first witness who spoke with reference to this question. He swears Mr. Cleaveland had consulted him to act, and Mr. Cleaveland was the regularly-appointed inspector. On page 86 of the record he says "Mr. Cleaveland told me he could not serve that day."

On page 81 I find this statement:

Before the polls were open George G. Keen was called or sent for and swore us in; four of us were sworn in; I was sworn separately, the rest I think together.

Now, then, Mr. Speaker and gentleman, there is every single word of evidence that there is in this record for the purpose of proving these officers were intruders and had intruded themselves in the place that belonged to the board of inspectors appointed by the board of county commissioners. It shows that one of those who acted as inspector on the day of this election had been appointed by the board of county commissioners; it shows also that the others appointed had declined to act, and that one at least of them had suggested the appointment of the very man who constituted one of the board of inspectors selected by the people next morning.

And yet we are told, forsooth, that these men were intruders; that these men had no right to hold this election; men who sat there and received 600 votes, and in whose presence were these democratic challengers; men in the presence of whom was this man Weeks, the democratic candidate for State senator, who was working around the polls all day where this election was held. Yet there was not a single one of the whole number who ventured to make the suggestion that these men were intruders. It is not found that they were intruders until arson had destroyed the court-house and cowardly assassins had murdered the republican candidate who that day was elected to the senate of Florida.

Now, I say that if an entire poll can be rejected on such evidence as that, then unfortunate indeed is the condition of all the electors of this country. The ignorant poor—and we are told that the poor are to be always with us—the ignorant poor are at the mercy of the shrewd designing villains of the land. I say that if the six hundred colored men who voted at this precinct are disfranchised in this way, and their rights stricken down by turning out of this House their Representative, who was fairly elected to a seat here, it will be one of the grossest outrages, in my judgment, on the elective franchise and on the rights of the humble and the ignorant by the shrewd and the designing.

So much, then, with reference to intruders. I will take occasion, if my time permits, to read a little law on this subject before I get through. I will pass now to the next ground of contest.

What is that? The second ground of contest is that the polls were opened more than an hour before the appointed time, and that a large number of votes were received before the time for opening the polls. I desire to say to the gentlemen of the majority of the Committee of Elections, and also to the House, that in order to sustain that proposition two elements of proof are required. It must be first shown, and that satisfactorily, that the polls as a matter of fact were opened before the appointed time; and secondly, I say that every single respectable authority that I have been able to put my hands upon hold that you must further show that if the polls were in point of fact opened before the hour at which they ought to have been opened, the officers who did thus open the polls did so with a fraudulent and corrupt purpose.

Now, what is the evidence for the purpose of establishing those facts? I want members of the House, if they desire to do justice in this case, to listen to the evidence that is offered for the purpose of proving this allegation. It will not take long to read it, and it is well worth perusal in the light of the majority report. On page 76 of the testimony W. I. Barnett says:

I was in Lake City, in Columbia County, Florida, in the second congressional district, on that day, and at the colored academy precinct the greater part of the day. I was there as a challenger. I reached the polls about eight o'clock; when about three hundred yards from the polls I looked at my watch, which was set the day before to railroad time, and found it wanted five minutes to eight o'clock a. m., and I went immediately to the polls, walking fast, directly, and in haste. The polls were open when I arrived there, and they were voting.

He says he reached the polls "about eight o'clock;" but which side of eight o'clock? He does not tell us. He was a democratic challenger, sent there for the purpose of challenging the colored men who went there to vote. They exercised very liberally that day their right of challenging. Yet we are told there was not any election held there; just a sort of by-play carried on. On page 78 J. V. Brown, another democratic challenger, says:

I was present at the colored academy precinct in Lake City, Columbia County, Florida, in the second congressional district, on the 3d of November last, at the general election. I was acting as a challenger for the conservative party. I was there about seven a. m.; it could not possibly be ten minutes after seven. When I got there the house was closed. I looked through the window and saw the managers, and I asked for admission, and they let me in.

By the way, this man remained in the room where the inspectors were carrying on the election all day, as his evidence shows. He was right there; so that everything that was done by the election board was under his eye. He went so far, as shown by his testimony, as to keep an independent list or tally-sheet, showing every vote taken; and his tally-sheet corresponded exactly with the tally-sheet that was kept by the duly-constituted board of inspectors on that day. He goes on to say:

John W. Tompkins, Charles R. King, John A. Carroll, and Francis Carolina, and George G. Keen, (magistrate,) and four or five others whose names I do not now remember were in the room where the ballot-box was. Dr. E. G. Johnson was in the next room, issuing paper of a green color, which I took to be tickets, to the colored people. There was a partition between the rooms. They were voting in there when I arrived.

Now it is clear that this witness at the outset does not deign to give us any information as to how he knew what the time was, for he says:

When I started to the precinct I saw Mr. Baya's watch, and it was five minutes after seven.

But he is as dumb as the tomb of the Capulets as to the distance he went to reach the polls or how he knew the hour when he arrived there. But on that evidence the majority of the committee would throw out the poll of this election precinct. I will turn now to the evidence of F. M. Weeks, a democratic candidate for State senator, on pages 82 and 83.

I was at the colored academy precinct in Lake City, Columbia County, Florida, in the second congressional district, on the morning of the 3d day of November, A. D. 1874. I got there about seven o'clock a. m. When I arrived there I went to the clerk's desk, and found about twenty persons had already voted, as appeared from the lists.

Now this witness does not deign to tell how he knew it was seven or eight o'clock. Now, I submit that, even on a fair, bright morning on the day of election in November, no man can tell with any considerable degree of accuracy what time it is by looking at the sun, or in any other manner, without looking at a watch or clock. But we have taken in this contest the evidence of Mr. Tompkins, that is conclusive both as to the fact and the law, and it shows incontestably that this was a fair and legal election.

I refer now to the testimony of Tompkins, an inspector of elections, on page 84. Upon cross-examination he says:

We were at the polls some time before we opened them, and arrived at an early hour. It was insisted by several persons present that it was time to open the polls, but having considerable fixing to do——

Question. Why were not the polls opened?

Answer. Before it was possible to begin the election, it was necessary to open a panel through a door before we could receive the ballots. This took twenty or thirty minutes, as it took some time to send for a saw to open the aperture. The door was broken by doing it. In addition to this we had to arrange the table for the inspectors and clerk. It was quite a cloudy morning.

There is the fact, gentlemen, that demonstrates the impossibility of determining without looking at the watch the hour when the polls were opened; and Mr. Tompkins is not contradicted as to it being a cloudy morning.

It was impossible to tell without a watch when the sun did rise. It occurred to me it was not eight o'clock. Mr. Carolina being present with a watch stated that it was twenty or twenty-five minutes past seven o'clock. By Mr. Duval Selph's watch it was two minutes past eight o'clock; by Armstrong's watch it was three or four minutes past eight o'clock. Armstrong stated that he was just from a watchmaker's (Mr. Ross's) shop, and that he had the watchmaker's time. Consenting to be governed by the majority of the watches present, we opened the polls.

This is in the ex parte case made by the contestant himself, showing that according to the majority of the watches the hour of eight o'clock had arrived.

But, gentlemen, suppose that hour had not arrived; what then? I say that the law is—and it would be monstrous if it were otherwise—that if a board of election commence the election at an hour prematurely early, still, if it is done innocently, if it is done ignorantly, nay, I will put it stronger, because the authorities support me in doing so, unless it is affirmatively shown that the officers of the election thus opened the polls for the fraudulent purpose of receiving ballots that ought not to be received, the election is not invalidated.

Now, here is the evidence: Mr. Duval Selph, who is made to figure so largely in this case, testified that he ran his watch an hour and twenty minutes ahead. But in this computation of numbers of watches for the purpose of showing the time I have thrown this man's watch out of the account, just as I say that this House is bound to throw his testimony entirely out of the account. He is a self-confessed conspirator. He has undertaken to blacken the memory of one who is dead; and there is not a word of corroborative proof to sustain him. He comes here reeking with his own infamy, swearing to his own turpitude; yet we are asked to take his hearsay evidence for the purpose of supporting the resolution submitted for our adoption by the majority of the committee.

I say that the commencement of the election prematurely or the keeping of the polls open too long does not affect the legal result of the election. I invoke attention to the authority of the court of appeals of the State of New York on this subject. I read from 4 Selden's Reports, page 92:

If the particular hour for opening and closing the poll be directory and not imperative, the learned judge did not err in holding that the votes in the district in question should be allowed to Mr. Welch. The cases on the subject of what acts are directory and what imperative have already been stated and need not be repeated. It has been held with regard to corporations that the words "between the hours of ten in the morning and two in the afternoon" are not imperative, but merely directory, and an election may well be begun at any other reasonable hour. (Angell & Ames on Corporations, page 94.) The particular hour in the day is not the essence of the thing required to be done. Should inspectors on a cloudy day—

The very case we have now in hand—

Should inspectors on a cloudy day, and misled by a defective time-piece, close the polls a few minutes before sundown, or receive a few votes after that hour, if the time of day be the essence of the thing, the whole election for that district would be void. I cannot subscribe to this doctrine. I think the statute is directory.

Again, to show more clearly that the hour of closing the polls is directory and not imperative—

And whatever is true as to the closing of the polls is true as to opening them—suppose, after every voter in the district had deposited his ballot, the inspectors should have closed the polls, although the sun was still an hour high; or suppose they had kept it open an hour after sundown, and no vote had been offered or received, who in either case would have had a right to complain? Not the candidates, surely; for with respect to them the whole object of opening the poll at all had been accomplished. If the irregularity were willful—

If the polls are opened or closed out of season from willfulness—

the inspectors might, indeed, be punished by an indictment; and this, I apprehend, is the extent of the remedy.

Yet, overriding the decision of the highest tribunal in the State of New York, speaking dispassionately and judicially on this question, that the remedy and the only remedy for a willful violation of the direction as to opening and closing the polls is to indict and punish the officers, the majority here propose to strike down the most sacred right guaranteed to these poor colored men, to disfranchise them, and to elect by a majority of votes in this House some one to represent them in place of the man whom they voted for.

The same doctrince is maintained in the case of Piatt vs. The People in 29 Illinois Reports, page 72. In that case the supreme court of Illinois say:

The rules prescribed by the law for conducting an election are designed chiefly to afford an opportunity for the free and fair exercise of the elective franchise, to prevent illegal votes, and to ascertain with certainty the result. Such rules are directory merely, not jurisdictional or imperative. If an irregularity, of which complaint is made, is shown to have deprived no legal voter of his right, or admitted a disqualified person to vote—if it casts no uncertainty on the result, and has not been occasioned by the agency of a party seeking to derive a benefit from it—it may be well overlooked in a case of this kind, when the only question is, which vote was the greatest, that for subscription or that against subscription.

The allegation of the defendant, that votes were cast after five o'clock, is not clearly established, and is not so found by the jury. Had it been so, it was necessary for him to show how they voted. We cannot presume one way or the other. This has not been shown, and it is impossible to say if votes were received after five o'clock such votes would have changed the result, and if they did not, it would be going very far indeed to say such an irregularity so vitiated the election as to render it void.

There is the law, clear and unmistakable. Here, when Mr. Weeks came to the poll and went into the room where the election was being conducted, he looked over the poll-list and saw 20 votes had been cast. And this Mr. Weeks, deputy clerk, living in Lake City, where that election was held at the colored academy precinct, an old and well-known citizen, never opens his mouth, never makes a suggestion that a single one of the twenty voters so having voted were not just as fully qualified under the law to vote as he was himself.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. He was a witness, too.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. Yes, he was a witness, too. He was on the stand and cautiously and, I believe, purposely refused to press the investigation as to whether a single one of the 20 votes given there that morning was illegal or not. I have already read what he said: that there were about 20 votes cast when he arrived at the polls.

I say, Mr. Speaker, if the election was opened prematurely, if these 20 votes were received, the burden of proof is upon the contestant to show how they voted and whether they were illegal voters. When his challenger, Brown, was inside all day, and his challenger, Barnett, was outside all day, and Weeks was there all day, except for half an hour when he went to dinner, I say that under these facts all sworn to, and it being further sworn to that only 20 votes were received prematurely, to have this poll thrown out on that ground is simply, in my judgment, a judicial outrage.

But, sir, the report of the majority that these inspectors were intruders because they were chosen at an improper time is an utter misconception of the law. I do not desire to misstate the point on which the majority of the committee base their decision, and hence I will read an extract or two from the report of the majority. I read first from page 16. The majority are speaking in regard to the inspectors of the election:

They were not legally elected, as there was no regular meeting of the electors having power to choose inspectors before Tompkins and King undertook to act as such, and without legally appointed or chosen inspectors no legal clerk could be chosen or appointed, so that the election at this precinct was conducted by persons not legally authorized, with the exception of Hamilton, and by persons who were ready and willing to violate the election laws of the State, and who did violate them.

That, as I have already shown, is entirely gratuitous. On page 19, again referring to the inspectors, the majority in their report say:

They cannot stand better than mere intruders having no official character, intruders not for the purpose of aiding in conducting an election fairly, but for the purpose of carrying into execution a previously arranged fraud upon the ballot-box.

Now what is the doctrine gravely announced by the majority of the committee? They say because these inspectors were not regularly elected at the precise time required by law, they are therefore intruders. Pray, if they had been elected regularly, at the proper time, chosen by the proper parties and at the time when they ought to have been elected, what would they have been? They would have been officers de jure. What constitutes an officer de facto? An officer de facto is one who has color of authority when he enters upon the exercise of the functions of office, and is elected prematurely, or elected by a board or authority not having capacity to elect at the time or in the manner in which it is attempted. I will show both classes of cases. These men, if they were elected prematurely, were elected by the consent of the people who had the right to elect, and if there was any irregularity about their induction into office they were at least de facto officers, and their right cannot be challenged by third parties.

I propose to cite authorities as to that. I call attention to pages 176 and 187 of 1 Bartlett; to the case of Milliken vs. Fuller, of Maine, in the Thirty-fourth Congress, first session. In that case the officers of the election were chosen in the month of April, when they ought to have been chosen in the month of March—chosen at a wrong election, at a wrong meeting—and the House adopted this as the law of the case without division:

Second. That the votes of Hancock plantation be rejected, because the officers who held the election were chosen at a meeting held in the month of April, when, as the contestant contends, the law of the State required that it should have been held in the month of March.

There is no controversy about the facts in either case, and although there was difference of opinion in the committee whether the election of municipal officers in the Hancock plantation was held at a time permitted by the law of the State, yet the committee is unanimously of the opinion that the persons officiating were officers de facto, acting in good faith; and, as no fraud is alleged, the votes from the district were rightfully counted for the sitting member.

That is to say, although they were elected a month later than they ought to have been elected, at a meeting held without any shadow of law, yet having been elected, having been inducted into office, having acted as such, they were officers de facto, is the solemn adjudication in the case of Milliken vs. Fuller. Yet the majority say that no election can be held unless the election officers are elected at the time and by the very body that is qualified to elect. If that were so, unfortunate indeed would be the condition of voters, for the least deviation in the most unimportant particular would strike down and nullify the most sacred right of the American citizen. I protest against the adoption of a doctrine so repugnant to law, so repugnant to justice, so in the teeth of all precedent, and so absolutely and irretrievably ruinous to the rights of the American people.

I will call attention without reading, although I will incorporate an extract or two in my remarks, to the case of Barnes vs. Adams where the learned gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. MCCRARY,] whom I have not the pleasure now of seeing in his seat, gave a most thorough examination to the question as to what constituted a de facto officer, a de facto board, and the doctrine is fully and completely sustained. It is to be found in 2 Bartlett, pages 765, 766:

An officer de facto is one who comes into office by color of a legal appointment or election. His acts in that capacity are as valid, so far as the public is concerned, as the acts of an officer de jure. His acts in that capacity cannot be inquired into collaterally. * * * If the votes of the citizens are freely and fairly deposited at the time and place designated by law, the intent and design of the election is accomplished. It is the will of the electors thus expressed that gives the right to the office, and the failure of the officers to perform a mere ministerial duty in relation to the election cannot invalidate it if the electors had actual notice and there was no fraud, mistake, or surprise.

Again:

The principle of a colorable election holds not only in regard to the right of electing, but of being elected. A person indisputably ineligible may be an officer de facto by color of election.

Now what can the elector do? He finds an officer surrounded by the muniments of his office conducting an election, and he comes there for the purpose of exercising his sovereign franchise in voting. What can he do? Is he powerless? Is he disfranchised because forsooth there may be a technical flaw which on direct proceedings might be sufficient to invalidate the election of the man who is exercising the functions of the office? If that were so we would find the House, after its judgment pronounced with so much hot haste against a recusant witness, in a very delicate situation; for, if when an inquiry was made collaterally on a writ of habeas corpus you could search the record and go beyond the question of the jurisdiction of the House into the details of its action, it might be difficult to sustain its decision. I reckon that instead of getting Hallet Kilbourn back under such a rule to be kept at $20 a day he would entirely escape from our tender embraces.

But, in addition to that, that same question has been solemnly adjudged in the court of appeals in the State of New York in the case of the New York State inspectors of election. I will not read the case, but I will state the point that was made in it. The law required that in case there was a failure of the officers of election to attend at the time of holding the election other inspectors of election should be appointed by the supervisor of the township and another officer and two justices of the peace to act in the places of those first appointed. There was a failure to attend, and election officers were appointed with the co-operation of a single justice of the peace. There was only one justice acting; so that the board that made the return of the election was one that was not duly and legally constituted and had no authority to make it; and yet they did make it. The officers exercised the functions of the office. And after an able argument, the case going through the supreme court of the State to the court of appeals, the highest judicial tribunal in the State—after the question had been ably and elaborately discussed by counsel, it was held by the court that although the body that elected the inspectors had no legal power to do it, yet inasmuch as they undertook to do it, and the men thus attempted to be chosen went into the exercise of the functions of the office, were sworn and acted, they constituted a de facto board, their action was conclusive. But this precedent is ridden over rough-shod by the majority of the committee in order that they may strike off the vote of these poor colored people in the colored academy precinct.

The same doctrine is maintained, and I will incorporate in my remarks a paragraph from the case which I have not time to read, in The People vs. Piatt, 29 Illinois Reports:

A mere irregularity in conducting an election which does not deprive any voter of his franchise, or allow an illegal vote, or change the result, will not vitiate the poll. Although the law directs that the polls shall be closed at five o'clock—and this question is in issue—unless it is made to appear that illegal votes were cast after that hour which change the result, the irregularity will not affect the vote of the precinct.

The last ground of contest is "that many persons were allowed to vote who were not registered without taking the oath that their names had been improperly stricken from the registry-list." This charge, it is claimed, is supported by the proof; and from it it is argued that the inspectors were shown to be ready to commit a fraud on the election.

The law applicable to the question involved is thus stated in the case in 8 New York, from which I have already quoted:

Fraud can never, in judicial proceedings, be predicated of a mere emotion of the mind, disconnected from an act occasioning injury to some one; a fraudulent transaction implies a wrong done, as well as a person wronged. The term fraud when applied to inspectors of an election implies, ex vi termini, that some legal voter has been designedly and wrongfully deprived of his vote or that an illegal vote has been purposely and unjustly received by these officers or that a false estimate has been imposed upon the public as a genuine canvass.

The contestant must show that the copy of the registery-list furnished the inspectors of the colored academy precinct was a correct one, or no inference of fraud can be made against the election officers. But the contestant's witness Waldron, clerk of the court, leaves it in doubt whether he furnished any certified list for 1874. It is fairly inferable that the list used was an old and uncorrected one. Here is his testimony:

I was clerk of the circuit court of Columbia County, Florida, and had custody of the county records and election returns in November, A. D. 1874. Since the last general election the clerk's office and (I believe) all the county records had been destroyed by fire; this occurred in the month of December last.

Cross:

I do not remember whether, as clerk, I made certified copies of the registration-lists before the fire. I do not know of any being in existence at the present time.

Thus it appears that the clerk had not furnished the certified list, and it is quite fair to assume that, if the ballot-box, poll-list, returns, and registry-list were in existence, they would utterly explode the charge of illegal voting.

But let us examine the testimony on this point as it appears in the record:

W. J. Barnett, (page 77:)

Question. Were there any votes cast at that precinct when the names were not on the registration-list?

(Objected to by counsel for contestee.)

Answer. A great many. I am satisfied there were seventy-five, and probably a hundred, voted whose names were not on the registration-list, who only took the following oath: "You do solemnly swear that you are twenty-one years of age; that you are a citizen of the United States, (or that you have declared your intention to become a citizen of the United States, according to the acts of Congress on the subject of naturalization;) that you have resided in this State one year and in this county six months next preceding this election; that you have not voted at this election, and that you are not disqualified to vote by the judgment of any court." No other oath was taken by those who voted and whose names were not on the registration-list. None of the above took the oath that they had been registered and their names had been improperly stricken from the registration-list.

Cross:

Q. You stated that there were seventy-five, perhaps one hundred, voted whose names were not on the registration-list; will you state on what grounds you make that statement?

A. From the number who voted whose names were not on the registration-list. When a man came up to vote his name was looked for, and if not found the inspectors administered the oath. It is my impression the number is as large as seventy-five; not less.

J. V. Brown, a democratic challenger who remained in the room where the officers of the election were, testifies:

There was a number of votes polled that day of persons whose names were not on the registration-list. I looked over the list with Charles R. King, who was an inspector.

Question. Do you know of any who voted twice on that day?

Answer. One Huison Yates, a citizen of Duval County, to my certain knowledge, voted twice. In the morning he voted for Walls; in the afternoon he voted a folded ticket, a green one, (the republican color that day.) A majority of the regularly-appointed inspectors were not present when I arrived in the morning. There were five voted that day that I positively know were not citizens of the county: William Williams, Huison Yates, Mitchell Yates, Peter Ranison, and Sam Jones. Henry Ellis, Charles Jones, and George Sanders were challenged on account of their being sent to the penitentiary. They refused to take the oath in the morning; they came back in the afternoon and took the oath, and voted at the instance of Dr. Johnson.

Cross:

Q. When I started to the precinct I saw Mr. Baya's watch, and it was five minutes after seven; it was just good daylight. The ballot-box was in the room sitting on a little table by the window when I went in; there was an alley-way from the other room to the window; the other room was open; the voters had to go up the alley-way to vote. With the exception of the illegal voting referred to, as far as my own observation extended, the election seemed to be a fair one.

JOHN W. TOMPKINS, being duly sworn, testifies:

Answer. We had two oaths, and Captain King almost invariably administered the oath, and in every instance, as well as I remember, we administered the oath. I recollect occasionally they swore their names had been improperly struck from the rolls. The oath, section 16, act 1868, page 5, was the one generally administered in almost every case, There were only a few took the oath that their names were improperly stricken from the list. I asked Johnson to let me stay at his house the night before the election, as it was threatening rain and I wished to be early at the polls next morning.

FRANCIS M. WEEKS, being duly sworn, testifies:

I was at the colored academy precinct in Lake City, Columbia County, Florida, in the second congressional district, on the morning of the 3d day of November, A. D. 1874. I got there about seven o'clock a. m. When I arrived there I went to the clerk's desk and found about twenty persons had already voted, as appeared from the lists. I staid there until about three p. m. I then left for about half an hour. I then returned to the colored academy precinct and remained until the polls were closed. There were a good many voted at the colored academy precinct whose names were not found on the registration-list, but I do not remember how many.

Question. Were the colored academy precinct and the market-house precinct both in the town of Lake City?

(Objected to by contestee's counsel.)

Answer. They were. I partly examined and compared the colored academy precinct returns and the market-house returns. As well as I recollect, I only found about seven persons whose names were checked on both lists. I was then called away to other business, and Mr. Waldron, who was assisting me, continued the examination until he was called away. Mr. Waldron was the clerk of the circuit court, and I was his deputy. My impression is the seven persons voted at both precincts, and I base my impressions on the names being checked on lists. I based my conclusions that a good many voted not on the registration-list by being present and looking over the registration-lists. I think there were four in one crowd. I observed from ten to fifteen who thus voted, as well as I recollect. I was the opponent of Dr. Johnson at this election. I paid particular attention to those who thus voted, and kept a list of the names until three o'clock; but the list was afterward burned in the clerk's office. Mr. Brown and Mr. Barnett got names that I did not get. When I saw them take the names I did not do it. The clerk's office was burned on the night of the 20th of December, A. D. 1874.

The mere impression of Barnett that seventy-five persons illegally voted amounts to nothing so far as impeaching the returns are concerned. No one of these witnesses swears to any fact tending to prove any fraud. No poll in the land would be good if it was set aside as fraudulent because the partisan challengers testified they thought somebody who swore in his vote was not a qualified voter. Every witness testified that except in respect to the voters who were challenged it was a fair and legal election. Certainly no more votes ought to be thrown out than are shown to have been illegal. This, on the largest estimate, could not exceed seventy-five. This would leave the sitting member undisturbed, and with a large majority in his favor. The testimony of Duval Selph is not deserving of credit. He testifies to his own infamy; besides, his evidence is hearsay. He pretends to give conversations with a man who had been murdered before the testimony was taken. This man, however, does not swear to any actual fraud committed by Dr. Johnson or any one else. The portion of his testimony most nearly looking to the existence of fraud is the following. Duval Selph testifies:

Question. Did you do anything unfair yourself at the election?

Answer. To my knowledge, I did not. The reason I think the election was conducted unfairly is that from seventy-five to a hundred persons received tickets from Johnson. He called a name and a number and they put it through an aperture in the wall where the ballot-box stood, and called out the name and number, and the ballot was thus received; this is one of my reasons. Johnson called the name and gave the number which he gave to these parties from what he told me was a copy of the registration-list, and the parties took the number with the ticket and passed it through the hole to the inspectors, calling out the name. The returns from the Ellisville precinct were not intercepted.

Redirect:

Q. State other reasons why you consider the election unfair.

A. My other reason is that the number of men who voted through the window by number, as above stated, were (as I believe) voting under fictitious names; no one told me so.

This circumstance, if it occurred, is capable of a simple explanation. There was a large number of men to vote. It would require more than one vote to be cast each minute. The registry-list had the names of all the voters of the county on it. It took some time for the inspectors to hunt up each voter's name. Hence if Dr. Johnson when he gave out a ballot also gave the voter his number on the registry-list, it would enable the inspectors at once to find the name, and thereby would facilitate the election. This man Selph thinks, however, these seventy-five or one hundred men were voting under fictitious names. He does not claim to know it; it is his impression. Such a fraud would be a stupendous one and must have attracted attention. Yet neither Brown, who was inside the room as challenger, nor Barnett, who was challenger outside, nor Weeks, the democratic senatorial candidate, observed this occurrence, or, if they did, it was so manifestly proper that they do not allude to it in their testimony. They testify to the fairness of the election, except as to certain men who offered to vote whose names were not found on the copy of registry-list at the polls, and who on being challenged swore in their votes without taking, it is claimed, the proper oath entire. The whole testimony, however, fails to impeach the returns. It is manifest that in no event can more than seventy-five votes be struck off.

Our duty seems plain. We are furnished with the data whereby we can purge this poll of every vote about which a question is raised. It is our duty to do it. Strike off 75, the number estimated by Barnett to have illegally voted, or strike off 100, the number suggested by Selph, and the sitting member still has a large majority. In this way will we preserve the purity of the ballot-box and at the same time give effect to the honest ballots cast at this precinct. Only by preserving the purity of the ballot-box and by giving honest, unhesitating obedience to the expressed will of the majority can we hope to perpetuate our republican institutions and save liberty itself from perishing from the earth.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HOUSE. I do not desire nor do I intend to consume the time of the House in discussing anything that is not proper for the House to take into consideration in making up a calm and unbiased judgment upon the merits of this case. But I must be permitted, Mr. Speaker, to enter my protest against the spirit in which the honorable gentleman who has just taken his seat has seen fit to consider this question. A Committee of Elections occupies a quasi-judicial position, and if their opinion upon a case is worth anything to the House their investigations must be conducted in a judicial spirit. The spirit of the partisan is wholly foreign to a question of this sort and entirely out of place in an investigation of this character. Why the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BAKER] felt himself called upon in discussing what is nothing more than a purely legal question to travel outside of the record and make an attempt to stir up party feeling on this subject against the majority of this committee is a question which he perhaps can answer. I say everything of that sort is wholly foreign to this question.

The question is whether under the laws of Florida the contestant or the contestee is entitled to a seat upon this floor, and the attempt on the part of the gentleman from Indiana to excite prejudice against the majority of this committee or to attribute to them a motive to ride rough-shod over the poor colored voter and to deny him his legal rights does the majority of this committee gross injustice, and the gentleman will allow me to say, without any offense to him, is unworthy of him. There is nothing, Mr. Speaker, which has occurred in the investigations of this committee which would justify the gentleman from Indiana in indulging in any such insinuation against the majority of the committee. Why, sir, he came very near charging, he did by innuendo charge—if he did not mean to cast a suspicion of that character, I am at a loss to know why he made the allusion he did—he came very near charging that the contestant in this case had burned the court-house to destroy the records and murdered a witness to suppress evidence. I submit here in all fairness if this line of argument is not entirely out of place in the discussion of this matter.

It is very true, Mr. Speaker, that the court-house was burned; how or by whom this evidence does not disclose. It is true that this Dr. Johnson who figures in this election was killed by somebody; but where, by whom, and under what circumstances, this record fails to disclose; there is not one particle of proof upon the subject at all. So much, Mr. Speaker, in reference to these outside charges which the gentleman from Indiana has seen fit to insinuate against the majority of his colleagues upon this committee. And I must express my surprise that the gentleman should have exhibited such a partisan spirit. I could not have been induced to believe that under his calm exterior the fires of partisanship would burn so intensely as they seem to do. Now, the charge, Mr. Speaker, that the majority of the committee are depriving the colored voters of their rights I deny, and there is nothing in this record to warrant any such remark on the part of the gentleman.

Now, sir, I do not intend to go into the whole case. A great many of the points that were made by the contestant and the contestee in this case the committee do not disagree about. The whole contest here hangs upon one precinct in Columbia County, known as the colored academy precinct in Lake City.

The sitting member claims to have been elected to this House by a majority of 371 votes. He claims to have received at this colored academy precinct 588 votes, while the contestant received there only 11 votes; so that if the vote of this colored academy precinct is thrown out it settles the contest as between the contestant and the contestee; and I shall not go into the question of this election any further than as relates to the colored academy precinct.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the election law of Florida provides that the election shall be opened at eight o'clock in the morning and that the polls shall close at sundown. It further provides that three discreet men shall be selected to act as inspectors of election, and that, in case they are absent or sick or refuse to act, then the voters who are present at the time fixed by law for the opening of the polls shall select three other men to act in their place.

Now I desire to refer to the law on that subject.

In case of the death, absence, or refusal to act of any or all of the inspectors appointed by the county commissioners, the electors present at the time appointed for opening the election may choose, viva voce, from the qualified electors, such a number as, together with the inspector or inspectors present, if any, will constitute a board of three, and the persons so chosen shall be authorized to act as inspectors of that election.

Now what do we find in this case? We find that Dr. Johnson, who was an active republican partisan in Columbia County, and who was a candidate for the State senate, a few days before the election was riding about the county endeavoring to get persons to act as inspectors of election at that colored academy precinct, and on the night before the election a man by the name of Tompkins and a man by the name of Carroll staid all night at the house of this Dr. Johnson. Tompkins was one of the inspectors that Dr. Johnson had selected to act on the following day, and he staid all night at Dr. Johnson's house. Carroll was the man whom Dr. Johnson had selected to act as clerk of the election, and he staid all night at Johnson's house the night before the election. King, another inspector, did not stay all night at Johson's house, but he was there the next morning before daybreak. Carroll, the man who acted as clerk, says that he and Dr. Johnson and King and Tompkins left Dr. Johnson's house together and went to the voting-place and arrived there a little after daylight. Now the election law of Florida says, and all laws say, that fraud may be proved by circumstances. Here was a man who was himself a candidate for office at the election, an active partisan, and he goes himself and selects men to act as inspectors and a man to act as clerk, and on the next morning a little after daylight, before any one could be presumed to be abroad, before the voters of the precinct could be presumed to have got their breakfasts, these men, a little after daylight, go to the polling-place and open the polls and commence voting. There is no proof in this regard that any human being in Columbia County ever had anything to do with the appointing of these inspectors except Dr. Johnson himself.

Now, I beg the House to bear in mind that the law says that, if the inspectors of the election are not present to officiate, then the voters present—when? At daylight? About sun up? No; but the voters present at the time fixed by law for the opening of the polls—may, viva voce, select inspectors. Now it is perfectly idle for any one to argue to me or, I think, to any fair-minded man in this House that an active partisan can go about before the election and select the men that are to act as inspectors and clerk and take them to his house and keep them over night, and then take them to the polls and commence operations before other citizens are abroad or can possibly participate in the election. I say that that of itself was a fraud upon the election laws of Florida.

I do not controvert the position taken by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. BAKER,] that if the inspectors of elections should happen to open the polls a few minutes before or after the time fixed by law the election would not be invalidated; but here was a deliberate attempt to open the polls before the time fixed by law had arrived. Dr. Johnson said to Mr. Tompkins, "I want you to act as inspector." What right had he to appoint an inspector? He said to Carroll, "I want you to act as clerk." He had no right under the election laws of Florida to appoint either inspectors or clerk; yet he did so and he opened the polls when there were no persons present but his own personal friends, fifteen or twenty in number, while the citizens of the precinct were not there at that early hour.

Now the gentleman from Indiana undertakes to say that there is some discrepancy in the proof about the hour at which they commenced voting. I undertake to say that the proof is overwhelming that they opened the ballot-box about seven o'clock.

Mr. Brown says that he got there about seven o'clock, and that they were voting when he got there; that there were about twenty votes in the ballot-box when he got there, about seven o'clock. Another witness proves the same thing. This man, Selph, proves that it was eight o'clock and twenty minutes by his watch, but he says he set his watch ahead an hour and twenty minutes the evening before, at the suggestion of this same Dr. Johnson. There is one remarkable coincidence in this matter. There was a colored divine by the name of Armstrong, who was a candidate for the Legislature. The strange coincidence is that Armstrong's watch and Selph's watch corresponded. Selph admits that he put his watch up an hour and twenty minutes at Johnson's suggestion, and it is a remarkable thing that Armstrong's watch should correspond with Selph's watch. He was a colored divine and a candidate for the Legislature, and I have no doubt that he put his watch up at Johnson's instigation. Something of that kind must have been done, or else the watch of this divine, Selph, would not have corresponded with Armstrong's.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. Do you say that Selph was a colored divine?

Mr. HOUSE. Not Selph, but Armstrong. The manner in which the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BAKER] and the minority report of the committee denounce Selph is conclusive proof that he had none of the colored element in him.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I am glad of that for the sake of the colored people.

Mr. HOUSE. I would take that as prima facie evidence of his color every time. So much for the manner in which these inspectors were appointed. I say that from the circumstances you can come to no other conclusion than that it was a deliberate and concocted fraud upon the election laws of Florida. If Dr. Johnson meant to do nothing wrong, meant to do nothing more than to comply with the law, why did he go there about daylight, and why did it so happen that in his selection of inspectors and clerk he took every one from his own political party and gave the other side no showing whatever in the selection of officers who were to preside impartially at that election?

Mr. WALLS. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. HOUSE. Certainly.

Mr. WALLS. The evidence will show that not one of these inspectors was my political friend; or rather the evidence does not show that they were, and I will prove to the House that not one of them voted for me, but they all voted for the contestant. I hope the gentleman will not undertake to discredit my case by saying that they were party friends of mine.

Mr. HOUSE. The evidence shows that they were all republicans.

Mr. WALLS. No; nowhere does it show that.

Mr. HOUSE. I will not stop to read the evidence, but it certainly does show that. Tompkins proves that they were all friends of Dr. Johnson or voted for him. And the testimony of Weeks, I think it is, shows that every man present at the polling-place of that precinct when he got there was a republican excepting himself and another man. King and Tompkins and Carroll were all there at that time, and there can be no dispute about their belonging to the republican party. That is clearly shown by the testimony.

But I will show a little further on in this case why it was that Dr. Johnson wanted King and Tompkins and these other men to act as inspectors. The minority in this case make a statement in their report which I was very much surprised to see in view of the proven facts in this record. They say there is no proof that a single illegal vote was cast at that precinct. Now I beg the House to understand one thing; there is a registration law in Florida. No man can vote in Florida unless he is a registered voter; that is clear; there is no dispute about that.

When a man presents himself to vote, if his name is not found upon the registration-list, before he can vote he is required to take an oath that his name has been improperly stricken from the registration-list; he cannot vote without that. That oath is as much a condition precedent to his voting, if his name is not found on the registration-list, as that he shall be registered at all. That will not be disputed by gentlemen on the minority side of this question. If, when a person comes up to the polls, the inspectors look over the list and find that his name is not there, they will say to him: Mr. A, your name is not on this list. He then has no right to vote unless he swears that he has been registered, and that his name has been improperly stricken from the list.

Now, what was done in this case? Between seventy-five and a hundred voters—some put it more and some less, but certainly a very large number of the votes received there that day—were offered by men whose names were not on the registration-list. Now, the minority say that these inspectors have done nothing illegal; that no illegal votes were cast at these polls. I say that the proof shows, and abundantly shows, that from seventy-five to a hundred voters—the number is not very accurately defined, because no one kept count of them—presented themselves there to vote whose names were not on the registration-list, and they were permitted to vote without taking the oath which the law imperatively required they should take before they could vote legally.

Now that is proven by several witnesses here; among them by Tompkins, one of the inspectors appointed by Johnson himself.

Before going further in my argument on this question, I wish, in support of my statement that the proof showed that these inspectors were republicans, to read from the testimony of Mr. Barnett, page 77:

Question. Were these inspectors republicans or conservatives?
Answer. They were republicans.

There are several other witnesses who speak to the same effect, but I will not stop to read their testimony. One of them was a colored man. There can be no dispute on this point at all. The gentleman [Mr. WALLS] has not read the evidence in his own case, I presume, if he says that this proof is not in the record.

Mr. WALLS. I have read all the evidence; and I promise to substantiate my assertion.

Mr. HOUSE. Mr. Speaker, I will not, if I know it, misrepresent the testimony in this case, and I think I know what it is. I say that these inspectors themselves perpetrated a willful and deliberate fraud upon the ballot-box over which they presided. As I said a while ago, no gentleman who sustains the minority report will pretend that any man who presented himself to vote, whose name was not found on the registration-list, could be allowed to vote unless he took the oath, prescribed in section 9 of the election laws of Florida, that he had been a registered voter, but that his name had been improperly stricken from the list. There was another oath that the voter took where the question of registration did not arise, or where he was challenged for other causes. That was the oath contained in section 16 of the election laws:

If any person offering to vote shall be challenged as not qualified by an inspector or by any other elector, one of the board shall declare to the person challenged the qualifications of an elector. If such person shall claim that he is qualified and the challenge be not withdrawn, one of the inspectors shall administer to him the following oath:

"You do solemnly swear that you are twenty-one years of age; that you are a citizen of the United States, (or that you have declared your intention to become a citizen of the United States, according to the acts of Congress on the subject of naturalization;) that you have resided in this State one year and in this county six months next preceding this election; that you have not voted at this election, and that you are not disqualified to vote by the judgment of any court."

Now that is one oath; that is the oath required to be taken by a man challenged for other cause than not being a registered voter. And here we have from seventy-five to one hundred men coming up to the ballot-box and offering to vote when they were not entitled to vote, unless they took the oath that their names were stricken from the registration-list; and we find these inspectors, with both oaths before them, administering to men whose names did not appear upon the registration-list this oath which I have just read, which did not entitle them to vote.

Now let us see what Tompkins said about this matter:

We had two oaths.

This shows that they had both oaths right before them then and there. If they had not had the oaths with them at the ballot-box, we might suppose that through mistake they administered to these unregistered voters the wrong oath. But Tompkins removes altogether that ground of escape for these inspectors. Tompkins, an inspector himself, testifies:

We had two oaths, and Captain King almost invariably administered the oath, and in every instance, as well as I remember, we administered the oath. I recollect occasionally they swore their names had been improperly struck from the rolls.

Now mark you, not one of them was entitled to vote whose name was not on the list unless he took that oath.

The oath, section 16, act 1868, page 5, was the one generally administered in almost every case. There were only a few took the oath that their names were improperly stricken from the list.

Now I call upon gentlemen on the other side of this House who support the minority report to argue this question from the proof in the case, and not to indulge in partisan passion. I say that even upon the testimony of Tompkins, the inspectors of elections, with both oaths before them, deliberately committed a fraud in allowing men to vote who they knew were not entitled to vote under the laws of Florida. Gentlemen cannot escape this conclusion.

Let me now read one statement from the minority report, a most extraordinary statement to have been made by any gentleman who had read the proof in this case:

It appears from Tompkins's testimony that men whose names could not be found were challenged and took both oaths required by law.

Now this minority report represents Tompkins as saying that the men who offered to vote there took both oaths, when Tompkins's testimony, which I have just read, shows that very few of them took this oath that they had been improperly struck from the registration-list. Now I call upon the gentleman who wrote that report——

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I wrote it; and I will meet the gentleman at Philippi. Let him be patient.

Mr. HOUSE. I did not want to meet the gentleman anywhere else than at Philippi. It was at Philippi I wanted the gentleman to speak—not now. But whether he speaks here or at Philippi, I say that he incorrectly represents—not intentionally, of course, as he will understand——

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. Certainly.

Mr. HOUSE. But that he does erroneously represent Tompkins as swearing to what he does not swear to; he swears to the contrary.

It appears from Tompkins's testimony that the men whose names could not be found on the registration-list were challenged and took both oaths required by law. He says that only a few took the oath that their names were improperly stricken from the list. I know the honorable gentleman is able, and I know he is ingenious, but if he can reconcile that, then his ingenuity exceeds anything I have ever seen exhibited.

I insist, Mr. Speaker, that all this is sufficient to utterly destroy any return that these inspectors could make out; that having both oaths before their faces, they permitted men to come up and deposit votes in the ballot-box without taking the oath which the law required they should take.

This record also shows that men were allowed to vote not living in the county, although not challenged, and yet challengers were there. Mr. Tompkins, who was one of the inspectors, says:

There was considerable challenging at the polls; John V. Brown and W. J. Barnett did most of the challenging. Francis M. Weeks challenged a few. There were, I imagine, at least fifty or sixty votes challenged. Persons were challenged because they were not on the registration-list. Two or three because they had been in the penitentiary.

Their attention was called to that, "I challenge this man because he was not on the registration-list;" but with both oaths before them, instead of making him take the oath he must take before he can vote and which they knew he could not take without committing perjury, they committed the fraud upon the law of putting the other oath to him, which did not amount to a row of pins, and deliberately put his vote into the box. That is of itself sufficient to destroy the returns of this election precinct. It is well understood and well established that when an officer of election is occupied in the perpetration of deliberate wrong upon the ballot-box, although it may not be sufficient to change the result, it destroys the integrity of the returns, and you cannot look to that return for any purpose whatever.

I understood the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BAKER] to remark that when the testimony of Weeks was taken the contestant failed to ask him a question, and that Weeks failed to prove there were illegal votes cast at this poll. That is altogether a mistake.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. If the gentleman from Tennessee will allow me, the assertion of the gentleman from Indiana was that Weeks failed to state any of the twenty names, or thereabouts, of votes upon the list when he arrived were illegal.

Mr. HOUSE. I did not understand that.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. That is what he said.

Mr. HOUSE. Then I do not care to reply to that, but Weeks does say there were a good many who voted at the colored academy precinct whose names were not found on the registration-list, but I do not remember how many. One says from seventy-five to one hundred. They proved that various parties from other counties, who did not belong to Columbia County, were allowed to vote at that precinct. The challenges were disregarded, and these inspectors, appointed as I have indicated to the House, allowed other votes to be received.

So, Mr. Speaker, I do not think any other conclusion can be reached upon any sound principle than that this colored academy precinct must be thrown out. If thrown out, as I stated before, then it settles the result of this election. The contestee claims to be elected by 371 majority. He claims to have received 588 out of this colored academy precinct. Of course, if the poll at the colored academy precinct is thrown out it settles the question. The other minor questions referred to in reference to other precincts I do not care to touch upon any further.

One thing was said by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BAKER] which I will notice before I take my seat. He made a statement in reference to the contestee being deprived of the privilege of taking proof, and something is said in this minority report of the testimony in this case being ex parte. I wish to state to the House that every witness examined in reference to this colored academy precinct was cross-examined by a party who certainly represented himself to be the attorney of the contestee. Every witness was cross-examined, and the testimony is not ex parte.

But it is further said that the contestee made an application to the committee for time to take additional proof. The contestee never took any proof whatever in reference to this colored academy precinct; but he made an affidavit before the committee for time to take additional proof. The committee considered his application, and with only one solitary exception, the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. BAKER,] every member on the committee, democratic and republican, decided that his application was wholly insufficient. His affidavit did not disclose the name of a single witness whose testimony he proposed to take, nor did it disclose what fact he desired to prove by a single, solitary witness. His affidavit was so general in its terms and indefinite, that every member of the committee, with the exception of the gentleman from Indiana, ruled without hesitation the application was wholly inadmissible, and that as a committee we could not permit the sitting member upon such a vague and indefinite application to retain his seat forever, when he had given no good reason why he had not taken proof when he had such a long time in which to do it.

So that there is nothing in that. His application to take additional proof was fairly, impartially, and justly considered by the committee, and it was overruled as wholly insufficient by the unanimous vote of that committee with the exception of one. So much for that. I will not detain the House with any further argument of the case.

BUREAU OF INDIAN AFFAIRS.

Mr. WILSHIRE, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported the evidence so far as taken by the committee in the investigation of the conduct of the Indian Bureau; and moved that it be printed and referred back to the committee.

The motion was agreed to.

CONTESTED ELECTION—FINLEY VS. WALLS.

Mr. BROWN, of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, this contested-election case hinges entirely upon our disposition of the colored academy precinct in Columbia County, as even the majority report of the committee would only show frauds in the rest of the district sufficient to reduce Mr. Walls's majority to 234. And therefore in what I shall say I shall confine myself exclusively to this precinct and leave the other questions as immaterial and not necessary in the decision of the case. No principle of law is better settled in election cases than that the throwing out of the returns of an election district is the very last expedient to be resorted to. The right of the legal voter to have his vote counted is sacred, and we have no right to refuse to count it unless frauds have been committed to such an extent that the returns are absolutely valueless. The mere fact that illegal votes were received is not alone sufficient to base the rejection of a poll upon unless it becomes impossible to show whom such votes were cast for and unless they are sufficiently numerous to change the majority. When they can be eliminated, even by the most violent presumption against the person receiving the majority that they were all cast for him, it should be done as long as it leaves him still in the majority, as he should not be made to suffer to an extent greater than any possible injury the illegal votes may have caused to the opposing party. For instance, if 50 illegal votes are shown to have been cast in a precinct giving a candidate 100 majority and it could not be proved whom they were cast for, it would be absurd to say that the whole poll should be rejected, for there could be no doubt he must at the worst have had 50 majority supposing every illegal voter voted for him. But when the illegal votes are sufficiently numerous to change the majority, then we are all at sea, and there is no certainty whatever as to the legal result.

We state these principles because we fear there may be some misapprehension, and some members may vote to throw out the entire poll under circumstances which at the worst could only decrease Mr. Walls's majority from one to two hundred, instead of 577, as the exclusion of the entire poll would do. The state of this poll is such that it can only be thrown out for frauds which render the returns totally unreliable; for if the only fault be illegal voting we can throw out every illegal vote that the contestant can even claim was cast there and still have a majority sufficiently large upon the report of the majority of the committee to elect Mr. Walls; for in this precinct he received out of 599 votes all but 11. Any fraud that under any rules would make it admissible to throw out the entire poll must be fraudulent conduct on the part of the officers of the election; it must go to the extent of satisfying us that the returns do not import verity; that they are not even presumptive evidence of whom the votes were for or how many were cast for each candidate; for, if the officers did not act corruptly, if the poll-books were correctly kept, the ballots not changed or tampered with, the returns properly made according to the ballots, then it is possible by evidence to prove the illegal votes and to arrive at the truth. But, on the other hand, if fraud enters the portals of the polling-place, exists among the officers of the election, enters the ballot-box, so that we have no reason to believe that the returns are correct, then all reliability is gone, and the only way is to exclude the whole returns and resort to other evidence to determine how the legal electors voted.

Now, what is the evidence in reference to this precinct? To what extent does it go? Are the officers of the election even implicated in any frauds which the contestant has even attempted to prove? The inspectors of the election were John W. Tompkins, Charles R. King, and a colored man named Alexander Hamilton, who, with John A. Carroll as clerk, constituted the election board. The evidence shows that these men were republicans, and friends and supporters of Dr. E. G. Johnson, republican candidate for the State senate from Columbia County, and also of Mr. Walls, the contestee; but with the possible exception that they assisted in opening the polls too early on election morning there is not one scintilla of evidence even tending to prove that they acted fraudulently; and can it be possible that this House, on the mere proof that the election was commenced at too early an hour and that the election officers were republicans, is prepared to disfranchise the whole republican party in Columbia County and throw out 50 legal republican votes, which the adoption of the majority report would certainly do?

We would ask you to take the evidence of the democrats who were at this precinct watching the interests of their party from the time the polls were opened till they closed. Francis M. Weeks, the democratic candidate for the State senate in opposition to Dr. Johnson, swears he got to the voting-place when the lists showed that only about 20 votes had been polled, and, with the exception of half an hour, remained at the polls all day. Mr. Brown and Mr. Barnett were also there as democratic challengers, and remained all day, though probably they were not there as early as Mr. Weeks. These men had every opportunity to see and know how the election was conducted; it was their interest and business to know, and whatever evidence they gave would naturally, from their party affiliations, be strongly against the sitting member and yet, so far as the evidence of these men goes, properly weighed, instead of being evidence that the officers acted corruptly, it is a thorough indorsement of their good faith, especially when taken in connection with the evidence in reference to Alachua County, which shows there was a wide-spread misapprehension as to what was the oath which unregistered voters were required to take and that any presumption that the officers acted corruptly in administering the wrong oath is completely overcome by the fact that this mistake was also made in the precincts which the majority of the committee do not refuse to count. While each of these democratic challengers claims the election to have been illegal and corrupt, it is noticeable that they each and all claim it, because unregistered voters were allowed to vote without taking the proper oath; and that beyond this not one of them testifies to anything illegal and corrupt at this precinct. Barnett testifies:

> I was there as a challenger. I staid there from about eight a. m. till about three p. m. A great many persons whose names were not on the registration-list voted. I am satisfied there were seventy-five and probably a hundred voted whose names were not on the registration-list and who only took the following oath: "You do solemnly swear that you are twenty-one years of age; that you are a citizen of the United States, or that you have declared your intention to become a citizen; that you have resided in this State over one year and in this county six months next preceding this election; that you have not voted at this election, and that you are not disqualified to vote by the judgment of any court." No other oath was taken by those who voted and whose names were not on the registration-list; none of them took the oath that they had been registered and their names had beem improperly stricken from the registration-list. Quite a number of persons voted who were not citizens of Columbia County. As I remember, they were all colored. I challenged these voters, and Dr. E. G. Johnson insisted on their right to vote, and Charles Thompson insisted on the right of one to vote whom I knew not to be a citizen of the county. In the morning many of these refused to take the oath, but in the afternoon Dr. E. G. Johnson and others came up with them and insisted on their right to vote, and they took the above oath and voted.

To my mind the above evidence is a grand vindication of the officers of the election, showing that challenges were respected, that the forms of law were complied with, and that no man was allowed to vote until he swore to the facts constituting him a legal voter. If the officers administered the oath they believed to be the legal one, and would allow no unregistered person to vote without taking it, they did their whole duty; and if under these circumstances illegal votes were polled they cannot be blamed, for they were clearly compelled to receive the votes of all persons who on their oaths brought themselves clearly within the requirements of the law. The same witness then, in answer to the question, "Was the election that day at the colored academy precinct, according to your observation, fairly and legally or fraudulently and illegally conducted?" answered:

There were illegal votes cast; there was a good deal of fraud practiced. Some who came in the morning and were challenged and told by the inspectors they could not vote came in the afternoon, took the oath above named, and voted. When a man came up to vote his name was looked for, and if not found, the inspectors administered the oath. It is my impression the number is as large as seventy-five; not less.

This is the evidence of a democratic challenger, and if it has even a tendency to prove fraud on the part of the inspectors, I certainly am ignorant of the force of evidence. It may show that unregistered persons voted without taking the proper oath, and may show that the polls ought to be purged; but it shows conclusively that the officers were endeavoring to do their duty, and sustains rather than impeaches their return. John V. Brown, another democratic challenger, testifies that during the day he was in the room with the inspectors and kept a tally-sheet of the number of votes cast. He testifies that the election was fraudulent and illegal:

There were illegal votes cast and were allowed by the managers, who said they could not stop them if they took the oath. * * * With the exception of the illegal voting referred to, as far as my own observation extended the election seemed to be a fair one. * * * Weeks, the candidate for the senate against Dr. Johnson, arrived at the polls at seven o'clock in the morning, and with the exception of half an hour remained there all day.

He was vitally interested in the result. He knew if he was to be defeated it must be by votes at this precinct, where the bulk of the republican vote was being polled; and yet his evidence, like that of Barnett and Brown, totally fails to show any fraud other than the polling of some unregistered votes, he says ten or fifteen, and the fact, as he afterward discovered, that some persons voted both at the market-house and at the colored academy.

This is the sum and substance of the testimony the democrats give in reference to this precinct, and it totally fails in every respect to impeach the conduct of the managers of the election and show that they were parties to any frauds; and if they were not, we insist that the entire poll cannot be excluded, but that it must be purged in the same manner as the majority propose to do in the disputed precincts of Alachua County, or what would really amount to the same in this precinct, by subtracting all proved illegal votes from Mr. Walls and leaving him his legal votes. Carroll corroborates these witnesses in reference to the conduct of the election by the officers. He says he was only a clerk and not acquainted with the people, but as far as he knew it was a fair election; there were a great many challenges made by Mr. Barnett and Mr. Brown, especially by Mr. Barnett. Mr. Tompkins, inspector, also swears it was a fair election. Not a breath against the fairness of the election, so far as the inspectors are concerned, remains after this evidence is carefully weighed. They tried to do their duty; and, if so, their returns are not valueless, and are deserving of due consideration.

But there is another side to the question, so the majority of the committee say. Where is the evidence of Selph and Carroll? These men were republicans and supporters of Johnson—friends of his—but on their testimony the contestant relies. Carroll swears that he slept at Dr. Johnson's the night before the election; that Dr. Johnson called off names from a book, which witness took to be a copy of the registration-list, to the number of fifty, more or less, and this after Carroll had consented to act as clerk, and the impression on the mind of witness was that Johnson wanted the names worked in to secure his election. But he testifies further that he destroyed the names, and no fraud, to his knowledge, was attempted; and he swears, as far as he knows, the election was a fair one. In reference to opening the election in the morning, he testifies that Johnson estimated they must vote so many a minute to get through during the time, and they wanted to commence as early as possible. Besides this, the witness testifies as to a proposition to seize the ballots and returns from one of the democratic precincts, which however was not attempted. And this is the whole amount of Carroll's testimony. So far as fraud actually perpetrated it proves nothing, and while his evidence may tend in some degree to blacken Dr. Johnson's motives and actions and prove him an unscrupulous man, it proves nothing as to the matters we are investigating.

Duval Selph is a different witness. The self-avowed friend of Dr. Johnson, a coconspirator with him in whatever of wrong was done, he turns his back upon his friends, confesses his villainy, and asks us to believe his confession. The law-books tell us that the uncorroborated evidence of such a man is worthy of little credence, and should be most thoroughly scrutinized. He testifies to but one fact to his own knowledge that seems worthy of consideration, and to statements of Dr. Johnson which are the veriest hearsay. The fact that he testifies to as to the conduct of the election is that "Dr. Johnson called out a name and a number and gave a man a ticket, who put it through an aperture in the wall into the room where the ballot-box was, called out the name and number, and then the ballot was received; and therefore he thought the election was illegal." If true, a strange performance; but the democratic challengers strangely failed to see it, and it appears only in Selph's testimony, which leads me to believe either that Selph has testified falsely or the matter was so evidently innocent that they thought nothing about it. Could Brown have sat in the room and seen such things done and yet swear that except in receiving the votes of unregistered persons he saw nothing wrong? Could this have been going on and Mr. Weeks, whose interests were being jeopardized by the transaction, not have seen it? It is absurd, unless it was innocent. Now when we can reasonably explain a transaction in accordance with innocence we must do it.

Mr. Johnson had, we have seen, a copy of the registration-list; that list contained the names of all the voters in the county. Mr. Johnson sees that the votes must go in rapidly in order to get them all in; and when a voter comes to him he looks for his name and number on the list he has, calls it out, and the voter puts in his ballot and it is received; and the calling out of the number materially assists the judges in their labors. All this is legitimate and honest; and, if the transaction took place at all, it took place in this manner, or we should have the testimony of Weeks, Barnett, and Brown corroborating Selph. Selph also swears that Dr. Johnson told him he brought back into the county fifty-two registered voters. This is the veriest hearsay; Dr. Johnson's unsworn statements would not be received in any respectable court; and we insist that the House reject any consideration of it. But, even if it does not, we claim that the evidence does not permit the inference that the votes were illegal. They were registered, and therefore the presumption is that they were legal voters; and there is no proof they were illegal, except in the fact that Dr. Johnson paid to get them to the county to vote. If this alone makes it illegal then all the voters returned to New Hampshire at the last election at the expense of the committees of the two parties were illegal.

This of course no one claims, nor can it reasonably be claimed because Dr. Johnson brought these voters back to Columbia County at his own expense that they were illegal votes. If they were, why did not contestant show the fact instead of relying on hearsay? Why did not he attempt to prove who they were and where they came from and whether they were temporarily or permanently absent? That the committee should have considered the testimony surprises us, because no one here is bound by what Dr. Johnson said. We do not know whether he spoke truly or falsely, and yet without the least corroboration we are asked to believe what this man Selph, whose own evidence proves him a villain, says that Dr. Johnson says he did. The evidence as to the proposition to seize the returns from Ellisville has no weight in this case, as Carroll and Selph both state that the attempt even was not made.

The evidence of Tompkins is attempted to be impeached by a remark the hearer took to be in jest when Tompkins was in liquor. We do not know upon what principle the contestant would impeach his own witness, for Mr. Tompkins was called by him, and when his evidence does not suit he endeavors to blacken him. I shall not talk in reference to the opening of the polls too early that morning further than to remark that time is not of the essence of an election; that provisions as to time are directory merely, and unless the opening was for a fraudulent purpose the contestant cannot take advantage of the fact that the provisions of the statute were not complied with. The evidence of Weeks shows that he was at the polls by the time twenty votes had been polled, and he does not testify even to an attempt on the part of the officers to poll illegal votes; his testimony rebuts the presumption of fraud; and this, taken in connection with the fact that no person proved to have been in the conspiracy to open the polls too early was on the board, we feel authorized in saying no fraud was intended or attempted in the opening of the polls too early.

The majority of the committee claim, however, that these officers were intruders. The evidence shows that the regular inspectors had said they would not be there; one was nominated by Dr. Johnson; all were sworn. There is no proof that the regular inspectors came; the presumption is they did not. This was a republican precinct; these men were certainly acting with the consent of the voters. There were a number there when the polls opened; no one objected. The officers were sworn in and acted. We have no doubt that the presumption arises that they were duly elected and hence officers de jure, but, whether so or not, they were certainly officers de facto, and their action valid.

That unregistered voters voted at this poll without taking the requisite oath is proved. How many so voted we think is not proved, but even if we take Mr. Barnett's figures not more than 75 can be deducted from Mr. Walls's majority. We may also subtract the 16 votes proved to have been cast, the voters voting at both precincts, and the 52 imported votes which are not proved, the 75 which Selph says voted through the aperture, and still we do not elect Mr. Finley.

This, then, is not enough; and so, in spite of the evidence of the democrats at the precinct, in spite of the fact that the officers received no vote from an unregistered voter without compelling him to take the oath, in spite of the utter failure of contestant to prove that he was injured by the early opening of the polls and the presumption to the contrary from the evidence of Mr. Weeks, the majority of the committee find the officers were corrupt, the returns valueless, and so reject the whole precinct.

Their argument seems to come down to this: Johnson was unscrupulous, was a rascal, and the officers of the election were his friends; therefore they are unworthy of credit. The polls were open too early; therefore, without the proof of the casting of a single illegal vote, on that account the election is fraudulent. Dr. Johnson proposed to commit frauds; therefore his friends, the officers of the election, did commit them. Hearsay evidence is considered fully as good if not a little better than direct evidence; and the rule of the law that fraud is to be proved and not presumed is reversed, and the fraud is presumed and not proved.

We are satisfied that the evidence will not warrant the rejection of these returns; that any purging must elect Walls; and that he is entitled to retain his seat.

LEMUEL D. EVANS.

Mr. REAGAN, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3141) for the relief of Lemuel D. Evans; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, informed the House that the Senate returned to the House, in compliance with its request, the following bill:

A bill (H. R. No. 2799) to amend certain sections of titles 48 and 52 of the Revised Statutes of the United States concerning commerce and navigation and the regulation of steam-vessels.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed, and requested the concurrence of the House in, bills of the following titles:

A bill (S. No. 732) to dispose of the lands formerly covered by the waters of Pistakee Lake, in the State of Illinois; and

A bill (S. No. 749) relating to the sale of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and other public documents.

ELECTION CONTEST—FINLEY VS. WALLS.

The House resumed the consideration of the contested-election case of Jesse J. Finley vs. Josiah T. Walls, from the second congressional district of Florida.

Mr. DE BOLT. Mr. Speaker, the case before us is one of very great importance. As a member of the Committee of Elections, I have endeavored to give it careful consideration. By reference to the report of the committee and a note thereto appended it will be observed that I concur in the conclusion reached by the committee, but differ somewhat in regard to the application of certain rules to certain precincts therein named.

Before speaking of the rules that I desire to have applied to those precincts, I will first observe that at the precinct of sheriff's office, in Madison County, and at several of these precincts, many electors voted whose names did not appear upon the registration-list in the hands of the inspectors. By a reference to the law of Florida it will be observed that it is the duty of the county commissioners thirty days before the election to make a corrected registration-list, and from that list the clerk of the county court must make a certified copy. That certified copy passes into the hands of the inspectors; not the original list, as has been claimed by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. BAKER,] but the certified copy. And it is agreed by the committee unanimously, I believe, that where an elector's name fails to appear on the registration-list in the hands of the inspector at the polls he has no legal right to vote until he takes the oath prescribed in section 9 and also the oath prescribed in section 16. Section 9 requires him to swear that his name has been improperly erased from the registration-list—by whom? By the county commissioners, whose duty it is to make the registration-list.

Now a large number of these electors voted without taking that oath. It is held by the committee, or the majority of them, as the evidence shows that many of these names were found on the registration-list in the clerk's office upon examination, that that makes them legal voters. I hold it does not make them legal voters for this reason: Their names did not appear on the list in the hands of the inspectors, certified by the county clerk from the list made by the county commissioners; and the presumption at once is raised that their names were stricken off from that list by the county commissioners. Why? Simply because their names do not appear upon that list in the hands of the inspectors. And if that is true, then they cannot vote, unless they take the oath in section 9. None of them did take it according to the evidence. At the precinct of Gordon, for instance, many of these electors were allowed to vote, and also at Archer. It is clear, as it has been admitted, that these persons were not properly and legally entitled to vote; and they having voted, and there being no evidence showing for whom they voted, then it is an irregularity. I will lay down this proposition of law: If it is not shown for whom they voted and they are illegal voters, then they are to be deducted from each of the candidates in proportion to the number of votes they have received.

But, in addition to that, the returns from these precincts show fraud and uncertainty on the face of them. For instance, we have at Gordon 173 ballots in the box; 158 names on the poll-list kept by the clerk of the election; 152 certified and returned. Now I would ask who can tell how many votes either of these gentlemen received at that poll? The very return itself and the papers accompanying it show such a discrepancy as to warrant the throwing out of the entire poll.

In order to show that such has been the practice of this House, I shall read from 1 Bartlett, page 284, a case very similar to this, in which Mr. DAWES made the report. In his argument before this House he makes use of this language:

There was one other point. At one of the wards in the city of Detroit the election was not conducted in such a manner as to make it possible to ascertain, after the polls were closed, whether the vote was honestly taken or not. There were two tickets, one for city officers and the other for the State ticket and Representatives in Congress. They were both put into the one box. A voter walked up with two tickets folded up and put them into the box. There was no poll-list so kept that it could be ascertained whether the two tickets which the voter deposited were one for the State officers and one for the city officers, or whether both were not for the State officers or both for the city officers. There was nothing in the mode of keeping the polls to prevent frauds from being committed in that way; and when the polls were closed it appeared that there was some variation in the votes. The committee, therefore, thought that this irregularity was of such a character as to render it impossible to say how many bona fide votes were cast at that ward for Representative in Congress.

That report was adopted by this House and the member was seated. I read now from pages 90 and 91, 2 Bartlett:

The committee are not satisfied by proof, beyond any reasonable and fair doubt, that any actual fraud was committed upon the ballot-box during the day of election, and that the conduct of the officers of election and men about the polls, testified to, should subject them to indictment for misdemeanor, rather than the box itself to rejection. The fraud upon the canvass during the night after election, as testified to by Hargin, if fully substantiated by reliable testimony, would require that the return made by such officers and in such manner should be set aside; but the testimony of Hargin, upon which this charge mainly rests, is so shaken by his own appearance as a witness, and the direct contradiction of Connolly and Lyst, that it would be altogether unsafe to base any judgment upon it. The committee, therefore, find that the allegations against this district by the contestant have not been sustained.

I read now from pages 604 and 605 of the same work:

When the votes were being counted in the evening the democratic clerk was taken sick, and William Speers was asked to take his place, and without being sworn first as clerk until the close of the count.

On counting, six ballots was found in the boxes more than the names of persons having voted on the tally-lists of the clerk, which agreed, and only one person is shown to have voted whose name is not on the list.

* * * * * * *

From all the evidence, I think we must conclude that the returns of such an election are too unreliable to be received, and as neither party has attempted to prove that votes were cast for him at that election, that the whole poll of Dunbar township must be rejected.

I read now from McCrary's American Law of Elections, page 336, which he quotes approvingly:

But when the votes were counted there were six ballots in the box over and above the number of names on the tally-list. These facts, together with the further fact that one Speers acted as clerk without authority and without being sworn, were regarded by the committee and by the House as furnishing good ground for rejecting the return.

At the Archer precinct there was a discrepancy also in the number of ballots in the box and the number of names on the poll-list. In the ballot-box there were 309 ballots, 248 for Mr. Walls and 61 for Mr. Finley, and only 298 names on the poll-list. Here we have a discrepancy of 11 ballots.

Again we find that at this precinct a man by the name of G. W. Bogue acted as clerk in the absence of the regular clerk without being sworn. The law which I have read shows conclusively that in case of such irregularities the House has heretofore thrown out the entire vote of the precinct. That is all I desire to say upon that point, as it is unnecessary to pursue the argument further. This case seems to turn upon the colored academy precinct in Lake City, Columbia County. My friend from Indiana [Mr. BAKER] lays down the rule that fraud must be actually proven. I read from the American Law of Elections, section 303:

That the whole conduct of election officers may, though actual fraud be not apparent, amount to such gross and culpable negligence, such a disregard of their official duties, as to render their doings unintelligible or unworthy of credence and their action entirely unreliable for any purpose.

Again, I read from section 442 of the same book:

Fraud in the conduct of an election may be shown by circumstantial evidence. It is sometimes a difficult matter to decide whether misconduct on the part of election officers is to be regarded as constituting fraud or as only the result of carelessness, ignorance, or negligence. If, however, such misconduct has the effect to destroy the integrity of the returns and avoid the prima facie character which they ought to bear, such returns will be rejected and other proof demanded of each vote relied on. And this is the rule concerning such misconduct, whether it be shown to have been fraudulent, that is to say, prompted by a corrupt purpose, or whether it arise from a reckless disregard of the law or from ignorance of its requirements. In either case the effect may be to destroy the integrity of the returns.

We see therefore that actual fraud need not be proved, but if the conduct of the officers is such as that the return of the election is unintelligible, or so irregular that the true vote cannot be deduced therefrom, it must be stricken out; that is the only alternative.

Now, then, what was the condition of things at the colored academy precinct, as stated by other gentlemen and as stated in the majority report of the committee? We discover there a purpose on the part of Dr. Johnson and others, a deliberate purpose to perpetrate a fraud upon the voters. What is the evidence? Dr. Johnson some days before saw several of these gentlemen and told them that he wanted them to come to the polling-place and to act some as inspectors and one as clerk. Carroll, the man selected as clerk, and Tompkins, one of the selected inspectors, staid all night at Dr. Johnson's, and another inspector, King, came there early in the morning so as to be early at the polls. Then when all the others had retired, save Carroll and Dr. Johnson, the latter took down a book from the shelf which he called a registration-list and from that he made a list of fifty or sixty names. Dr. Johnson had previously told Carroll that he had brought into the county from other counties fifty or sixty electors, and that it had cost him about $300 to do it. He made out this list and handed it to Carroll. Carroll, on oath, said that Johnson did not tell him directly what he wanted him to do with the names, but he understood that he wanted him to work them in next day for the purpose of securing his election. What does Carroll say? When asked the question, "Did you work the names in next day?" "O, no; I saw that Dr. Johnson was doing the work so well that they would be unnecessary and I put them in my boot and afterward gave them to some one whose name I have forgotten."

Now, what was Dr. Johnson's part? He goes there early in the morning before the proper officers were expected to meet there, opens the poll at or near seven o'clock, when the law specifies eight. Who goes with him? Carroll, King, Selph, and one or two others of his particular friends. All go there for the purpose of opening the polls early, so as to have full time to cast all the votes—"get them in early," says one witness. Now, what time was that poll opened? On page 17 of the report you will find the evidence of five witnesses; four out of the five witnesses swear that the polls were opened at seven o'clock or near that time, and the other says that he got there about eight o'clock and they were voting; he does not know just what time the polls were opened.

Ah, says my friend from Indiana, [Mr. BAKER,] that miserable scoundrel, Duval Selph, who is a self-convicted villain, put up his watch the night before, or that morning, one hour and twenty minutes. Now I ask the gentleman at whose solicitation it was that he put up his watch? It was at the solicitation of your friend, Dr. Johnson. With whom was Dr. Johnson associating? He was running for days and days with this man Duval Selph, this self-convicted scoundrel, as you would have him understood to be. Dr. Johnson well knew his subject. I will admit, for argument's sake, that Selph was a villian. How much better is Dr. Johnson than Duval Selph? Selph is found in Johnson's company and Johnson suggested to Selph to put up his watch; what does he want his watch put up for? You say the party Dr. Johnson is running with is a self-convicted villain. The minority report of the committee says:

> There is no lawyer who will fail to apply to the testimony of this man the doctrine "Falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus." Being confessedly a villain in one respect, he must be taken to be a "villain all the way through."

There is no repentance for him; O, no. What would become of my friends over there if Holy Writ laid down that rule? Self-convicted in one respect, he is entirely a villain, "taken to be a villain all the way through." That is the doctrine that they apply. But this gentleman, Dr. Johnson, is an angel of purity; he is a very honest man; his object was a commendable one; he only wanted to get the votes of these poor ignorant men into the box, as you say in another portion of the minority report. You call them ignorant; I do not. I am only quoting your language.

Now, my friend from Indiana lays great stress upon the fact that this Dr. Johnson was murdered, foully murdered—no, not murdered, but assassinated. How does he know that he was assassinated? I tell him there is not a word of evidence in this record to show that he was assassinated. Who murdered him? There is no witness in this case who testified as to who murdered him or what caused the killing. I cannot understand why the gentleman from Indiana, with so much dramatic affectation, dragged this into the argument. Suppose he was killed; was he killed because of this election? Did anybody connected with this election murder him? The gentleman does not enlighten us upon that point at all.

But, says he, the clerk's office was burned. Well, who burned it? We are sorry it was burned. The clerk of that court on examining the registration-list found that sixteen men had voted at the market-house and also at the colored asylum precinct, both precincts being in the same town. He says he put the books away and was called into the country; and before he got back the office was burned. How many names he could have found there who voted twice on that day we are not informed.

But my friend from Indiana also says that this evidence was wholly ex parte; that the defendant, or the contestee, was not present at the taking of this evidence. The minority of the committee say in their report:

> Walls was not present, in person, at the taking of this testimony, and the committee, on Walls's application for leave to rebut the allegations in relation to that poll, felt constrained to refuse him permission to do so.

Now let us see what the record says. I undertake to say that Mr. Walls was there in person and with his attorney.

The certificate of the notary is as follows:

> In the matter of the contest of Jesse J. Finley, contesting the seat of Josiah T. Walls in the Forty-fourth Congress of the United States, for the second congressional district of Florida.
>
> Testimony taken in pursuit of notice duly served by contestant upon contestee's attorney, on the 2d day of August, A. D. 1875, the said contestant appearing by S. Y. Finley and the said contestee appearing in person and by his attorney, A. A. Knight, at Lake City, in Columbia County, within the second congressional district of Florida, this the 13th day of August, A. D. 1875, before A. B. Hagen, notary public.

That shows conclusively that the contestee was there in person; and yet these gentlemen affirm that this was ex parte testimony and that the contestee has never had an opportunity of examining witnesses for the purpose of answering it.

Again, as further evidence that the witnesses were examined on that day I will read the certificate of the notary:

> I certify that the foregoing testimony is the original testimony taken before me as notary public, at Lake City, Columbia County, in the second congressional district of Florida, in the matter wherein Jesse J. Finley is contestant and Josiah T. Walls is contestee, on the 13th and 14th days of August, A. D. 1875.

When was Mr. Walls present? On the 13th day of August, with his attorney.

True, Mr. Walls says that he filed his affidavit before that committee asking time to take further testimony. And, as has been stated by my friend from Tennessee, [Mr. HOUSE,] the committee, after due consideration of that affidavit, ruled it out as wholly insufficient; and I can tell the House that the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOAR,] who was then a member of that committee, made the only remarks that were made in reference to it; and he is a strong republican I believe. The affidavit is before me; but I will not undertake to read it.

Before concluding my remarks I wish to call attention to the manner in which Dr. Johnson provided the electors with tickets and their manner of handing them in. Johnson would call out a number and a name. Up would step a voter having the same number and name and stick a ballot through a hole in the door. That is the testimony. How did Dr. Johnson know just what number that man held in his hand? How did he know what name that man bore? Why, he had taken down his book the night before; he had made a list of the fifty or sixty men that he was to bring into the county. He knew his men, and a witness testifies further that Dr. Johnson told him in conversation: "I do not know whether I can get these men to come from their counties; they have a close fight over there, and perhaps the republicans will not let me vote them," naming some men in the adjoining county. But these parties did come in, and that is the way Dr. Johnson voted them. He had their names. They may have been on the registration-list; there is no evidence whether they were or were not. But there is one peculiarity in regard to the making of the registration-list in that county. That list is made in the county clerk's office; and the commissioners, instead of erasing a name, simply leave it off of the copy given to the clerk, from which the clerk makes a certified copy which he gives to the inspectors. They do not erase any name; therefore you can go to that registration-list and get the name of a person who may have been dead for years; his name will still appear on that list. Dr. Johnson could easily have procured those names from the old list in the clerk's office.

Mr. BLAND. I would like to inquire how the registration-list came into the hands of the men who conducted the election and whether there had been any tampering with the list?

Mr. DE BOLT. There is no evidence that the registration was tampered with.

Mr. BLAND. How did it get into the hands of the men who conducted the election?

Mr. DE BOLT. It is the duty of the sheriff to hand the list to the inspectors.

Mr. BLAND. The men who held the election were not the inspectors of the election. How did they get the list?

Mr. DE BOLT. The inspectors of election are the men who receive the ballots; and the sheriff's duty is to pass the certified list made by the clerk into the hands of the inspectors at the polls. When a man comes up to vote the list in their hands is examined to see whether his name is on the list.

Mr. BLAND. How did the officers or the men who conducted the election get that registration-list?

Mr. DE BOLT. There is no evidence to show how they got it; but the evidence is that they had it.

Now, as to the appointment of those officers at that time, Dr. Johnson seems to have known days before which of those officers would present themselves at the polls that morning for the purpose of performing the duty to which they had been assigned. He seems to have understood that none of the regularly-appointed inspectors would be there. He looked up other men. In one instance he went fifteen miles to get one man to come; and he tells Carroll or Duval Selph, "I do not know whether that man will come, he lives so far away;" but in the morning the man was there for breakfast. He did not stay all night with Dr. Johnson, but he was there to eat breakfast with him, and accompanied him to the polls when they were opened. How did Dr. Johnson know for days before, or what object had he in learning days before, that these men would not act? Is not that circumstance sufficient to excite suspicion that everything was not fair or legal; that there was a design on his part to get those fraudulent votes in, and that he wanted men molded according to his own fashion for the purpose of doing it—men who would lend themselves to his purpose to practice a fraud, or assist in carrying out the fraud he intended to perpetrate? That is the sort of men he wanted, and he got them.

Taking all these things into consideration, it seems to me that the votes cast at this poll must be thrown out; and if they be thrown out, it decides the case. Indeed, according to a proper rule, there are other polls at which the votes ought to be thrown out—four other precincts at least. And throwing these out would still further increase the vote of Mr. Finley.

HOLDING OF EVENING SESSION.

Mr. RANDALL. I would like to make a suggestion to the gentleman who has this matter in charge, that we take a recess at half past four o'clock, with a view to proceeding this evening with the business of the House. If there be no objection, I ask that the House take a recess at half past four o'clock till half past seven o'clock this evening, to proceed with the regular business.

Mr. FORT. What business?

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to say that if the Committee of Elections or the Committee on Indian Affairs should not desire to go on to-night, I stand ready, as the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, to occupy the time with the legislative appropriation bill. In any event, there should be a night session.

I attempted the other day to antagonize the legislative appropriation bill as against the bill to transfer the Indian Bureau from the Interior to the War Department and was beaten. I do not feel disposed to test the sense of the House again in the same way, as the House has indicated they prefer going on with the Indian transfer bill to the legislative appropriation bill.

Mr. SPARKS. We would like to go on with the Indian bill to-night.

Mr. FORT. If it be with the understanding that it shall be for debate only, there will be no objection.

Mr. RANDALL. I could not agree to that; I have no power to agree to it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the House take a recess now?

Mr. RANDALL. No, my motion is that at four and a half o'clock the House shall take a recess until half past seven o'clock this evening. I understand the Committee of Elections does not wish to proceed.

Mr. SPARKS. We do desire to go on with the Indian bill.

Mr. RANDALL. In that case gentlemen can go on with the Indian bill at once if they wish to do so.

Mr. FORT. What is the session to-night for?

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to state if any other of these committees does not desire to come to the front, so to speak, I am ready with the legislative appropriation bill.

Mr. SPARKS. I suggest that the Indian Committee is ready to go on.

Mr. RANDALL. Very well then, go on now. The Committee of Elections does not wish to proceed further, and the Committee on Indian Affairs can take possession of the floor now, and they will have the floor to-night. I make the motion that at half past four o'clock the House take a recess until half past seven o'clock this evening.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I now suggest that the Committee on Indian Affairs take possession of the floor on their special order.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I resume the floor and will state that this morning I agreed with the chairman of the Committee on Railways and Canals [Mr. JONES, of Kentucky] to yield the floor to him to make a motion in reference to a bill he has in charge which was the special order this morning but was superseded by the question of privilege coming from the Committee of Elections. Afterward I will yield to my friend from Virginia, [Mr. HUNTON.]

WASHINGTON, CINCINNATI AND SAINT LOUIS RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, as chairman of the Committee on Railways and Canals I reported a bill (H. R. No. 2798) to authorize the Washington, Cincinnati and Saint Louis Railroad Company to construct a narrow-gauge railway from tide-water to the cities of Saint Louis and Chicago, which was made the special order for this day after the morning hour, but, as has been already stated by the gentleman from Virginia, it was superseded by the question of privilege coming from the Committee of Elections.

I now move to postpone the consideration of that bill until Tuesday, the 9th of May, after the morning hour, and from day to day until disposed of.

Mr. RANDALL. I believe that special order was subject to the condition that it should not interfere with appropriation bills?

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. Of course.

Mr. RANDALL. Then I do not object to the postponement if it be under the same conditions.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. I agree to that.

The motion was agreed to.

PROFESSOR HAYDEN'S REPORT.

Mr. BALLOU. I am directed by the Committee on Printing to report back a joint resolution (H. R. No. 34) to print forty-five hundred copies of the annual report of the United States geological and geographical survey of the Territories with an amendment.

The joint resolution, which was read, provides that there be prepared forty-five hundred copies of Professor Hayden's annual report of the geological and geographical survey of the Territories for 1873; three thousand copies of which shall be for the use of the House of Representatives, one thousand for the use of the Senate, and five hundred for the use of the Smithsonian Institution.

The amendment of the committee was to strike out the word "prepared" and insert "printed."

The amendment was agreed to; and the joint resolution, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BALLOU moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM RUTHERFORD.

On motion of Mr. BALLOU, by unanimous consent, leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the case of William Rutherford, no adverse report having been made.

WASHINGTON AND OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. HUNTON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3142) for the relief of the Washington and Ohio Railroad Company; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals, and ordered to be printed.

DANIEL CLEARY.

Mr. SPRINGER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3143) granting a pension to Daniel Cleary; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

REDEMPTION OF LANDS SOLD FOR DIRECT TAXES.

Mr. YOUNG, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3144) to provide for and regulate the manner of redeeming lands sold for direct taxes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims, and ordered to be printed.

REFUNDING DIRECT TAXES.

Mr. SCALES, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3145) to refund certain direct taxes on lands, collected from citizens in the late insurrectionary States under the act of August 5, 1868; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

DISTRICT COURT OF WEST VIRGINIA.

The SPEAKER pro tempore announced as managers of the conference on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. No. 472) changing the times of holding terms of districts courts for the district of West Virginia, Messrs. FAULKNER, CAULFIELD, and FRYE.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. DURAND for two weeks on account of important business; to Mr. POWELL for one week; to Mr. HUBBELL until Monday next on important business at Philadelphia on behalf of his State; and to Mr. NASH for twenty days.

VETERANS OF THE WAR OF 1812 AND MEXICAN WAR.

Mr. A. S. WILLIAMS, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 102) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan the use of tents and camp and garrison equipage for the shelter of the surviving veterans of the war of 1812 and of the Mexican war during the centennial exposition at Philadelphia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

SIGNAL SERVICE.

Mr. CAULFIELD, by unanimous consent, presented a resolution of the Board of Trade of Chicago, in regard to the Signal Service of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

BIG SANDY RIVER.

Mr. WHITE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3146) making an appropriation for the removal of obstructions in the Louisa Fork of the Big Sandy River, between Piketon, Kentucky, and the mouth of the Dismal Creek, Virginia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES DE LONG AND OTHERS.

Mr. WHITE also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3147) for the relief of James De Long and others, in the State of Kentucky; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

SECTION 494 REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. SAMPSON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3148) to amend section 494 of the Revised Statutes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Patents, and ordered to be printed.

WRECK OF UNITED STATES MONITOR TECUMSEH.

Mr. ELLIS, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 103) in reference to the wreck of the United States monitor Tecumseh; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

J. J. BERRY.

Mr. DOUGLAS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3149) to compensate J. J. Berry, of Fredericksburgh, Virginia, for services as acting postmaster of that town for three months in the year 1865; which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying memorial, referred to the Committee of Claims, and ordered to be printed.

PAY OF MESSENGER.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I ask unanimous consent to submit the following preamble and resolution:

Whereas the messenger and watchman to the Committee on Investigation of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company was inadvertently not sworn; and whereas his pay has been fixed and authorized by the House of Representatives: Therefore

Be it resolved, That the Clerk be, and is hereby, authorized to pay him out of the contingent fund of the House the amount as fixed by the Committee of Accounts and approved by the House of Representatives from the date of his appointment.

The Clerk refuses to pay this messenger and watchman because he was not a sworn officer. As his pay has been authorized by the House of Representatives, I ask that this resolution be passed, so that he may receive out of the contingent fund of the House the pay allowed by the Committee of Accounts.

There was no objection, and the preamble and resolution were agreed to.

JUDGMENT LIENS.

Mr. MCCRARY, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported as a substitute for House bill No. 1945 a bill (H. R. No. 3150) in relation to judgment liens; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary, not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

JOHN JOHNSON.

Mr. DAVIS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3151) to remove the political disabilities of John Johnson, of the county of Granville, and State of North Carolina; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. DAVIS. This is a bill for the relief of John Johnson, of Granville County, North Carolina. I have known him long and well. He is a man of high character and great integrity, and I think there can be no objection to the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there a petition accompanying the bill?

Mr. DAVIS. There is.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

KATE L. USHER.

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3152) granting a pension to Kate L. Usher, widow of James D. Usher, deceased; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. KASSON. I rise to a parliamentary question. There is not a sufficient understanding in regard to the order of the House for the session this evening, whether it is limited to the consideration of the bill for the transfer of the Indian Bureau or not. I ask the Chair to state whether the order is that no other business whatever is to be transacted?

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPARKS,] the member of the Committee on Indian Affairs who has charge of that bill, has the floor for the purpose of moving the House into Committee of the Whole upon it.

Mr. KASSON. I hope that will be the understanding, that no other business is to be transacted.

Mr. SPARKS. I so understood the order.

Mr. KASSON. It will relieve the House if that is the understanding.

Mr. SPARKS. I now move that the House take a recess until half past seven o'clock.

Mr. KASSON. Will the Chair announce to the House what the order is?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The understanding of the Chair as to the action of the House is that the evening session is to be occupied by the Committee on Indian Affairs, the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPARKS,] on behalf of that committee, now having the floor.

Mr. KASSON. On the bill for the transfer of the Indian Bureau?

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. And no other business to be transacted?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is the understanding of the Chair that the evening session shall be occupied by the Committee on Indian Affairs for the discussion of the bill now under consideration, no other business to be transacted.

Mr. RUSK. And no vote to be taken?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is not part of the understanding.

Mr. SPARKS. If we reach a vote, we will take it.

Mr. COX. I object to any arrangement by which that bill shall be voted on to-night.

Mr. BANNING. There will not be a vote unless it is reached.

Mr. COX. I desire that the understanding be that no vote is to be taken on the question of the transfer of the Indian Bureau to-night.

Mr. MILLS. It cannot be reached to-night.

Mr. BANNING. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The hour of half past four having arrived, the House pursuant to order takes a recess until half past seven o'clock.

EVENING SESSION.

The House re-assembled at half past seven o'clock, and was called to order by Mr. SAYLER, as Speaker pro tempore.

TRANSFER OF THE INDIAN BUREAU.

Mr. SPARKS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the bill (H. R. No. 2677) to transfer the Office of Indian Affairs from the Interior to the War Department.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the bill (H. R. No. 2677) to transfer the Office of Indian Affairs from the Interior to the War Department, (Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] is entitled to the floor for half an hour, but as he is not present the Chair supposes there will be no objection to his occupying the floor at some future time when he is present.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. Chairman, I feel in rising to address the House this evening on this question that no apology is due from me, although I understand that there is scarcely a member upon this floor now who would not rather be at his lodging at this hour then to receive the infliction of a speech; and yet it ought to be remembered that we are expected by our constituents upon a question like this one to give our views.

Now, sir, there is not a question before Congress in which my people are more deeply and intimately interested than upon the question now before this House. The object, Mr. Chairman, of the Government and its purpose in gathering upon these reservations the wild Indians of the West are praiseworthy and noble; for, whatever we may say to the contrary, the Indian has a claim upon us for our sympathies and our aid. By our advance and progress in civilization and in the extension of our population, and in the extent and grandeur which have followed our Government, we have greatly circumscribed the area over which he was accustomed to roam, and thus deprived him of the means of securing subsistence from the chase.

The purpose and object of the Government can be justified by the claims of humanity and the highest interest of the people. We owe this debt to the Indian, and, besides, the experience of the country since the year 1832 has demonstrated that Indian wars are such expensive luxuries as ought not longer be indulged. Over $500,000,000 has been expended by the Government on Indian wars since the year 1832. This policy is not only the mode which will enable the Indian to elevate his character to the dignity of civilization, but is one which if properly carried out would save the Government millions of money. As I understand the question, it is not to destroy the policy of the Government toward the Indians and substitute a new policy. What agencies should the Government of the United States invoke for this system in order to bring that degree of efficiency, power, and success which that noble object entitles it to receive?

But it is to purify the system and to render it more efficient, to economize the bounty and magnanimity of the Government toward these Indians and at the same time to be just to the people of the United States—just especially to those who live upon our borders and those who are specially interested in the proper disposition and regulation of the Indian tribes.

Now I assume that the mode adopted to accomplish these results is totally inefficient; that the Indian Department with its agents, with its employés, and with all its retinue of officers is totally unfit to carry out the purposes of Government, not because, as it has been said, that this Bureau is covered with corruption from head to foot, not because the Indian agents have robbed the Indians without mercy, not because the expenditures of this Department have risen from $3,000,000 to $8,000,000 per annum under this system, for all these things are abuses which the power of legislation can reach and correct, but for the reason of its weakness and utter want of ability to control the savage element confided to its care.

Now, sir, I do not intend to trespass upon the time of this House by discussing this question from a religious stand-point, or from any philanthropic stand-point. I propose to discuss it from a practical stand-point, and in connection with the working of the system as respects the State of Texas; but for that I would not have troubled the House at all to-night.

Mr. Chairman, the Fort Sill reservation is situated in what is called the Indian Territory, forty miles north of the borders of the State of Texas. There never was a lovelier land on earth than the million acres which are embraced in that reservation. The sun never shone purer or brighter than it does over that country which has been set apart and reserved for these Indians, subject to the jurisdiction of the Government, and upon that reservation there are located between ten and twelve thousand Indians to-day; they were estimated in 1874 at 12,000. These Indians embrace the Kiowas, the Comanches, the Cheyennes, the Washitas, and other tribes, which I will not mention now.

These Indians have been the ancient enemies of Texas, and are the enemies of Texas to-day. Ever since that noble State was peopled by the white man the Kiowas and Comanches have made it the theater of their depredations and of their brutal and shocking barbarities. When in 1867 this reservation was organized and established by the Government we indulged the hope that these people, fed, clothed, educated, and sustained by the Government, would be required to keep peace with their neighbors upon the border, and that Texas would have tranquillity and repose from their depredations and barbarities, but instead of that I assert that this reservation is nothing more nor less than a commissary, quartermaster, and ordnance department for these Indians, from which they draw their supplies, and their clothing, and their ammunition to enable them to depredate upon the people of Texas. In order to show the House how affairs upon this reservation are conducted under the administration of the Interior Department, and to show that the depredations in Texas to which I have alluded have been and are being committed by these Indians, I will call their attention to the very highest testimony upon this subject. In 1874 General Sherman, testifying before a committee of this House, says in reply to a question of General Hawley, of Connecticut:

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. Do you mean to say that there is danger from Indians as far down in Texas as that?

General SHERMAN. You go and try it. I would not go to-day from Fort Sill to Fort Griffin direct with less than thirty men well armed, and without taking such precautions as we did against guerrillas in the late civil war or against the rebel cavalry.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. What is the distance between these two posts?

General SHERMAN. About one hundred and forty miles, but there is hardly a day that there is not a man killed about there; and yet these Indians are peaceful Indians and under Christian influence.

I will call your attention also to what he says a little further on:

We have no right to invade the Indian Territory, because it is under the direction and control of the Interior Department.

I was not as familiar with the actual condition of the settlements in the western part of Texas prior to our civil war as I am now. About three years ago I made an inspection of the frontier from San Antonio to Forts McKavett, Concho, Phantom Hill, Belknap, Richardson, and the Red River. I was accompanied by General Marcy, Inspector-General of the Army. He had been on that frontier a good deal in the years from 1848 to 1859 and 1860, and he pointed out to me a great many districts of country, especially between Phantom Hill and Fort Richardson, which had formerly been settled, and I could see the remains of houses and fences which had been abandoned, and which he said were abandoned in consequence of the repeated incursions of the Indians in the north and west. I should judge it was a belt of land a couple of hundred miles long by a hundred wide, which he stated had formerly been occupied by a thrifty population, but which at the time of my passage was entirely unpopulated. From the map before me I should suppose that that district would embrace the counties called Brown, Comanche, Eastland, Young, Throckmorton, Jack, Archie, and Clay. That region appeared to have been settled in a former period of our history, but at the time of my passage through it it was abandoned by nearly everybody except military posts and military pickets.

Mr. MACDOUGALL. What was the occasion of that abandonment?

General SHERMAN. The incursion of Indians usually called Comanches, but now understood to embrace also the Kiowas and Cheyennes.

Mr. MACDOUGALL. Had the settlers evidently been driven off by fear?

General SHERMAN. Evidently. Their houses had been burned and their fences were all gone to ruins. We could see the remains of what we would call farms or plantations, especially in the neighborhood of Fort Belknap, in Young County, and Fort Richardson, in Jack County. From Fort Belknap to Jacksborough all the country was abandoned, and I could see where the houses had been and where the fences still were but were decaying and rotting.

Further on he says:

I doubt very much whether there has ever been a compilation of the murders committed and of the property carried away by the Indians in the last seven years, because the authority is somewhat divided. It is not strictly the business of the military, nor does the Indian Bureau exercise jurisdiction over the western frontier of Texas, because there are no Indian reservations in Texas proper. What the civil authorities have done in the matter of collecting testimony and consolidating it in a tabulated and convenient form I do not know. We have nothing of the kind in the War Department that I am aware of.

Mr. YOUNG. State whether the depredations of Indians generally have been increasing or decreasing in Texas within the last two or three years.

General SHERMAN. Ever since I have heard of Texas I have heard of these Indian depredations; and ever since the close of the Mexican war in 1848 down to the present moment a very large fraction of the Army of the United States has been kept along the frontier of Texas. Whether the depredations from Indians are increasing or diminishing, I am unable to state. It appears to be a chronic condition of things. Sometimes for months we hear very little about them. Then again, suddenly, Indians penetrate very far and commit some very vile murders, as was done only two or three weeks ago. On this occasion some Cheyennes from the north part of the Indian Territory made their appearance on the Lower Nueces, certainly eight hundred miles from their reservation, murdered a good many people, collected together a pretty large cavallada of horses, and were on the point of escaping with them by the route they had come when Captain Hudson, with a detachment of the Fourth Cavalry, succeeded in surprising them, running them down, and scattering them, killing about twenty. We first supposed them to be Comanches, from the neighborhood of the Double Mountain, in Texas, or the Upper Brazos; but General Sheridan is now under the impression, from their dress and their bows and arrows and other Indian tokens, that the parties to that affair on the Lower Nueces were Cheyennes from the upper part of the Indian Territory, or rather up on the border of Kansas.

It will be seen from what General Sherman says that the depredations in Texas and the destruction of our border settlements are due to these Indians who are gathered together upon this Fort Sill reservation. I undertake to say that very little of the trouble, very little of the ruin brought upon us, very few of the murders that have been committed and inflicted upon the people of Texas, upon her borders, since 1867 have sprung from any other source than the Indian reservation at Fort Sill.

I would like very much to have the attention of this committee for a few moments longer to what General Sherman says of this question. It reads as though it had happened in some land where there was no law, no order, in some country where there was no obligation upon the part of the general government to protect a state from depredation by Indians or others. He says:

Mr. YOUNG. State whether the depredations of Indians generally have been increasing or decreasing in Texas within the last two or three years.

General SHERMAN. Ever since I have heard of Texas I have heard of these Indian depredations; and ever since the close of the Mexican war in 1848, down to the present moment, a very large fraction of the Army of the United States has been kept along the frontier of Texas. Whether the depredations from Indians are increasing or diminishing I am unable to state. It appears to be a chronic condition of things. Sometimes for months we hear very little about them. Then again, suddenly, Indians penetrate very far and commit some very vile murders, as was done only two or three weeks ago. On this occasion some Cheyennes from the north part of the Indian Territory made their appearance on the Lower Nueces, certainly eight hundred miles from their reservation, murdered a good many people, collected together a pretty large cavallada of horses, and were on the point of escaping with them by the route they had come, when Captain Hudson, with a detachment of the Fourth Cavalry, succeeded in surprising them, running them down and scattering them, killing about twenty. We first supposed them to be Comanches, from the neighborhood of the Double Mountain, in Texas, or the Upper Brazos, but General Sheridan is now under the impression, from their dress and their bows and arrows and other Indian tokens, that the parties to that affair on the Lower Nueces were Cheyennes from the upper part of the Indian Territory, or rather up on the border of Kansas.

Mr. YOUNG. What is the extent of that frontier in Texas?

General SHERMAN. Starting from the mouth of the Rio Grande and following the line of the western posts up to the Red River, it must be about eight hundred miles. Then add to that the line connecting Fort Concho with El Paso, in New Mexico, nearly three hundred miles more, and it will make over one thousand miles of frontier altogether.

Mr. YOUNG. How many military posts are there along that frontier?

General SHERMAN. There are thirteen.

Mr. YOUNG. Do you think there are troops enough there now to afford protection to that frontier?

General SHERMAN. Not to afford thorough protection; but Texas has a larger proportion of the regular Army than any like frontier in the whole United States. It therefore has more than its reasonable share of the present regular establishment. If trouble arises, as I apprehend it will in this spring on the Upper Platte with the Sioux, (those at the Red Cloud agency more especially,) we will have to draw certainly one regiment of cavalry and probably a regiment of infantry away from Texas.

An hour or two after our passage, a train of ten wagons that was going from below Jacksborough to Fort Griffin, by the reverse route, was attacked by a very large force of Indians who had been waylaying the road and who saw us pass, as I heard afterward from themselves. About four o'clock in the morning of the next day I was near Fort Richardson, camped by a creek, when Colonel Mackenzie came to me and told me that five men had just come in who had escaped from the wagons, which had been attacked about twelve miles out, and who reported that they had lost their train, and that seven of the twelve men who were with the train were killed; the other five had got in safely. I sent for the principal man and talked with him a long time. He told me that he had been a soldier with me in the Georgia campaign, and he brought in the other four. Their story was as plain as anything I ever heard in my life. They described how they were traveling toward Fort Griffin, their wagons loaded with corn, and when they were near this abandoned spring they saw Indians defiling from the woods about three-quarters of a mile off, and as they gradually approached the train they closed up, and finally packed the train in the form of a circle, or rather of a horseshoe, unhitched their animals and gathered them inside, and each man stood by his wagon with a carbine in his hand. Then the Indians swooped around them, closing in their circle, until finally they opened fire upon them. Their guns were indifferent, mere carbines of different patterns, and they did not have much ammunition. The wagon-master seems to have been a man of a good deal of mark. He kept his presence of mind and gave orders till he was killed. Then there was confusion, and the Indians made three or four dashes, closed in upon the train, and succeeded in killing seven of the men. The five others concluded to abandon the train, and they worked their way, back to back, down by a ravine, to a little point of timber three-quarters of a mile off. As long as the men kept compactly together, with guns in their hands, the Indians let them take their way. The Indians then took possession of the train, and when last seen they were burning it.

I ordered General Mackenzie at once to saddle up every man at the post and to go to the point and ascertain the truth of the story; then to take the trail of the Indians and follow it into Fort Sill or wherever it ended. I then started myself by the usual traveled road north by east, crossing Red River, and got to Fort Sill, I think, in about four or five days after this affair. There I waited to hear of Mackenzie, and I think that the second day after I got into Fort Sill was the ration-day for the Kiowa Indians. The agent, Mr. Tatum, whose agency was about a mile from the post, came up to where I was sitting on General Grierson's porch and said to me that Satanta and about twelve or thirteen Kiowa Indians, with a parcel of squaws and pack-animals, had come in for their monthly supply of rations, and that Satanta openly and without hesitation boasted to have been at the affair down at Fort Richardson, and confessed to have led the war-party, consisting of about one hundred warriors. Satanta said that "if any other Indian claimed the honor of that great fight he was a liar, for he, Satanta, himself had done it." "Well," said I, "Tatum, what do you propose to do about it? you are the Indian agent." Said he, "I give it up; I cannot do anything." "Well," said I, "are you willing to turn the matter over to me?" "General," said he, "I wish you would take them off my hands." "Very well," said I, "stand back; I want you to get them in to me here inside the post. Tell Satanta that I want to see him, and in the mean time ascertain the names of all the parties present who were personally with him on that occasion, because we will limit our action to them without involving the whole Kiowa people."

In the course of half an hour in rode Satanta on a pony; hitched his pony on the opposite side to a rail, and came on to the porch. Old Satank, another bad Indian, came in with him or very soon after. Satanta leaned up against the post of the porch, and I inquired of him through an interpreter, "How about that matter down at Fort Richardson, in Texas?" "Well," said he, "I told the agent all about it, so it is no use for me to repeat it again." Said I, "I understand you were down there with a few of your warriors, trying to keep your hand in." He said, "Yes, that he just went down to show them the road and how to do things." Said I, "Do you consider it a great feat of war for one hundred armed men to attack twelve poor teamsters?" "Well," said he, "it was not, and I was merely trying to show the young men how to do things." He said that he was a great warrior and chief himself, and that it was necessary for him to instruct his young men how to fight. "Well," said I, "I suppose you stood off and blew your horn." (He had a trumpet by his side, which he used to blow, imitating the garrison-calls.) He said yes, that he stood off and just blew the signals. "Why did you burn the man at the wheel?" said I, (a fact which had been reported back to me by a note from General Mackenzie, who also reported that he had found the teamsters' story substantially true, with the addition that he had found the wagon-train partially burned and one of the men lashed to the wheel, burned to death and charred.) Satanta's careless manner rather excited my anger, and I told him to take a seat there, that I had something further to say to him. Said he, "If you don't like it, I will go away."

Up to that time there was no armed soldier near us; I whispered to General Grierson to send quickly to the quarters and get some men from the barracks, and to conceal them behind his quarters; he said that he had got an orderly near who was armed. Satanta said, "If you don't like what I have done, I will go; I am not going to stay here." I said, "No, do not go. Sit down here." He started to go for his horse, when this black soldier, a tall, fine-looking sergeant, interposed between him and his horse, and presented his pistol at his face. Satanta saw that we were in earnest, turned around, give a grunt, and took his seat as required. In the mean time Mr. Tatum had sent different strikers of his out to bring in another Indian named Big Tree, and a fourth Indian, who was known to have been with Satanta on this identical trip. We heard one or two shots down about the sutler's store, in an opposite direction from the agency, and presently a couple of soldiers brought Big Tree up, and sat him down near the others. That made three of the party. In attempting to arrest the fourth one the soldiers killed him. He had started to run, firing his arrow first, which struck the leg of a soldier, when the men shot him off his horse dead. Then there was a general stampede down about the agency, and the Indians, men and squaws, ran in every direction. We managed to keep eight or nine of them, of whom only four had been actually present with Satanta in his Texas raid. I made up my mind that I would pursue the Indian peace policy, and send them to Texas, where I thought they could be tried legally and properly, at the locality where they had committed their crime of murder. I looked upon that step as a measure of peace; that is, as being in the direction of enforcing law against the Indians by the civil processes of a court and jury.

A parcel of Texas citizens had come with me from Jacksborough, who had represented to me the state of facts on the frontier, of whom one was a lawyer. I invited them to accompany me for the purpose of identifying stolen stock, which I promised should be restored to them if their representations proved to be true. These men were with me at Fort Sill, but I do not think they were actually present at the time of the arrest of Satanta and Big Tree and of old Satank. We had an angry council on General Grierson's porch, at Fort Sill, which came near resulting in a hand-to-hand fight. But at last these three Indians were put in double-irons and put in the guard-house, and I am sure it had a most wholesome effect. In a few days after General Mackenzie came in, having followed their trail from the scene of murder up to the Kiowa agency. The Indians were then turned over to him, and were carried back to Jacksborough.

On the way back old Satank tried to escape, and was shot dead, making two of the original four killed. The other two were delivered to the civil authorities at Jacksborough for trial. The rest of the history is as well known to the committee as to myself. They were tried. There was no doubt about their being guilty. They were sentenced to be hung. But by the interposition of the kind friends of the Indians, and of the Indian Bureau here, the sentence was commuted by Governor Davis to imprisonment for life. Of course the governor of Texas ought to have known that the thing would not stop there. This same influence persevered, till finally Satanta and Big Tree have been set loose in the Kiowa Nation, and those who have faith in them will, I think, one of these days have reason to regret it. They will have their revenge, and if they get Governor Davis's scalp only, I will not shed many tears. I thought at the time that the case was an excellent one to illustrate to these Indians how civil force and civil government could be brought to bear upon them. I think we have thus lost a better opportunity than will ever occur again. I am sure that if they had taken those two Indians and hanged them by due course of law, the Kiowas would have staid at home in future, and not bothered the Texas people again. Now, they take it for granted that their influence at Washington is such that they may commit the most hellish murders and yet be pardoned.

Mr. YOUNG. When was the last massacre in Texas that has been reported?

General SHERMAN. Within the last month some twenty-four white people have been reported killed in Texas by Indians as far down as the Lower Nueces. We thought those Indians were the Kiowas, but they are now reported to have been Cheyennes. They are all mixed up. My impression was that the last murder was committed by Comanches and Kiowas, but General Sheridan says that the dress and bows and arrows left with the dead rather evince them to have been Cheyennes. Every Indian has on his arrow a tribal mark. The Cheyennes and Arapahoes have a reservation north of Fort Sill, within what is known as the Indian Territory, but when they are marauding from that quarter they take along anybody they can find willing to go. For instance, three or four young men start out for a raid, and they pick up recruits from other tribes as they go along, so that I do not suppose we can hold any one single tribe responsible for any distinct raid into Texas. But I know that all the Indians regard Texas as a very good place to get horses, and I think that that is their chief object, rather than to kill. I think they go principally to steal horses, but, of course, they kill as incidental to their marauding.

And one poor fellow who had been paralyzed by a ball and fell in front of his team was strapped to the wagon-wheel and burned to death.

Now General Sherman states that immediately after this information came to him he sent for Colonel Mackenzie and directed him to take the trail of these Indians and see whether or not they belonged to the Fort Sill reservation. He took his own party and immediately took up his line of march to Fort Sill, a distance of two hundred and fifty miles, and reached there before Colonel Mackenzie reached that point. The day after he arrived there, while sitting on the porch at Grierson's headquarters, the chiefs of the Kiowa tribe came up and acknowledged that they had been with the party who murdered the Texans at Fort Richardson, two hundred and fifty miles away from their reservation. One hundred Indians armed with United States muskets and rifles, covered with United States blankets, and fed by a United States commissary, had gone down into Texas, two hundred and fifty miles away, and committed this outrage, and acknowledged it in the presence of the General of the Army, and also stated to him that they had previously communicated these facts to the Indian agent at Fort Sill.

Now, I call attention to General Sherman's evidence to show, first, that these Indians upon this reservation do not confine their depredations even along the border of their reservation, but the Cheyennes had been discovered in depredations four hundred and fifty miles within Texas in front of the Nueces River.

This was the condition of that country in 1870 and 1871; and what was true then is true now. Even while you are here debating about how to take care of these Indians upon the reservations they are building their camp-fires within the limits of Texas and spreading desolation and havoc along its border.

Now I wish to call attention briefly to what my colleague [Mr. THROCKMORTON] said the other day in his speech on this question:

Mr. Chairman, I have before me an official report of General William Steele, the adjutant-general of Texas, containing a tabular statement of Indian depredations in Texas since 1866, giving the date of incursions, the date of murders and robberies, the names of the victims killed and those carried into captivity, and the counties and places of their residence. It is a closely written document of twenty-two pages, and does not pretend to give all the casualties that have occurred, but such as have come through official sources. It foots up 120 persons killed; 28 wounded; 36 carried into captivity; 19 attacked who escaped; horses stolen, 10,064; cattle stolen, 12,555; the United States mail-coach plundered; one Government contractor's train robbed and destroyed, and seven of the teamsters killed and burned, (and a fact not stated in the report, but within the knowledge of his comrades who escaped, that one of the wounded men was tied to a wagon-wheel and burned while still alive,) with other casualties mentioned in the report, which I will not repeat.

Accompanying the report is an extract from a communication addressed by the governor of Texas, August 5, 1867, to E. M. Stanton, Secretary of War, which transmits officially received information of depredations by the Indians after the war, and up to July, 1867, showing the murder of 162 persons, the captivity of 43, the wounding of 24, with the loss of over 30,000 head of cattle, 3,781 head of horses, and 2,430 goats. In a letter accompanying the report, General Steele says that the partial returns made to his office fall far short of the actual truth.

Mr. Chairman, will the story be believed when told that captive women and children have been taken to Indian reservations, to which fathers have followed them only to find that the power of the Government was so feeble and its laws and treaties so feebly enforced that they were powerless to obtain a release of the prisoners, and that weeks, and often months, have elapsed before their freedom could be secured through purchase? But occurrences like these, so humiliating to the Government and repugnant to every feeling of humanity, have often happened to citizens of Texas, under the operations of the benign "peace policy." Sometimes these poor victims have been carried great distances from Texas to remote localities, where they have been ransomed by agents, United States officers, or traders.

I remember twenty-three women and children returned to the authorities of Texas by the kindness and generosity of a gentleman who was a trader near some post or agency on the Kansas border. On another occasion a mother and four daughters were restored through the kindness of United States officers. I am acquainted with that family, and know the story of their captivity. On a Sabbath day, the husband, with his family, was going from one settlement to another. The husband was murdered and scalped, the mother, an infant, and four daughters captured, the mother and daughters tied and lashed with thongs of raw-hide on horses. The mother was allowed to keep her babe; but as they traveled in haste, on account of its continuous crying, it was snatched from her and its brains dashed out against a tree and the corpse thrown down as they passed rapidly on. Who can realize that mother's feelings? But the anguish experienced at that terrible deed was nothing when compared to her future sufferings. Her own tortures and the terrible and heartrending cruelties perpetrated upon her helpless daughters, within her sight, are too horrible and atrocious to be described by human language. A thousand times over would death's dark angel have been a welcome relief. But the poor victims survived. I saw them after their ransom, and more pitiable objects, with their scars and wounds still upon them, no eye ever beheld. But, sir, such pictures of suffering are sickening, and are referred to with reluctance, and only that you, who live so far away as not to know of them, may be admonished not to let a sickly sentimentality influence you in behalf of a race many tribes of whom have scarcely one redeeming quality, and who glory in deeds so atrocious and murders so foul that humanity sickens at the bare mention of them.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in addition to this testimony, I call attention to the fact that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs himself reports that the aggregate amount of loss through depredations by Indians under the jurisdiction of the Interior Department up to 1874 was over $4,000,000. He states that over one hundred cases of depredations and loss to the people of Texas occurred from the direct agency of the Kiowa and Comanche Indians upon the Fort Sill reservation since 1867.

I beg to call attention to a fact which I trust the House will bear in mind. The State of Texas has expended in her own defense over $2,000,000 to protect her border from Indians and Mexicans. A sister State in this Union, as much entitled to respect and protection as any other State, has been compelled to pay that out of its treasury to defend its border from Mexicans and Indians. Sir, when she was a republic, strong, (though weak in numbers,) the Government of the United States, to induce annexation, represented to her the thousands of miles of border which fronted Mexico and the Indian country, and offered to the people of Texas as an inducement to come into the Union protection for her people against Indians and Mexicans. This was a strong inducement, and contributed largely to bring about that sentiment in Texas which resulted in annexation.

Mr. Chairman, since 1870 the State of Texas has annually expended $500,000 to keep a force in the field to protect her people against the incursions of Indians and Mexicans. It was the duty of the Government to protect her, but it is history now that adequate protection has been denied that State since 1870, and, indeed, ever since the war.

We have at Fort Sill eight companies of cavalry; and under the contract between Belknap and Marsh and Evans it was understood that this force at Fort Sill should not be reduced below a certain number of companies, unless a corresponding reduction should take place in the amount of money that Evans was to pay to Marsh. Now, it costs the Government of the United States $1,000,000 annually to keep those eight companies of cavalry at Fort Sill. And for what purpose are they kept there? What benefit is derived from those soldiers? They are not allowed to take any jurisdiction whatever over the Indians on their reservations. They are not allowed to control it. They have to obey the command and the order of the Indian agents. They are responsible to the Indian agents, and cannot disobey their instructions in respect to the Indians upon the reservation.

In addition to that, we have about one regiment of cavalry stationed on the Indian border of Texas mainly to protect the people of Texas from the incursion of Indians from the Fort Sill reservation, one regiment nearly around the reservation, and another regiment spread out along the border of Texas to protect the people from the Indians upon this reservation, at an annual cost of not less than one million.

The question arises why does this state of affairs exist? Can we attribute it alone to the corruption of the agents at this reservation? We do not attribute it entirely to a failure in the appointing power to send the proper agents to that reservation. But, sir, I think one reason for this state of affairs may be attributed and is properly attributable to the weakness, the inefficiency, and the powerlessness of this system to afford protection. You understand that agents upon this reservation give the Indians a permit to hunt, to go beyond the limits of the reservation to hunt buffalo, and as a necessary result we find these Indians roaming not only through the Indian country but crossing the Red River opposite Texas and coming down along the settlements from four to five hundred miles. What we desire, what we demand, and what we have a right to demand, is that these Indians shall be placed in a condition where they can no longer depredate upon the people upon the border.

How can we accomplish that? I undertake to say the cheapest, the best, the most efficacious mode to accomplish that result is to turn these Indians over to the War Department. I do not say to turn them over to the military in order that they may be exterminated. Not so; but the Army has the power, it has the ability, and the disposition to regulate the conduct of these Indians, to control them and to keep them within proper limits. That is not asking too much, because if we feed the Indians, if we clothe them, we have the right to ask and to demand they shall no longer depredate upon the borders of the country.

I do not advocate the transfer of the Indians to the War Department because I believe all the honesty, all the virtue, all the intelligence of the country is in the military arm of the Government; but I believe the Military Department is just as honest, just as efficient, and far more able and trustworthy for the execution and successful accomplishment of the objects of the Government in respect to the Indians than the Interior Department.

The gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX,] in his speech the other day, attempted to array the prejudices of the country against the Army with a view to defeat the transfer of the Indians from the Interior to the War Department. I understand the cost of the Military Department of the Government is enormous, and that it has reached the startling figure of $42,000,000 per annum. I think that it can be reduced, however, by cutting away the peace establishments attached to the Army, and letting the Army stand alone.

If the gentleman from New York lived on the border of Texas he would be, as we are, opposed to reducing the Army in number or the Army proper of this country.

But he says that the Military Department of this Government is honey-combed with fraud, alluding to what has occurred recently in connection with the late Secretary of War. We may admit for the purpose of the argument that the Military Department of this Government is filled with corruption, but I undertake to say that the gentleman himself will hardly deny that this Indian Bureau is filled with corruption from top to bottom. Although the late Secretary of War may have inflicted upon this country the keenest disgrace that ever befell it since Benedict Arnold betrayed its cause, yet that is no argument, it is no reason why the very highest trusts may not be confided to the officers of the Army. No more did his dishonor or his disgrace sully the honor of the brave and gallant men of the Army than did the treason of Arnold affect the character of the brave men of the Continental Army. He may have been false to himself; false to the President who trusted him; false to the true men who compose the Army; false to his country, yet the proof shows that no officer of the Army shared the profits of his disgrace.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York misunderstands the character of the Army altogether, if he will remember, as we who live in the South know, when the soldiers of the South laid down their arms and took up their lonely, melancholy march homeward, along which every hillock marked the grave of some comrade, and upon the threshold of every house was seen the weeds of widowhood, and upon every side fields and farms and homes lay desolated, baptized in fire and blood, that the true friend of the southern soldier in the midst of his sorrow and ruin was the true soldier in the Union Army. The agents sent down to run the southern governments, and to whom the Army was made subordinate and whom it was required to obey, robbed and plundered the southern people—the Army never; and I have no doubt to-day, if a true expression could come from the hearts of these Indians, an exclamation would be heard throughout the border, "Take away your robbers and send us the men whose word the world over is their honor."

Mr. Chairman, I have but a few more words to say. I have called attention to the fact that the people of Texas are suffering from the depredations committed by these reserve Indians. I have attempted to show the system of this Government as now attempted to be carried out in relation to these Indians is too weak and powerless to effect the objects of the Government, and that every consideration of economy, of fair dealing, and of justice to the people along the border requires these Indians should be placed under the strong hand of the Army, which can control and regulate their conduct and preserve the peace and tranquillity of neighboring States.

They tell us that they want to civilize these Indians by sending among them preachers and agents. Of course this humane and Christian disposition will not be interfered with by the transfer of the Indians to the Military Department. Who ever heard of a savage, with a six-shooter buckled around him, being converted either to the arts of peace or to Christianity? And General Sherman says in his testimony before the committee that every Kiowa Indian on the Fort Sill reservation has not only a carbine but two six-shooters besides. Now, the idea of teaching savages such as they are, with guns in their hands and pistols buckled around them and permits to travel around the country ostensibly to hunt but really to murder and rob, seems to me altogether fallacious. I would display before them the power of the military, and let them understand that they must submit, that they must cease to roam, that they must lay down their arms, and seek the arts of peace and the ways of civilization.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Chairman, I will proceed in the few moments left to me of the time to which I am entitled to present to the committee the remaining views which I have upon this question, and they will consist mainly of the proof which was presented to the committee, inducing them to present the bill which they have. That evidence constitutes the foundation of the report of the majority of the committee. That evidence was taken with reference to the question of making this transfer, as I have before remarked, in the first place looking to the interest of the Indian, and secondarily to the interest of the citizens who live in the States bordering upon the territory.

The necessity of some more efficient and honest government than that which has been established under the Department of the Interior seems to be manifest to every one, not alone in its economic sense, but also in reference to the final settling of the relations between the Indian tribes and the people of this country. Even the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in his last report to the Government, which has been published since this Congress has been in session, and which is found doubtless upon the desks of all the members in the House, concedes the fact that even with reference to those tribes inhabiting the Indian reservation in the Indian Territory it is essentially necessary to have some more formidable and powerful system of management than that which belongs to the Indian Bureau as it exists in the Interior Department. He says, upon page 48 of this report:

> No census has been taken of the Western Cherokees in the Indian Territory since 1872. They were then reported, in round numbers, at 17,000, which number has probably been swelled by natural increase and immigration to 18,000.
>
> They have been much disturbed during the past year by an attempt to distribute a per capita relief fund of $200,000. Many persons who claimed to belong to the nation were excluded from participation in the distribution, being declared aliens by the authorities.

Now I call the attention of the committee especially to the following observation of the Commissioner:

> The contentions between the Downing and Ross factions are often bitter and sometimes bloody. Except for the moral effect of the garrison at Fort Gibson—

"Except for the moral effect of the garrison at Fort Gibson—" > it is doubtful whether these factions could long be held from open war with each other.

Now that is the testimony of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in reference to the condition of a portion of the Indian tribes who are ordinarily supposed to have made, and who certainly have made, great advancement in civilization and in the arts of civilized life. It is apparent, therefore, that even the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, under the present system as it exists, is of opinion that that system is an inefficient one. And the Secretary of the Treasury, in the latest report which he has made to us on this subject, has shown that the amount of expenditure for the past year for the Indian Department in all its branches exceeds even the estimates which have hitherto been put upon it, and is greater than I supposed in the remarks I made at a former time to the committee. On page 17 of this report of the Secretary of the Treasury it will be found that he estimates the Indian expenditures for the year ending the 30th June, 1876, to be $8,000,000; so that it will be observed that from 1849, when the management of Indian affairs was taken from the War Department and transferred to the Interior Department, the increase in expenditures has been $7,000,000—$7,100,000 since 1849—though the census shows there has been a very considerable diminution of the number of the Indians since that time.

I now briefly call the attention of the committee to the evidence which was taken before the Committee on Indian Affairs. They examined a number of gentlemen who have lived upon the border, and they testify as to what has been the character of the contest that existed between the Indians and our Army and the depredations which had been committed on the frontier. A gentleman who represents a State on the border, the State of Texas—I allude to Mr. THROCKMORTON, from that State—was examined before this committee, and among the circumstances which he brought to the attention of the committee he alluded to the fact of extraordinary depredations having been committed on a train which was in progress through the Territory in which there were some twelve teamsters. They were attacked by the Indians only a few hours after General Sherman himself had passed along in that direction. They were slaughtered. One of them captured by the Indians was tied by them to the wagon-wheels and the wagons were piled up and burned. Those Indians, among them the chiefs Satanta and Satank, were captured by order of General Sherman shortly after this occurred and were brought to the garrison to which General Sherman was proceeding. They were asked whether or not they did commit this offense. There were three of them; and the answer was, "We have already told the agent." The agent at this post had been the first confidant to whom was communicated the account of the depredations which had been committed by the Indians; and when General Sherman propounded the question himself to these two chiefs and the other chief, whether or not they had committed these depredations, the answer was, "We have already told the story to the agent; where is the necessity of repeating it to you?"

One of these chiefs, in attempting to escape from capture, which

General Sherman ordered to be made, was killed, and the other two were sent to the penitentiary. This is only one instance mentioned in the testimony of Mr. THROCKMORTON of the character of the depredations there committed, and the agencies that now have the control and guidance of Indian affairs, which are so powerful that the Indian agents on the reservation are powerless to give protection to any one, and for the reason, first, that they have been depredators and spoilers to the very tribe of which they were sent as agents, and like all men who have committed spoliations on the persons whom they should have protected, they have lost the confidence of the Indians, and the Indians are under the control of a body of men who have gone to the Indian Territory to the injury of the Indians themselves, and who are interested in promoting war between the Indians and the settlers on the frontier; and the Indian agents are powerless in two senses, they cannot protect the Indians when they are imposed upon on our frontier, nor can they protect the white man when he is imposed upon by the Indians: in othern words, whe Indian affairs were transferred from the War Department to the Peace Department, if I may use the word in regard to the Department of the Interior, it was designed simply to make the Interior Department an agency for the purpose of paying annuities and for furnishing supplies, except, according to the universal testimony taken before the Committee on Military Affairs and the Committee on Indian Affairs, to depredate on the funds which the Government has issued to pay the annuities which are justly due to the Indians under treaty stipulations. This is but a portion of the testimony before the committee. The testimony of Mr. Powell was taken in reference to this matter, and a number of other gentlemen, to whose testimony I referred briefly in this report of the committee. The testimony of Judge HANCOCK was also taken, and of Mr. SCHLEICHER, from the State of Texas, and those two gentlemen, who have lived upon the border with the Indians for years, gave as the reason why they are in favor of this transfer, which was specially urged by a number of intelligent gentlemen who were before the committee—that the reason why it should be done was that the mode of accounting in the War Department was so plain and perspicuous, and that the responsibility of the officers disbursing the funds of the Government would be quick and sudden, and it would also be determined, not merely by the tardy process of a trial before a court of law, but it would be determined before a military commission, authorized to try these officers summarily whenever they may have been guilty of any infraction of their duty.

We also had the testimony of Mr. MILLS, of Texas; and these gentlemen all concur in the opinion that it is absolutely necessary in order to give protection to the Indians that this transfer should be made. A number of other gentlemen were examined, and among others Mr. STRAIT, of Minnesota, all of whom concur in the opinion that this transfer was necessary for the purposes which I have enumerated.

I have demonstrated in my previous remarks that the peace commission themselves, although originally of the opinion that it would not be proper to transfer the management of Indian affairs to the War Department, have changed their opinion, and now, according to their latest, are of the opinion, as published in the report of their sitting at Chicago, that the management of Indian affairs ought to be transferred to the War Department. The testimony of some gentlemen was taken before the Committee on Military Affairs, and while this investigation and discussion was progressing I addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs a note to know what had been the character of the evidence offered before that committee, and he said in reply that of the sixty-one persons examined before the committee all of them were of the opinion that this Indian Bureau should be transferred to the War Department but one; there was but a single dissenting voice.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I will refer briefly to the opinion of General Sherman. His evidence was taken before the committee and it is in the shape of a letter, addressed to Mr. SPARKS in answer to an inquiry, and it is here in the report of the committee and appended to it. General Sherman was a member of the peace commission, and this letter shows clearly that he is of the opinion that there is no safety in the management of this Bureau except by its transfer to the War Department. At the time he wrote that letter the necessity must have been forcibly brought on his mind by the occurrences that transpired almost in his presence, but which are so much more aptly expressed by himself than I can do it, that I will venture to weary the patience of the committee by reading from page 273 of the report of the Committee on Military Affairs of the last Congress. He was speaking of the outrage to which I have already referred:

> The Indians then took possession of the train, and when last seen they were burning it. I ordered General Mackenzie at once to saddle up every man at the post and to go to the point and ascertain the truth of the story; then to take the trail of the Indians, and follow it into Fort Sill or wherever it ended. I then started myself by the usual traveled road north by east, crossing Red River, and got to Fort Sill, I think, in about four or five days after this affair. There I waited to hear of Mackenzie, and I think that the second day after I got into Fort Sill was the ration-day for the Kiowa Indians. The agent, Mr. Tatum, whose agency was about a mile from the post, came up to where I was sitting on General Grierson's porch and said to me that Satanta and about twelve or thirteen Kiowa Indians, with a parcel of squaws and pack-animals, had come in for their monthly supply of rations, and that Satanta openly and without hesitation boasted to have been at the affair down at Fort Richardson, and confessed to have led the war party, consisting of about one hundred warriors. Satanta said that "if any other Indian claimed the honor of that great fight, he was a liar, for he, Satanta, himself had done it." "Well," said I, "Tatum, what do you propose to do about it? You are the Indian agent."

This was the address of the General of the Army to the man who had control of Indian affairs in that vicinity.

> "Tatum, what do you propose to do about it? You are the Indian agent." Said he, "I give it up; I cannot do anything." "Well," said I, "are you willing to turn the matter over to me?" "General," said he, "I wish you would take them off my hands." "Very well," said I, "stand back; I want you to get them in to me here inside the post. Tell Satanta that I want to see him, and in the mean time ascertain the names of all the parties present who were personally with him on that occasion, because we will limit our action to them without involving the whole Kiowa people." In the course of half an hour, in rode Satanta on a pony, hitched his pony on the opposite side to a rail, and came on to the porch. Old Satank, another bad Indian, came in with him or very soon after. Satanta leaned up against the post of the porch, and I inquired of him, through an interpreter, "How about that matter down at Fort Richardson, in Texas?" "Well," said he, "I told the agent all about it, so it is no use for me to repeat it again." Said I, "I understand you were down there with a few of your warriors, trying to keep your hand in." He said, "Yes," that he just went down to show them the road and how to do things. Said I, "Do you consider it a great feat of war for one hundred armed men to attack twelve poor teamsters?" "Well," said he, "it was not, and I was merely trying to show the young men how to do things." He said that he was a great warrior and chief himself, and that it was necessary for him to instruct his young men how to fight.

It will be observed that before the Indian agent himself, and in the presence of the general commanding the Army, these perpetrators of this very outrage boasted of the fact, and the agent confessed that he was powerless to accomplish anything. This is a striking illustration of the inefficiency which exists everywhere upon this subject. It will also be remarked that although the General of the Army was there, with all his power as such general, he never undertook to interfere, General of the Army as he was, until he had the permission of the Indian agent.

Now, why keep up this dual management of the Indians? Why keep up a party at the Indian agency ostensibly for the purpose of doing justice to the Indians and looking after their welfare who is powerless on the one hand to protect the Indians and on the other hand to protect the settlers? The universal practice of the War Department, I undertake to say, is never to interfere with the Indians unless the Interior Department demands their interference. And all the various numerous instances of Indian wars referred to by the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. SEELYE] have invariably been, or almost entirely, under this peace management.

It has been said that no evidence has been adduced, and that no evidence could be adduced, of this fact from any source at all. We have this statement made before one of our committees, in an argument prepared with very great ability, furnishing a happy illustration of the fact that Mr. Ross, an ex-chief of the Cherokee tribe, was right when he said, himself a half-breed, that the great element of civilization which had operated upon the five civilized tribes had been derived from contact with the white men. He himself presented to the committee an address which, for the eloquence and the simplicity of its diction, for the force and power of its thought, has not been surpassed by any production I have listened to from any member of this Congress.

Another gentleman also addressed the committee in an argument elaborately prepared, a gentleman who himself was also a half-breed. The argument was upon this very question in reference to the transfer of the Indian Bureau to the War Department from the Interior Department. He is one who has been familiar with the Indian Territory, the Indian people and their sentiments and wishes. While he differs in some respects with some of the other representatives of the Cherokee Nation here, with regard to the fact as to whether or not that nation of Indians has sufficiently advanced in civilization to be formed into a territorial government, looking to their final admission as a State into the Union, yet, upon this subject of what agency would be most capable of giving protection alike to the Indians and to the men living upon our frontier, he does not hesitate to speak his mind freely, fully, and explicitly, and with a force of expression which I say is equal to anything I have heard from any quarter during this session of Congress. I allude to the argument made before the Committee on the Territories of this House by Colonel Boudinot, of the Cherokee Nation. On page 19 of his pamphlet, replying to the views of Colonel Adair on this subject, he says:

> I reply that these and other massacres were perpetrated while the Indian Bureau was under the exclusive control of the Interior Department; and while the War Department had control I defy any one to show one act of injustice and cruelty. The officers of the Army are, in nine cases out of ten, gentlemen born and bred; they are gentlemen by education and social position, which in a majority of instances cannot be said of the office-seeker, who goes for an Indian agency and gets rich in four years on a salary of $1,500 a year. Transfer the Indian Bureau to the War Department and you will save to the Government $250,000 a year now paid in salaries and weed the official garden of such obnoxious, corrupt, and disgusting plants as J. P. C. Shanks.

And what is said with regard to one agent may be said with regard to another. This I say is the testimony of one thoroughly informed upon the subject. I am also told that, of the five newspapers now published in the Indian Territory, all but one favor this transfer of the Bureau of Indian Affairs to the War Department from the Interior Department.

I was told to-day by a very worthy gentleman of this House, for whose opinions I have great respect, that he had within the last day or two received letters from that class of religious people for whose simple method of worship, for whose genuine piety, for whose unostentatious disposition to do good toward all men with whom they come in contact, I have great respect—I mean the Quakers—this gentleman, a member of this House, said to me, "I have received letters from members of that society expressing opposition of this change because they think that, if it be made, then salutary religious instruction imparted to the Indians in various agencies as well as that given by other religious denominations will be terminated; that the schools which have been established will be broken up; that the improvement of the Indians in agriculture and the other arts and sciences of civilized life will be discontinued." "Why," said I, "no such thing is proposed in this bill. On the contrary, the majority of the committee propose simply to use the accurate and precise agency of the War Department in its Quartermaster and Commissary Departments for the purpose of doing what by stipulation it is our duty to do in disbursing the annuities and supplies which the Government furnishes to these Indians."

Now, it was said by the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. SEELYE] (and it occurs to me just now to speak of it) that at one agency there was a very great difference in the prices of the commodities furnished by the War Department to the post and those furnished through the Indian Department to the agency. But was the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts aware that the difference between the cost of the supplies furnished by the War Department and those furnished by the Indian Department was owing to the fact that the beef furnished for the officers and men of the Army was sold after it was slaughtered and butchered, and therefore sold for more, while the other was sold on the hoof?

Mr. SEELYE. The gentleman surely does not wish to misrepresent, and will allow me to correct a misapprehension under which he is evidently laboring. I was not unaware of the fact that the beef sold to the Army was sold on the block, while that sold to the Interior Department was sold on the hoof; and consequently it was necessary that the figures furnished to me by those respective Departments should be reduced in order to make a fair exhibit. The figures furnished by the War Department showed that there were two contracts made during the present year for beef at Camp Robinson: one at $8 per hundred-weight furnished on the block, the other at $6 per hundred-weight furnished on the block. I took the mean price, $7; and in order to make a proper comparison with the price paid by the Interior Department I reduced that 50 per cent. So that the figures I gave represented the price in gross in both cases. Reducing $7 by 50 per cent. makes the price of beef in gross, not on the block, at Camp Robinson, $3.50 per hundred-weight. Of course I might have added 100 per cent. to the price paid by the Interior Department, to make it correspond to the net price paid by the War Department; and the result would be the same. But, Mr. Chairman, the figures which I gave in my table represented in both instances the price in gross. If you would get the actual price paid by the War Department during the present year you should add to the figures I gave just 100 per cent.

Mr. HOOKER. I am very glad that I have been interrupted by the fair-minded and candid gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. SEELYE. I knew the gentleman would be glad to be corrected.

Mr. HOOKER. But the gentleman concedes that the very distinction which I was pointing out does in fact exist; and therefore, though the gentleman may have changed the form of making the calculation, I think that he will find the difference accounted for by the method I have mentioned: that in the one instance there is an absolute sale of that which is already in condition to be used and in the other the sale of the beef upon the hoof. I do not know what the gentleman's figures may amount to; but I understand that to be the fact; and in reference to cheapness I may be permitted to say that the general result of increasing the expenditures to $8,384,656 shows that the difference is not in favor of this peace establishment.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I hope the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] will be allowed more time if he desires it.

Mr. SEELYE. I trust at least he may have so much additional time as I have taken from him.

Mr. HOOKER. I am not disposed to occupy very much more time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time had expired before he was interrupted by the gentleman from Massachusetts. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BANNING] desires the floor; but if there is no objection the gentleman from Mississippi will be allowed to proceed.

Mr. BANNING. How much time does he desire?

Mr. HOOKER. About five minutes.

Mr. BANNING. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. HOOKER. I was about to remark that it was a great mistake if gentlemen supposed that this bill, or any other bill having for its object the transfer of the Indian Bureau from the Interior Department to the War Department, tends to break down in any degree the system of religious instruction, education, or training in agricultural matters which is now carried on at the various Indian agencies and reservations. Cannot gentlemen understand that an officer of the Army would be fully capable of doing what, as I understand, the Indian agent now does? The agents themselves are not the teachers; they are not instructors in agriculture; they are not the civilizers of the Indians. They employ men for the purpose of giving such instruction, and it is absolutely necessary for them to do so. Will an officer of the Army be less able to do the same thing?

I wish to cite here an extract from the pamphlet of Mr. Ross, showing the number of arable acres in the Indian Territory and other statistics showing how far the Indians are civilized:

In regard to the population of the Territory, I know there are those who contend that an Indian, under whatever influences he may be placed, will remain an Indian still. But no other refutation of such an idea is required than the presentation of the following statistics.

The board of Indian commissioners in 1873 estimated that there were:

Improved lands in farms, acres	204,677
Wheat, corn, &c., produced, bushels	6,739,355
Horses, cattle, &c., number	464,465
Value of farm products, including increase of stock	$4,663,610
Value of personal property, not including real estate and stocks held in trust	16,987,818
The Government holds in trust for the tribes in the Indian Territory not less than	8,000,000

From the published report of the proceedings of the General Council which convened at Ocmulgee in May, 1875, I learn that, omitting schools and aggregate attendance of schools in successful operation among the Kaws, Osages, Shawnees, Sacs, and Foxes, the number of common schools is 185, with aggregate attendance of 5,962; the church membership among the Creeks, Choctaws, Chickasaws, Cherokees, and Seminoles is upward of 7,500.

It is not proposed that these schools and Christian organizations which are instructing these Indians shall be abolished. Not at all; but, on the contrary, it is proposed to conduct them under an efficient system of management by the War Department. Instead of breaking them down it is proposed to give them the strength and force and protection to which they are entitled.

I am sure not one of the Indian committee has been animated by any desire to do wrong to the Indian. They have appreciated the fact that he is now surrounded by the tides of civilization coming from the Atlantic and from the Pacific, and that there is no longer any western hunting-ground to which he can go. We must expect therefore to civilize him where he is. He has been connected with our country from its earliest settlement, from the time when our Government was founded, when our ancestors came across the water to inhabit this very Territory. He is indissolubly connected with us in many respects. The first object of art which strikes the mind of the beholder as he walks into the magnificent Rotunda of the Capitol is the picture of an Indian woman married to a white man, kneeling to receive the sacred ceremony of Christian baptism. Everywhere all over our land, from the ice-ribbed region of the north to where the fabled murmurings of our own Biloxi break in perpetual ripple upon the shelving and sloping coast of Mississippi; everywhere all over the broad land, throughout your States and Territories, we hear the euphonious names which the Indian language has given to your States and Territories, rivers, and your mountains; from where the spray of Niagara catches the first beam of the morning sun to where his last parting ray glosses itself upon the broad bosom of the Pacific, breaking in eternal tidal flow against the golden gates of California; everywhere all over the land he has not those monuments which are said to distinguish every other people, savage and civilized, from the time when the Israelites piled up the rough and unhewn stones in the wilderness to commemorate the great events in their history, but he has monuments not devised by the brain of man, nor built up by the handiwork of man, but created by God himself upon the face of the magnificent country which he has ceded to you and your children, and his name and character, whatever it may be, sometimes heroic, sometimes savage, but whatever it is, it is indissolubly mingled with the history of our own Caucasian race, and will remain so while the Indian-named rivers shall flow to the ocean, and while the Indian-named mountains shall lift their granite peaks to the skies. [Applause.]

Mr. BANNING. Mr. Chairman, the management of Indian affairs has been considered and argued many times in Congress. At one time a bill to transfer the Indian Bureau back to the War Office passed this House. The question has long been studied by good men, anxious to civilize and Christianize the Indians, and to protect the settlers upon the frontier from their savage treatment.

Since the transfer of the management from the War Department to the Interior, the civil management has proved an expensive failure, the Quaker policy (so-called) a mistake.

Early in this session of Congress a bill introduced by General HANCOCK, of Texas, to transfer the Indian Bureau back to the War Department was referred to the Military Committee. The committee, in order to procure the opinions of Army officers, experienced in Indian management, ordered a letter of inquiry to be sent to all the general officers of the Army, to each colonel in the Army, and certain other experienced soldiers.

The question addressed to these officers reads as follows:

What is your opinion as to the propriety of transferring the Indian Bureau to the War Department?

More than fifty answers to this inquiry have been received. The officers answering are men of education and experience among Indians, and actuated, I believe, in their answers by patriotic motives and a desire to accomplish the best management of the Indians.

The Committee on Military Affairs have reported unanimously in favor of the transfer.

In support of the bill, I ask the attention of the House to some of the opinions of distinguished Army officers, believing that their opinions should have great weight in determining the important question now under consideration, both on account of their high character and because if the bill becomes the law these Army officers, in addition to the duties they now perform, will, without any increase in their numbers or pay, be required to carry out the provisions of the bill and perform all the hard labor and duties now performed by the Indian agents, and be held responsible for all Indian troubles, frauds, wrongs, and complaints.

General Sherman says:

The transfer of the Indian Bureau would result in economy and efficiency.

Now, as the military authorities are already charged with the duty of keeping the peace, I am sure they will be the better able to accomplish this end if intrusted with the issue of the annuities, whether of money, food, or clothing. Each military post has its quartermaster and commissary, who can, without additional cost, make the issues directly to the Indians and account for them; and the commanding officer can exercise all the supervision now required of the civil agent in a better manner, because he has soldiers to support his authority and can easily anticipate and prevent the minor causes which have so often resulted in Indian wars. In like manner, our country is divided into military departments and divisions, commanded by experienced general officers named by the President, who can fulfill all the functions now committed to Indian superintendents; and these, too, have near them inspectors who can promptly investigate and prevent the incipient steps that are so apt to result in conflict and war.

The idea which prevails with some, that the Army wants war with the Indians, is not true. Such wars bring exposure, toil, risk, and privations, with no honor. Therefore it (the Army) naturally wants peace, and very often has prevented wars by its mere presence; and, if intrusted with the exclusive management and control of the annuities and supplies, as well as force, I think Indian wars will cease, and the habits of the Indians will be gradually molded into a most necessary and useful branch of industry: the rearing of sheep, cattle, horses, &c. In some localities they may possibly be made farmers.

General Sheridan says:

I have always been in favor of the transfer of the Indian Bureau to the War Department. It would relieve the military establishment of great expense and much annoyance. We could diminish the number of posts and be enabled to establish new agencies, when required, at posts already established, instead of being required as we now are to establish a new post for every new agency. This transfer would put an end to the conflict of authority occurring constantly between Indian agents and Army officers, and would also relieve the Government of very much of the expenses of the Indian Bureau, such as pay of agents, &c.

It is my belief that if the Indians had been in the hands of the military there never would have been any Indian wars of any consequence. There would be a power over them which would make them respect persons and property, and they would respect that power. The attempt is now being made to govern these Indians without exercising any power over them at all, by simple suasion, while at the same time we acknowledge the necessity of having the severest laws for the government of intelligent white people.

General Hancock says:

I believe it would be a decided advantage to the country, to the Indian, and the pensioners to transfer those Bureaus to the War Department, and in regard to Indian matter especially I may say that I believe there is no motive save the interests of the Indians and those of the country which would lead Army officers to advocate or advise such a transfer, for it could but add to their labors and responsibilities, and would invite hostile criticism, injurious to the Army at large, should cases of maladministration by individuals occur.

General Schofield says:

The transfer of the Indian and Pension Bureaus to the War Department would undoubtedly result in economy and honest administration, and would be wholly beneficial to the public service, provided too much of the labor of those Bureaus be not imposed upon the Army proper. The Army should not be burdened with duties not strictly military to such extent as to cripple its efficiency or in the event of war to render necessary the sudden transfer of an important branch of the public service to untried civilians, in order that the Army officers might go to the field. The legitimate benefit that would be conferred upon those Bureaus by the transfer would arise mainly from the introduction into them of the fundamental principle upon which the military department is organized, and the civil departments also, of all well-administered governments; that is, the tenure of office dependent upon good behavior instead of upon the ever-varying phases of political controversy, with the necessary machinery for the certain detection and punishment of official crimes. The difficulty of adopting this principle in the civil departments of our Government is doubtless very great, and the experiment, if anybody regards it in the light of an experiment, could not be more fairly made than by a transfer of the Indian and Pension Bureaus to the War Department. If this transfer is made, the Commissioner and inspectors of such Bureau should be Army officers of proved character, and the special agents appointed from civil life should hold their office during good conduct and be subject to trial by courts-martial under the Army Regulations.

General McDowell says:

One of the great advantages of such a system would be to take this Indian question—the administrative part of it—out of politics, and correct the frands on the Indians, either in the original contracts for supplies or in the distribution of them, which has been for generations a reproach to every administration of our national affairs.

Another advantage would be its great economy.

General Terry says:

I am decidedly of opinion that the Bureau of Indian Affairs should be transferred to the War Department.

General Crook says:

I think it would be economical to the Government and promote efficiency.

General Augur says:

The Indian Bureau could be transferred, in my opinion, with great benefit to the Indians and to the public service.

Colonel Palmer says:

If the money appropriated for the Indians were placed in the hands of Army officers, it would all be disbursed fairly and honestly; but then what would become of the noble army of Indian agents, who think it very hard if they cannot make a fortune in a very few years on a salary of $1,500 per annum?

General Hazen favors the transfer, and says:

It would secure honest administration, and hence an immense annual saving of money to the United States. From twenty years' service in the Indian country and its vicinity, and a very extended observation of Indian administration, I am entirely convinced that Indian appropriations are not, as a rule, honestly disbursed, nor do I believe, owing to the entire centralization of this administration in Washington, so far from the Indian country, that it is possible to administer honestly, except by the well-tried and positive means of military control, because the difficulties in the way of civil management are so many. * * *

By being under the continuous control and direction of a permanent body of intelligent men, the instruction of the Indian in agriculture, stock-raising and all the civilizing arts would become a strong and active sentiment with the Army; and not, as now, subject to the caprice of a stranger every four years, who has spent much of his term of office before he comprehends the real needs of his wards.

Their control would become in a measure patriarchal, which is the natural government of all barbarous people. The main cause of the little progress now made in Indian affairs is that, from the rotating system of civil office in our highly-civilized republican Government, everything is frittered away in the beginning, and nothing is ever completed.

Colonel Mackenzie reviews the subject fully and ably in his testimony, from which I read these extracts:

Should the Government propose to conduct its Indian affairs without reference to political party, its transfer to the War Department would be very advantageous to the Indians, and no particular disadvantage to the Army. If the question of party politics is to be kept in view in its management, with which the affairs of Indians have no rational connection, its transfer will be a very great disadvantage to the Army, and of no special benefit to anybody else.

The success of an officer from the day he enters the line of the Army till the day he ceases to belong thereto, is mainly a question of the kindly government of other men, and would seem the very best preparation for the firm, kindly control of these bands. It is a question, too, of integrity of administration, and to an officer's success a strong suspicion of a dishonest act (though it may not be proved, or drive him at once from the service) is fatal.

Again, should it be decided to expend all the needed money, but to introduce the party question into its management by the Army, it would be very unpleasant. If we are going to have to employ school-teachers or clerks, or have officers detailed at various agencies on account of their being republicans or democrats, I do not believe the transfer will do the Indians any particular good, and it will be very bad for us.

Colonel Clitz says:

To transfer back the Indian Bureau to the War Department, I believe, has become a necessity in order to prevent in the near future a big Indian war. I believe that if commanding officers of military posts in the Indian country are made Indian agents ex officio, with their subordinate officers as subagents, the Bureau will be more economically administered, the Indians would be better fed and cared for, would become better acquainted with the officers of the Army, and the officers with them. I believe officers in authority over them would use their power mildly but firmly, and not make them any promises that they did not know they could carry out. I believe the Indians would be contented, and, therefore, peaceable, and at any rate would have a wholesome dread of the officer who had it in his power to punish as well as reward.

Colonel Wood says:

True policy, as well as good faith, in my opinion, demands a change of the governmental relations with the Indian tribes. Treat them justly and there will be no occasion to spend millions of dollars fighting them. Their welfare would undoubtedly be enhanced by a transfer of the Indian Bureau to the War Department, and a great saving of money effected thereby. Officers of the Army, stationed in the Indian country, could execute the duties of superintendents and agents without interfering with their legitimate duties and without any expense to the Government other than their present pay. Should it, however, be found indispensably necessary to continue civil agents in office for the conduct of Indian affairs, their powers should be circumscribed, accurately defined, and they themselves rigidly punished for any infraction of them.

Colonel De Trobriand says:

I have no doubt that such a measure would be both eminently proper and beneficial. The present Bureau of Indian Affairs is a Pandora's box, whence endless evils issued and are still issuing. The greater part, by far, of our difficulties with Indians arise from the shameless way in which they are cheated out of the most of the annuities of all kinds which they are supposed to receive from the Government and for which the people pay in full. It would be a great error to believe that, because they do not know how to read and write, those Indians are unable to keep good accounts and to figure exactly to what extent they are cheated. I have heard Indian chiefs who could tell me how many sacks of flour, how many flannel shirts, how many blankets, how many knives, &c., had been taken away from the agency where they had been stored for them; on what nights these goods had been loaded on wagons, the number of which they stated; to what distant post the stolen articles had been sent, there to be sold in retail by traders to some other tribes. Many times they asked me why I could not take control of the distribution of their goods among them, unable to understand how their Great Father in Washington, who kept so many warriors, could not secure them their rights and save them from being plundered year after year by those very people who were sent especially for their aid and protection. The general corruption which prevails in Indian affairs is a matter of public notoriety, and has been, in some cases, demonstrated by irrefutable evidence. The above is therefore stated, not to criminate anybody in particular, but only to show that I speak of my personal knowledge, not from hearsay. As all efforts have been unavailing to remedy those evils with the present organization of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, it has become necessary to try some different system to realize the reforms so much needed, and it does not appear that there is any other which could attain that end but the transfer of the Indian Bureau to the War Department. The administration of Indian affairs could not be trusted to better hands. The officers of the Army do not desire it. They understand well that such a transfer will bring to those who will be concerned in it much more trouble and labor than credit or compensation. But their devotion and their patriotism would make them accept their new responsibilities and perform these new duties in the same spirit and with the same efficiency which have maintained so high the integrity and the honor of the United States Army.

Colonel Sykes says:

I have had considerable experience with a large tribe of Indians on a military reservation in New Mexico, (Navajoes,) and had very little trouble with them. I carried out the promises of the Government in their behalf, and rarely called upon them to do an act of justice which they were not prompt to recognize and enforce. Most of our trouble with the Indians would cease were their annuities honestly distributed and treaties with them faithfully carried out. Everybody knows this who knows anything on the subject.

Colonel Jeff. C. Davis says:

The management of the Indians is better done by the War Department. It was formerly a part of the duties of this Department to keep peace with the Indian tribes on our frontier; it is a difficult job and requires the presence of soldiers at all times, often the vigorous use of them; the Indians respect and will obey no authority of the Government not enforced by the military; this is seen every day on our frontier. The management of the Indians by the Interior Department has been a failure.

The Indian Bureau has of recent years become a synonym for rascality and corruption. I do not think, however, the officers of the Army, as a general thing, covet the responsibility this change would place upon them, but they can and will, with proper encouragement, perform the task with more efficiency, honesty, and with less hypocritical cant about christianizing and civilizing the Indians than is now done. The military can teach the Indians how to lay down the rifle and take up agricultural implements and use them; this done, and our honest and sincere Christian workers will see to it that civilization and Christianization follow right along as the savage is prepared for these blessings.

General Marcy's opinion, which is found on page 145 of the report of the Military Committee, is a careful and able review of the subject. His knowledge of, and experience in, the management of the Indian entitle his opinion to great weight. General Marcy says:

The measure of returning the Indian Bureau to the control of the War Department has long been indicated as one of expediency and wisdom, and on several occasions it has been urgently recommended by different Secretaries of War, under both democratic and republican administrations, and a bill passed the House of Representatives some years since for the transfer. For the reason that the duties involved would be arduous and thankless, no matter how faithfully they might be discharged, the transfer is not seriously desired by the Army. Whatever may be said to the contrary by the opponents of the change, the Army officer is the last person who wants an Indian war, as he has nothing to gain by it; but his experience in Indian affairs is great, his probity is unquestioned, and his influence has doubtless been most salutary with the Indians, as they know he never deceives them; and the only motive he could have for undertaking the gratuitous task of Indian agent, if it were left to his option, would be for the preservation of tranquillity and peace.

These, with thirty-three other distinguished Army officers, all experienced in the management of Indian affairs, have returned answers to the inquiry made by the committee, all of which may be found in printed report No. 354.

Among all the answers received only one officer, General Howard, opposes the transfer. In order that the opponents of this measure may have the full benefit and weight of this officer's opinion, I now read what General Howard says, from page 24 of the printed testimony:

I would not advise the transfer of the Indian Bureau to the War Department for two reasons: First, it turns the attention of the Army from its legitimate work; second, it will subject the Army to the usual public denunciation directed toward Indian Bureau agents, and be constantly detrimental to the reputation and finally injurious to the morale of the Army. I do think that officers can be selected from the Army who would do the duty with zeal, efficiency, and probably with more general satisfaction to the public than the Indian agents, who are less well paid and further removed from co-equal associates.

This one expression of opinion in opposition to the proposed transfer stands alone among all the Army officers; and even General Howard does not oppose it on the ground that the Indian service will not be improved, but solely on the ground of its possible injury to the morals of the Army.

I now call the attention of the House to the views of a number of civilians, who can have no bias or prejudice in the matter, and whose knowledge of Indians and Indian character certainly entitles their opinions to the highest consideration.

Mr. John B. Sanborn, a gentleman who has spent many years among the Indians, who has been appointed by different Presidents to settle Indian difficulties, and who, after the abolition of slavery in the South, was sent to the Indian Territory to adjust the relations between the slave-holding tribes and their slaves, says:

In January, 1867, I was again sent by the Secretary of the Interior to ascertain the principal grounds of difficulty with the Sioux Indians in the vicinity of Fort Phil. Kearney, that had resulted in the massacre of eight hundred and thirty-six soldiers and officers of the Army. I served on that commission until July of that year, when Congress, by an act, appointed me with others a commission to visit all the Indians of the plains, and make such recommendations to Congress as the public good seemed to require for the future, for the control and management of Indian affairs, and I served on that commission until the 12th of October, 1868; since which time I have not been connected with the public service. That commission met and conferred with the Southern Cheyennes and Arapahoes, the Kiowas, Comanches, and Navajoes, the Bannacks or Snake Indians, the Northern Cheyennes and Arapahoes, the Mountain Crees, and all the bands of the Sioux Nation, twelve in number. During this time I made the Indian question a constant and careful study, and tried to arrive at correct conclusions as to what policy would be the best for the Government to pursue in the management of Indian affairs.

Question. Please tell us what conclusion you arrived at.

Answer. At the conclusion of that commission—the last session it held was at the Tremont House in Chicago, in October, 1868—all the questions pertaining to that subject were fully and thoroughly discussed by the commission, consisting of General Sherman, General Harney, General Terry, Senator Henderson, Mr. S. F. Patten, General Augur, and myself, and Mr. N. G. Taylor, Commissioner of Indian Affairs. That commission, with perfect unanimity of opinion, with the exception of Mr. Taylor, concluded that the Bureau should be transferred to the War Department, and so recommended to Congress. Nearly all the members of the commission had given the matter their undivided attention for a year and a half, and some of the members had been connected with the Indian service for a quarter of a century, such as General Harney. General Augur, too, had had a great deal of experience. The question of the management of Indian affairs is a very complex and difficult one, and one that nobody can understand without giving it a great deal of study and attention. The evil of contact with the men of the Army is and always has been experienced, and must be always, for the reason that civil officers are not certain of getting along a single day without calling upon the military, which results in the absolute necessity of the military being immediately at hand, on the reservations, or close to them. Hence there would be no increase in that evil by the transfer to the War Department. It stands just the same as it does now. For the tribes that are civilized or semi-civilized nothing is required but a single officer. For the tribes that are still nomadic and savage, the force that is now kept among them is all that is required after the transfer; there is no change in that respect. It is simply consolidating the entire service into one branch of the Government, instead of having it administered by two separate and distinct branches, as now. The system of procuring supplies is far more economical in the Army than in the civil service, and must always remain so. While the Indian service is administered by the civil branch of the Government, there is constant change and vacillation, so that these uneducated savages do not understand or comprehend what the difficulty is. The policy of the Government seems to be one thing under one administration, and another thing another year, under another administration.

Hon. William Welsh, of Philadelphia, the late chairman of the board of Indian Commissioners, appointed by the President, the chairman of the Indian mission of the Episcopal Church committee, in charge under the present management of certain agencies, a man who gives largely of his abundant means to the Indian people through Indian missionaries, a man of high and pure character who has spent much time in the Indian country studying the Indian people and Indian management, and who is doubtful of the civilizing influences of the Army, says:

Question. Tell us in what condition you found the management of Indian affairs.

Answer. When we commenced the Indians were under the control of Army officers. Very little seemed to be done toward civilizing them; but, as General Stanley has said, it was hardly a fair test, for the officers were taken indiscriminately. Before that the agents were mostly men who were seeking their own gain, and perhaps hardly censurable in that, because the system was a very poor one. The governor of each Territory was ex officio the superintendent of Indian affairs, and had the control of appropriations, and usually shaped the expenditures politically. In some of the States that were formed out of Territories occupied by the Indians we were not able to trace above 25 per cent. of the appropriations to their proper use. That is, where the superintendent of Indian affairs had been the governor, he had used the appropriation for political purposes, and in many instances gentlemen were promoted politically by the patronage of the appropriations for Indians.

In a letter published in the New York Times Mr. Welsh says:

Very many of the best friends of Indian civilization are deeply troubled by the evident determination of the House of Representatives to refuse to make appropriations for Indian service unless the care of the Indians is transferred from the Department of the Interior to the War Department. This want of confidence in the Department of the Interior is well founded, as it is a Department of the Government that will ever be looked to for the money needful to conduct political campaigns.

Messrs. Brunot, Stuart, Dodge, Bishop, Farwell, Campbell, and Tobey were appointed by the President with full authority of law to check abuses in the Indian service. After years of self-denying labor, without pecuniary compensation, this Indian commission found itself unable to check the evil influence that the Indian ring had acquired over the officers in the Interior Department. When vouchers to a large amount, that the commission had pronounced illegal or fraudulent, were paid by the Secretary of the Interior, they reported the facts to the President of the United States, but as he did not sustain them they resigned. On surrendering to the President their commissions there was no expression of regret, although such expressions had been made on the resignation of Indian Commissioner Parker, and latterly at the resignation of Secretaries Delano and Belknap. At that time informers of wrongs by Government officials were considered the guilty parties, and their retirement was not regretted. It is true that all the officers and clerks in the Interior Department who assisted in or connived at these fraudulent transactions have been removed, yet this does not take the Department out of the political influences that have hitherto environed it.

The Indian ring is rich, and will probably, as hitherto, be assessed to aid in defraying the expenses of the next political campaign. Such an assessment, according to party usage, sanctions a profit beyond the gains usual in commercial transactions of ten times the sum paid.

The fear expressed by prejudiced persons that if the Indians come under the War Department they will be brought into still closer contact with soldiers is groundless, for, Army officers being trained to command, Indians will readily obey them, under the belief that they will be sustained by military power, often rendering the presence of troops unnecessary. Knowing, as I do, most of the division commanders, I express confidence that they will select for Indian agents officers of established moral character and of special fitness for the duty.

Mr. Charles Nordhoff, in his interesting book on Northern California and the Sandwich Islands, written after visiting and making an examination of the management of the Indians on the Indian reservations in California, the Modoc Indians, and the cause of the Modoc war, on page 164 says:

I do not say too much when I say that if General Schofield had been informed and consulted beforehand, there would have been no Modoc war, and General Canby and Mr. Thomas might have been alive to-day.

Again, speaking of our Indian management, on page 166 he says:

In the whole system of management, as I have described it, you will see that there is no reward for or incentive to excellence; it is all debauching and demoralizing; it is a disgrace to the Government, which consents to maintain at the public cost what is in fact nothing else but a pauper-shop and house of prostitution.

After fully and ably reviewing the subject, Mr. Nordhoff recommends that the Indians be placed under the control of Army officers, and says:

An Army officer, methodical, orderly, and having the habit of command, is the proper person for superintendent of a reservation; for drill and discipline, regular hours, regular duties, respectful manners, cleanliness, method—these are the elements of civilization that are needed, and which an Army officer knows how to impress without harshness, because they are the essence of his own life.

In his message to Congress, December 6, 1869, President Grant advocates Army management of Indians, and says:

For superintendents and Indian agents not on the reservations officers of the Army were selected. The reasons for this are numerous. Where Indian agents are sent, there or near there troops must be sent also. The agent and the commander of troops are independent of each other, and are subject to orders from different Departments of the Government. The Army officer holds a position for life; the agent one at the will of the President. The former is personally interested in living in harmony with the Indian and in establishing a permanent peace, to the end that some portion of his life may be spent within the limits of civilized society. The latter has no such personal interest.

Another reason is an economic one; and still another, the hold which the Government has upon a life officer to secure a faithful discharge of duties in carrying out a given policy.

Mr. Chairman, the question has been asked since this discussion commenced, who do the Indians want? Let that great and good man, Bishop Whipple, who has studied this subject with a view to Christianize the Indians, bear testimony. In a letter to the New York Times he says:

Senator WINDOM, if my memory serves me, was a member of an Indiam commission of which Senator Doolittle was the chairman. They made an examination of the causes of our late Indian wars. They published a report in 1865. It was one of the saddest books I have ever read. From the Mississippi River to Oregon, from Canada to the Rio Grande, it is one long record of crime and fraud.

In 1868 another Indian commission was sent out, composed of General Sherman, General Terry, General Augur, General Harney, General Sanborn, Senator Henderson, and Major Tappen. They took testimony again it was too bad to publish. I am told that when the Indian chiefs met the commission at Medicine Lodge Creek, they gave as a reason for not making another treaty with us that "three times men have come to us and made treaties;" they said that "their Great Father sent them;" "They were liars;" "we have not seen one thing which they promised." After long discussion the Indians said that "they believed the men who wore our uniform had straight tongues."

Mr. Chairman, since the discussion commenced the question has frequently been asked, have the Indians been consulted; what do they say to the transfer?

I hold in my hand General Custer's book, Life on the Plains. On page 122 is found an opinion of the "Indian Parker," well known as a distinguished chief of the once powerful Six Nations, and better known as the Commissioner of Indian Affairs during the early part of the present Administration. Colonel Parker quotes from messages of Washington and Jefferson, showing that they had favored the exclusion of civil agents and traders. His recommendation then proceeds:

It is greatly to be regretted that this beneficent and humane policy had not been adhered to, for it is a fact not to be denied that at this day Indian trading licenses are very much sought after, and when once obtained, although it may be for a limited period, the lucky possessor is considered as having already made his fortune.

The eagerness also with which Indian agencies are sought after and large fortunes made by the agents in a few years, notwithstanding the inadequate salary given, is presumptive evidence of frauds against the Indians and the Government.

Many other reasons might be suggested why the Indian Department should altogether be under military control; but a familiar knowledge of the practical working of the present system would seem to be the most convincing proof of the propriety of the measure.

It is pretty generally advocated by those most familiar with our Indian relations and, so far as I know, the Indians themselves desire it.

Civil officers are not usually respected by the tribes, but they fear and regard the military, and will submit to their counsels, advice, and dictation when they would not listen to a civil agent.

Further along, in regard to Army management of the Indians, Parker says:

I believe it to be more economical than any other plan that could be suggested.

A whole army of Indian agents, traders, contractors, jobbers, and hangers-on would be dispensed with, and from them would come the strongest opposition to the adoption of this plan, as it would effectually close to them the corrupt sources of their wealth.

Mr. Chairman, with such an array of testimony upon this subject from honest, upright, and disinterested persons, who have had the amplest opportunities of judging, it would seem that further argument as to the propriety of the proposed transfer is unnecessary, especially in view of the fraud, extravagance, and profligacy known to exist in the present management of the Indian question.

I wish now to call the attention of the House to the economy of this transfer. General Marcy's able letter, in which he reviews the entire subject, found on page 145 of the report, gives the following tables of appropriations for the Indians in 1848, when the management was in the War Department, and 1875, under the present management:

For contingent expenses and for fulfilling treaty stipulations	$6,851,681 96
Pay of officers and clerks in Commissioner's Office	75,520 00
Pay of superintendents, inspectors, agents and their clerks	136,000 00
Total appropriation in 1875-'76	7,063,201 96

The appropriations for the same purposes in 1848 were:

For contingent expenses, &c.	843,1'0 00
Officers, &c., in Commissioner's Office	18,700 00
Superintendents, agents, &c.	12,678 00
Total appropriations in 1848	874,478 00
Difference	6,188,723 96

Mr. Chairman, let the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX,] who, in the name of Tammany, brandished his tomahawk in our faces a few days since, put this in his pipe and smoke it: the fact that the management of the Indian Bureau in 1848 in the War Department only cost $874,478 and that last year it cost $7,063,201.96, or $6,188,723.96 more per annum under the present management than when under the War Department management. Then, Mr. Chairman, let the honorable gentleman from New York first read in the testimony of Hon. William Welsh, "We could only trace about 25 per cent. of the appropriation to the Indians." Then let him take his slate and pencil and find that the Indians received 25 per cent., or $1,765,000 of the appropriation, and the Indian ring $5,297,740. And then let him go back to Tammany and inform the chiefs how he opposed that transfer and defended the Indian management which permits the Indian ring to steal three-fourths of all the appropriations made for the support of the tribes.

Then let him tell Tammany how he brandished his tomahawk in the face of the Military Committee, and told them they must reduce the Army ten thousand men, leaving only fourteen thousand; that there is a possibility of trouble with Mexico, and that the fourteen thousand soldiers will all be required upon the Texan border, leaving the settlers upon the frontier to the mercy of the Indian. Let him tell Tammany how, in the face of the proof, that never in the history of the country has the Army or Army officers been the cause of an Indian difficulty or any Indian war. He charged "that Army management of the Indians means war, extermination, to give them hell;" that, while he considered the management he thus denounced the best for the poor pensioner, he told the House the management of the Indians should be left where it now is, in the Interior Department, under the control of the Young Men's Christian Association and the Indian ring.

Let him tell Tammany, in the face of the proof, that nine out of ten of the half-breed Indian children are the offspring of Indian agents and traders; without any proof whatever of his assertion, he charged the Army had ruined the Indians "by giving them a loathsome disease."

And if Tammany is not satisfied with this unprovoked and unjust attack of her scalping-chief upon our Army and defense of the Interior management of the Indians, run by the Indian ring, then let Tammany send for Red Cloud, Black Kettle, or Sitting Bull, to come and take the honorable gentleman's place.

Mr. Chairman, the economy of this bill, in addition to the fact that it costs more to manage the Indians in the Interior than it did to manage them in the War Department, is sustained by the evidence of General Sheridan, who says:

If the transfer is made the Secretary of War will modify his estimates for the coming fiscal year $3,500,000.

A table prepared by Adjutant-General Townsend, found on page 229 of the report, states the amount saved by the reduction of the number of officers, in their salaries alone, to be $189,000 annually.

On page 158 of the report can be found a table showing conclusively the extravagance, waste, and profligacy of the present Indian management, and which of itself should be sufficient to convince every member of the House of the necessity of removing the Indian management away from the Interior Department. This table shows that while the Quartermaster's Department pays $4.50 per hundred pounds from New York, Philadelphia, and Baltimore to Colorado, the Indian agents pay $9 per hundred pounds; and so on the different amounts paid for freights, run for three pages in this book, showing that the Indian agents pay 60 per cent. more for transportation of freight than the Quartermaster's Department.

I ask now to have read, to prove the economy of the transfer, Dr. Walter Burleigh's opinion, found on page 216 of the report of the Military Committee. Dr. Burleigh says:

Question. Do the agents ever turn over beeves on the foot to the Indians so that they can drive them off?

Answer. Frequently; at least I think so. I have looked at this question very closely and have given it a great deal of study, and my impression is that the transfer of the Indian Bureau to the War Department, by dispensing with civilians whose duties can be performed just as well by officers of the Army—my impression is that the saving in that alone will be $1,500,000. My impression is, (and I think I have seen enough of these matters in the last fifteen years to enable me to come to a correct conclusion,) that it will save, in supplies furnished that never reach the Indians at all, fully $500,000; that makes two millions. It will save in the administration of the Army directly, by enabling them to bring the Indians down to navigable highways where supplies can be distributed without the monstrously expensive transportation that is now necessary, fully $3,000,000, making $5,000,000. Take, for instance, the Red Cloud and Spotted Tail agencies, the two largest agencies on the continent, I believe; it costs as much to haul the flour from the point where it is landed on the Missouri to those agencies as it costs to purchase the flour. The distance of those agencies from the river is about three hundred miles, and they are in a poor country, whereas the country on the river is pretty good. In addition to that, our Indian wars for the last twenty years have cost $120,000,000, over $6,000,000 a year, and we are just as sure to be afflicted again with that enormous expenditure as we have been in the past if we continue the present system. Therefore you may add $6,000,000 to the $5,000,000, which will make a saving annually of $11,000,000, by turning the Indians over to the War Department. I think that our Indian wars have been the direct results of the miserable policy that has prevailed under the civil administration of Indian affairs. Now we have the officers already paid for doing all the duties that are discharged at present by the agents. The surgeon at the post can prescribe for the Indians, and the labor that is to be paid for now can just as well be performed by the soldiers who will be called in at the military posts to aid the quartermaster and the commissary in making their issues. Of course you have to have a head farmer, a head blacksmith, a head carpenter, and where there is a mill, a miller, but all the balance of the labor can be done just as well by the Indians, provided you have force enough at the posts to enable the agent to compel obedience to his orders.

From all these statements of facts it is proved most fully that the transfer will result in an ultimate saving to the Government of more than $5,000,000 annually, of a far better, more civil, and Christian management of the Indians and better protection to the settler upon the frontier. It is recommended by the Committee on Appropriations, the majority of the Indian Committee, all of the Committee on Military Affairs, by more than sixty Army officers, and by many eminent and Christian gentlemen.

It is not generally understood, Mr. Chairman, why it has been more difficult to secure an honest disbursement of Indian appropriations than any other. A few facts explain satisfactorily the reason. These appropriations are for the frontier, far removed from civilized influences, and generally beyond the control of any court. The white inhabitants there, if any, are the roughest known to the country. The recipients of the appropriations are savages who but poorly understand their rights and are incapable of any appeal other than that found in the rifle and the scalping-knife. The result is that the agent can defraud with perfect impunity, and he generally goes out, not to find Indians, but to manufacture vouchers, as I have shown you that only 25 per cent. of the millions generously voted by our people reaches the Indian, and this, Mr. Chairman, reaches him stained with blood.

The Indian feels the wrong he cannot understand, and resents it, savage-like, with war.

Now, a war is quite as profitable to the Indian ring as thefts from the appropriations. It gives birth to heavy contracts in which, as Senator WINDOM once computed, a million is paid for every dead Indian, with a doubt remaining as to whether the Indian is dead.

Now, Mr. Chairman, these heavy frauds have attracted to the Indian ring all the shrewder rascals of our country. There is no combination that can be conceived by the wicked mind in which such large profits can be obtained so safely. The tenure of office to such is not of long duration. One thief crowds out another, who, satisfied with a fortune, retires from the pursuit. And herein lies the great advantage of a transfer to the War Department. The officer of the United States Army holds his place for life on good behavior; he has a character to sustain, a reputation to defend; and all in the safekeeping of his brother officers, who regard the good name and glory of their profession of enough importance to give to it the service of a life.

It is not true, as urged, that a disposition prevails on the part of the Army to a bloody extermination of the Indians. All the instances evoked in favor of such argument have occurred after the thieving agents have provoked and stimulated the war the Army is called upon to fight out.

A war, we all know, means desolation and death, and in this line our Army has been as efficient as it will be in the better peace policy, when the officer acts as the civil official agent.

Mr. Chairmen, I beg leave to remark in conclusion that an examination of the record shows that in December, 1868, a bill for the transfer of the Indian Bureau to the War Department, reported by Mr. GARFIELD, after a careful investigation of the subject, passed this House by a vote of 116 for to 33 against.

All the members of this House who were then members of Congress, who voted at that time—being Mr. BANKS, Mr. BLAINE, Mr. GARFIELD, Mr. WILLIAM D. KELLEY, Mr. LAWRENCE, and our Speaker, Mr. KERR—all of these gentlemen voted for the bill then, except Mr. KERR, who, I am authorized to say, is in favor of the passage of the bill now.

Again, Mr. Chairman, much has been said by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. SEELYE] in favor of the humane and careful management of the Indian in the Interior Department compared with his savage and murderous management by the Army.

Without stopping to argue this question, and as an unanswerable evidence of the present destructive and murderous management of the Indians, I read from the census of the Indians in 1848 under the War Department, when there were four hundred and eighteen thousand Indians. In 1874 the census shows the total number of Indians to be three hundred and seventy-nine thousand, showing that the present management is not only robbing the Indians of their supplies, but destroying them rapidly, and that under the present management in a few years no vestige of the red man will be left upon the continent.

One word as to the cruelty and low standard of the American soldier charged in the speech of the honorable gentleman from Massachusetts. When that gentleman pictures the soldiers of our Army, as he does, as wanting in morals and carriers of foul disease among the Indians, it is certainly a comfort to the old soldiers to know that the man who utters these statements has never been in and knows but little of our Army, composed as it is of brave men, of whom every American citizen has occasion to be proud, not only for its conduct in Indian wars but in every war in which the country has ever been engaged. Sir, it is not necessary for me to defend its honor, its morality, or its decency against any charges to the contrary made here or elsewhere.

The honorable gentleman is mistaken when he jumps to the conclusion that soldiers are rude and cruel and low. Upon the contrary they are generally tender-hearted and generous men, whose blood is as freely given for the defense of the right as were the gentleman's words spoken in giving publicity to the American soldier's bad character, without reason, without cause, and contrary to the facts.

Mr. Chairman, charges of cruelty and immorality against the men of our Army have been most freely spoken here by gentlemen who would do well to first study the character of the men of the Army before making such wholesale denunciations. The men of the West and the South, and all men who have mingled with the Army, know the charges are not true; while all men who have studied the question have learned, as every man must learn who studies, that it is the Indian agent, and Indian traders, and the Indian ring who debauch the Indian women, steal from the Indian appropriations, and then stir up an Indian war to conceal their wickedness and fraud.

Sir, I look upon this measure as the greatest reform proposed by this House. The defeat of the bill will be a great misfortune both to the Indian and to the country. Its passage cannot possibly make the management worse than it now is, and will, I believe, make it what it should be, firm, honest, just, and kind.

Mr. JACOBS. Mr. Chairman, having lived for twenty-five years in Oregon and Washington Territory, having seen much of the Indians in that portion of the American Union, having studied to some extent their language, habits, modes of thought and life, and having watched attentively the policy of the Government toward them and its effects upon them, I may be pardoned for offering a few suggestions upon this bill.

First, then, there are two classes of Indians:

First. Those who are in active hostility to the authority of the Government or are ever ready to enter upon the war-path. Some tribes belonging to this class have entered into treaty stipulations with the Government, but the obligations of such stipulations have no restraining control over the tribes. There is among this class of Indians a settled hostility to all the modes of civilized life. They are not in a condition to be civilized or christianized. They are governed by fear, they are restrained by power, and to them the military system is the only practical system, the only guarantee of safety and protection to surrounding or advancing settlements.

The second class may be called the reservation Indians. They fully acknowledge the authority and power of the Government. They have tried war with the whites and they have utterly failed. They have felt the power of the Government and they acknowledge the supremacy of that power. There is not the least disposition remaining to enter upon the war-path. They have gone upon the reservation set apart for them, and the great body of them remain there. They are acquiring an attachment for a permanent home, are yielding to the influences of civilization, and are slowly but surely adopting the modes of civilized life. They need not the presence of power to overawe, but the ministers of peace to instruct them.

Such, sir, is the character of the Indians in Washington Territory. There are in that Territory between thirteen and fourteen thousand Indians, thirteen reservations, and seven Indian agents.

Before I call attention to the present condition of these tribes I want to look at the past policy of the Government in Indian affairs.

First we had what I may call the political system. Under this system superintendents and agents were appointed, not for any supposed fitness they may have had for the service, not for any desire they were supposed to have to ameliorate the condition of the Indians, but as a reward for political services. The position of Indian agent was sought, not for its legitimate salary, but for the opportunity given to plunder the Indians and cheat the Government. Men have grown rich on the paltry salary of $1,500 a year. Everything that one of these political agents touched turned to gold. It is needless to say that the system was dishonorable to the Government and demoralizing to the Indians. Understanding as I do their language, I have heard them complain bitterly of their wrongs under the dominion of these political agents and to ridicule the assumed superiority of a civilization that tolerated such gross injustice. The moral sense of the American people, and especially of the religious portion, protested against this system of plunder and demoralization and brought about a change; introduced what is known as the religious system.

Secondly, I wish to call attention to the elements and practical working of this system from actual observation.

First. The agents are appointed through the nomination of the different churches from their real fitness for the work of the civilization and Christianization of the Indians. They are acquainted with the character, habits, and mode of thought of the Indians. Above all, they have a love for the work they undertake, and approach it under a sense of religious duty, and impelled by moral considerations.

Secondly. They all speak the Indian language well. There is not an agent in Washington Territory who cannot address the Indians in their native language. The intervention of an interpreter is not necessary. They are thus much closer to the Indians. Every one at all acquainted with this matter knows the value of this acquisition.

Thirdly. The great obstacle in the way of the civilization of the Indian is his religious belief. Before you can commence the work you must weaken, if not break, the power of his native teachers. This can be done by association with the whites, but it is a slow process. The more direct and effective mode is that of direct teaching. The religious agent is eminently fitted for the work. His zeal is ever active; he knows the Indian's mode of reasoning; he addresses him in his native tongue, and wins him to the better way. Let me ask what fitness the officer of the Army has for this necessary work? What disposition has he to enter into it? There are about three thousand Indians in my Territory completely under the power and control of these native teachers. They refuse to live on the reservations. Their priests denounce the mode of life of the whites as impious, and these bands wander over the Territory without any fixed abode. They are threatened with everlasting banishment from the happy hunting-grounds if they abandon the traditions and customs of their ancestors. Work is not only dishonorable, but it is absolutely impious. I adduce this to show that the first great step in the civilization of the Indians is the breaking of the power and influence of their native teachers.

Fourthly. It cannot be averred that these religious agents in Washington Territory have ever defrauded the Government out of a dollar. It has been a faithful and honest administration, and now what has been the result? As an illustration I will take the Yakama agency, where Rev. J. F. Wilbur is agent. He was appointed in 1864, and with the exception of about a year has been agent ever since. There are thirty-six hundred and fifty Indians belonging to the agency, and all but about three hundred reside there. When Wilbur took charge of this agency the only property the Indians had was horses. They now have fifteen thousand head, worth $195,000; three thousand head of cattle, worth $15,000; a good flouring-mill, a steam saw-mill, with shingle-machine attached; a carpenter and blacksmith shops, all operated by Indians. The grain and vegetables produced by them the last year was sufficient to give every Indian on the reservation twenty-six bushels of corn and oats, one bushel of vegetables, and a barrel and a half of flour. They have two schools in successful operation, and two Methodist churches, one of which has a native pastor. The reservation has been surveyed and the families were fast settling on forty-acre lots, upon which substantial houses have been built. The sanitary condition of the tribe is excellent, and the births far exceed the deaths. I mention the last fact because the surest evidence of disease and tribal decay is the absence of children.

What I have said of this agency is true of every other agency in the Territory—of the Catholic agencies, of the Presbyterian and Congregational agencies.

Now, sir, these Indians are already self-sustaining, and under the benign influence of these Christian agents are fast adopting the modes of civilized life and are moving slowly but surely up to a higher plane of civilization.

The change proposed in this bill will check if it does not entirely arrest this good work. I am not left to conjecture and speculation as to the correctness of this declaration. This change has been tried before and abandoned, because it was a cold and cheerless negation and was without beneficial results. Father Wilbur and all of those Christian agents were removed in A. D. 1871, and military officers substituted for them. The result is shown in a marked manner on this Yakama reservation. The Indians abandoned their homes on the reservation, let their houses, shops, and mills go to decay, left their farms untilled, and drove their stock to the plains and mountains, and they did not return until Father Wilbur was restored.

The loss to the Indians was heavy. Their horses and cattle were slaughtered for food, the work of civilization entirely arrested, suspicion and mistrust of the whites took the place of a confiding trust in their agent, and for a time there was danger of another Indian war. When Father Wilbur was restored the Indians came in from the plains and mountains with the remnant of their stock and settled down upon the reservation again. From that time to the present they have been making rapid advancement in civilized life; have fenced lands, built houses, plowed and sowed fields, established and sustained churches and schools, and now enjoy a large degree of material prosperity.

A word or two for pioneers and border-men, and I am done. I know that there is a popular belief that there is a settled hostility on the part of the pioneer toward the Indian—that he values the Indian only for his scalp; but, sir, this is a great mistake. Every consideration of protection and safety to himself, his family, and his property prompts him to live on friendly terms with the Indians. He knows the Indian's mode of warfare, he knows that the Indian recognizes no non-combatants, but that he slays alike women and children as well as men. Under these circumstances it would be madness for him to provoke a contest that would imperil the lives of his wife and little ones and consign his property to the flames. Whenever Indian wars have sprung from the wrongful acts of white men those acts were not perpetrated by pioneers, but by the parasites of civilization coming in their wake. They were the individual acts of bad men resented by the Indians on their principles of justice, which were satisfied not by the punishment of the offender, but upon some other white man. But, sir, most Indian wars sprang from no individual act of injustice perpetrated by the whites, but were the result of matured plans among the Indians to check the encroachment of the whites into what they deemed their country, and to preserve to themselves the domain of their fathers.

Mr. SCALES. I move the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. SAYLER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the special order, a bill (H. R. No. 2677) to transfer the Office of Indian Affairs from the Interior to the War Department, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio. I wish to ask the Chair whether the order made this afternoon precludes the introduction of bills?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The understanding of the Chair at the time the recess was taken was that no other business would be transacted this evening than the Indian bill, and he will so rule.

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill for reference.

Mr. COX. I do not like to interfere with the gentleman, but we must abide by the understanding of the House before the recess was taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will rule that no other business can be transacted to-night.

Mr. RANDALL. Such was the understanding. Although it may not be a matter of record, nevertheless that was the agreement, that no other business should be transacted this evening. Therefore I think we ought not to put ourselves in any position which is open to criticism.

Mr. LORD. I rise to make a privileged report from the managers of the impeachment.

Mr. RANDALL. I think I must object for the reason I have stated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair must refuse, under the understanding as to the order of business for this evening, to entertain any other business than the bill for the transfer of the Indian Bureau.

Mr. COX. I understand from the reporter that before the recess the question was asked, and it was distinctly settled that no other business was to be transacted this evening.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is the understanding of the Chair.

And then, on motion of Mr. SCALES, (at nine o'clock and fifty minutes p. m.,) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. G. A. BAGLEY: The petition of Mrs. Mary Danahay, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BELL: The memorial of H. P. Rolfe, relating to an appropriation for expenses incurred and for services rendered in the matter of the extradition of William Johnson, to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. DAVY: The petition of S. P. Pitts, for compensation for a quantity of salt destroyed by British forces at Oswego, in May, 1814, to the Committee of Claims.

By Mr. HENDERSON: The petition of J. H. Paddleford and 72 other citizens of Cleveland, Illinois, for the repeal of the resumption act, to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Also, the petition of S. M. Brown and 351 other citizens of Geneseo, Illinois, for the repeal of the resumption act, to the same committee.

By Mr. HEWITT, of New York: Memorial of the Society of Friends, on behalf of the Indians, to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. HOOKER: The petition of 2,967 citizens of Mississippi, for the refunding of the cotton tax paid by them in the years 1865, 1866, 1867, and 1868, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. HOPKINS: The petition of citizens of Pittsburgh, for the regulation of commerce and to prevent discriminations by common carriers, to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. HUNTON: The petition of P. H. Hooff, for compensation for property taken by and furnished to United States troops, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. JACOBS: Papers relating to the establishment of a post-route from Snohomish to Falls City, Washington Territory, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. LEAVENWORTH: The petition of Mrs. Charles O. Roundy and 250 other ladies and gentlemen of Cayuga County, New York, for the appointment of a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. MAGOON: The petition of Allen R. Law and 38 other citizens of La Fayette County, Wisconsin, that the present duty on flaxseed and linseed-oil be maintained, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. MAISH: Memorial of John A. Rea, for the return to him of certain taxes paid to the Government, to the Committee of Claims.

By Mr. ROBERTS: The petition of R. L. Thomas and 70 others, citizens of Cecil County, Maryland, for an appropriation for the improvement of the Northeast River, and remonstrating against any suggestion that the opening of navigation can do any one harm, and representing that the promotion of commerce will benefit all, to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. TUFTS: The petition of dealers and manufacturers of envelopes at Davenport, Iowa, relative to the manufacture of envelopes, postal cards, &c., by the Government, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina: Papers relating to the petition of Mrs. Kate L. Usher for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WHITTHORNE: Memorial of J. H. Sims, for compensation for property taken by United States troops, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. A. S. WILLIAMS: The petition of citizens of Detroit, Michigan, importers and dealers in crockery, china, and glass ware, that a uniform rate of duty of 30 per cent. be levied upon these articles, exclusive of packages, inland freight, shipping charges, and commissions, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. YOUNG: The petition of Mary McMannamon, for the reconsideration of her claim filed before the southern claims commission and rejected, to the Committee on War Claims.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, April 19, 1876.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

SALARY OF THE PRESIDENT—VETO MESSAGE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States:

To the Senate of the United States:

Herewith I return Senate bill No. 172, entitled "An act fixing the salary of the President of the United States," without my approval.

I am constrained to this course from a sense of duty to my successors in office, to myself, and to what is due to the dignity of the position of Chief Magistrate of a nation of more than forty millions of people.

When the salary of the President of the United States pursuant to the Constitution was fixed at $25,000 per annum we were a nation of but three millions of people, poor from a long and exhaustive war, without commerce or manufactories, with but few wants and those cheaply supplied. The salary must then have been deemed small for the responsibilities and dignity of the position, but justifiably so from the impoverished condition of the Treasury and the simplicity it was desired to cultivate in the Republic.

The salary of Congressmen under the Constitution was first fixed at $6 per day for the time actually in session—an average of about one hundred and twenty days to each session—or $720 per year, or less than one-thirtieth of the salary of the President.

Congress have legislated upon their own salaries from time to time since, until finally it reached $5,000 per annum, or one-fifth that of the President before the salary of the latter was increased.

No one having a knowledge of the cost of living at the national capital will contend that the present salary of Congressmen is too high, unless it is the intention to make the office one entirely of honor, when the salary should be abolished—a proposition repugnant to our republican ideas and institutions.

I do not believe the citizens of this Republic desire their public servants to serve them without a fair compensation for their services. Twenty-five thousand dollars does not defray the expenses of the Executive for one year, or has not in my experience. It is not now one-fifth in value what it was at the time of the adoption of the Constitution in supplying demands and wants.

Having no personal interest in this matter, I have felt myself free to return this bill to the House in which it originated with my objections, believing that in doing so I meet the wishes and judgment of the great majority of those who indirectly pay all the salaries and other expenses of Government.

U. S. GRANT.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, April 18, 1876.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. CLAYTON. I move that the message be printed, and that the bill and message be referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

The motion was agreed to.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. KEY presented the petition of John L. Divine and the representatives of the estate of William E. Kennedy, who in the life-time of the latter were mail contractors on the route from Jacksonville, Alabama, to Chattanooga, Tennessee, praying that they may be remunerated for losses sustained and time and labor bestowed in carrying the mail on that route from December 1, 1858, to the 30th of June, 1862; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. CONOVER presented a petition of the common council of the city of Saint Augustine, Florida, praying the Government to donate a certain lot of land to the city of Saint Augustine for the public uses of that city; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I desire to present for the consideration of the Senate a petition of a number of citizens of Martinsburgh, West Virginia, asking the intervention of the Government in behalf of Edward O'Meagher Condon, now confined in prison in England for some alleged political offense. The petition is numerously signed by a number of the best citizens of our State.

If the facts set forth in the petition are correctly understood by the petitioners and myself in relation to the trial and imprisonment of this citizen of the United States, then there should be some prompt action taken by the Government for his relief. It is at least due to the prisoner and the large number of people who are appealing to the Government in his behalf that all the facts in the case should be promptly inquired into and some immediate steps taken for his relief.

I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENSON presented the petition of D. W. Claywell, late a sutler in the Fifth Kentucky Cavalry Volunteers, praying compensation for certain private property turned over to military officers and used by the United States Government; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented the petition of James Haggard, administrator of the estate of Jesse K. Shaw, deceased, praying compensation for one horse owned by Shaw at the time of his death and retained in the service of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented the petition of James Haggard, administrator of Jesse M. Carter, deceased, late captain of Company I, First Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, praying pay for two horses owned by Carter at the time of his death and retained in the service of the United States Government; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HOWE. I present the petition of certain persons who represent themselves to be members of the Menomonee tribe of Indians, of Wisconsin, not residing on the reservation set apart for the tribe, praying for the passage of an act authorizing the sale of a portion of their reservation and that they may be allowed to participate in its proceeds. I move the reference of this petition to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WALLACE presented a memorial of the Board of Trade of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, in favor of the permanent organization and maintenance of the Signal Service Corps; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BOOTH presented the petition of George H. Wells, of San Francisco, California, praying compensation for the use of the steamer Southern Merchant during the late war; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MORTON presented a petition of 250 soldiers and heirs of deceased soldiers of the States of Indiana and Illinois, who served in the volunteer forces of the United States in the war for the suppression of the rebellion, praying for the enactment of a law providing for the equalization of bounties; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BOGY presented the memorial of the city council and citizens of Saint Louis, Missouri, relative to the boundary line between the State of Missouri and the State of Illinois; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY presented the petition of George H. Rathbin and 144 others, citizens of Monroe County, Michigan, praying that a pension may be allowed to the widow and children of William Bell; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the memorial of Duncan Burnside and 20 other citizens of Michigan, remonstrating against the placing of bicarbonate of soda, sal-soda, caustic soda, and alum on the free list; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of Captain George W. Yates, Seventh United States Cavalry, praying compensation for a horse lost in the Government service; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. OGLESBY. I ask the indulgence of the Senate and its favor to make a personal request. Some time ago, under the direction of the Senate, the President pro tempore placed me upon the special committee to go to the State of Mississippi and make investigations there, under a resolution passed by this body. I have reflected upon the matter as best I could, and while I am willing to share my part in the proper responsibilities that belong to a Senator, it would be exceedingly inconvenient for me to go. I cannot state all the special reasons, but in a general sense I think I may take the liberty to say to the Senate that it would be so inconvenient for me to go, that I feel that I could not in justice to myself and other duties pertaining to me officially venture to go upon that inquiry. Two of the members of the Committee on Public Lands have been appointed upon this committee. We have very important matters before that committee, and to take two members from one committee seems, as I think, rather a heavy draught upon that branch of this body. I therefore ask the Senate to excuse me from serving on the select committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois asks to be excused from further service upon the Special Committee on Mississippi Affairs. Will the Senate excuse the Senator from service?

The question being put, Mr. OGLESBY was excused. By unanimous consent the Chair was authorized to fill the vacancy.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. OGLESBY. The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 429) to authorize the eastern band of Cherokee Indians to institute suits against the Cherokee Indians residing west of the Mississippi River, and for other purposes, have had the same under consideration. While the subject, upon its title and one provision of the bill, seems to refer to Indian affairs, the whole purpose of the bill is to organize a court, or rather give to the eastern band the right to institute suits or legal proceedings against the western band. It involves a legal construction of treaties, the right to bring suit in the District of Columbia, the question of the service of process; and the bill, although relating by its title to Indian affairs almost exclusively, belongs to the Committee on the Judiciary, because it treats of judicial matters. The Committee on Indian Affairs therefore ask to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. HOWE, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred a letter of the Secretary of State, inclosing a proposed amendment to sections 91 and 168 of the regulations for the consular courts of the United States in Japan, reported a bill (S. No. 757) to amend the regulations for the consular courts of the United States in Japan; which was read, and passed to the second reading.

He also, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 155) to amend sections 533, 556, and 572 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. BOUTWELL, from the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, to whom the subject was referred, reported a bill (S. No. 758) to perfect the revision of the statutes of the United States, general and permanent in their nature, relating to the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and recommitted to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Committee on Claims, to whom was recommitted the bill (S. No. 489) for the relief of G. B. Tyler and E. H. Luckett, together with the message of the President of the United States returning the bill to the Senate without his approval, have considered the same and have instructed me to report it back to the Senate with the unanimous recommendation of the committee that it pass, notwithstanding the objection of the President. I also submit a report on this subject, and move that it be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CRAGIN, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2337) declaratory of the sense of section 4504 of the Revised Statutes, relative to the shipment of crews of vessels of the United States, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Commerce; which was agreed to.

Mr. COOPER, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 699) to confirm the sale of the marine-hospital building and grounds at Natchez, in the State of Mississippi, reported it without amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Timothy Newhall, praying remuneration for his invention for the protection of life upon steamships and other vessels, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CAPERTON, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Alice E. De Groot and Theodore B. B. De Groot, administrators of the estate of William H. De Groot, deceased, praying payment of the claim of the decedent, allowed by the Secretary of War for the construction of the Washington Aqueduct, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

Mr. INGALLS, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 619) to carry out in part the provisions of the act entitled "An act to abolish the tribal relations of the Miami Indians and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1873, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CONOVER (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 759) authorizing the President to appoint Henry Hoover a naval constructor in the United States Navy; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN.

On motion of Mr. HAMILTON, it was Ordered, That copies of the papers on file in the case of L. D. Evans, late collector of internal revenue for the fourth collection district of Texas, be furnished to the said Evans or to his attorney.

SIOUX INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine, submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to communicate to the Senate any information in his possession in relation to the present situation of Indian disturbances in the Sioux reservation or unceded Indian territory of said Sioux, and whether military force has been interposed therein; and, if so, whether at the instance of the Interior Department, and the reasons for such interposition.

IMPEACHMENT OF W. W. BELKNAP.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of twelve o'clock and thirty minutes having arrived, according to the rules the legislative and executive business of the Senate will be suspended, and the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the articles of impeachment exhibited by the House of Representatives against William W. Belknap, late Secretary of War. The Sergeant-at-Arms will open the session by proclamation.

The SERGEANT-AT-ARMS. Hear ye! Hear ye! Hear ye! All persons are commanded to keep silence while the Senate of the United States is sitting for the trial of the articles of impeachment exhibited by the House of Representatives against William W. Belknap, late Secretary of War.

The respondent appeared with his counsel, Messrs. Black, Blair, and Carpenter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair observes that the managers are not present. If there be no objection, the Secretary will inform the managers, before the minutes are read, that the Senate is ready for the trial; pending which, if there be no objection, the Secretary will call the roll of Senators who were heretofore absent and have not been sworn.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the names of the Senators who have not been heretofore sworn; and the President pro tempore administered the oath to Senators ENGLISH and PATTERSON.

At twelve o'clock and forty-five minutes p. m., Mr. G. M. ADAMS, Clerk of the House of Representatives, appeared below the bar and delivered the following message:

Mr. President, I am directed by the House of Representatives to inform the Senate that the House of Representatives have adopted a replication to the plea of William W. Belknap, late Secretary of War, to the articles of impeachment exhibited against him, and that the same will be presented to the Senate by the managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate is now ready to receive the managers.

At twelve o'clock and fifty-two minutes p. m. the Sergeant-at-Arms announced the managers of the impeachment on the part of the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Sergeant-at-Arms will conduct the managers to the seats prepared for them within the bar of the Senate.

The managers (with the exception of Mr. KNOTT, who was not present) were conducted to the seats assigned them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will now read the minutes of the last day's proceedings.

The Secretary read the journal of the proceedings of the Senate sitting for the trial of the impeachment of William W. Belknap, of Monday, April 17, and they were approved.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The message received from the House of Representatives will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
April 19, 1876.

Resolved, That a message be sent to the Senate by the Clerk of the House, informing the Senate that the House of Representatives has adopted a replication to the plea of William W. Belknap, late Secretary of War, to the articles of impeachment exhibited against him, and that the same will be presented to the Senate by the managers on the part of the House.

Attest:

GEO. M. ADAMS, Clerk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Gentlemen managers, in accordance with the order of the Senate fixing the hour of one o'clock as the time at which it will hear you, the Senate is now ready to hear you.

Mr. Manager LORD. Mr. President, the House of Representatives having adopted a replication to the plea of William W. Belknap to the jurisdiction of this court, as advised by the resolution just read, the managers are instructed to present the replication to the Senate sitting as a court of impeachment and to request that the same may be read by the Secretary and filed among the Senate's papers.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The replication will be read by the Secretary.

The Secretary read as follows:

In the Senate of the United States sitting as a court of impeachment.

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA
vs.
WILLIAM W. BELKNAP.

The replication of the House of Representatives of the United States in their own behalf, and also in the name of the people of the United States, to the plea of William W. Belknap to the articles of impeachment exhibited by them to the Senate against the said William W. Belknap.

The House of Representatives of the United States, prosecuting, on behalf of themselves and the people of the United States, the articles of impeachment exhibited by them to the Senate of the United States against said William W. Belknap, reply to the plea of said William W. Belknap, and say that the matters alleged in the said plea are not sufficient to exempt the said William W. Belknap from answering the said articles of impeachment, because they say that at the time all the acts charged in said articles of impeachment were done and committed, and thence continuously done, to the 2d day of March, A. D. 1876, the said William W. Belknap was Secretary of War of the United States, as in said articles of impeachment averred, and, therefore, that by the Constitution of the United States the House of Representatives had power to prefer the articles of impeachment, and the Senate have full and the sole power to try the same. Wherefore, they demand that the plea aforesaid of the said William W. Belknap be not allowed, but that the said William W. Belknap be required to answer the said articles of impeachment.

II.

The House of Representatives of the United States, so prosecuting in behalf of themselves and the people of the United States the said articles of impeachment exhibited by them to the Senate of the United States against the said William W. Belknap, for a second and further replication to the plea of the said William W. Belknap, say that the matters alleged in the said plea are not sufficient to exempt the said William W. Belknap from answering the said articles of impeachment, because they say that at the time of the commission by the said William W. Belknap of the acts and matters set forth in the said articles of impeachment he, said William W. Belknap, was an officer of the United States, as alleged in the said articles of impeachment; and they say that the said William W. Belknap, after the commission of each one of the acts alleged in the said articles, was and continued to be such officer, as alleged in said articles, until and including the 2d day of March, A. D. 1876, and until the House of Representatives, by its proper committee, had completed its investigation of his official conduct as such officer in regard to the matters and things set forth as official misconduct in the said articles, and the said committee was considering the report it should make to the House of Representatives upon the same, the said Belknap being at the time aware of such investigation and of the evidence taken and of such proposed report.

And the House of Representatives further say that, while its said committee was considering and preparing its said report to the House of Representatives recommending the impeachment of the said William W. Belknap for the matters and things set forth in the said articles, the said William W. Belknap, with full knowledge thereof, resigned his position as such officer on the said 2d day of March, A. D. 1876, with intent to evade the proceedings of impeachment against him. And the House of Representatives resolved to impeach the said William W. Belknap for said matters as in said articles set forth on said 2d day of March, A. D. 1876. And the House of Representatives say that by the Constitution of the United States the House of Representatives had power to prefer said articles of impeachment against the said William W. Belknap, and that the Senate sitting as a court of impeachment has full power to try the same.

Wherefore the House of Representatives demand that the plea aforesaid be not allowed, but that the said William W. Belknap be compelled to answer the said articles of impeachment.

MICHAEL C. KERR,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Attest:

GEO. M. ADAMS,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the replication will be filed. The Chair hears none. Have the managers anything further to offer?

Mr. Manager LORD. Mr. President, I understand that we have nothing further to do until we hear from the other side.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Gentlemen of counsel, what have you to offer?

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. President, Mr. Belknap, the respondent, wishes a copy of the replications which have been filed to his plea in abatement, and for time to consider the same, and frame pleadings in reply; and I suggest Monday next as the day, and submit a written motion to that effect.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the motion.

The Secretary read as follows:

In the Senate of the United States sitting as a court of impeachment.

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA } Upon articles of impeachment presented by the vs. } House of Representatives against the said
WILLIAM W. BELKNAP. } William W. Belknap.

Mr. President, the respondent asks for copies of the replications this day filed by the managers, and asks for time until Monday next to frame pleadings to meet the same.

WILLIAM W. BELKNAP.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I wish to offer an order upon this subject in a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order will be put in writing and reported.

Mr. Manager LORD. Mr. President, we desire of course to offer all possible indulgence to the other side, and we do not deem that the request for time until next Monday is in itself unreasonable, and yet there are reasons, which need not now be stated, for having this matter hastened as much as is possible. The managers therefore instruct me to ask that the day be fixed on Friday next, instead of Monday next.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I have reduced an order to writing which I submit.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Ordered, That the respondent file his rejoinder on or before the 24th day of April, instant; and that the House of Representatives file their surrejoinder, if any, on or before the 25th day of April, instant.

Ordered, That the trial proceed on the 27th day of April, instant, at twelve o'clock and thirty minutes afternoon.

Mr. CONKLING. What days are they?

Mr. EDMUNDS. The 24th is Monday; the 25th, Tuesday, and the 27th, the day of trial, Thursday, of next week.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators, you have heard the motion proposed by the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I shall then propose that the Senate sitting for this trial adjourn until the last day named, the 27th instant.

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. President, I desire to understand that order. The 24th is Monday, as I understand, and the court is not to be in session on that day.

Mr. CONKLING. How will the rejoinder be received?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it be filed with the Clerk.

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. President, we desire not to deal with anything less than the court in our pleadings from beginning to end.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will modify it by adding "file and serve on the other party copies," so as to save the necessity of any further order on the subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will modify the order accordingly and will report it as modified.

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. President, I desire to suggest to the Senate that we cannot serve any papers on the other side. We have no standing in the House of Representatives. The courtesy that the Senate has extended to us to be here has not been extended by the House. I do not see how we can serve any papers on the House. We cannot get in.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, I move to amend the order so as to provide that the papers referred to shall be filed with the Secretary, and that he deliver copies to either side promptly on application.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will commit the amendment of the Senator from New York to writing.

Mr. Manager HOAR. Mr. President, I respectfully suggest, at the request of my associates, that we do not understand in what position the House of Representatives will be placed under that order. Certainly it is not in accordance with their custom to make application to the Secretary of the Senate.

Mr. Manager LORD. I would suggest, Mr. President, as relieving the difficulty, that the Secretary be directed to serve a copy on the Clerk of the House.

Mr. CONKLING. I have no objection, Mr. President, to so modifying my amendment. Let it be that he send copies to the managers on the one side and the counsel on the other, or that he send a copy to the Clerk of the House of Representatives on the one side and to the counsel on the other.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York modifies his amendment as he has stated. The Secretary will reduce to writing the amendment proposed.

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. President, we are taken quite by surprise by this order. We have always supposed that no paper could be filed in the court of impeachment except by special leave of the court. Are we to come here on the 24th and file anything we please, orderly or disorderly, in form or out of form, and does that become the basis of the action of the House? I supposed that as in the Supreme Court in the exercise of its original jurisdiction, not a paper could be filed in this court without the order of the court when the court should see what the paper was. It seems to me we shall be very likely to get into a jangle in the filing of papers unless we do it in the presence and with the approbation of the court on each paper filed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will now report the resolution first proposed and then the amendment suggested by the Senator from New York.

The SECRETARY. The order is as follows:

Ordered, That the respondent file his rejoinder on or before the 24th day of April instant, and that the House of Representatives file their surrejoinder, if any, on or before the 25th day of April instant.

It is proposed to be amended so as to read:

Ordered, That the respondent file his rejoinder with the Secretary on or before the 24th day of April instant, who shall deliver a copy thereof to the Clerk of the House of Representatives, and that the House of Representatives file their surrejoinder, if any, on or before the 25th day of April, instant, a copy of which shall be delivered by the Secretary to the counsel for the respondent.

Ordered, That the trial proceed on the 27th day of April, instant, at twelve o'clock and thirty minutes afternoon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York to the motion suggested by the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is no objection to that. I accept it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order will be so modified; and the question recurs on the order as so modified.

The order as modified was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, now I move that the Senate sitting for this trial adjourn until the 27th instant, at half past twelve o'clock afternoon.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate sitting for the trial of the impeachment adjourned until the time named.

PROTECTION OF WITNESSES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate resumes its legislative business.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before the Senator proceeds, the Chair will call up the unfinished business of yesterday, the morning hour having expired.

Mr. THURMAN. What is the unfinished business?

The SECRETARY. The unfinished business of yesterday is the bill (H. R. No. 2572) to protect witnesses who shall be required to testify in certain cases.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. THURMAN. I wish to discuss the bill which is the unfinished business more at large than I am able to do to-day, as I am too unwell to proceed with a lengthy discussion. I am very glad that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] has caused the bill to be taken up, for it ought to be considered at as early a day as possible. Perhaps by to-morrow I shall be well enough to proceed; certainly by the day after to-morrow I will not ask any further delay. I would not ask for a moment's delay now but that I am too unwell to speak upon the bill to-day at length.

Mr. EDMUNDS. As the Senator from Ohio was not in when I moved to take up the bill last night, although I did not know it at the moment, I think it due to him that the matter should go over. Therefore I move to postpone the bill until to-morrow, and we can take it up whenever he is ready.

The motion to postpone was agreed to.

COUNTING OF ELECTORAL VOTES.

Mr. THURMAN. I want to fulfill a promise which I made the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MORTON] that I would move to take up the motion to reconsider the vote on the bill relative to counting the electoral votes for President and Vice-President. I move to take up that motion to reconsider.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio moves to proceed to the consideration of the motion to reconsider the vote by which Senate bill No. 1 was passed.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the motion to reconsider the vote on the passage of the bill (S. No. 1) to provide for and regulate the counting of votes for President and Vice-President and the decision of questions arising thereon.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President——

CREDITS TO SETTLERS ON PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. SARGENT. With the leave of the Senator from Ohio, I ask unanimous consent to restore to the Calendar the bill (H. R. No. 1052) to correct an error in the Revised Statutes of the United States and for other purposes, which bill passed the House and was reported by the Committee on the Revision of the Laws and subsequently because it was to be embraced in a general bill for the revision of the statutes it was indefinitely postponed. The Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. BOUTWELL,] who reported the bill, stated to me that he would ask to have it restored to the Calendar. I see that he is not in his seat. I should like to have it restored to the Calendar. The reason is on account of the pressing necessity for the passage of this bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the bill about?

Mr. SARGENT. In the Revised Statutes in stating a section the word "seven" is used instead of the word "one," and it has made endless confusion.

Mr. EDMUNDS. On what subject?

Mr. SARGENT. On the subject of public lands, the rights of preemptors, &c. The Revised Statutes refer to the wrong sections.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Has the bill to which the Senator refers been reported from a committee?

Mr. SARGENT. It was reported favorably from the Committee on the Revision of the Laws. I only ask that it go on the Calendar.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

TAX ON FERMENTED LIQUORS.

Mr. LOGAN. If the Senator from Ohio will yield to me for a moment, I ask—I think it will take but a moment—that House bill No. 522, which was yesterday ordered to lie on the table, be taken up and passed. I move to take it from the table.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 522) to define the tax on fermented or malt liquors. It provides that nothing contained in section 3337 of the Revised Statutes shall be so construed as to authorize an assessment upon the quantity of materials used in producing, or purchased for the purpose of producing, fermented or malt liquors, nor shall the quantity of materials so used or purchased be evidence, for the purpose of taxation, of the quantity of liquor produced; but the tax on all beer, lager-beer, ale, porter, or other similar fermented liquor, brewed or manufactured, and sold or removed for consumption or sale, shall be paid as provided in section 3339, and not otherwise; but the act is not to apply to cases of fraud.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move the following amendment, to come in at the end, as an additional proviso:

Provided further, That nothing in this act shall have the effect to change the present rules of law respecting evidence in any prosecution or suit.

Mr. LOGAN. I can see no objection to that; it does not change the bill at all. The only objection there can be is that it sends the bill back to the House; but inasmuch as the Senator from Vermont desires that a provision of that kind should be in the bill for fear that it might be misconstrued, I shall make no objection, and am willing that the amendment shall be adopted.

Mr. THURMAN. I should like to hear some explanation of the necessity of this proviso. I was not here yesterday when the bill was under discussion; but I fail to see the necessity for the proviso. I dare say there is some, or the Senator from Vermont would not have offered it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The necessity which has occurred to me arises out of a phrase which is used in about the middle of the bill, which says, in substance, that the quantity of material used in making beer shall not be evidence for the purpose of taxation of the amount of beer made. Now I offer this amendment to guard against the possibility that that statement in the statute may be made use of in some prosecution in court to show that evidence against a brewer of the amount of malt he is using is inadmissible under the existing state of the law and to guard against the possibility of that which I myself think is not the true construction of the act; but courts are very critical in criminal statutes, as we all know, and I put in this proviso in order to make it certain that, if evidence of the quantity of material used would be admissible under the ordinary principles of law in a prosecution against a brewer, this statute shall not change that rule.

Mr. LOGAN. As I said, I do not think that this amendment changes the effect of the provisions of the bill at all. It merely sends it back to the House. Still I have no objection to it, because before a court where fraud is charged and a party is being prosecuted for it, I should have no desire to exclude any evidence that the law would recognize as proper testimony. That is all that this means, as I understand it. The only objection I have to the amendment is that it sends the bill back to the House of Representatives. I do not think it is necessary, but at the same time time I shall not make opposition to it, as it is desired by the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I suggest to my colleague an amendment to come in in the body of the bill which I think would simplify it and accomplish all the purposes he desires. After the word "produced" in line 10, I would insert, "except in cases of alleged fraud," and then strike out the proviso.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should want the proviso just the same even in that case. I have no objection to any other amendment that is a good one, but I want this proviso.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS.]

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

IMPROVEMENT OF OCONTO RIVER.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I move that Senate bill No. 176 be taken up now.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 176) to authorize the Northwestern Improvement Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Wisconsin, to enter upon the Menomonee Indian reservation and improve the Oconto River, its branches and tributaries, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. THURMAN. I should like to have an explanation of that bill.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The bill is accompanied by a printed report, which I will ask the Secretary to read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Commerce, on the 18th instant:

The Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 176) relating to the improvement of the Oconto River in the State of Wisconsin, have considered the same, and beg leave to make the following report:

The Northwestern Improvement Company is a corporation created by the State of Wisconsin for the purpose of making certain improvements in the Oconto River, a stream emptying into Green Bay, in the northern portion of the State. The river, at some distance above its mouth, divides into what are called the North and South Branches.

The company have already, under their charter, succeeded in improving the main stream, together with the North Branch. They have built seven dams, and so cleared the river of rocks and sand as to permit logs to be run with facility from the lumbering camps above to the mills below.

They are now desirous of commencing similar improvements upon the South Branch. A portion of this branch, however, passes through the Menomonee Indian reservation. The company ask the passage of this bill to enable them to go upon the reservation and make the same improvements they have already made elsewhere.

The bill provides that the company shall be responsible for all damages in making their improvements, and that Indians and all others shall have the right to use the improvements by the payment of charges, to be regulated by the State.

The committee cannot see that the granting of this right will interfere with the rights of any one, but think, on the contrary, that it will be a benefit to all the parties concerned, whether Indians or citizens.

The bill, moreover, has the authority of precedent. On the 15th of May, 1874, an act was approved authorizing the Keshena Improvement Company to go upon the very same reservation and improve the Wolf River. (See Statutes at Large, volume 18, page 46.)

Your committee, not knowing but the Committee on Indian Affairs might possess information showing that the rights of the Indians might in some way or to some extent be affected or injured by this bill, have had the same submitted to the Committee on Indian Affairs, which said committee, on the 5th of April, returned the same to your committee, with a report stating that they knew of no reason why it should not pass. The said report of the Committee on Indian Affairs is embodied in and made a part of this report.

COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, April 5, 1876.

SIR: Referring to your communication of February 26 requesting that the inclosed bill (S. No. 176) and report prepared thereon by subcommittee of the Committee on Commerce, in charge, be considered by the Committee on Indian Affairs, I am directed by the said committee to inform you that they have considered the same and know of no reason why the bill should not pass, and assent to the same.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. J. OGLESBY,
Chairman (pro tempore) Committee on Indian Affairs.

Hon. ROSCOE CONKLING,
Chairman Committee on Commerce, United States Senate.

Your committee recommend that said bill do pass.

Mr. BOGY. In the absence of the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, I will state that this bill was carefully examined by that committee, and that it appeared entirely unobjectionable. It cannot interfere with the rights of the Indians that this route should be improved at the expense of this corporation; and it is a necessity as an outlet for a very extensive pinery lying above the Indian reservation. There can be no objection to it whatever. At all events, that was the conclusion of the committee. I think it is entirely proper.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROTECTION OF CAPITOL GROUNDS.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to report a bill, and I desire its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the bill (S. No. 760) to protect the public property, turf, and grass of the Capitol grounds from injury was read twice and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It makes it the duty of the Capitol police hereafter to prevent any portion of the Capitol grounds and terraces from being used as play-grounds or otherwise, so far as may be necessary to protect the public property, turf, and grass from destruction or injury.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds are of the opinion that the duty of protecting the grounds in this way is already provided for in the statutes, but there is a little difference of opinion in relation to the subject on the part of some at least; at all events it is not done. I suppose the great pleasure of seeing ten thousand children here on Easter Monday, as was witnessed this week and in previous years, has prevented the police from doing their duty; but at the same time, if Senators will notice the injury done, it will be seen to amount to thousands of dollars. This grass cannot be restored for many months, and some of it could not be restored without being replaced by new turf. Although it is a very great pleasure to see these children enjoying themselves here on Easter Monday, it is deemed important that we should protect the grounds.

There are other reasons why this bill should be passed. There are cattle crossing the ground here frequently, and the police do not consider it a part of their duty to prevent them. Some of the public monuments, vases, &c., that are here need constant protection. Therefore it seems proper to pass this bill.

Mr. WITHERS. I do not like to oppose the bill just offered, but I beg to suggest a modification of it so as to prevent trespassing upon the slopes of the terraces, which are really the only portions of the grass that are injured by the tramping of the children in their annual holiday which they take in the public squares. I have a very strong sympathy with those children. I have a very strong inclination to permit them to continue in the enjoyment of what seems to be almost a prescriptive right acquired by custom. They are generally from a class of citizens who have little opportunity for enjoying themselves, and I suppose it is only once a year, on Easter Monday, that their feet ever tread upon this sward. The level ground belonging to the Capitol, the grassy bed, cannot be injured by tramping upon it. It is in fact a benefit to grass to be tramped upon; the sod is improved by it; but the slopes of the different terraces can be and are injured and very seriously injured, no doubt, on Easter Monday, by the running and sliding of the children down them. If the bill should pass in the form proposed, it seems to me it would debar these children from an enjoyment which they enter into with so much zest and which it affords us all pleasure to witness. I would suggest therefore that it be modified so as to merely prohibit encroaching upon the slopes of the terraces, because I am sure that the flat grass would not be injured at all by any such means.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Of course, if the object of the Senator is accomplished, the children will not come here to slide. I know the Russian government in the winter season provide places for their citizens to slide; but I hardly think it is proper that here, in the spring of the year, at so large an expense both of money and of the appearance of the public grounds, we should allow these terraces to be entirely ruined by the process that was witnessed last Monday. I will say to the Senator from Virginia that if the bill passes in precisely the form that it now is in, it will practically accomplish the purpose which he suggests, and nothing more.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. U. S. GRANT, jr., his Secretary, announced that the President had yesterday approved and signed the act (S. No. 701) further to provide for the administering of oaths in the Senate.

TRANSFER OF CASES IN ALABAMA.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to report at this time, from the Committee on the Judiciary, a bill (H. R. No. 1439) authorizing the transfer of certain causes from the circuit court of the United States for the district of Alabama, at Mobile, into the circuit court of the United States for the middle and northern districts of Alabama, at Montgomery and Huntsville, in said State, with a view to its being passed. It is a bill which merely authorizes the transfer of certain causes in the circuit court for the southern district of Alabama back to the northern and middle districts, to which they were transferred by act of Congress two or three years ago, before there were any circuit courts established in those northern and middle districts. In the present state of the law, the parties in the northern and middle districts desire that the causes which arose there should be sent back to the circuit court in those districts for trial, they having been transferred when there was no circuit court in the northern and middle districts. That being all there is of the bill, and the court being just about to sit, as these cases have been suspended so long, I ask unanimous consent to report this bill, and have it considered at this time.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It provides that all civil causes, actions, suits, executions, pleas, process, or other proceedings whatsoever which were transferred by the act of Congress approved March 3, 1873, from the district courts of the United States for the northern and middle districts of Alabama into the circuit court for the district of Alabama, at Mobile, and which are now pending in that circuit court, shall be transferred from the circuit court at Mobile into the circuit courts of the United States for the northern and middle districts, respectively.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COUNTING OF ELECTORAL VOTES.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 1345, revising and amending the various acts establishing and relating to the Reform School in the District of Columbia.

Mr. THURMAN. If it gives rise to no discussion, I shall not object.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I presume there will be no opposition to the bill, and there are some reasons why it should pass immediately.

Mr. THURMAN. I understand from the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MORTON] that he desires to leave the Chamber soon, and I hope therefore we shall proceed with the electoral bill. I shall not occupy more than ten minutes of the time of the Senate, I think, and there will be ample time after that to take up the bill of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question before the Senate is the motion of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] to reconsider the vote by which the bill (S. No. 1) to provide for and regulate the counting of votes for President and Vice-President, and the decision of questions arising thereon, was passed.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I shall not enter into a discussion of the general subject of this bill on the motion to reconsider, but will simply state the reasons which induced me to make the motion. I have, if it is proper to state it, a very firm conviction that if this bill should go to the House of Representatives with no larger majority than that by which it was passed, with the votes of a very large majority of one of the parties in this Chamber against it, it would not pass the House of Representatives, and the result would be that no law on the subject would be passed. I have said again and again that I think some law on this subject ought to be passed, and I have made the motion to reconsider because I think so, and because I believe that if the bill goes to the House as it has been voted upon, it will not become a law and, in fact, no measure for this purpose will become a law at this session. I wish the vote to be reconsidered in order that one more attempt may be made in the Senate to harmonize the views of Senators upon this measure. I believe that if the Senate by a substantially unanimous vote were to approve a measure it would most likely become a law, and I am not without hope that that unanimity of opinion upon a measure like this, which ought not in any sense to be considered a party measure, may be procured. It is very obvious that the reason why there was so large a vote against this measure was the omission of the bill to provide any ultimate umpire or arbiter or tribunal to decide in cases where there were two or more returns from a State. That omission in the bill was considered by a large number of Senators to be an invitation in fact, or that it would operate as an invitation, to bad men in some of the States to make a second return from those States, and thus produce the case mentioned in the second section of the bill. And it was the fear that it would be so considered and so acted upon, and that we should have from some of the States perhaps, and States whose votes might affect the general result, two returns, and that then the operation of the bill might be to deprive those States of their electoral votes altogether—it was that consideration, I am quite sure from the debate, which led so many Senators to oppose the measure, because upon the main question as to the right of Congress to legislate upon this subject the votes showed that an overwhelming majority of all parties concurred in that right. It was not upon constitutional grounds that the bill was opposed to the extent that it met opposition, but it was upon the ground and the sole ground that here was a fatal omission in the bill, the effect of which might be to deprive States of their electoral votes

Now, if that fatal omission can be supplied, if some mode fair and just and within the scope and the spirit of the Constitution can be adopted which shall remedy that omission and thus perfect the bill, it is my belief that the bill will receive almost or quite the unanimous support of the Senate; and, receiving that, will become a law. But I do very much fear that if the bill go to the House of Representatives upon the vote that has already been taken, instead of being amended in the House it will simply be defeated, and we shall never have any committee of conference upon the subject and the measure will be wholly lost. If I could see that the bill would be amended in the House and that the result would be a conference committee between the two Houses, I should greatly prefer that, because then each House would be represented in framing this great measure; but I very much fear that would not be the result, and therefore I am anxious that one more effort should be made in this body, where discussion and deliberation still prevail, to perfect this measure which in my judgment ought to be perfected and then ought to be passed.

This is all that I have to say. Upon the general subject of the bill I have already expressed my opinion, both at this session and at a former session, as fully as I desire to do. It is true that since the vote was taken upon this bill I have discovered, or there have been pointed out to me, some very instructive proceedings in Congress more than three-quarters of a century ago upon this very subject, proceedings that I think might be read and studied with great advantage by every Senator; but it would take up too much time to go into them now. If, however, the vote shall be reconsidered, then I shall feel it to be my duty to lay those proceedings before the Senate for its consideration.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio voted for this bill, and is its friend; but I think he is mistaken in supposing that any good is to be attained by the reconsideration, and by making another effort in the Senate. If the House of Representatives does not like this bill, it can amend it. If it is in favor of any bill at all, it can put the bill into the shape that suits it; and if the Senate disagrees to that, it will then go to a committee of conference, and there the matter can be adjusted; and that will realize the first motion made by the Senator from Delaware, who wanted it considered by a joint committee. I think the only way of getting it before a joint committee is by a committee of conference; and I have faith to believe that, whatever may be the first action of the House of Representatives, the two Houses will finally come together in that way.

But, Mr. President, I must take occasion to express my surprise at the vote which was taken on this bill. I certainly supposed it was as far above party considerations as any bill that could possibly be brought into this body. I could not comprehend how there could be any partisan feeling about it, or any partisan interest one way or the other; and when I found that the vote was comparatively a party vote almost, I was surprised.

The argument in favor of reconsideration on the part of the Senator from Ohio is that the majority for the bill was not large enough. That is rather a novel argument for the reconsideration of a bill. What is the point in dispute? There was but one, substantially but one point of disagreement, and that was upon the second section. That was in regard to a case where there were two returns from a State, and the two Houses did not concur in adopting one return as being the lawful return—a very remote contingency. I, having faith in men and faith in parties and in the final integrity and patriotism of all parties, will be slow to believe that in a case of that kind the return which is the true and lawful return will not receive the sanction of both Houses, although the parties controlling the two Houses may be different. I am not willing to believe that there is in either party of this country such an absence of patriotism as to do great violence to the rights of the people of the States and to the Constitution in a case like that; and hence the contingency that has alarmed so many has not alarmed me. In such a contingency as that it should be subject to the decision of both Houses, just like every other great question of legislation that comes before Congress.

Since that vote was taken a circumstance has been brought to my knowledge, a historical fact which I am sure will surprise and astonish this country when it is made known. The discovery was made by another Senator and I shall not state what it is; but it shows the overwhelming importance of some action upon this point.

Mr. BAYARD. Will the Senator state the nature of it?

Mr. MORTON. I will not give the name of the Vice-President or the names of the parties concerned; but it was where a Vice-President was counting the vote, himself being a candidate, and he counted a false or null return in his own favor, a return that was no return at all. The facts are in the possession of the Senator from Vermont. But it is just one of those things that at any time might occur when a man is to be the judge in a case where he is a party interested.

Mr. President, I hope this vote will not be reconsidered, for I have but very little expectation that anything will ever come of it. It seems on the part of a majority of our friends on one side of the Chamber there was but one arbitrament that they would accept. If I remember the vote, eighteen distinguished Senators, representative men of their party, voted to make the House of Representatives, voting by States, the umpire in deciding upon a question of that kind. It was simply going back a hundred years in this Government; it was simply going back to the confederation where every question was decided in the Congress of the confederation, not by representatives of States, but by States, each State having one vote. This proposition, so far from showing any progress, is retrogression, a retrogression of one hundred years. If that is the only arbiter that can be accepted, I am sure it will never meet with my approval.

I think it is better all around to let this bill go to the House of Representatives and let the democratic majority there fix up such a bill as will meet with their approbation. If it comes back here and and we cannot agree to it, let it go to a committee of conference. I am sure that the House will see the necessity of doing something, and the only argument my friend offers is that the majority here for the bill was not large enough. It is a bigger majority than you will get again. My opinion is that if this bill is now reconsidered that will be the end of it.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, I have stated to the Senate too often to make it necessary for me to repeat now my sense of the very great importance of this measure or of a measure satisfactory in its nature and its results upon this most important subject. I shall vote in favor of the motion of the Senator from Ohio to reconsider the vote by which this bill was passed by the Senate, because, if it has no other effect, it will lead to a prolonged consideration of a subject that it seems to me thus far has had what I must think a wrong view taken of it.

I regret that the Senator from Indiana should be so thoroughly possessed at all times, as it seems to me, with an idea of distrust and almost of dislike for the very name of State existence or the exercise of State power or the recognition of State individuality. Why, sir, it seems to me that he is forgetting constantly the very federal nature of our system; and everything that tends to give a State individuality, to allow it to act as one of the units in our Union, is distasteful to the Senator. Why should he say it was retrogression; why should he say that it was advancing backward, to intrust a question so vital as the decision of the people in the choice of their Chief Executive Magistrate to the tribunal deliberately selected by those who framed the Constitution, in the event of a majority of the electoral votes not being ascertained at the first count to be in favor of one of the candidates? Why, Mr. President, if it be true that there was a more distinctive recognition of separate State existence under the old Articles of Confederation, yet that was known to have its uses. It was known as a practice, worthy of recognition when, after their experience as a Confederacy, the States resolved themselves into a Union under a national form of government and carried into that, on this very subject which we are now considering, the recognition of the right and power of the States, as separate communities, each voting individually, to elect a President in case a majority of the electoral votes should not be found to be in favor of any one candidate. In the present case it was proposed by an amendment offered by my friend from Tennessee, [Mr. COOPER,] and subsequently renewed by me, and on both occasions, I am sorry to say, rejected by the Senate, that in the event of the two Houses of Congress not having reached that happy condition of mind which enabled them to judge totally irrespective of partisan bias in respect to candidates, the two Houses failing to agree as to which of two returns should be counted by the tellers in calculating the electoral vote, then, in the event of that disagreement, the House of Representatives, following the analogies of the Constitution as expressly declared, should, voting by States, become the arbiter between the two Houses who had failed to agree.

Mr. President, look at it. I do not say that the Senator from Indiana is oversanguine; but I am afraid that he is oversanguine in supposing that that day of political millennium has arrived in which he and his party friends or I and mine shall be able to look at facts imbued with all the color of party feeling and yet decide them as though we were entirely indifferent to the result of our decision. Why, sir, there have been too many votes lately cast in this body—need I refer to the unhappy and discreditable case of the State of Louisiana in which we saw what party would do or what party could do? I do not refer to it for the purpose of suggesting whether on one side or the other the blame or the merit lay. I only state the facts as they exist, facts that astonished me, holding my views, that persons could so be blinded by political prejudices to the extent that perhaps they thought I myself was. But so it is that it would be in my opinion a very dangerous experiment to submit to the two Houses of Congress a question for their separate and distinct decision, the result of a difference in opinion between them being the total disfranchisement of one or more of those political communities that form this Union.

Sir, what must be the feeling of the citizens of a disfranchised community? Bring it home to yourself, sir, (Mr. WALLACE in the chair,) a citizen of the honored Keystone State of this Union. Suppose there a dissatisfied minority, not accepting the results of an election, should meet and go through the form of a count of electoral votes and send forward a certificate, so that from Pennsylvania a double return should be made to the presiding officer of the Senate, and then came the question of counting them, the vote of that State determining the contest, what would be the feeling of every citizen of that State to find that the voice of Pennsylvania was absolutely silenced in a contest of that kind, when her vote would have been productive of a decision complete and final on the subject? Why, sir, it must be dissatisfaction. It cannot be satisfactory to any man who will look at the matter in advance; and, therefore, the very gross defect of the bill as it passed the Senate is that, contemplating just such a difference of opinion as that, it provides no arbitration to settle it. The Constitution has provided and to-day provides for an arbitration where the original electoral vote has failed to contain a clear majority in favor of one or the other of the candidates. Is it not analogous, not simply to the Constitution, but is it not analogous and amenable to reason, justice, propriety, expediency, that we should have an arbitration created and accept that as an arbitration which has been suggested by the Constitution to us for the decision of this very question?

Mr. President, I do not see that it is out of order, but perhaps it may be inopportune to have gone into a discussion of this question, so deeply interesting, at this time. If there has been party feeling in the vote cast upon this bill I sincerely regret it. The Senator from Indiana, however, will agree with me in saying that there was no party feeling exhibited in the debate which preceded the vote. There was at least that feature which I am sure was a grateful one in this Chamber.

Now, sir, I do not know that a reconsideration of this vote and a re-argument of the question before the Senate will change opinions; and yet at the same time I can but remark at the present time what I have often observed before, that here, in the face of a matter of the most vital importance, confessedly so, not more than one-third or one fourth of the seats in this Chamber are filled by their proper occupants; and so it was before. I believe, could the fact be ascertained, that not more than one-half of the members of the Senate who voted pro and con on the proposition of the Senator from Indiana heard the debate that preceded it or could, it seems to me, have given much attention to the subject. It is, therefore, with a view of provoking, if possible, their attention to this matter, of making their vote even more deliberate than it was before, that I shall vote for the reconsideration of the vote by which this bill passed the Senate.

I did believe and still believe that it would have been wiser to commit this whole matter, in advance of any expression of opinion of either House, to a joint select committee, selected for the purpose of coming together in a proper non-partisan tone for the settlement of this great question. Still it has been the pleasure of the Senate to choose another course: and now the opportunity may arise by a committee of conference to meet somewhat the object which I originally proposed. But still, sir, as I was one of those who did not concur in the action of the Senate and believe still that there should be further consideration before we come to adopt as a measure, by a vote of the Senate, that which I scarcely believe will meet the approval (judging from the color of the vote) of the other House of Congress, believing that every effort should be made, dispassionately made, to arrive at a proper solution, I trust the Senator will consent to have this vote reconsidered.

Mr. MORTON. No Senator, Mr. President, was more gratified at the tone and character of the debate on this bill than myself, for there was no partisan feeling in it. There was no indication that there was any party interest in the question, and hence my surprise when the vote was taken. As the Senator from Delaware says, the bill did not appear to excite a very great degree of interest, and yet it is fraught with the very deepest interest to the country. If we shall adjourn without passing some bill upon the subject, we shall have left the seed of a revolution to grow. You will then have left this great power, that you are now not willing to trust to the two Houses because they may not agree, to the decision of one man. That is the practical result of it, because when we come together to count the votes next February, if there be no law and no rule upon the subject, none can then be made. You cannot then make a rule and agree upon any plan to meet these difficulties. You have then got to decide it as it was in 1857, as it was in 1801, as it was in 1805, and in 1825, by the President of the Senate. The returns that he presents will be counted and those that he withholds will be withheld, and there will be no remedy. You are simply voting to leave this to the decision of one man, because, as I said, when the time comes you can then make no law nor agree upon any rule. As there will be no remedy, it must be left just where it has been from the beginning, to the decision of the Vice-President of the United States, and as one Vice-President did count a vote in his own favor where there was no return the same thing may be done some time in the future.

I do not propose to go into an argument upon this question. It is one of a most important character. We cannot have a subject demanding more important consideration before us at this session. If we desire to have a law to avoid this danger, let the bill go to the House and let the House put upon it just such amendments as it chooses. Then we can come together in a committee of conference and we can agree upon some measure I doubt not. If the vote is to be reconsidered and if the bill is never to go to the House until you get a bill that can be carried by a big majority here, you may just as well give it up. I have no more interest in it than anybody else. It is a matter of no personal importance to me over any other Senator, and I have no feeling about it.

Mr. MERRIMON. Suppose the House should reject the bill, then we could have no conference at all.

Mr. MORTON. That would be because they do not intend to pass any bill. If they should do that, it would be simply saying, "We intend to leave this thing just where it is now." It will be in their power to frame any measure they choose. They can put the bill in such a shape as to refer the decision of the question to the House voting by States, if they choose, and then we can come together in a committee of conference and agree possibly upon some measure. If they should choose the House to be the umpire, as eighteen Senators in this body voted solidly to do, we can then come together and consider the matter; but if they pass nothing it is simply saying that they do not want any bill; and of course that would be the end of it.

Mr. EATON. I should like to ask the Senator from Indiana a question. I understood him to say that a Vice-President of the United States counted a vote that was fraudulently returned. Did I understand him correctly?

Mr. MORTON. I did not mean to say that.

Mr. EATON. Will the Senator state again what he said?

Mr. MORTON. I undertake to say that the return-lists will show that the Vice-President counted a vote in his own favor where there was no certificate of return; where there was simply a certificate by the governor of a State of the election of certain persons as electors, and on the back of the return was a little table, not signed by anybody, not certified to by anybody, stating that so many votes for one man and so many votes for another had been cast.

Mr. EATON. Will the Senator inform the Senate who that Vice-President was?

Mr. MORTON. I will not make that statement now. There is a Senator here who has the record in his possession.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, the conclusion to be drawn from the remarks of the Senator from Indiana is that the votes cast on this side of the House in opposition to the bill which he reported were governed by partisan considerations. In reference to the main question which was under consideration, the constitutionality of this bill, the power of Congress to pass laws and make the provisions contemplated by the bill, I was with the Senator from Indiana. I submitted my views upon that point, and they were in harmony with his own. I believe that a majority of the members on this side of the Chamber concurred with the view of the Senator from Indiana as to the power of Congress to make provision for counting the electoral votes. But there were provisions in the bill which we did not like. I was fully impressed with the importance of making some provision for ascertaining the vote of the people of this country in reference to the election of President, believing that it ought to be done at the present session. I tried in my humble way to so shape the bill that it should be perfectly fair and right, proposing such amendments to the bill reported by the Senator from Indiana as I believed would accomplish that purpose. There was a positive provision in the bill as it passed the Senate for throwing out the vote of a State. I was unwilling to commit myself by my vote to the provisions of any bill which provided affirmatively for the rejection of the vote of a State. There is no such provision as that in the Constitution, and I was unwilling to assume the responsibility of voting for a bill which affirmatively provided for throwing out the vote of a State.

Mr. MORTON. Let me suggest to my friend on this point that the bill cannot be said to make provision for throwing out the vote of a State, but it simply provides for the decision of a question arising upon the vote of a State. In the absence of the bill you let the matter stand just as it is now. When we come to count the votes next February, if there are two returns one of those returns must be rejected. It must be rejected by somebody. Who will be that person? It will be the President of the Senate. Nobody else can act upon it because there would be no rule under which anybody else could act. You cannot frame a law then. He may select the wrong return. In such a case the bill provides that the right return shall be selected by the two Houses, and if the matter is so doubtful and so obscure that the two Houses cannot agree upon it, then, as a matter of necessity, in the very nature of the case, it goes out. That is all there is of it.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I contend, nevertheless, that a fair interpretation of the bill proves this to be an affirmative provision that upon a certain contingency the vote of a State shall not be counted. To such a proposition I was unwilling to commit myself. I am aware that grave difficulties may arise if the matter is left to stand as it is now. I would prefer therefore to remedy it, and I will assist the honorable Senator from Indiana in shaping the provisions of a bill that shall provide for every possible contingency in order to secure to the people of every State in the Union a voice in the election of the Chief Magistrate. I was as anxious as the Senator from Indiana that some provision should be made in regard to this matter; I feel the importance of such a provision fully as much as the Senator from Indiana; and I tried in my humble way, as honestly as the Senator from Indiana tried, to make some provision. It was because, and only because, the bill of the Senator from Indiana did not do what I in my judgment thought it ought to do, because it did not provide for the counting of the votes of every State in the Union, that I cast my vote against the bill. I was governed by no party consideration. It is a question that ought to rise infinitely above party feeling and party interests. It addresses itself to the nobler sentiments of our being, and we ought not to be governed by party interests in it. I hope that no inference will arise from the remarks of the Senator from Indiana that the democratic party in the Senate was governed in the vote it cast by anything of party consideration. We were governed by the fact that the Senator's bill did not make proper provisions for ascertaining the popular will in reference to the choice of the people for President of the United States.

I hope the motion of the Senator from Ohio will prevail so that fair and proper consideration may be given to this subject and some proper provision made for securing to the people of every State in the Union their just voice in determining the election of a President.

Mr. THURMAN. I have but a word more to say before the vote is taken. I think I have never heard a discussion in the Senate on any great public measure that was freer from anything like party than was the discussion on this bill. There was not an allusion on any side that could be considered in any sense partisan. The Senator from Indiana is greatly mistaken if he supposes that party feeling dictated the vote upon this bill. There were republican Senators as well as democratic Senators who voted against the bill—republican Senators of great distinction, and of great ability, and of great experience. There are Senators on this floor who rather than leave open the possibility of a State losing her vote would prefer that it should be decided by the President of the Senate. They would rather trust to one man to decide the grave question of which return should be counted, and leave it to his conscience, his honor, his official responsibility to the American people, than leave it open to any possibility that a State should be disfranchised.

It cannot be denied that the bill does make a possibility of depriving a State of any voice in the election. The Senator from Indiana says that it is a misfortune that cannot be avoided where a tribunal that is to decide is unable to form its judgment; but there are Senators here who would, as I said before, follow the early usage of the country and let the President of the Senate, though opposed to them in political sentiment, decide the question, rather than open the door to the possibility of depriving a State of her voice in the election of a President. That is the reason which induced so large a vote against the bill. This reason and the belief that, although no such thing was intended, although any such idea was the farthest possible from those who supported the bill, yet that bad men might take advantage of the second section of the bill, and, taking advantage of that, send up double returns for the very purpose of depriving a State of its voice in the election of President, induced the large vote that was cast against this bill. I do not believe that men ever voted from more patriotic impulses in the world than actuated those Senators who voted against this bill. I voted for the bill. I voted for it although I considered it imperfect. I voted for it in the hope that it would be amended in the House of Representatives; but when I saw the large vote against it, I believed, as I still believe, it will not be by amendment there in all probability that this measure will be perfected. We cannot conceal the fact that the Senate of the United States is alone the department in this Government in which there is full and free and unrestrained discussion. I say this not to reproach any other department of the Government, but because from the very nature and necessity of the case such is the truth. A measure like this (and no greater measure can engage our attention than this very bill) ought, if possible, to be perfected here where there is deliberation and discussion without trammel and restraint. The Senator from Indina certainly knows that I moved to reconsider the vote on this bill in the most perfect good faith. I may be mistaken as to the effect of a reconsideration and he may be right; but I believe that I have the right view on the subject.

Allusion has been made to a circumstance which I perhaps would not have noticed if something had been said more definitely about it. It was said that a Vice-President of the United States once counted for himself the votes of a State without any return from that State. I have seen it stated in the newspapers that when his attention was called by the tellers to the fact he directed them to record the vote and then tore up the paper in order to prevent a detection of the fraud. I venture to say that that good man never committed any such fraud in this world; and, if there is any paper that is apparently insufficient of itself, it is not all the return that was before him at the time and that was counted. What is conclusive in the matter is that the vote of that State, if it had been rejected, would not have affected the result in the slightest degree. The election would still have been determined by the House of Representatives, for there was no choice by the people. Therefore, he could have had no possible inducement to count for himself the vote which they say he counted without any return. Does anybody doubt how Georgia voted on that occasion? Is there any pretense that she did not vote as her vote was recorded? Is there any pretense, or can there be, that if her vote had been rejected it would have affected the result? She would still have the right, when the President came to be elected by the House of Representatives, to cast her vote. It is of no use to conceal the name of this great man who is charged with this offense. It is no less a man than he whose hand wrote the Declaration of Independence. It is no less a great name than that of Thomas Jefferson that is impugned in this way. It is no less a man than he who at this late day is charged with having counted in his own interest the vote of a State without any evidence whatsoever that it had been cast for him. O, no, Mr. President, it will not do now to make such a charge. I await the production of the evidence upon that subject, and when it shall be produced I venture to say that nothing that impugns the integrity or the honor of that man will be found to exist. But this is apart from the question.

I grant, as fully as the Senator from Indiana can argue, that there is danger. I grant, as fully as he can assert, that the President of the Senate ought not to be the man to count the vote, he himself being interested. I read the Constitution as he reads it, that the duty of the President of the Senate is to open the votes, and not to count them. I know the precedents when he did count them, in support of his counting them. I understand all that; but I know too, I think, the value of precedents where there was no contest and where there was no question. I therefore agree, as the Senator knows, with him in his view of the constitutional power of Congress to regulate this matter; and I urged, therefore, the passage of his bill. I did so at the last session as well as at this, and I hope that it may yet be passed; but I say to him in all frankness that I do not believe that any measure which, so to speak, creates a possibility of depriving a State of her voice in the election of President can pass this Congress.

Mr. MORTON. I did not intend to impugn the motive of any Senator who voted for any amendment to which I referred or who desires to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed. All I said was that I was surprised at the final vote in view of the general tone of the discussion. I think I was no more surprised than my friend from Ohio, and perhaps not so much as he was. The Senator says that no bill can become a law that leaves a possible contingency by which a State can be deprived of a vote. I tell my friend that we can pass no bill that will not leave such a contingency. He said he would rather leave it to the presiding officer of the Senate to decide. Can we compel the presiding officer of the Senate to decide? Suppose there are two returns, and the presiding officer says, "I will not take the responsibility of deciding between these two returns; I will refer the matter to the two Houses," a thing the presiding officer of this body often does; you cannot make him decide it. And then, if the two Houses, having no knowledge about it, cannot decide it, if they separate and vote by common consent, they may not agree, and in that case the vote is lost. How will you prevent the vote from being lost in that case? In the very amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. JOHNSTON] to refer the decision of this question to the House of Representatives voting by States, there were two possibilities for the votes of States to be lost. I have that amendment here. In voting by States the amendment provides:

> But if the representation of any State shall be equally divided, its vote shall not be counted.

As a matter of course, if you vote by States and the State has two, four, or six Representatives, and they are equally divided, the vote of the State is lost.

Mr. WITHERS. O, no; the vote of the State in deciding the question in the House is lost; but the vote of the State is not necessarily lost in the election of President.

Mr. MORTON. Precisely, the vote of the State in deciding that question, and who will decide the other question?

Mr. WITHERS. That is very remote indeed.

Mr. MORTON. I will bring the question right home to my friend from Virginia. Suppose it is referred to the House under the amendment of his colleague. The House is to decide which of two returns shall be counted and to decide by a vote by States. Suppose the States are equally divided; I ask him if the vote of the State is not lost then?

Mr. WITHERS. That is a more remote contingency, possibly, than the other.

Mr. MORTON. If you come to count contingencies, that may be a little more remote; but my friend from Ohio says that no bill can pass which will leave that contingency open. I say you cannot pass a bill which will not leave that contingency, and that contingency is not so very remote either. When you come to decide it there may be half a dozen States which will lose their votes in deciding it. I call my friend's attention to the fact that when the President was first elected by the House in 1801 there were three States that were deadlocked from the first to the thirty-sixth ballot, and then they were only released from the deadlock by one member dodging and the other two changing their votes.

Mr. RANDOLPH. The Senator from Indiana has said three or four times in the course of this short debate that Congress cannot pass a bill that will provide for every contingency. He has not said that Congress has had no opportunity of passing a bill so framed as to provide for every contingency. I beg to remind the Senator that during the previous discussion I presented an amendment which provided for every difficulty, and the Senator not only voted against it, but, as I believe, spoke against it. If the opportunity is offered, I propose to renew that amendment. I propose to do that which he claims he desires to do, that is, to provide that in no contingency shall the people of a State be disfranchised.

Mr. MORTON. What was my friend's amendment? Will my friend read it?

Mr. RANDOLPH. The amendment has almost passed out of my mind, because the debate occurred some time ago.

Mr. MORTON. Has my friend his amendment?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I have a portion of it here. The copy that I finally presented is not now in my possession, but the substance of my amendment is here. In substance it is this:

> Should the two Houses of Congress, acting separately, fail to agree as to which is the true and valid return of a State, then, and in that event only, the President of the Senate shall render a decision of the question, and such rendition shall be in favor of that return of a State which shall have received a majority of all the votes cast in both Houses of Congress, considered as if both Houses had cast their votes in joint meeting assembled.

I submitted the amendment at first in this form, and it was afterward put in a better shape, a copy of which I have sent for.

Mr. MORTON. I have it here.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Has the Senator from Indiana the last one?

Mr. MORTON. My friend from New Jersey thinks he has found the method by which the vote of a State shall not be lost in any contingency, and he provides that where there are two returns "such rendition shall be in favor of that return of a State which shall have received a majority of all the votes cast in both Houses of Congress, considered as if both Houses had cast their votes in joint meeting assembled," counting so many votes in the Senate and so many votes in the House, and then adding them together as if they had all been cast in one body, and that return which has a majority of all the votes cast is to be adopted. Suppose there is a tie; in that case no return is adopted, and the vote of the State is lost on my friend's own hypothesis.

Mr. RANDOLPH. In the amendment, which is not now in my hand—the one that was finally substituted for that which I have just read—I provided for that very contingency, leaving the President of the Senate to give the casting vote in that exceedingly remote contingency. I regret very much that I could not obtain the Senator's attention upon that subject. I tried very hard, but he seemed to be wedded to his own plan so that he appeared to me to listen very little to the suggestions of others.

Mr. MORTON. My friend proposed to leave it in that case to the determination of the President of the Senate. If he should be a President pro tempore, as is the case now, he would vote originally and his vote would be counted in the vote of the State, and then if he decided as President pro tempore he would vote on it again. He might refuse to exercise the extraordinary power of voting twice on the same thing. My friend from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] suggests that he may himself be a candidate for President or Vice-President and it would place him in a very delicate position. He would not want to be embarrassed and might decline to vote at all.

Mr. RANDOLPH. The difficulty is that there are so many gentlemen in this body who are in that condition that we can pass no bill that will not be surrounded with some such difficulty as the Senator has suggested. [Laughter.]

Mr. MORTON. I appreciate that difficulty, because my gaze falls upon about twenty-five distinguished gentlemen over here who are all in that condition, and I should think they would desire to avoid the embarrassment which may arise from being called upon to decide in that case. [Laughter.]

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, I gave the bill to count the electoral vote as much care and deliberation conscientiously as I was capable of. I regarded the bill as the most important that has been before the Senate during the present session. I think so yet. The bill as originally presented and as it passed the Senate does contain a defect which was made manifest to everybody during the progress of the discussion. If the two certificates are presented and the two Houses disagree, one voting for one certificate and the other voting for the other certificate, both coming from the same State, then according to the bill as it passed the vote of that State is lost. Various propositions were presented to cure that defect. I had the honor of presenting one myself. The Senator from Indiana states that no proposition could come up that would cover every possible contingency. With all deference to the opinion of the distinguished Senator, it does seem to me that the amendment which I presented covered any sort of contingency. That was that where the two Houses disagreed, one voting for one certificate and the other for the other, the Vice-President should give the casting vote. A great many of my friends were so very fearful of the power of the Vice-President that they placed themselves in this condition, in my humble judgment, that by refusing to give him a right to the casting vote in that contingency, (the only case in which he would have the power to cast a vote at all,) the result is that he counts the entire vote. That is my judgment about it; so that they practically, as the Bible says, "strain at a gnat and swallow a camel." That is in my judgment the result of voting down that amendment. But I was not wedded to that amendment, as I stated. I wanted some amendment adopted that would cure that defect. I voted against the bill as it passed conscientiously, because I then believed, and now believe, that the bill as it passed is, though not designedly, an invitation to fraud; for if an election for President is coming to a close vote, and there is the slightest excuse for a State to send up two certificates, that State will send up two certificates—and we have a case directly in point where that might be done—and the vote thus sent up, if one certificate only were to come up, would turn the scale and elect a President. Then the result of sending up two certificates from that State will be that both will be ruled out, one House voting one way, and the other House the other way; and thus it would happen, under the bill as passed, that the voice of the people would not be heard in electing their President. For that reason I voted against the bill. It was not with me a party question. As I stated in the argument when that question was here before, it was a great constitutional question, rising high above and beyond all party considerations; and I should regard myself unworthy of a position on this floor if I were to permit party to control my vote in a matter where the great rights of the people were concerned in the selection of a President of the United States. So I can say for myself at least that I did all that my poor judgment could do to relieve the difficulty. I presented an amendment which I then thought would relieve that difficulty. The wisdom of the Senate saw proper to vote down that amendment, and the bill passed without any amendment. The bill contains a defect which, in my judgment, is an invitation to fraud unwittingly embodied in the bill. So believing I voted against it.

Mr. MERRIMON. Mr. President, I felt a very serious interest in the bill and gave it the most serious attention when it was before the Senate. I did not regard it from a party stand-point at all. The idea of party never entered into my consideration of it for one moment. My vote went upon the grounds that the Constitution charges Congress with the duty of counting the vote. I believe that Congress is as much charged by the Constitution with counting the electoral vote for President and Vice-President as it is charged to pass a revenue law or any other law; and, so believing, I was logically constrained to vote against every proposition which provided an umpire in the case of any difference between the two Houses. I cannot conceive a case in discharging the ordinary legislative duties of Congress, where the two Houses disagree about the passage of a bill, where Congress would have the power to provide an umpire to decide what amendments should be adopted and what amendments should be rejected, or what action of any character should be taken upon a bill passing between the two Houses. No more can I conceive of any possibility that Congress in counting the electoral vote shall provide that the President of the Senate, or the Chief Justice, or the Supreme Court, or any other tribunal shall decide whether the vote of a State should be accepted or rejected in that count. It is a duty that devolves upon Congress exclusively, after the President of the Senate, being the medium by which Congress comes in contact with the States, shall have opened the returns and laid them before it. It cannot escape the duty. I admit that I have some embarrassment about the question when two electoral returns shall be made from a State; but I cannot see that if the matter is permitted to remain as it is now we shall be free from that embarrassment, and it did seem to me that under the bill which was passed the possibilities of such a difficulty were so remote that we need not trouble ourselves a great deal about it. I had the honor to offer an amendment which I thought would relieve the difficulty. The judgment of the Senate, however, was against it. Still I was willing, though not entirely satisfied, to accept the bill as it passed. After having given the matter considerable deliberation since the bill passed, I have not come to any conclusion variant from that which I sanctioned by my vote. I should be willing to stand by that vote to-day, unless I thought the bill could be amended in such a way as to obviate the difficulty that we have all talked about so much. I hear no plan suggested by which that difficulty can be obviated. I do not see from anything that has fallen from Senators in this debate that we shall be in any other condition after the bill is reconsidered, if it shall be, than we were at the time the bill passed. If we had to vote again, I should give the same vote under similar circumstances. I am very sure I never could vote for an amendment which would provide an umpire. If, however, it is thought that by a reconsideration of the bill new light can be thrown upon the subject, and that we can come to a more definite and satisfactory conclusion, I have no objection to that, and without desiring to change my vote on the bill as it stands, I shall vote for the motion of the Senator from Ohio to reconsider, hoping that some amendment in the line of the view that Congress, and Congress alone, shall count the vote, may be adopted which will make it more satisfactory. Upon that ground alone I vote to reconsider.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Mr. President, the more I hear this discussion the more I am convinced that the amendment which I submitted to the committee's bill suggests the proper course to be pursued in order to meet the case in all its points. It is clear to me that Congress has a right to delegate to a court the power to decide as to the electoral returns where there is a dispute in regard to them. In the famous Rhode Island case to which I referred in the former debate it was decided by the Supreme Court of the United States that Congress had the right to refer a question of equal importance to a court. What was that case?

The fourth section of the fourth article of the Constitution of the United States provides that the United States shall guarantee to every State in the Union a republican form of government, and shall protect each of them against invasion, &c.

The court goes on to discuss the question, and says finally:

It rested with Congress, too, to determine upon the means proper to be adopted to fulfill this guarantee.

So here it is the plain duty of Congress to adopt measures which shall ascertain the will of the electors. The court goes on to say:

They might, if they had deemed it most advisable to do so, have placed it in the power of a court to decide when the contingency had happened which required the Federal Government to interfere.

So spoke the Supreme Court in the great case of Luther vs. Borden, uttering its voice through Chief Justice Taney in a decision which is still regarded as settled and fixed law. Now I say that the duty devolves upon Congress to see that the electoral returns are properly counted and that each State shall have its representation in the electoral college; and if any contingency arises which makes it advisable for Congress to impose the duty upon any court of this country to decide for them upon certain points involved in these returns, they clearly have the right to require that court to perform that duty. It seems to me that that comes precisely within the rule prescribed by the Supreme Court in the decision from which I have read. If, as the court there hold, Congress had a right to determine when it was necessary for the Government to interfere in a State under the guarantee clause of the Constitution; if, in other words, Congress had a right to delegate to a court of the United States the power to decide when the occasion for that interposition arose, then Congress certainly have the right to delegate to a court of the United States the power to decide as to which is the lawful return of the votes of electors from any State where two sets of returns from any one State are presented.

It seems to me that the decision to which I have referred is one of great importance. The case there spoken of probably is not of equal importance to the one under discussion, but there certainly can be no reason why all good citizens of the United States would not be satisfied with the decision of the Supreme Court in a case like this. As I said the other day, we have been in the habit of abiding by its decisions. Whether they accord with our own views upon the matters at issue we all acquiesce in their decisions. No safer or more impartial arbitrament can be selected, in my opinion.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, my friend from Rhode Island, before the conclusion of the former debate, had his attention called to this decision. The remark that he quotes as having been made by the court in that case was clearly outside of the case; but it does not refer to the question of the power of Congress to establish an umpire to decide the thing other than Congress itself. It refers to the question of fact when the contingency of fact had arisen of domestic violence, and as to that the court say incidentally, in passing:

They—

Congress—

might, if they had deemed it most advisable to do so, have placed it in the power of a court to decide when the contingency had happened which required the Federal Government to interfere. But Congress thought otherwise, and no doubt wisely, and, by the act of February 28, 1795, provided that "in case of an insurrection in any State against the government thereof it shall be lawful for the President of the United States, on application of the Legislature of such State or of the Executive, (when the Legislature cannot be convened,) to call forth such number of the militia of any other State or States as may be applied for, as he may judge sufficient to suppress such insurrection."

That was a case where the Constitution had not located the power of determining when the contingency of fact had happened; but Congress did vest the President with that power by the act of 1795–'96. I think the language of the court falls short of the principle my friend refers to, and it is mere obiter any how; it is not in the case at all.

Mr BURNSIDE. I am quite aware that the court made no decision on this question, but simply said that Congress might, if it chose, delegate this power. It did not delegate the power, I know, as the Senator from Indiana says; but the court said it might have delegated the power. I consider that a case of the kind now under consideration, of two returns from a State, is a question of fact just as much as the question to which the Senator from Indiana refers, and which the Supreme Court said Congress might delegate the determination of to a court.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. WALLACE in the chair.) The question before the Senate is, Shall the vote by which this bill passed be reconsidered?

Mr. STEVENSON. I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion to reconsider.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 31, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Bogy, Caperton, Cockrell, Conkling, Cooper, Davis, Dawes, Dennis, Eaton, Edmunds, English, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hamilton, Howe, Kelly, Kernan, Key, McCreery, Maxey, Merrimon, Norwood, Paddock, Randolph, Ransom, Saulsbury, Stevenson, Thurman, Wallace, and Withers—31.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Booth, Boutwell, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Clayton, Cragin, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Hamlin, Harvey, Ingalls, Jones of Nevada, Logan, McMillan, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Oglesby, Robertson, Sargent, and Windom—23.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Allison, Bruce, Christiancy, Conover, Dorsey, Hitchcock, Johnston, Jones of Florida, McDonald, Mitchell, Patterson, Sharon, Sherman, Spencer, Wadleigh, West, Whyte, and Wright—19.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to reconsider is agreed to. The question recurs on the passage of the bill.

Mr. MORTON. I give notice that I will call up the bill to-morrow.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The bill is before the Senate now. The motion should be to postpone it until to-morrow.

Mr. MORTON. That is to be done by common consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the understanding of the Chair.

Mr. SARGENT. I ask the consent of the Senate to take up House bill No. 1052, to correct an error in the Revised Statutes of the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. THURMAN. Before the electoral bill passes over, I wish to suggest that it cannot be amended without a further vote of reconsideration, which I suppose is a mere matter of form, and that is to reconsider the third reading. I make that motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is moved to reconsider the vote by which Senate bill No. 1 was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be regarded as postponed until to-morrow by common consent.

CREDITS TO SETTLERS ON PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. SARGENT. I move to take up the bill I have indicated.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 1052) to correct an error in the Revised Statutes of the United States, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill amends section 2403 of the Revised Statutes by striking out in the second line the word "seven" and inserting the word "one."

The Committee on the Revision of the Laws reported the bill with an amendment to strike out after "one," in line 11, the words:

And all credits to settlers for moneys deposited by them for surveys of lands, as provided by section 2401, allowed since the date of the approval of the Revised Statutes of the United States are hereby declared to be legal.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

And all proceedings under said section 2403 shall have the same force and effect as though enacted as herein amended.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SARGENT. Perhaps I should make a slight explanation of the bill before asking that it be passed. The Commissioner of the General Land Office in his last annual report called attention to the fact that in the revision of the United States laws a section had been named as 2407, when it ought to be named 2401. It affects the rights of settlers who under the law are entitled to deposit in the United States Treasury the cost of surveys of the lands where their homes may be, and subsequently to be credited with the amount of such deposit upon the price of the land. By the error made in the Revised Statutes this is rendered nugatory; that is to say, they make their deposits but cannot receive their credit. The result has been some considerable confusion both with reference to pre-emptions and town sites. He recommends that the change be made. The only change is to make a correct citation of the statute in the Revised Statutes. The bill has been favorably reported by the Committee on the Revision of the Laws and is a House bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

WESTERN AND ATLANTIC RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. GORDON. I move to take up the bill (S. No. 177) to authorize the Secretary of War to adjust and settle claims of the State of Georgia against the Government on account of the Western and Atlantic Railroad.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope the Senator will withdraw that motion. I offered a resolution, which was adopted by the Senate some days since, calling on the Secretary of War for detailed information respecting the transactions of the United States about this railroad, and I think we ought not to act upon the bill until we get that information. I ask the Senator from Georgia to let it go over for a very few days, until we can get that information.

Mr. GORDON. I have not the least objection to its lying over, but I think if the Senator will examine the book which I hold in my hand he will find that we have all the information that he asks for. However, it is scattered through the volume and it may be better to get it in a condensed form. I think we already have the information of the transactions of this road with the State, the amount of property turned over, the price the State paid for this property, the order under which it was done, &c.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We have a good deal of that, which was not unknown to me when I offered the resolution to which I have referred; but if the Senator will carefully examine the resolution he will find that it is designed to get from the War Department a supplement to what we already have, which will bear more precisely upon the precise point involved in this bill. The reports to which the Senator refers are perfectly familiar to the Committee on the Judiciary, who had bills of a similar character with this, respecting, I think, about six railways, two sessions ago, I believe, before them; and therefore the subject is not new to us at all. I thought in reading this bill that this information from the War Department it would be desirable to have, in order that we might perfectly understand the whole bearing of the case. I imagine, of course, that we shall get the information very soon indeed.

Mr. GORDON. I have no objection to letting the bill lie over for a short time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia withdraws his motion.

PAY DEPARTMENT OF THE ARMY.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I move to take up the bill (S. No. 126) to restore appointments and promotions to the Pay Department of the Army.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which proposes to repeal so much of section 1194 of the Revised Statutes as applies to the Pay Department of the Army, and to provide that the rank of Paymaster-General shall be restored to the grade of brigadier-general, and that his rank shall date from the day he entered on the duties of the office.

The Committee on Military Affairs reported an amendment to strike out "and the rank of the appointee under this act shall date from the day he entered on the duties of the office."

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does that section apply to anything else than the Paymaster-General?

Mr. BURNSIDE. No, sir; and the amendment that was reported by the committee makes the repeal take effect from and after the passage of this act.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Section 1194 of the Revised Statutes is as follows:

Until otherwise directed by law there shall be no new appointments and no promotions in the Departments of Adjutant-General, or of Inspector-General, or in the Pay, Quartermaster's, Subsistence, Ordnance, or Medical Departments.

The bill, I believe, provides that, as applied to the Pay Department, this whole section is repealed, which opens the whole Pay Department to promotions and appointments exactly as if this law did not exist. Does the Senator from Rhode Island intend that?

Mr. BURNSIDE. This bill is only for the purpose of making the Paymaster-General a brigadier-general. Nobody else can be promoted under it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not know about that. I should like to have the bill read once more.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the object of repealing this section, which applies to the whole Pay Department?

Mr. PADDOCK. Is it not necessary to repeal so much of the act as relates to the Paymaster-General?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Ah, I agree to that.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I think myself it would be well to amend the bill so as simply to repeal so much of the section as relates to the rank of the Paymaster-General.

Mr. LOGAN. I had not observed the bill; in fact, it was in the charge of the Senator from Rhode Island, and the committee agreed to let him report it and I did not examine it; but I am satisfied that the bill as reported will open the Pay Department to promotion. I should not have agreed to it if I had so understood it. Hence I suggest to the Senator, inasmuch as the intention of the bill is not to do that, that the bill be recommitted, and let him report it back again. He can do it to-morrow.

Mr. BURNSIDE. If the Senator from Illinois will allow me I will make one suggestion that may strike him as covering the case. It is that the bill be so amended as to say that so much of this section be repealed as refers to the rank of the Paymaster-General, and that the Paymaster-General may be a brigadier.

Mr. LOGAN. I would report the bill in a form providing that the head of the Pay Department shall hereafter be a brigadier-general; and that leaves this section stand just as it is, so as not to effect promotions.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I accept the suggestion of the Senator from Illinois, and I should be very glad to have the thing arranged.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator can report it to-morrow.

Mr. BURNSIDE. The Military Committee meet to-night, and it can be recommitted and attended to and reported back to-morrow, and I shall then call it up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is proposed that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs. Is there objection? The Chair hears no objection to that course, and the bill is recommitted.

MUTUAL FIRE-INSURANCE COMPANY.

Mr. INGALLS. House bill No. 700 lies on the table, it having been read three times and the question now being on its passage. I ask that the bill may be taken up and the vote taken. It is the bill to incorporate the Mutual Protection Fire-Insurance Company of this city.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A motion to reconsider was pending. The bill was rejected, and a motion to reconsider was made.

Mr. INGALLS. That motion was passed, and the bill returned to the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A motion to reconsider was entered, pending which request was made of the House of Representatives to have the bill returned in order to have the motion to reconsider attach to it; but the motion to reconsider was not considered, and it could not be until the return of the bill.

Mr. INGALLS. Then I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of that question.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the motion to reconsider the vote rejecting the bill (H. R. No. 700) to incorporate the Mutual Protection Fire-Insurance Company of the District of Columbia.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now recurs on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

DISTRICT REFORM SCHOOL.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1345) revising and amending the various acts establishing and relating to the Reform School in the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest to the Senator having charge of this bill that the bond of the treasurer is not large enough. I see it is only $5,000. From the very necessity of the case, it seems to me, considerable sums of money may be placed in the hands of the treasurer. I suggest the propriety of increasing the bond.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Does the Senator offer an amendment?

Mr. ALLISON. I think the bond ought to be larger. I submit that to the Senator.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The committee thought the amount of the bond was proper.

Mr. ALLISON. We are in the habit of making appropriations for this Reform School, and a considerable sum of money may be in the hands of the treasurer.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Probably this is a much larger amount than the treasurer will have in his hands at any one time.

Mr. ALLISON. Any one likely to be appointed treasurer could give a bond of $20,000 just as well as $3,000. I move to amend by striking out "$5,000" in line 5 of section 4, and inserting "$20,000" as the amount of the bond.

The motion was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

LEGAL TENDER OF SILVER COIN.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move to take up Senate bill No. 263 with a view at the end of to-day's session of leaving it as the unfinished business for to-morrow. It is what is commonly called the silver bill. I do this at the request of Senators who desire to speak to-morrow. I do not expect action to-morrow on the bill. I make the motion for their convenience, not to interrupt the business of to-day, but simply that the bill may be left as the unfinished business for to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio to take up the bill (S. No. 263) to amend the laws relating to legal tender of silver coin. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the bill is before the Senate, and will be regarded as left as the unfinished business at the end of to-day's session.

JAPANESE INDEMNITY FUND.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I move to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 626. It is the bill in relation to the Japanese indemnity fund.

Mr. COCKRELL. I must object to taking up that bill, and insist on calling the Calendar in regular order.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I move that the Senate proceed to consider the bill I have mentioned.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think we can soon reach that bill by taking up the Calendar regularly, and there are a number of other matters here that can soon be passed upon. They are accumulating on the Calendar; and it seems to me that we ought to work off some of the business.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. When the Calendar is called it is only for cases that are not objected to. This bill has been passed on the Calendar; and at the request of several Senators, especially those on the other side of the House, I call it up now. It may be that the bill wants more consideration than we can give it this afternoon; but I make the motion to take it up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Jersey.

The question being put, the Chair declared that the noes appeared to prevail.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. PADDOCK. I am satisfied that this bill will lead to a great deal of discussion, and I hope that my friend from New Jersey will not insist upon it at this late hour of the day. It seems to me that it would be better to let the bill go over until another day, so that we may take it up at an earlier hour and make a day's business of it. There are some bills less important which might be considered to-day, to which there can be no objection. I have one of that kind myself. I hope that we shall not be called upon to consider this bill at the present time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to proceed to the consideration of the bill in relation to the Japanese indemnity fund, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 30, nays 9; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Bogy, Burnside, Clayton, Cooper, Davis, Dawes, Dennis, English, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Gordon, Hamilton, Hamlin, Jones of Nevada, Kernan, Logan, McCreery, McMillan, Maxey, Merrimon, Morrill of Vermont, Randolph, Ransom, Robertson, Sargent, Saulsbury, Sharon, Sherman, and Windom—30.

NAYS—Messrs. Cameron of Wisconsin, Cockrell, Dorsey, Eaton, Goldthwaite, Hitchcock, Paddock, Spencer, and Withers—9.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Anthony, Bayard, Booth, Boutwell, Bruce, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Caperton, Christiancy, Conkling, Conover, Cragin, Edmunds, Harvey, Howe, Ingalls, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Kelly, Key, McDonald, Mitchell, Morrill of Maine, Morton, Norwood, Oglesby, Patterson, Stevenson, Thurman, Wadleigh, Wallace, West, Whyte, and Wright—34.

So the motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 626) in relation to the Japanese indemnity fund was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The first section authorizes the President to reserve from the Japanese indemnity fund the sum of $125,000, to be used in the manner hereinafter provided; and, if not incompatible with the relations of the United States to other powers, to pay over to the government of Japan the residue of the indemnity fund, including all accumulations of interest; or, after correspondence with that government, and in a manner satisfactory to it, to transfer the fund, together with its increase, to the government of Japan in trust, the income thereof to be perpetually used for the promotion of education in Japan.

The second section authorizes the President to ascertain the claims of the officers and crew of the United States ship Wyoming for bounty, ransom, or prize money on account of the destruction of piratical vessels on the 16th of July, 1863, in the Straits of Simonoseki; and also the claims of that portion of the officers and crew of the United States ship Jamestown who manned the Takiang in the bombardment of the hostile forts at the Straits of Simonoseki on the 5th, 6th, 7th, and 8th days of September, 1864; and if, in his judgment, they are found either in law or equity to be justly chargeable against this fund, then he is directed, in full satisfaction thereof, to cause $125,000, reserved from the indemnity fund, or such part thereof as in his judgment shall be just and equitable, to be distributed among the officers and crews in accordance with the laws and regulations governing the distribution of prize-money in the Navy of the United States. In this distribution no money is to be paid to the assignee of the mariner, but only to the mariner or his duly authorized attorney in fact, or, in case of his decease, to his legal representative, excluding any assignee. If after the satisfaction of these claims any part of the $125,000 reserved for this purpose shall remain unused, then he is further authorized to pay over to the Japanese government the remainder in the manner provided in the first section.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there a report accompanying the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is a report.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The bill as reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations contains this clause:

And is further authorized, if not incompatible with the relations of the United States to other powers, to pay over to the government of Japan the residue of said indemnity fund, including all accumulations of interest; or, after correspondence with said government, and in a manner satisfactory to it, to transfer said fund, together with its increase, to the government of Japan in trust, the income thereof to be perpetually used for the promotion of education in Japan.

Since the bill has been reported I have had an interview with the superintendent of education, Professor Murray, who went from this country, who has had communication with the representative of Japan here, and his impression is that it would be advisable not to employ that alternative condition; in which opinion I agree. I have spoken to a number of the members of the committee who also think that in returning this money we should return it without any qualification whatever. I think that is the better sentiment of all with whom I have conferred. Therefore I move to strike out in the first section all after the word "interest" at the end of the ninth line; which will have the effect of returning this money without any condition to Japan. My friend from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] asked whether there is a report. There is a full report accompanying the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to hear it read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report submitted by Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, March 22:

The Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom were referred the resolutions and the report of the committee on foreign commerce of the Chamber of Commerce of the city of New York, in reference to the Japanese indemnity fund, submit to the Senate the following report, and recommend the passage of the accompanying bill in reference to the same:

It is now more than twelve years since the occurrence which gave rise to this indemnity. The money composing this fund has been paid over to the United States at intervals during this period, and that portion not actually required to pay the damages and expenses for which it was stipulated has been invested in registered bonds of the United States and retained as a trust fund in the custody of the Secretary of State. After the payment of the claims which have been recognized as legally chargeable to this fund, it now amounts, with its interest accumulations, to over a million and a quarter of dollars. The subject of the disposition of this fund has from time to time been brought to the attention of Congress in the messages of the President and by memorials addressed to Congress, and the subject should now be disposed of. The essential facts bearing upon this question are as follows:

The treaties formed by Japan with the United States and with other foreign powers were the occasion of great political excitement and disturbance in Japan, and continued until the revolution of the government in 1868. The cause of this disturbance was the fear and suspicion of foreigners which prevailed among the people of Japan. For several centuries the country had been closed against foreign intercourse, and the people had been taught to regard the admission of foreigners as fraught with danger and as hostile to their prosperity. Hence when the Tycoon of Japan actually formed treaties of amity and commerce with these suspected foreigners, there arose such a tumult of excitement as finally resulted in a civil war and in the overthrow of his power. The government of Japan was a feudal aristocracy, in which the supreme military and executive authority was exercised by the Tycoon, and the details of local government by a number of territorial princes or daimios. These daimios were, in many cases, on account of their wealth and extensive possessions, almost independent rulers. And in this uprising against foreign intercourse several of the most powerful daimios took a leading and active part. Among these was the powerful prince of Chosin, whose territories bordered upon the Straits of Simonoseki, which connect the Japanese inland sea with the Chinese waters. He, in defiance of his government, and while that government was striving as well as it could to fulfill its treaty obligations, erected hostile batteries capable of commanding the straits, and announced his determination to prevent the passage of foreign vessels. In 1863 an American merchant-vessel, the Pembroke, when passing the straits was fired upon, but not injured, by the prince's batteries. In retaliation for this insult to our flag, the United States steamship Wyoming, under the command of Captain David McDougal, was dispatched to Simonoseki. He found there, besides the land-batteries, several vessels belonging to the prince. With great gallantry, and no little danger to his vessel and its crew, he attacked the vessels and sunk or destroyed two of them. Six of his crew were killed and several wounded in the action.

This insult to our flag was brought to the attention of the Japanese government by the American minister. They promptly disavowed the action of their rebellious vassal, and subsequently arranged with the minister for the settlement of the claim for damages on the part of the owners of the Pembroke. Shortly after the affair of the Pembroke, however, the prince, still defiant, fired upon vessels belonging to the French and the Dutch, who, in retaliation, also inflicted summary punishment. The affairs of the country were in so disturbed a condition and the power of the Tycoon was in such danger from his rebellious daimios that he could not and dared not send a sufficient force to put an end to the obstructions of the straits. To the foreign representatives he expressed his deepest regret for this and begged for additional time in which to put down the rebellion. And as the straits of Simonoseki were not necessary to the passage of commerce to and from the open ports of Japan, the delay would not have seriously interfered with the convenience of the foreign nations. But the representatives of the treaty powers resolved to take the matter into their own hands and do for themselves what the government could not undertake to do at once. They therefore dispatched a squadron of armed vessels, seventeen in all, to remove the obstructions to the passage of the straits. The United States having no steam-vessel in Japanese waters at that time, a small vessel, the Takiang, was chartered for the occasion, at an expense of $9,500. The squadron executed its commission with thoroughness and dispatch. The vessels and batteries were utterly destroyed and the prince himself compelled to make his submission.

Immediately after the return of the expedition, the representatives of the treaty powers held a conference with the ministers of the government, and presented to them a demand for damages and expenses, resulting from these transactions. The indemnity was fixed by the foreign representatives at $3,000,000. The share of the United States in this indemnity was subsequently fixed by the negotiations of the home governments, and we have received on this account $785,000, Mexican. The only claims known to exist against this fund which have not been already ascertained and settled are those of the officers and crew of the United States ship Wyoming and of that portion of the officers and crew of the United States ship Jamestown who manned the chartered ship Takiang in the allied expedition. On behalf of the claimants it is urged that, had the vessels and batteries which were destroyed by their actions been the vessels of an enemy, they would have been entitled to bounty or prize money under the laws of the United States, and that, while technically they were not the vessels of an enemy, and therefore they are not technically entitled by law to bounty or prize money, yet that, inasmuch as by these actions, which were attended with danger and loss of life, the United States became possessed of this large sum of money, they are in equity entitled to some share thereof.

Your committee, after a careful consideration of the above facts and of others bearing upon the case, have arrived at the following conclusions:

1. The acts for which this indemnity was exacted were not the willful acts of the Japanese government, nor were they approved or countenanced by it. They occurred during a period of great political disquiet, when the government found it impossible to control the rebellious actions of its subjects and to fulfill its treaty obligations.

2. The Japanese government is justly held responsible for the actual damages and expenses arising to the United States or to citizens of the United States out of these transactions. But it has never been the true policy of the United States to exact indemnities from weaker powers further than was necessary to cover actual outlay; and while the popular hostility to foreign intercourse and the desire to compel the nation to open up additional facilities for trade may have been at the time an excuse for fixing the indemnity at its stipulated amount, yet now, when the attitude and policy of Japan have undergone a complete change, it seems no longer just or magnanimous to exact from them a sum greater than actually needed.

3. Since Japan was opened to the intercourse of the world the United States have felt a genuine and commendable interest in the affairs of that country. They have watched with pleasure the wonderful movements in the development of her resources, in the education of her people, and in the assimilation of her laws and government to those of Christian nations. It is plainly the true policy of the United States to aid and encourage these movements, and we have, in the disposition to be made of this indemnity fund, an occasion, without any draught upon our own resources, to give to them an example of American justice and magnanimity which will be beneficial to both nations.

4. The conclusion of the committee is that Congress should in the first place provide for the final adjudication of any claims that may yet be unsatisfied against this fund. As doubts may still attach to the admissibility of the claims of the naval officers and crews above referred to, it is recommended that they be referred to the President for final settlement, and that a sum of money sufficient to cover these claims be reserved from this fund, and that the remainder of the fund, including its accumulations of interest, be paid over to the Government of Japan. To effect this object the committee report the accompanying bill entitled "A bill in relation to the Japanese indemnity fund," and recommend its passage.

Mr. HAMLIN. I wish to add a word only in relation to the motion which the Senator from New Jersey has submitted, to strike out so much of the bill as provides as an alternative in the return of this money that it shall be appropriated for educational purposes. I think I have a longer acquaintance, in committee at least, with the subject than my friend from New Jersey, and my recollection is very clear and very distinct that that alternative was originally incorporated from suggestions made that it would be more acceptable to the Japanese government. We now learn that it would be more acceptable to exclude it, and therefore for the very reason on which it originally went in it should now go out.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to ask the Senator from New Jersey why it is that it is more acceptable to the Japanese government that the money should be paid into their treasury?

Mr. KERNAN. They can apply it to educational purposes if they choose.

Mr. DAWES. I do not see any difficulty in their applying it, if it is in their treasury; but what assurance do we have that they will not devote it to the general current expenses of their government?

Mr. KERNAN. I beg to ask my friend if he thinks that having money in our hands that belongs to them we ought to impose any condition upon them in handing it back? I think our true duty is to say, "We have paid all our claims, and here is the residue of the money."

Mr. DAWES. That is a question that I do not desire to discuss now, because I have expressed my opinion on it elsewhere.

Mr. HAMLIN. If my friend from Massachusetts will allow me to answer him, I think I may do it with propriety. It was suggested as a point of honor, at one period of time, that the Japanese government would be disinclined to receive the money back in terms, but if our government would appropriate it to educational purposes it would avoid what might be regarded a point of honor. I believe they have gotten over that now, and say they will appropriate it as they please, if we will return it to them. That is the real truth about it.

Mr. THURMAN. If the Senator will allow me to make a remark, it does seem to me that it would be almost an insult to a foreign government for us to give them money which we admit to be theirs (for otherwise we have no right to give it to them) and then undertake to prescribe what they shall do with it.

Mr. HAMLIN. It was done at their own suggestion in the first place.

Mr. THURMAN. If any power should undertake to return us money which it found to belong to us, and at the same time assume to prescribe what we should do with it, I do not think that we would accept one cent of it. I am not disposed to treat any power, even the most feeble on the earth, (and Japan is not the most feeble,) in any such manner. I therefore have heard with great pleasure the motion of the Senator from New Jersey to strike this clause out of the bill. In regard to the bill, I think it proceeds upon the right idea. The second section commends itself to my approval. I have expressed my opinion upon this subject at previous sessions of the Senate. Here was a case in which a set of rebels against the Japanese government undertook to make war upon the commerce not only of the United States but of certain European powers in defiance of their own government, in defiance of treaty stipulations between those powers and Japan, and in defiance of the law of nations. They inflicted severe injuries upon an American vessel. Thereupon Commodore McDougal, in command of the American naval force in those seas, did precisely for the protection of American commerce what he was bound to do. I speak of him from forty years' knowledge of him, for he and I were school-boys together. Like a brave man as he was, he took the responsibility of acting without instructions, but his course has since been fully approved by his Government, and admitted to be correct by the Japanese government. He punished the pirates, if they can be so called, as they are called in the report, certainly rebels against the Japanese government, who, in defiance of the laws and treaties of their own government, and of the rights of foreign governments that had treated with them, undertook to destroy American, Dutch, and other commerce in those seas. Afterward the same punishment was visited upon them by the French and the Dutch.

Mr. HAMLIN. It was all done jointly.

Mr. THURMAN. It was a most gallant thing. It was wisely done; it was done in strict pursuance of the laws of the United States; but it so happened that, we not being at war with Japan at the time, the prize-money acts of Congress do not apply to this case in letter. In spirit they do; and so it has been recognized ever since. Six committees have reported in favor of allowing the officers and crews of the Wyoming and the Takiang such compensation as would have been allowed to those officers and crews had there been open war with Japan. The reason of the thing applies as much in this case as any other. That indemnity being furnished to our officers and crews, the residue of the fund belongs to Japan, because all our claims upon her government above that have been satisfied. It is simply consistent with justice, and with the dignity of this country, and its respect for the dignity of Japan, that the remainder of the fund should be returned to her without any condition whatsoever.

I therefore entirely approve of the motion made by the Senator from New Jersey, and hope that it will be adopted. Then with some verbal amendments which are necessary in the second section, and which I think will be made without objection, I hope that the bill may pass.

Mr. DAWES. Having made the inquiry I did, perhaps I ought to say that it was from no desire to throw any obstacle in the way of the bill, but because heretofore, in another place, I struggled very hard to get a bill passed that would pay this sum back to Japan upon the condition that it should be devoted to educational purposes. I happened to know then that it was in accordance with the desire of the Japanese government, and, indeed, I was impelled to do what I did do at the instance strictly of the agents of that government and those largely interested in education in that country. Seeing the motion made to strike out that clause and to give the money generally over to the Japanese government, I was led to make the inquiry I did. I understood then, as the Senator from Maine has already stated, that at that time it was necessary to have it appear that it was in some way to be appropriated by the authority of the Government of the United States, else the Japanese government taking it back would thereby confess that there had been something wrong in taking it, and would suffer harikari or something of that kind. It was to get around such a calamity as that that the method was first suggested. I am heartily in favor of paying the money back to Japan; and if Japan prefers to take it unconditionally, or if it is thought best to pay it in that way, of course so much the better.

There is another fund like this that I hope the Senator from New Jersey will, the moment he gets this bill through, exert himself to have acted on by the Senate, before it is all frittered away by claims that are generally, when there is no other fund upon which to quarter them, quartered either upon the Japanese or the Chinese fund. I hope he will not suffer any delay, and I will vote with him to take up any bill of that character in regard to the Chinese fund, after this is passed.

Mr. EATON. I agree entirely with the Senator from New Jersey, and I suggest to him that it would be well to strike out these words also:

If not incompatible with the relations of the United States to other powers.

It seems to me that we ought to know, before we legislate with regard to a matter of this sort, whether it would be compatible with the relations of the United States to other powers or not.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. As is well known, this fund which Japan paid was paid for the benefit of the French and the Dutch as well as of the United States. It is a matter of abundant caution that a clause is introduced into the bill that this money shall be paid over to Japan if it is not incompatible with the proprieties existing between us and those other nations which are interested in the general fund. My friend from Connecticut suggests that that ought to be ascertained before we legislate. I think not, with all deference to him. Our intercourse with those nations is through the executive department. We as a legislature can hardly hold intercourse with them to find out what their views are. We give this power to the Executive, and intrust to him, as we do in all our relations with foreign countries, the adjustment of this matter of delicacy between our nation and the French and the Dutch.

Mr. STEVENSON. I should like to ask the Senator from New Jersey a question. I see that the bill provides for the return of this fund with the accumulations of interest. Has this fund been drawing interest since we got it?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I understand that it has been a separate fund by itself, accumulating interest.

Mr. HAMLIN. That is so.

Mr. STEVENSON. I understand the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey is to strike out the clause relating to a fund for educational purposes?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. INGALLS. This money is ours, or it is not. It either belongs to the American Government rightfully, or it belongs to the Japanese government. If it is ours, we certainly ought to keep it. If it is not ours, we ought to return it without condition. It appears to me that the second section is defective and necessarily so in that it appears from the terms of that section that there is an unadjusted demand still existing upon this fund in the nature of prize-money due to the officers of certain vessels, which sum has not been ascertained. It seems to me that the better course would be to authorize the President to ascertain specifically the amount that is due out of this fund, and then direct that the balance, whatever it may be, shall be paid over to the Japanese government.

Mr. HAMLIN. That is substantially done already.

Mr. INGALLS. Why not put it in the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey to strike out lines 10, 11, 12, 13, and 14 of the first section.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EATON. I did not wish to encumber the amendment of the honorable Senator from New Jersey with an amendment, and now that it is agreed to I move to strike out in lines 6, 7, and 8 of section 1 the words:

If not incompatible with the relations of the United States to other powers.

I apprehend that there can be no question with regard to this matter. Certain moneys were paid to other powers and certain moneys to the United States. It strikes me that we have nothing to do with regard to the payment by the government of Japan to other powers. This is a matter between ourselves and the government of Japan, and I would not encumber a statute with language of this character. It does not seem to me to be proper.

Mr. THURMAN. I hope the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut will prevail. I hardly think it is consistent with the dignity of the United States or the right determination of a question which should depend simply upon principles of justice, that we should make it depend upon what our relations are with other powers. This is a very noble example that we shall set if we pass this bill. It is an example that will be commemorated in the history of this country as a proof of its justice, that when we received from Japan more than the indemnity was, we returned her the surplus. It ought to be returned upon strict principles of justice, and not with any regard whatsoever to our relations with other powers. It is a question simply of justice and right, and in no sense dependent upon our relations with other powers.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I think the bill would be equally effective perhaps if the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut should prevail, but I certainly think it is better that these words should remain. The money will be paid in the same way. As was said by the Senator from Ohio, we owe the money and we have the right to pay it, whatever other powers say about it. The fact is that here was a joint engagement in which the French, the Dutch, and the United States were concerned. The money was divided equally between the three. The sum was divided into three parts. It is very probable that the French and the Dutch really did not receive more than was indemnity for their injuries, for I understand that they did suffer much more than the United States. While this provision will not prevent our paying back the money, it seems to me that it is a more gracious manner of doing it to do it after conference with them. Still, I submit the question to the Senate.

Mr. STEVENSON. I hope the amendment will be adopted. I do not think we have anything to do with the other nations. This is a matter which peculiarly belongs to us. It is a matter of great delicacy and great propriety. The fund had to be divided ex æquo et bono. Suppose it should turn out that they did not agree with us; what then, I should like to know from the committee? Suppose, upon consultation, these two nations were to say, "We do not agree with you, and we intend to hold on to it;" what would we do? I do not think we ought to allow them to dictate to us, and still less to have any power of dictating an action which the highest principles of integrity and a high enlightened polity demand. I think we ought to act independently of other nations, and I would not even let them know what we were doing. If this money does not belong to us, let us return it. I think there is a good deal in what was said by the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. INGALLS.] I do not know whether this $125,000 has been ascertained or not. I do not think we ought to retain anything unless we know that that much is due to these officers in the way of prize-money.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I would state to the Senator that that is the sum which has been estimated after examination. I suppose that it is as near an approximation as is possible.

Mr. STEVENSON. If that is so, I am willing that the bill shall be passed; but I hope the amendment of my friend from Connecticut will be adopted. I should like to see it adopted unanimously.

Mr. MERRIMON. I beg to ask the Senator in charge of this bill if there is anything in our treaty relations with England or France that renders it necessary that these words should remain in this bill?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I presume there is not. The words of the bill are, "incompatible with our relations." I do not suppose that even if these countries should say "we prefer you should not pay back this money," that would prevent our doing it. But I do not think the retention of the phrase is important; and if the Senate see proper to adopt the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut I do not object.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. President, it strikes me that if we are about to give an evidence of the sense of justice which animates the people of the United States we ought to be able to adduce some more striking proof of it than this bill will furnish if it passes. It may be that the first section of the bill will stand in the judgment of the world as a signal evidence of that justice, but it seems to me very clear that the second section weakens that evidence very much.

I thought there was force in the suggestion made by the Senator from Kansas just now, that either this money in justice belongs to Japan or it does not, and if it belongs to Japan we ought to pay it to Japan without any conditions and without any abatement. I have never myself seen any very conclusive evidence that the money belonged to Japan. The theory has been that the money was paid by Japan to these allied or co-operating powers to enable them to indemnify their subjects severally for such losses as they had sustained by this affair in the Straits of Simonoseki. I do not understand myself that that was the theory upon which the sum was paid. There was what might be called a civil war; if I understand it, one of the provinces was in revolt against the imperial government and the revolting province inflicted some injuries upon our public rights, interfered with our rights of navigation in those straits, or were supposed to do so, and the naval forces of these several powers united to go up there and help Japan punish that province and at the same time avenge the insults that had been heaped upon us. In consideration of both those services—helping the imperial government and making reparation for the injuries that had been done these several powers—this gross sum of money was paid. The powers interested having agreed upon the division of the money out of the portion which came to us, this Government, acting upon its own sense of justice, has liquidated and paid every private claim which could be preferred against the fund. There is a certain sum left. The first section of the bill proposes to restore the balance of the money to Japan, but the second section of the bill proposes to make one more grab before it goes beyond our reach to pay something, either bounty, or ransom, or prize-money on account of the destruction of piratical vessels destroyed by the fleets of all these powers; and it is said you have got so that you can guess pretty near what sum that is. I have felt myself all along as though that was not precisely the kind of warfare in which prize-money was to be earned; and if prize-money was earned I do not see why it has not already been adjusted, and settled and paid out of this fund years ago, or out of some other fund.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Because the prize laws did not allow a claim in any such case.

Mr. HOWE. That would be a good reason, and if it was a good reason five years ago I do not see why it should not be a tolerably good reason to-day.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not.

Mr. HOWE. I think if we want to prove our justice, we had better strike out the second section of the bill and stand on the first section. Then you will have a pretty clear case as far as that goes, but at the same time it will be a little embarrassing to prove that it is just for this Government to take from a fund which belongs to Japan the money necessary to pay these prize claims and bounty claims.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I do not understand my friend from Wisconsin entirely, whether he does not favor the bill because it does not pay back enough to Japan, or because it pays back too much.

Mr. HOWE. It is on that precise question that I am divided. [Laughter.]

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. So I thought.

Mr. HOWE. It is a little difficult to determine what is the gravest objection to it. I am a little doubtful whether the first section ought to pass, but I will acquiesce in that if you will take off the second section. I say again it seems to me that either this money belongs to Japan or to us, and if it belongs to Japan you ought to pay it as provided in the first section and without the deduction which the second section calls for.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to strike out the second section of the bill. The section provides for allowing compensation in the nature of bounty, ransom, or prize money to the officers and crews of the vessels of the United States that participated in this engagement in certain straits of an unpronounceable name. The laws of prize, whether under the laws of nations or under the prize statutes of the United States, do not provide and were never intended to provide for cases of that character. The right to prize-money arises from a capture made in warfare, and the statutes of the United States are based upon that theory. There were two crafts, piratical or rebellious, one or the other, in Japan that were sunk in a little river by the combined operations of the navies of the Netherlands and of Great Britain and of France and of the United States. Now it is proposed by this second section that the President of the United States is to constitute himself a judicial tribunal to determine what are the just claims in respect of bounty, ransom, or prize money arising out of the destruction of those piratical vessels, as the statute calls them. Whether they were piratical vessels or not under the laws of war, would depend on the proportions that the rebellion in Japan had assumed at that time—questions that came at one time a good deal nearer home to us than they do at this present moment, or as I hope they ever will again.

This bill proposes to go entirely beyond either the public laws of war in relation to prizes or the statutes of the United States. It does not appear to me that there is any case whatever for making any allowance to the officers and crews of these public vessels of the United States. The mission for which they are commissioned and for which they enlist is to execute the power of the United States by force wherever it may be lawfully applied, and this was a public instance of such application. In one event, and in one event only, in the application of such force they are entitled to a certain share in what they conquer; outside of that they are not. There is no obligation that I can see, either in the way of law, or of justice, or of equity, considered in its natural or any other sense, for making this provision. You might just as well make an additional provision for Senators, if we sit two hours later than we do every day, on the ground that we have especially distinguished ourselves. It was one of the precise missions that these people were engaged to perform, and they did it, and they did it well, undoubtedly; but the idea that any money is to be taken from the Treasury or from anybody else to pay them for simply doing their natural and ordinary and legal duty, when the law under which they undertook to do that duty did not hold out any such expectation to them, is to me totally inadmissible.

Then, in addition to that, it proceeds to provide for the officers and crew of the United States ship Jamestown who manned the Takiang—which I take to have been a Japanese vessel of war—in the bombardment of the hostile forts at the Straits of Simonoseki. There is a case where it is proposed that you shall pay these officers and sailors of the United States for helping the Emperor of Japan to carry on this warfare against his rebellious subjects in bombarding a fort, and take that out of this indemnity fund which, as has been stated, either belongs to our Treasury or to Japan.

My friend from Wisconsin [Mr. HOWE] asks me, what is the measure of compensation? There is no measure except the discretion of the President of the United States, because there is no rule of law, there is no rule of public law or of statute law, or of custom or usage whatever, which is to guide the discretion of the President of the United States as to how much he shall allow to the people of the Jamestown for going on board a Japanese vessel of war and assisting in bombarding a rebellious fort on shore. There is nothing to guide his discretion whatever. He is to ascertain their claims, and, having ascertained them—that is, having settled, in his judgment, what they ought to be—he is to take the amount out of what he is to pay the Japanese.

Mr. CONKLING. I wish to inquire of the Senator from Vermont, having been out a moment, whether his observations are directed to the whole of the second section or whether they will be answered by striking out the words in line 11 "or equity" so as to make the rights or claims of these men hinge upon what is the law? And in that connection I inquire of the Senator from Vermont whether he has before him the fact so definitely that he is prepared to say that as matter of law none of these persons, regardless of such equitable claims as they might have, are entitled?

Mr. EDMUNDS. The question of the Senator from New York is very pertinent, as his questions almost always are. My observations were addressed in general to the whole section; and then I had made a note that, if the Senate should not choose to strike out the whole section, the words "in law or equity" ought to be modified in some way. But when you look at the convention between the Emperor of Japan and these four powers you will perceive—I think I am safe in saying that in the presence of this Senate as learned as it is—that there is no ground in point of law upon which any one of the officers or crews of these vessels of the United States could stand in a prize-court for a single moment. This convention recites what had taken place; and I must take it to be the best evidence attainable of what the fact really was; and if I do not weary the Senate I will read it.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. What do you read from?

Mr. EDMUNDS. From the convention concluded between the United States and the Empire of Japan.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. What volume?

Mr. EDMUNDS. The fourteenth volume of the Statutes at Large, page 665.

Whereas a convention between the Empire of Japan and the Government of the United States, Great Britain, France, and Holland—

Although afterward it is spoken of as "the Netherlands"— providing for the payment to said governments of the sum of $3,000,000 for indemnities and expenses, was concluded and signed by their respective plenipotentiaries on the 22d day of October, 1864, which convention, being in the English, Dutch, and Japanese languages, is word for word as follows:

CONVENTION.

The representatives of the United States of America, Great Britain, France, and the Netherlands, in view of the hostile acts of Mori Daizen, prince of Nagato and Suwo, which were assuming such formidable proportions as to make it difficult for the Tycoon faithfully to observe the treaties, having been obliged to send their combined forces to the Straits of Simonoseki in order to destroy the batteries erected by that daimio for the destruction of foreign vessels and the stoppage of trade; and the government of the Tycoon, on whom devolved the duty of chastising this rebellious prince, being held responsible for any damage resulting to the interests of treaty powers, as well as the expenses occasioned by the expedition—

And here I will remark that we should have held it to be a somewhat singular law of nations in the years from 1861 to 1865, if it had happened that any foreign power had claimed that we were responsible for any acts of aggression upon foreign powers committed by rebels within our own borders. I will proceed:

The undersigned, representatives of treaty powers, and Sakai Hida no Kami, a member of his second council, invested with plenipotentiary powers by the Tycoon of Japan, animated with the desire to put an end to all reclamations concerning the acts of aggression and hostility committed by the said Mori Daizen since the first of these acts, in June, 1863, against the flags of divers treaty powers, and at the same time to regulate definitively the question of indemnities of war, of whatever kind, in respect to the allied expedition of Simonoseki, have agreed and determined upon the four articles following:

I. The amount payable to the four powers is fixed at $3,000,000. This sum to include all claims, of whatever nature, for past aggressions on the part of Nagato, whether indemnities, ransom for Simonoseki, or expenses entailed by the operations of the allied squadrons.

You will perceive that it includes not only reclamations for injuries to the citizens as subjects of the particular powers, insults, and all that, but also for the trouble and expense to which the allied powers were put in assisting the Tycoon to put down this rebellion at that place

II. The whole sum to be payable quarterly.

That merely provides for the payments. Then it proceeds to say in the third article:

Inasmuch as the receipt of money has never been the object of the said powers, but the establishment of better relations with Japan, and the desire to place these on a more satisfactory and mutually advantageous footing is still the leading object in view; therefore, if His Majesty the Tycoon wishes to offer, in lieu of payment of the sum claimed, and as a material compensation for loss and injury sustained, the opening of Simonoseki, or some other eligible port in the inland sea, it shall be at the option of the said foreign governments to accept the same, or insist on the payment of the indemnity in money, under the conditions above stipulated.

IV. This convention to be formally ratified by the Tycoon's government within fifteen days from the date thereof.

I have read all the operative parts. Therefore you will perceive, Mr. President, that this money was paid, not merely, or only, or chiefly indeed, for the distinct injuries that had happened to the citizens or subjects of the four countries, but also for a general and sweeping indemnity to those four powers for the assistance they had rendered to the empire of Japan in putting down this rebellion at that place; and inasmuch as they say money was not the object, it was left to be determined afterward whether the opening of this particular port should not be taken in the place of money, in order to square the account, to use a commercial phrase. It was finally determined that that was not desirable. They chose to take the money, and the money was paid. The Japanese government chose to pay it. Now, I fail to see, I confess, upon what ground it is, either upon high justice or high equity or high morality, that there is any obligation upon the part of the United States or of either of the other three powers to repay to the government of Japan any part of this money. Inasmuch as it was not, as in the case of many instances of conventions that have occurred in regard to private injuries to private citizens, a case of compensation for particular and individual injury, illegal injury happening in the country of the government paying it, but was a general indemnity, not only for that, whatever it might be, but also for the general expenses of assisting in putting down this rebellion, I do not see, I say, upon what ground it is that any morality requires us to repay any of it, or authorizes the Japanese government to demand it.

But that is apart from the motion I have now made to strike out the second section, because I think it will be obvious to my learned friend from New York in reading this convention and the report of the committee which states what took place, that there was on this occasion the destruction of two vessels called piratical, but really, as I suppose, in the service of this rebellious prince, and there was also the bombardment and capture of a fort on the land. Now, by the prize law, I submit to my friend from New York and to everybody else, there is no ground of claim on the part of the officers and crews of the vessels of the United States.

Mr. CONKLING. If the Senator will allow me, before he completes his remarks I will state to him the purpose of my question. Having been out of the Senate for a moment, I did not know whether he was directing his observations to the fact that under the bill these people might be remunerated, whether entitled by law or only in equity. I put to him the question to ascertain that. I now perceive that he maintains that this section ought to be stricken out because there is no law known to us under which in a prize-court or elsewhere these men can receive recompense, remuneration, reward, whatever it may be called, for the services they rendered.

Now I bring to the attention of the Senator from Vermont the fact first that if there were such a law, this part of the bill would be quite unnecessary; so much of this money as they could claim, probably would not have been begging for an owner for some years; and I suppose, I think the committee suppose, I think all those who have dealt with this subject suppose, that, like numerous cases in our history, this was an instance which invoked special action, action which no court could be summoned to take, action which was to be measured by the meritorious character and the exceptional nature of the acts which these men did.

A friend near me has reminded me of the case of the Algerine pirates, and of the measures taken against them. I might remind the Senate of other instances in which claimants could not go into a prize-court, and obtain anything for what they did, and because they could not, treating the fact not as an objection but as a reason, provision was made similar to this to the end that, although they were in the line of their duty, having rendered exceptional service, peculiar in its character, I might say perhaps, descriptive of this case, picturesque in the incidents which attended it——

Mr. EDMUNDS. "Picturesque" is the very word.

Mr. CONKLING. I am very glad to have the Senator from Vermont indorse even one word which falls from me.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is the only one.

Mr. CONKLING. The only one I have heard him indorse. I say I have understood the theory in this case and in other cases to be that where services were rendered heroic, unusual, volunteer, exceptional, and now the Senator from Vermont authorizes me to add picturesque, in their character, because the actors in those services could not go into a prize-court, and upon the principles of law recover anything, therefore the case addressed itself to the discretion, the sense of equity of the Government which they served. That is this case; and if Japan were near us, and if the mode were a convenient one, it might be said that this money being returned in bulk Japan would render back to these persons anything which in equity and upon high and enlightened principles of polity (as I think I heard some Senator observe) might be thought their due—not their technical due; but a proper rendition to them. That would be very inconvenient in this instance, and perhaps in the instance of a nearer government; and therefore it was supposed by the committee; therefore it has been supposed by the predecessors of the present committee and by many persons, executive officers and others who have dealt with this subject, that it was appropriate to take some action, to make some provision under which discretion might be exercised touching the merits of these men, the services they rendered, the risks they incurred, the hardships, if any, which they underwent, and whatever there might be entitling them, not of technical right but of substantial merit, to some recompense. It seems to me so now, and therefore I do not see that this section should be stricken out. I do not see that it should fall for the reasons assigned by the honorable Senator from Vermont.

Mr. President, this bill seems likely not to be concluded to-day. I am inclined to think it ought not to be. The Senate is somewhat thin, and it is worth considering. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will remind the Senator from New York of the fact that the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN,] by a general understanding, called up the silver bill so called, that it should be left as the unfinished business to-day, and this other bill was interjected by common consent.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The Senator from Ohio is not here.

Mr. CONKLING. It is almost five o'clock.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I do not believe the Senator from Ohio will object to this bill proceeding to-morrow.

Mr. CONKLING. Surely this is a bill upon which no raid of opposition is to be made in point of time. There will be no difficulty in considering it at any convenient moment, I think. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After nine minutes spent in executive session the doors were re-opened, and (at four o'clock and fifty-four minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, April 19, 1876.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. I. L. TOWNSEND.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

HALLET KILBOURN.

The SPEAKER. It is the duty of the Chair to lay before the House this morning a communication from the Sergeant-at Arms, which it seems proper should go on the records of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE SERGEANT-AT-ARMS, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., April 17, 1876.

MY DEAR SIR: I desire respectfully to report to you, and through you to the House of Representatives, that in accordance with the resolution passed by your honorable body on the 17th instant I have this day, at ten o'clock a. m., made a careful return to the writ of habeas corpus heretofore issued by the chief justice of the District of Columbia, commanding me to produce the body of Hallet Kilbourn, committed to my custody by order of the House.

The return set out in detail the facts relating to his detention, and that he was in my custody by virtue of an adjudication of this House finding him guilty of contempt of its authority. I likewise produced the body of the said Kilbourn and presented it to the judge who had issued the writ. Thereupon he ordered the said Kilbourn into the custody of the marshal of the District of Columbia, who immediately took possession of his body.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN G. THOMPSON,
Sergeant-at-Arms.

Hon. M. C. KERR, Speaker.

Mr. CONGER. I ask the Chair whether the Sergeant-at-Arms ought not to have appended to his report a copy of his return to the writ? I think he should have added to his report a verbatim copy of that return, so that the House may have it in their possession. And I would suggest that the officer amend his report so as to embrace a copy of the return.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will venture to express the opinion that it would be very well that this communication should be accompanied with a copy of the return, so that the record of the House shall be more complete. If there be no objection, the Chair will see that that is done, and that the return to the writ accompanies the communication.

IMPEACHMENT OF WILLIAM W. BELKNAP.

Mr. LORD. I am directed by the managers conducting the impeachment against William W. Belknap to report the following replication of the House of Representatives to the plea of William W. Belknap to the articles of impeachment exhibited by them to the Senate. I desire that it may be read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In the Senate of the United States sitting as a court of impeachment.

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA }
vs.
WILLIAM W. BELKNAP. }

The replication of the House of Representatives of the United States in their own behalf, and also in the name of the people of the United States, to the plea of William W. Belknap to the articles of impeachment exhibited by them to the Senate against the said William W. Belknap.

The House of Representatives of the United States, prosecuting on behalf of themselves and the people of the United States, the articles of impeachment exhibited by them to the Senate of the United States against said William W. Belknap, reply to the plea of said William W. Belknap and say, that the matters alleged in the said plea are not sufficient to exempt the said William W. Belknap from answering the said articles of impeachment, because they say that at the time the acts charged in said articles of impeachment were done and committed, and thence continuously down to the 2d day of March, A. D. 1876, the said William W. Belknap was Secretary of War of the United States, as in said articles of impeachment averred, and therefore that, by the Constitution of the United States, the House of Representatives had power to prefer the said articles of impeachment, and the Senate have full and the sole power to try the same. Wherefore they demand that the plea aforesaid of the said William W. Belknap be not allowed, but that the said William W. Belknap be required to answer the said articles of impeachment.

II.

The House of Representatives of the United States so prosecuting, on behalf of themselves and the people of the United States, the said articles of impeachment exhibited by them to the Senate of the United States against the said William W. Belknap, for a second and further replication to the plea of the said William W. Belknap, say that the matters alleged in the said plea are not sufficient to exempt the said William W. Belknap from answering the said articles of impeachment, because they say that at the time of the commission by the said William W. Belknap of the acts and matters set forth in the said articles of impeachment he, the said William W. Belknap, was an officer of the United States, as alleged in the said articles of impeachment. And they say that the said William W. Belknap, after the commission of each one of the acts alleged in the said articles of impeachment, was, and continued to be, such officer, as alleged in the said articles of impeachment, until and including the 2d day of March, A. D. 1876, and until the House of Representatives, by its proper committee, had completed its investigation of his official conduct as such officer in regard to the matters and things set forth as official misconduct in the said articles of impeachment, and the said committee was considering the report it should make to the House of Representatives upon the same, the said William W. Belknap being at the time aware of such investigation, and of the evidence taken, and of such proposed report.

And the House of Representatives further say that while its said committee was considering and preparing its said report to the House of Representatives, recommending the impeachment of the said William W. Belknap for the matters and things set forth in the said articles of impeachment, the said William W. Belknap, with full knowledge thereof, resigned his position as such officer on the said 2d day of March, 1876, with intent to evade the proceedings of impeachment against him. And the House of Representatives resolved to impeach the said William W. Belknap for said matters as in said articles of impeachment set forth on said 2d day of March, A. D. 1876.

And the House of Representatives say that by the Constitution of the United States the House of Representatives had power to prefer the said articles of impeachment against the said William W. Belknap, and that the Senate sitting as a court of impeachment has full power to try the same.

Wherefore the House of Representatives demand that the plea aforesaid be not allowed, but that the said William W. Belknap be compelled to answer the said articles of impeachment.

Mr. LORD. I move that the replication which has been read be adopted as the replication of this House to the plea of jurisdiction by William W. Belknap.

The motion was agreed to.

The replication was thereupon signed by the Speaker.

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent in behalf of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. KNOTT,] the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, to make a statement to the House which he requested me to make; it will take about a minute.

No objection was made.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. Speaker, I am requested by the chairman of the Judiciary Committee to say to the House that he is sick and compelled to be absent from the House this morning. If he were here, he would say that he thinks it would be sufficient to make up the issue upon the first replication alone, and does not favor the addition of the second. I wish to say also for myself that I agree with the gentleman from Kentucky in that opinion, deeming that the whole strength of the case is presented by the first replication. But as some of the managers, for whose opinion I have great respect, think that additional arguments of great weight will be open to them under the second replication, and as I think that replication will do no harm, I assent to its introduction, solely out of deference to them.

Mr. LORD. I offer for adoption the following resolution:

Resolved, That a message be sent to the Senate, by the Clerk of the House, informing the Senate that the House of Representatives has adopted a replication to the plea of William W. Belknap, late Secretary of War, to the articles of impeachment exhibited against him, and that the same will be presented to the Senate by the managers on the part of the House.

The resolution was agreed to.

JOSEPH W. PARISH.

Mr. STEVENSON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3153) for the relief of Joseph W. Parish; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PHILIP LESTER.

Mr. HOLMAN, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3154) for the relief of Philip Lester, second lieutenant Company B, Sixteenth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES RICHARDSON.

Mr. HOLMAN also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3155) for the relief of James Richardson, late private in Company E, Thirteenth Indiana Volunteer Cavalry; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

REVISION OF THE LAWS.

Mr. DURHAM. The Committee on the Revision of the Laws have had under consideration all the amendments to the Revised Statutes that have been referred to them, embracing perhaps two thousand in number, and they have agreed upon a bill embracing all the amendments proposed, to which the committee agree. I ask unanimous consent to present that bill and have it printed and recommitted to the committee, so that the House may see it in print.

No objection being made, the bill (H. R. No. 3156) to correct errors and to supply omissions in the Revised Statutes of the United States was read a first and second time, recommitted to the committee, and ordered to be printed.

LEWIS MERRIAM.

Mr. PLAISTED, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3157) for the relief of Second Lieutenant Lewis Merriam, Fourth Infantry, United States Army; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC LANDS IN OHIO.

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3158) to grant to the State of Ohio the unsold and unappropriated public lands remaining in that State and to provide for the safe-keeping of the records relating to lands heretofore disposed of within said State; which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying memorial, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

COINAGE OF CENTENNIAL COINS.

Mr. O'BRIEN, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3159) to authorize the coinage of centennial coins, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, and ordered to be printed.

REAL-ESTATE POOL IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. I ask unanimous consent to submit for consideration at this time the preamble and resolution I send to the Clerk's desk:

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas it is alleged that certain persons who were formerly members of the House of Representatives of the United States were, while serving as such members, connected with or interested in the so-called "real estate pool of the District of Columbia," the operations of which said pool are now undergoing investigation before a special committee of this House: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That said special committee, in addition to the investigation into said real-estate pool with which they are now charged, be, and they are hereby, further authorized and empowered to inquire into and fully investigate whether any former members of this House, and if so, who he or they may be, how and to what extent connected with or interested in said so-called real-estate pool while such member of this House, and to report to this House all the testimony taken in connection with such investigation; and said committee are authorized to send for persons and papers.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the adoption of the preamble and resolution just read?

Mr. MACKEY, of Pennsylvania. I object. We have investigations enough already started to occupy the entire constitutional term of the present Congress.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. I hope no objection will be made to this resolution. I think the committee should investigate this subject.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will again ask if there is objection?

There being no objection, the resolution was adopted.

CATHARINE SULLIVAN.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Wisconsin, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3160) for the relief of Catharine Sullivan, of Washington, District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

ALEXANDER & CO.

Mr. RIDDLE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3161) for the relief of Alexander & Co., for the loss of whisky by the negligence of the Government; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Claims, and ordered to be printed.

UNITED STATES CONSOLS.

Mr. WHITEHOUSE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3162) for refunding the interest-bearing debt of the United States into United States consols having forty years to run and bearing a uniform rate of interest; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

OCEAN CITY BRIDGE COMPANY.

Mr. THOMAS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3163) to authorize the Ocean City Bridge Company to maintain and operate a bridge heretofore erected over Sinepuxent Bay, in Worcester County, Maryland; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

LIEUTENANT C. A. CUTLER.

Mr. FORT, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3164) for the relief of Lieutenant C. A. Cutler; which was read a first and second time, with the accompanying papers referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

GEORGE T. OLMSTEAD, JR.

Mr. DOBBINS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3165) for the relief of George T. Olmstead, jr.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ADJUSTMENT OF CLAIMS AGAINST THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HENKLE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3166) providing for the adjustment of claims against the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN M. SHELTON.

Mr. HOUSE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3167) for the relief of John M. Shelton, of Davidson County, Tennessee; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Claims, and ordered to be printed.

EFFICIENCY OF THE ARMY.

Mr. BANNING. The bill (H. R. No. 2935) to promote the efficiency of the Army of the United States, to provide for its gradual reduction, and to consolidate certain of its staff departments, and for other purposes, reported by me from the Committee on Military Affairs on the 29th of March last, was made a special order in Committee of the Whole for to-day after the morning hour. I ask unanimous consent that it be made the special order in Committee of the Whole one week from to-day at two o'clock.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

A bill (H. R. No. 3128) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed, and requested the concurrence of the House in, a bill of the following title:

A bill (S. No. 680) authorizing the repavement of Pennsylvania avenue.

ELECTION CONTEST—FINLEY VS. WALLS.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I now call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being called for, the House will now resume the consideration of the resolutions reported from the Committee of Elections in the contested-election case of Jesse J. Finley vs. Josiah T. Walls, from the second congressional district of the State of Florida. Theg entleman from New York [Mr. TOWNSEND] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. The question under consideration is nominally the election contest of Finley against Walls; but the real question is, Who shall be the Representative of the people of the second congressional district of Florida? That is, a portion of the people of the United States coming before this tribunal and asking us to settle the question by whom they shall be represented in the grand legislative council of the nation.

I come to the discussion of this question with a consciousness that it is one, under the circumstances in which it is presented, to which the legislator always has trouble in giving his attention. It is a dry discussion of facts and the law, pertaining to only a portion of the country, and therefore necessarily but little understood by the great body of the legislative council until the discussion comes on. I will endeavor, however, to present the question, and as clearly as my ability will enable me to do, both as to the law and the facts, because I do not feel at liberty to shrink from the discussion of either the law or the facts bearing upon this question.

Complaint was made on yesterday by one of my colleagues on the Committee of Elections that a certain gentleman discussed this question as if it were a political question, and that his discussion as against the views of the majority of the committee seemed to show a lack of confidence and to charge the committee with some wrong. Now, at the outset of this discussion I feel myself bound to say that I have great confidence in the fairness and integrity of the majority of the Committee of Elections. My acquaintance with them has been a short one, but altogether an agreeable one. I feel equally bound to say that I do not consider the majority of that committee to be angels; if they were it would ruin them with their democratic constituents. [Laughter.] They are men; they are democrats; honest men, but imbued with all the passions and the prejudices of other men; perhaps a little better than other men, certainly the body of them not worse. I shall argue that this committee are liable to all the prejudices of any like number of worthy gentlemen.

I am compelled to say this at the outset with a view to the position taken by one of the majority, the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. DE BOLT,] a gentleman toward whom my heart warms more than to most other men. But he has a peculiar idiosyncracy, and I shall not be doing him any injustice to so far reveal the secrets of our committee as to say that the tendency of that gentleman's mind seems always to be for casting out. If I were at liberty to allow myself a query, I should ask if he had not spent his early life in casting out the nines? That gentleman would cast out a large portion of the precincts and of the votes in this congressional district, not because he is corrupt, not because he is more prejudiced than other men, but because that is the bent of his mind.

I am led to this belief from the fact that the gentleman takes the position that no man whose name was not found upon the poll-list which was sent down by the county clerk to the voting-precinct was authorized to vote unless he took both the oaths prescribed by the laws of Florida. I think I can demonstrate to any gentleman who does me the honor to listen to what I have to say on this subject, beyond peradventure, that my friend from Missouri [Mr. DE BOLT] not only is wrong, but glaringly wrong. I mention in particular my friend from Missouri, because most of the majority of the committee do not agree with him. In article 14 of section 6 of the constitution of Florida, adopted in 1868, is the following provision:

> The Legislature at the first session after the ratification of this constitution shall by law provide for registration, by the clerk of the circuit court in each county, of all the legally-qualified voters in such county, and for the returns of the elections, and shall also provide that, after the completion, from time to time, of such registration, no person not duly registered according to law shall be allowed to vote.

So that the constitution provided for registration. And it will be noticed that the constitution only authorized the Legislature to disfranchise a man who was not "registered." They had no authority to disfranchise a man whose name did not happen to be upon the poll-list sent down to the polls.

Now, in pursuance of that provision of the constitution, the Legislature at its first meeting enacted a law in regard to elections, containing this provision:

> It shall be the duty of the clerk of the circuit court in each county to prepare suitable books or lists, as hereafter designated, for the registration of the names of all electors residing within such county, in which book or poll-list shall be written or printed the oaths required by the constitution and laws to be taken by electors. Such oaths shall be entered, &c.

So that the registration was to be in a book in the county clerk's office, and made there by the county clerk. That was to be the registration, the first registration. But there is in the ninth section a further provision; and this provision is in regard to correcting the registration from time to time, as necessity shall require. By section 9 it is provided that—

> The county commissioners, or a majority of them, shall meet at the office of the clerk of the circuit court within thirty days preceding the day on which any election shall be held, and examine the list of registered electors, and erase therefrom the names of such persons as are known or may be shown to their satisfaction to have died or ceased to reside permanently in the county, or otherwise become disqualified to vote.

That makes a complete registration. First, a registration is made up by the clerk to begin with, and then every year thirty days before the election the county commissioners may correct the registration in the book. That is registration; and a man not so registered may, by the constitution, be disfranchised. But by law in this ninth section it is further provided—

> That if any person whose name may be erased shall, on offering to vote at any election, declare on oath that his name has been improperly struck off from the list of registered voters, and shall take the oath required to be taken by persons whose right to vote shall be challenged, such person shall have the right to vote, and, on making oath before the clerk of the court that his name has been improperly erased from the list of registered voters, may have his name again entered upon said list; and the county commissioners shall enter the name, &c.

So that a man whose name has been improperly stricken off may, upon complying with the provisions of law, vote, notwithstanding his name may have been stricken from the list; but he can never vote until he shall have been once registered.

Now, by the tenth section it is provided that "a complete copy of the list of names of all persons duly registered as electors"—not the "registration," but "a copy" of the list of the names of all persons duly registered as electors—"shall be furnished to the inspectors of election at each poll or place of voting in the county before the hour appointed for the opening of the election."

Now, my friend from Missouri is of opinion that that poll-list at the polls is the registration, and that a man whose name is not on that poll-list is disfranchised if he does not take the oath provided by law.

I concede at the outset that the failure to find the name of the voter upon the list at the place of voting would furnish a sufficient excuse to the inspector of elections for refusing to receive the vote without requiring the taking of both oaths. But if the elector votes without taking more than one, if he votes without taking any oath at all, and is not challenged except on account of not appearing upon the poll-list, he is as justly and properly an elector as any man in the State; and it would be a violation of both the constitution and the laws of Florida to refuse to receive the vote. He is an elector; he is a "registered" elector; and it was not in the power of the Legislature, had they undertaken to do it, to strike him down and deprive him of the right of voting. But the Legislature never attempted to do it; and nobody ever attempted to do it until my friend from Missouri undertook to do it; not wickedly, not maliciously, but by his interpretation of the law; an interpretation that cannot be maintained one moment in the face of the statute and the constitution of Florida. And, as I said, in this nearly every member of the committee concurred except my friend from Missouri.

Now I have gone over that question and will leave it. It becomes necessary then to see what shall be done to set the machinery of elections in motion.

These county commissioners, by the act of the Legislature to which I have referred, are authorized to appoint three responsible persons as inspectors of election for each precinct at least three days before the election. And when the election morning comes, these inspectors of election have the right and power to appoint a poll clerk; and those four persons, the three inspectors and the poll clerk, are authorized to conduct the election and do all the acts imposed upon inspectors of election by authority of the law of Florida.

But there is a further provision that if on the election day any of the inspectors appointed by the county commissioners shall fail to appear, or fail to qualify, the electors present at the poll may elect others to fill their places, and that these others shall have all the power and authority given to the inspectors appointed by the county commissioners. It is required that these officers shall take the oath, and after taking the oath then they are authorized to discharge every duty.

Now, on this occasion it is alleged by the majority of the committee that the inspectors who did act on that day thrust themselves into office; that they were intruders; that they were not appointed; that they were not elected; that they were in no wise authorized to act, and that their action was a usurpation.

I need not say to this that the working of the whole machinery of our Government is underlaid with legal presumptions. We cannot move a step without resting our foot upon a presumption, else we fall into chaos. It is presumed that the ministerial officers connected with our elections are authorized to act; when they have acted, it is presumed that our judicial officers are authorized to act. In this case, in regard to every precinct, in regard to every county in this congressional district, we go upon the presumption that the county was properly organized, that the county commissioners were properly in office, that they appointed inspectors, and that the inspectors either served or others were elected in their place, and that these men thus in office did their duty.

"Ah! this is dangerous, Mr. TOWNSEND; yes, dangerous. It is a republican heresy." Is it a heresy? Is it a heresy in this case? This county cast 1,350 votes. The contestant claims the benefit of all the votes except those cast at the colored academy precinct—all of them. At the colored academy precinct there were 599 votes cast. He claims the benefit of every other vote in that county. They were cast in other precincts. We have no proof as to the county commissioners. We have no proof as to the appointment of inspectors. We have no proof as to the appointment of the clerk. We have no proof when the polls were opened. We have no proof when the polls were closed. We have no proof as to challenges or anything else. Yet he asks to be counted in upon the presumption that the remainder of the votes in that county, 1,350, after deducting 599, should be taken on presumption. That is right. He has law for it. He has usage for it. He has necessity for it. What is the result then? The result is that the party who attacks an election, that the party who says an inspector of election is a usurper, must prove it on his part. And I say to the other side, you have not proved these persons were not authorized; you have not gone into detail and proved it here; and therefore I can say it does not appear that these men were not in office; it does not appear they were not, some of them, appointed by the county commissioners; it does not appear they were not, some of them, chosen by the electors at the polls.

My friends of the majority on the committee must pardon me, but the utter nonsense of such a position as that the sitting member must give the proof would make a boy fifteen years old laugh. Let it be remembered that it is alleged in the notice of contest these men were unauthorized to act. What should have been shown? It should have been shown that they were not authorized. It should at least have been shown they were not elected at the polls. And yet there is not a word of proof on that subject; and gentlemen of the majority of the committee here harangue this House, intelligent gentlemen, claiming to be intelligent and actually intelligent, because the contestee has not proved these men were lawfully elected. It is a mighty nice way of attempting to change the burden of proof without changing the law. It cannot be done. I call upon the majority to show where is the evidence that these men were not elected at the polls. That is distinct from the question of their being bad men. They are bad men necessarily in the eyes of many gentlemen because they are republicans, as it is alleged. I will look at that by and by.

I want to call upon gentlemen to bring their minds down to this question. Where is the evidence that these men were not properly elected and where does the burden of proving that these men were not properly elected rest? This idea of charging crime and then calling upon the person charged to prove himself innocent is not American; it is not northern; it is not southern; it is not Anglo-Saxon; it is not common sense. No, gentlemen of the majority, I want to hold you to your position. Most of you are lawyers, most of you are good lawyers; and, aside from those excitements which get up in men's discussions where politics are concerned, I say to you gentlemen I should expect you to know what the law of this matter is. Then it is presumed that these inspectors were properly elected at the polls or appointed by the county commissioners, and until that is settled we start, sir, in this case with the presumption that these men were properly in office. That is what I am going to start with, and I tell you, gentlemen, on your consciences, before your country and your God, you have got to start from the same point. Now, as to whether they are villains or not, I will consider by and by, and I promise to serve this thing up to your heart's content.

But my friend from Tennessee, [Mr. HOUSE,] who is a good lawyer, a broad, intelligent, excellent gentleman, told us in substance yesterday that Carroll, clerk, and Tompkins, one of the inspectors, spent the night at the house of one Dr. Johnson, who was a candidate for the senate in the county of Columbia when this election occurred. He told us further—and he is sustained by the evidence—that in the afternoon preceding the election there was a conversation between Johnson and Tompkins, in which Johnson asked Tompkins to serve as inspector next day; and in the same afternoon there was a conversation between Johnson and Carroll, requesting Carroll to serve as clerk the next day. My friend from Tennessee tells us that is conclusive evidence that Tompkins was a scoundrel, that Carroll was a scoundrel. Well, let us apply the rule. My friend from Tennessee had to be elected, and I presume, from the esteem I have for him, more than one of his neighbors asked him to be a candidate for and elected to the office of member of Congress in his district. I presume, knowing the hospitality of the South, he may have allowed some such man to spend the night in his house. I presume he may have in his political campaign for office spent a night at the house of some gentleman who had asked him to consent to be a member of Congress. What a figure I would cut in this House to charge that the gentleman from Tennessee was therefore a scoundrel and villain and the neighbor who asked him was a scoundrel and villain! And yet my friend, with all his broad good sense, exactly enacted that farce before this House.

Now to my northern friends, northern democrats, northern republicans, I have one thing to say in order to prepare for further remarks in this case. You know in our part of the country we confine the voter to one precinct. The neighborhood is generally small. The point of voting is accessible probably in two or three miles and a man may reach it in half an hour in the morning. In the Southern States, or a large portion of them, and in the State of Florida among others, a man may vote at any precinct in the county in which he lives. There is this difference to be considered in characterizing the probabilities that arise from the facts that are developed in this case.

There is another fact that you must take into consideration. If you will read this book you will find that at one of the precincts at least it is made a grave charge against the honesty and integrity of the returns that the colored men were standing in rows next the polls, forming long lines of sixty, seventy, or a hundred, and crowding up to the polls, and voting; and that they refused to move out of their regular order and let white men vote first.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. Certainly.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I understood the gentleman to say that in the Southern States a voter was allowed to vote at any precinct in the county in which he resided. Did I understand him correctly?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. It is so in Florida.

Mr. DOUGLAS. It is not so in the State of Virginia.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. Virginia is not in the extreme South. I might have confined my statement to Florida, but I find the same thing to be true in South Carolina and also in Alabama. I am not saying whether that system is any worse or any better than the other, but it is different from that of the Middle and Northern States, and I have stated it in order to explain to the minds of gentlemen who have not seen this system of voting why certain things occurred which did occur.

Now I draw the inference from this, and there was some testimony showing it, that at this poll there was feeling between the colored men and the white men; that is, white men rather than vote there preferred to go off and went and voted in a distant part of the county. I do not blame them; I do not praise them; such is the fact.

If nothing was said about it, there is a fact which might seem to call for explanation, that here there were 599 votes cast, and 588 of them were republican. It might be said there must be something wrong at this precinct; society does not divide so. And yet the case discloses this further fact that in that county there were 1,350 votes cast. Walls got but 38 majority; and all the remainder of the 1,350, except 588 at this place, where there were 599 votes in all, being 11 for Finley and the remainder for Walls, with the exception of 102 votes, the entire remainder of the county, including something over seven hundred persons, all voted one way, i. e. for Finley. So that the friends of Finley were as clannish and gathered together by themselves as thoroughly as the friends of Walls gathered themselves together at the colored academy precinct. And this state of things was known the day before the election as well as it was known the day after it. It was known that at this precinct the republican vote of that county would be cast.

That county, if I gather the fact correctly from the map, is about sixty miles long. Lake City, where the colored academy precinct is located, is about in the center of the county; and accordingly the republican voters from every part of that county had to travel from one to thirty miles to vote. Therefore it is not to be wondered at that men who came to act as inspectors of election and who came to act as clerk of the election had to be indebted to the hospitality of some man at Lake City. I appeal to my old gray-headed friends about me—I am a boy myself, [laughter,]—I appeal to my old gray-headed friends who have had some experience in campaigning, if you do not have to sleep anywhere and everywhere in your campaigns, and if you do not prefer to sleep in the house of a friend rather than to sleep in the house of an enemy?

Mr. BLAND. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLAND. Does the gentleman state that in Florida an elector can vote anywhere in the county in which he resides?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLAND. Then what was the law providing for registration?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. The whole county was registered and the whole county-list was sent down to each precinct.

Mr. BLAND. Then a man living in any part of the county can vote at any precinct in it?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLAND. Then what provision is there to prevent a man voting two or three or a dozen times?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. It is for the Legislature of Florida to correct that. But the suggestion of the gentleman holds good with reference to one precinct as well as to another. The power of double voting prevailed all over. And, my friends, the majority of the committee have got to sanction more votes cast elsewhere than were cast in the precinct, or else there is an end to this election.

Mr. POPPLETON. I desire to ask my colleague on the committee a question.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. Very well.

Mr. POPPLETON. Is there not a remedy for this in the oath prescribed in the sixteenth section of the law?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. There is if the voter is challenged.

Well, we come to this dreadful crime, that Johnson asked Tompkins to spend the night at his house. No, not so; that Tompkins asked Johnson if he might spend the night at his house, and that Johnson asked Carroll, the clerk, if he would spend the night at his house. Now, if they had been familiar at all with the history of the country, they never would have done it. Johnson never would have done it. He would have remembered the time when John Minor Botts slept with Captain Tyler and determined to "head him or die." [Laughter.] Such unions are always dangerous. Now, I trust that, with this view of the case, Tompkins must stay there. It was looking likely to rain, he says, and further says that he asked to stay, with Johnson. There must be some clerk to act who could read and write with readiness in the morning. So I think it will not be considered a very grave crime that Tompkins and Carroll spent the night at Johnson's.

But I am dwelling too long upon this point and I must hurry forward. Now, they staid there over night, and it is alleged here that a grave fraud was concocted that night between Dr. Johnson and Carroll. If there was a crime concocted there that night between Johnson and Carroll we ought to know it. What was it? Carroll says that Dr. Johnson had a copy of the list of voters in his hands and that he asked Carroll to make a copy of such names as he should read to him, and he read a little more than fifty names to him from the registration-list and Carroll wrote them down, and the inference was drawn by this witness, Carroll, that because Johnson read that, although Johnson never said a word beyond, never squinted his eye, never gave a hint, never asked for the paper and Carroll never used the paper but the next day tore it to pieces, that Johnson intended to commit some crime. Was it a suspicious circumstance that Dr. Johnson running for senator had got a copy of the registration-list, that Johnson running for senator had asked Carroll to write down the names of fifty voters upon that list? Now, I appeal to the old gentlemen, older than I am and more experienced, if they know anything about elections do they not know that it is probable that Dr. Johnson had copied off those fifty names from the registration-list that they might be sent for in case they did not come to the polls and to the end that they might be looked for in case they did not come? If that be so, there is nothing significant at all in it to gentlemen who do not wish to dabble with nonsense. It is what occurs in every election and must occur in every case where the candidate is worthy of the office for which he is running.

No evidence was given except upon one side in this case; and I wish to say here that although the Committee of Elections refused, under the circumstances presented to them, to allow Mr. Walls to take further testimony, I was not on the committee at that time. I wish to wash my hands of that vote. It appears that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BAKER] alone voted in favor of giving Mr. Walls an opportunity to call witnesses on the other side, and he alone. I should not have mentioned the fact except that it might be inferred that I was there and joined in that conclusion. I was not there. I was not on the committee then. I was subsequently appointed to fill the place of another gentleman, who was excused from further service.

Mr. POPPLETON. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. Well, I am afraid my time is running away very rapidly.

Mr. POPPLETON. Is it not the fact that Judge HOAR, of Massachusetts, was on the committee at that time and voted with the majority of the committee, with every member of the committee except the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. BAKER?]

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I understand that he did. I understand also that he voted the other day upon a question then pending before the House very differently from what I should have done. I cannot be responsible for Mr. HOAR'S votes. He will satisfy himself in all cases as to the correctness of his votes, and that is enough for any man to do.

Now we come down to the morning of the election. In the morning it was very cloudy, and some time in the morning after light Johnson, Carroll, and Tompkins, and others are found at the polls, or rather at the place appointed for the polls. They found it necessary to spend some thirty minutes after they arrived in preparing the place for the vote, and the preliminaries being finished the vote commenced. It is said that these inspectors are unworthy of consideration because they intentionally opened the polls an hour earlier than the true time, because by the law of Florida the voting should commence at eight o'clock in the morning and close at sunset.

Now we are compelled on the part of the minority to concede at once that Dr. Johnson was anxious to have the voting commence as early as by law he could. We called no witnesses to prove that; but the witness Carroll, who was brought here for the purpose of putting an unfavorable, illegal, and fraudulent construction upon the acts of Johnson, who has been called by the majority and whom they have thereby declared to be worthy of credit—this man Carroll says that Johnson was anxious to have the polls opened as early as they lawfully could be for the purpose of having the whole vote cast, and I hold that there was a reason for it. The actual vote cast at that poll was 599. The number of minutes between the opening of the polls and the closing of the polls was five hundred and thirty-four. The number of votes cast was 599—more than 60 votes more than one vote in a minute for the day.

Now let me explain to the House the difficulties in voting in Florida. You will see that the registration is not required to be made alphabetically. The registration is to be made as men come in; for instance, John Doe comes in and is registered, and then Richard Roe, and then John Tyner comes and is registered, and then William Walls comes in and is registered; and when a copy of the registration-list is made out and sent down it is all hodge-podge, and you have got to look over the whole list to find out whether the name is there or not. There are upon the list in this county, for instance, 1,350 names all thrown together promiscuously, and when a man comes to the polls and offers to vote, the inspectors have to run over those 1,350 names and see whether the man's name is on the list or not. It was a task of importance to be accomplished in order to be certain that every voter had an opportunity to vote, and therefore it was of the last importance that the voting should commence at the earliest hour allowed by law; and it was of equal importance at the other polls where the democrats voted. And this was proved by Carroll, who was called to show Johnson's intent.

It appears that there were four watches at the place of voting, and the inspectors announced that they would be governed by the majority of the watches. By two of the watches it appeared to be about seven o'clock; by the other two watches it appeared to be from two to three minutes past eight o'clock. The morning being cloudy and dark, the inspectors, upon consultation, came to the conclusion that it was eight o'clock, the hour fixed by law for the voting to commence, and they were qualified and entered upon the discharge of the duties of their office.

Now it is very possible that the polls were opened at too early an hour. I will not repeat the discussion of yesterday upon the subject of opening the polls too early. I will simply recall to the attention of the House the fact that Weeks says that twenty persons had voted prior to his arrival at the polls; that he read their names the first thing after he came; that he brought with him Barrett, another democrat and challenger; and neither he nor Barrett, both of them witnesses here, has put into this case any pretense that any one of those twenty was not a proper and legal voter.

Now, if you found that occasion had been taken, between seven and eight o'clock, to run in the votes of a body of men of doubtful right and qualifications as voters, of men not entitled to vote, then you might draw the inference possibly that the polls had been opened at that early hour for the purpose of perpetrating a fraud. But I put it to my friends, the majority of the Committee of Elections, where is the evidence that it was the design of Johnson to bring in fraudulent votes before eight o'clock by opening the polls at that early hour?

But it is said that there was but one watch there that should have been considered. The inspectors did not know that. Is there any evidence here that the inspectors knew that the watch of this Devil Selph, or Duval Selph, had been put forward the day before? And if the inspectors did not know that, did they commit a fraud in taking the time from his watch? You cannot declare that the inspectors committed a fraud on the electors unless they knew or had reason to believe they were committing a fraud. I put it to lawyers on the other side, for I know there are good lawyers there, that there is no proof that King, or Tompkins, or Hamilton, the other inspector, knew that Selph's watch had been tampered with. I myself do not believe that Selph's watch had been tampered with. I believe from the evidence before us that Duval Selph came before the committee prepared in the presence of his God to lie, a wicked and malicious perjurer.

Now, what did he say? He says that on the day preceding the election Dr. Johnson asked him to put forward his watch an hour and twenty minutes, and that he did put his watch forward an hour and twenty minutes; that he went to the polls the next morning, and when the inspectors were inquiring carefully, before their God and their country, as to what was the hour, he took out his watch and showed it to them, and gave the time from his watch as eight o'clock and two minutes, without stating the fact that it had been wickedly and maliciously put forward.

Now this Duval Selph is a witness called upon the other side; he is the man who attacked Dr. Johnson. From the information I have I undertake to say that Dr. Johnson was one of the most worthy men, not only in the State of Florida, but in the United States. Hence his death, hence his murder. And when a man is indicted for his murder—I wish here to ask the majority of the Committee of Elections if I am authorized to make this statement—I am told that when the man was indicted for Johnson's murder the contestant in this case was employed as his counsel. I will not assert that that is so. I am told that it is so; and I would like to know what the fact is.

Mr. FINLEY, (contestant.) I am one of the counsel employed to defend a man by the name of Harvey Richard, who was indicted by a grand jury of the State of Florida upon the charge of having murdered Dr. Johnson. I have been thus employed in the due course of my professional practice. I am not the leading counsel. Hon. James M. Baker, of Florida, once an associate justice of the supreme court of that State, a man of reputation and probity and of high social standing, is the leading counsel in the case. My firm, Finley & Finley, and others have been employed as associate and assistant counsel.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. That is sufficient; I do not wish to give up more of my time. This Dr. Johnson was guilty of being a republican. I have all this winter heard talk of "the bloody shirt." I have heard all winter that the results of the late bloody war and of the amendments to the Constitution have been made secure, and I am bound to believe it. But I am bound to say that in one case when a republican was elected to office he was shot, and a prominent candidate for office on the opposite side is retained as the counsel of the murderer.

And I am also bound to say that the proposition of the majority of the Committee of Elections of this House proposes to turn out a legally-elected member of this House and to put the counsel of the indicted man into the place occupied by the man who has the certificate of election. I believe this is a mere incident of course, but it is an incident very likely to happen to republicans in very many localities in the South.

As was well stated yesterday by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. BAKER,] this testimony was not taken until August, 1875; and then, instead of taking any record evidence, instead of going into details, the guesses and recollections of witnesses are put in the face and place of solemn facts.

The gentleman from Tennessee tells me and tells this House that Tompkins, the inspector, was a wicked man, because he says that but a small portion of the persons challenged on that day took the double oath; that is, took the oath that they had been registered and their names had been improperly stricken off, in addition to the general oath required of electors who were challenged as to their right of voting. My friend from Tennessee says that this statement is evidence from the mouth of Tompkins himself that Tompkins was a scoundrel. The honorable gentleman from Tennessee utterly fails—unintentionally of course—to deal fairly with this subject. There were two challenges that could be made. One was the challenge that a man was not a qualified voter, which challenge might be made to a man who had been registered and his name erased. The other was a challenge to a man who was registered; and no man was required by law to take the oath in regard to registration unless he was challenged for the special cause that his name was not found on the list. This is the Philippi at which I promised to meet my friend. He intimated to this House that it was an evidence of depravity on the part of Tompkins that he did not require both oaths to be taken on all occasions, even when a man was not challenged for the cause that required the taking of the second oath.

But gentlemen have not got through with their difficulty about these inspectors. Tompkins may be a villain, but is there any evidence that King was a villain? He did not stay at Johnson's; he came to the polls that morning. Hamilton was a man originally appointed by the county commissioners; he did not stay at Johnson's. Two of the inspectors, then, did not stay at Johnson's. These are men against whom not a word is charged in the evidence. I defy the most scrutinizing eye of the majority of the committee or the majority of the House to find a blot or blemish or spot upon the escutcheon of Hamilton or King.

It is said that King was appointed in place of another inspector; but the other inspector did not come, and therefore he was properly appointed. Hamilton was originally appointed. They staid and acted honorably. They took charge of that election all day; and then made the returns. Those returns were counted and sent up to the State officers.

One or two things more will conclude what I have to say. This Duval Selph, one of the men who were there during the day, swears that Johnson wrote about eighty names, and that he selected from the poll-lists numbers, and that he gave a name and a number to about eighty men; so that, when a man came up and his name was called and the number announced, he then voted and retired. Where is the wickedness of this matter?

Why, sir, here is a poll-list running down in every form of names without division to the number of 1,350. There is a scarcity of time, and as night is approaching those earnest to get all the votes in go and write out a man's name from the poll-list with the number standing by his name on that list; and when the man comes up, the name is announced and the number, so as to be found in an instant. The man votes and retires. Is that fraud in the conduct of an election? Why, sir, there were some honest men examined. Weeks, Johnson's antagonist, staid at the polls all day. He is examined as a witness; but he never thought to find fault with that. Mr. Carroll was there and saw it; yet he never thought to find fault with it. Mr. Barrett was there and saw it; yet he never thought to find fault with it. But this self-convicted villain Duval Selph, or Devil Selph, who swears himself into the penitentiary by his statement of what he did, is the only man who notices this fact and produces it in his testimony.

But there is another wicked act alleged on the part of Johnson. Johnson sent abroad at an expense of $380, as Selph says he was informed by Johnson. It is testified to by nobody but this man, whose word would not be taken for an instant in any court without corroboration, that Johnson paid out this money to send into other counties and bring back the registered voters who were spending the summer and fall at work abroad.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. KELLEY. I ask that the gentleman's time be extended.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I shall not want more than ten minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It can be done by unanimous consent.

Several members objected.

Mr. KELLEY. Why, gentlemen, you can elect your man even though you do grant this additional ten minutes.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. How is it with your man? How have you acted here when you had the majority?

Mr. RANDALL. The other side has within my knowledge elected twenty-five men to this House by action here.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. WALLS] is entitled to the floor.

DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. I ask the gentleman from Florida [Mr. WALLS] to yield for a moment, that the deficiency bill with Senate amendments may be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

There being no objection, the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 3128) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and for prior years, and for other purposes, were taken from the Speaker's table, ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. U. S. GRANT, jr., one of his secretaries.

ELECTION CONTEST—FINLEY VS. WALLS.

Mr. WALLS. I yield twenty minutes of my time to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I was saying that certainly there could be no wrong in sending to other counties to bring back registered voters who were lawful voters in the county of Columbia, to vote at that poll, and no wrong in expending the money necessary to bring those voters to the polls. In most of the States that prohibit the use of money at elections, and perhaps in all of them, it is expressly provided that it shall be lawful to expend money to bring aged, indigent, and infirm voters to the polls.

And the very evidence that is given in this case for the purpose of showing that Johnson brought home these men to vote, even the evidence of Duval Selph, shows that they were lawfully-registered voters who had a right to vote in the county. So there can be no hurt in that. But I am disposed to go further in regard to that. Mr. Johnson's declarations made to Selph, if he made them, on the day preceding the election cannot be given in evidence here and cannot be lawfully considered. Thus I dispose of that matter.

Now, as it seems to me, I have passed over every question that can reasonably or properly arise in this case. I say if the majority of this committee had dealt with this poll as they dealt with other polls in this very congressional district, if they had rejected the votes which seemed to be illegal, they would still have elected Walls by a handsome majority. Walls, by the report of the majority of the committee, comes into Columbia County with a majority of 234. Now throw out the 75 alleged to have voted without taking the registration oath, throw out the 16 it is said were voted at another precinct so as to vote double, throw out the fifty-odd votes alleged to have come from other counties, make it 60, and Walls is elected by nearly one hundred.

But it will not do to treat this poll as other polls are treated. It will not do the work. This poll has got to be cast out. In this matter of casting out there are other precincts—and what I am now saying is for the private ear of the committee, and not for others to hear it—there are other precincts under consideration in the committee, and I hope and have confident belief that my friends who are for throwing out this poll will find themselves as ready to throw out other polls when it does not work politically in the same direction.

Mr. WALLS. Mr. Speaker, it is not my purpose to make a speech, and I should not have taken the floor this morning at all but from a desire to call the attention of the House to a remark made yesterday by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE BOLT] in regard to an affidavit of mine filed before the Committee of Elections. He said he had that affidavit before him, but that he would not further consider it. I send the RECORD to the Clerk's desk and ask the Clerk to read the paragraph I have marked. After it has been read I shall then present my affidavit to show to the House and to the country whether it was insufficient or not. I shall also show before I am through that the people of my district, since this report has been made from the Committee of Elections, have sent affidavits to me, and have asked me to present them to this House in connection with the refusal on the part of the committee to grant me leave to take testimony. I ask the Clerk to read the paragraph in the RECORD from the speech of the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. DE BOLT.]

The Clerk read as follows:

When was Mr. Walls present? On the 13th day of August, with his attorney.

True, Mr. Walls says that he filed his affidavit before that committee asking time to take further testimony. And, as has been stated by my friend from Tennessee, [Mr. HOUSE,] the committee, after due consideration of that affidavit, ruled it out as wholly insufficient; and I can tell the House that the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOAR,] who was then a member of that committee, made the only remarks that were made in reference to it; and he is a strong republican I believe. The affidavit is before me, but I will not undertake to read it.

Mr. WALLS. I now ask the Clerk to read the affidavit which I filed before the Committee of Elections on the 11th day of January, at its first meeting after the committee was organized.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the House of Representatives of the United States:

Upon the affidavit hereto annexed I respectfully ask for leave to take depositions relating to the election at the colored academy precinct, so called, in the county of Columbia and State of Florida, within such reasonable time as may be prescribed by the House; such depositions to be used on the trial of the contested-election case of Finley vs. Walls, from the second congressional district of the State of Florida.

J. T. WALLS.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., January 11, 1876.

The District of Columbia, ss:

Josiah T. Walls, having been duly sworn, on his said oath deposes and says that he is a member of the House of Representatives of the United States, and is one of the parties to the contested-election case from the second congressional district, State of Florida; that during the forty days in which the contestant took his testimony in said case, he (the contestant) took the depositions of certain witnesses at Lake City, in the county of Columbia, in the State of Florida, relating to the election held at the colored academy precinct, so called, in said Lake City; that this affiant, during the time for taking his own testimony in this case, caused to be served upon the contestant a notice to take depositions at said Lake City; that this affiant intended and expected by such depositions to disprove all the material statements of the depositions of the contestant relating to the election at said colored academy precinct; that he employed H. A. Pattison, esq., an attorney residing at Jacksonville, in the county of Duval and State of Florida, to attend, on his behalf, the taking of such depositions at said Lake City, which is distant about forty-five miles from Gainesville, the residence of this affiant, and about sixty-three miles from Jacksonville, the residence of said attorney; that said Pattison promised to attend upon the taking of said depositions on behalf of this affiant, who believed that said depositions had been duly taken until within two days of the expiration of his time for taking testimony, when he learned, for the first time, that his said attorney had failed to keep his engagement, having been prevented therefrom by sickness, as he alleged, and that said depositions had not been taken; that when this affiant first learned of such failure on the part of his attorney it was too late to serve a new notice to take depositions, under the statute, or even to reach said Lake City and take the depositions within the forty days if a notice had been unnecessary; and that this affiant expects by a large number of truthful and unimpeachable witnesses to disprove every material assertion of the contestant's witnesses relating to said colored academy precinct; that a large number of affiant's witnesses had been summoned and were present at said Lake City at the time fixed for taking said depositions and remained about three days to be examined; that as soon as affiant learned that said Pattison had failed to attend as aforesaid, he telegraphed to Charles King, esq., an attorney at law residing at said Lake City, requesting him to represent, or to employ some one else to represent, affiant at the taking of said depositions, but said King declined so to do.

J. T. WALLS,

Sworn and subcribed before me this 11th day of January, 1876.
[SEAL.] I. L. JOHNSON,
United States Commissioner for the District of Columbia.

Mr. WALLS. Mr. Speaker, with all due respect to the gentleman from Missouri and to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSE] as to the sufficiency of my affidavit, I will ask the Clerk to read what I send up to the desk. I wish the country to judge as to the sufficiency of the affidavit I made before the committee—not that I expect it will do me any good in this House, but I wish it to go before the people.

The Clerk read as follows:

STATE OF FLORIDA,
County of Columbia:

Personally appeared before me A. A. Hoyte, who, being duly sworn, deposes and says that he summoned all the following-named persons to appear before James Stevenson, justice of the peace, on the 19th day of October, A. D. 1874, to testify in the matter pending between J. J. Finley and J. T. Walls, Forty-fourth Congress, to wit: Alex. Johns, J. H. Armstrong, G. J. Jones, Charles Thompson, Hales Green, Benj. Simpson, C. R. King, Robt. Peters, Hugh Watson, Adolphus Colsor, Elijah Thomas, Nelson Kirby, Antony Kirby, Quash Robinson, Lewis Hogans, Lewis Johnson, Thomas Randal, Sampson Johnson, Isaac Stevens, Demer McCoy, and Thomas McCoy.

He further says that the above-named witnesses were summoned at the request and on the application of J. T. Walls, contestee; that said witnesses were summoned in good faith; and that said witnesses appeared for three consecutive days waiting for the attorney of Mr. Walls, one Pattison, of Jacksonville, Florida, to appear and examine them; but said Pattison did not appear, and no testimony was consequently taken for the contestee. I saw the said Pattison in Jacksonville, and he told me he would certainly be in Lake City on the 19th of October to take the testimony of said witnesses, but the said Pattison, as above set forth, did not appear, neither did he send any one in his place or in any way communicate with me upon the subject.

A. A. HOYTE.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this the 6th day of April, A. D. 1876.
[SEAL.] CHARLES R. KING,
Notary Public State at large.

STATE OF FLORIDA,
County of Columbia:

I, A. A. Hoyte, clerk of the circuit court in and for Columbia County, do hereby certify that Charles R. King is a notary public for the State of Florida at large, whose acts as such are worthy of credence, and should be respected as such.

In testimony whereof I have hereto set my hand and the seal of our circuit court at Lake City this the 6th day of April, A. D. 1876.
[SEAL.] A. A. HOYTE, Clerk.

Mr. WALLS. It will have been seen that in my affidavit before the committee I stated "by a large number of witnesses." Of course it was stated by the gentleman from Missouri the affidavit was so indefinite it could not be considered. I brought these names here to show there was a large number of names, and that those persons were there at the same time the contestant himself was at Lake City, Columbia County. I now ask the Clerk to read the paper I send up in order to show that Pattison himself did not go, and that his not going was not owing to any negligence on my part.

The Clerk read as follows:

STATE OF FLORIDA,
Duval County, ss:

Personally appeared before me, clerk of the United States district court for the northern district of Florida, H. A. Pattison, who, being duly sworn, deposes and says that he was the attorney of Hon. Josiah T. Walls to take testimony for him, the said Walls, at Lake City, Columbia County, in said State, on the 19th day of October, A. D. 1875, the day appointed to take said testimony; that on the 18th day of October aforesaid this affiant was taken sick, so that he could not, and did not, attend at Lake City aforesaid to take testimony as aforesaid in the case of J. J. Finley, contestant, and Josiah T. Walls, contestee.

H. A. PATTISON.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 31st day of March, A. D. 1876.
[SEAL.] PHILIP WALTER, Clerk.

Mr. WALLS. It was mentioned that he was my attorney, and the affidavit just read proves fully and conclusively the allegation made in my affidavit was perfectly true.

I now ask the Clerk to read from the report of the committee to show the responsibility of the contestant's friends.

The Clerk read as follows:

At this precinct your committee find that there was a conspiracy to commit a fraud upon the election. That the conspirators were Dr. E. G. Johnson, who was a candidate for State senator in Columbia County, and was voted for at this precinct, together with Charles R. King and John W. Tompkins, who acted as inspectors, Charles A. Carroll, who acted as clerk, and one Duval Selph, a supporter of Dr. Johnson. Carroll and Selph were at Dr. Johnson's during the night previous to the election, and King took breakfast with him in the morning. They all, except Selph, left the house of Dr. Johnson in the morning, a little after daylight, and proceeded to the place where the election was to be held, and, in pursuance of the object of the conspiracy, opened the polls at about seven o'clock in the morning, an hour before the time at which the meeting was notified, and an hour before the duly appointed inspectors were called upon to be present, and an hour before the election could be held according to law. No one of the duly appointed inspectors, unless it was Aleck Hamilton, was present or acted at this precinct. Tompkins and King had been requested to be present by Dr. Johnson and act as inspectors, and Charles A. Carroll had been requested by him to act as clerk, and these several persons were either nominated by or acted at the request of Dr. Johnson. They were not legally elected, as there was no regular meeting of the electors having power to choose inspectors before Tompkins and King undertook to act as such, and without legally appointed or chosen inspectors no legal clerk could be chosen or appointed; so that the election at this precinct was conducted by persons not legally authorized, with the exception of Hamilton, and by persons who were ready and willing to violate the election laws of the State and who did violate them.

The fact that the poll was open at seven o'clock is established by deposition of Duval Selph, (page 86.)

Mr. WALLS. Mr. Speaker, when that report reached Columbia County I received affidavits from two of the inspectors, with the request that they should be presented to this House. With no other remarks I send them to the desk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

STATE OF FLORIDA,
County of Columbia:

Personally appeared before me, A. A. Hoyte, clerk of the circuit court of Columbia County, Florida, John W. Tompkins, who, being duly sworn, deposes and says that he resides in Columbia County, Florida; that he was present at the election in Lake City, Columbia County, Florida, on the 3d day of November, A. D. 1874; that he was one of the inspectors of election on that day at the colored academy precinct in said Lake City; that he was legally chosen as inspector by the electors at said precinct or poll as provided in section 11 of the laws of Florida, (see Burke's Digest, 299, 300,) which section provides for the choosing of an inspector by the electors when the regularly-appointed inspectors fail to appear; that two regularly-appointed inspectors for said poll, to wit, Robert Morehead and E. E. Cleaveland, who were regularly-appointed inspectors for the colored academy precinct, failed to appear, and consequently when the hour for opening the polls arrived, the above-named inspectors not having arrived, your affiant was duly and legally elected an inspector as provided for in said section 11. Your affiant further deposes and says that as an inspector at said colored academy precinct he believes the poll was opened at the proper hour, and not at the hour of seven o'clock as testified to by some of contestant's witnesses. He further deposes and says that he has seen the report of the committee of the House of Representatives for the Forty-fourth Congress, first session, in the case of Jesse J. Finley vs. J. T. Walls, and that it is not true, as stated upon page 16 of said report, "that there was a conspiracy to commit a fraud upon the election;" that it is not true as therein stated "that the conspirators were Dr. E. G. Johnson," together with Charles R. King, &c.; and affiant stands ready to prove said allegation, as far as he is concerned, false in all respects if an opportunity is given him. Your affiant further says that the election at said precinct was fairly, honorably, and legally conducted, all of which he believes can be fully established and would have been established had Josiah T. Walls, contestee, taken testimony at the proper time at Lake City. He further deposes and says that the inspectors at said poll did not allow a large number of persons not registered to vote without taking the proper oath as required by section 9 of the laws of Florida, already referred to and quoted upon page 1 of said committee's report. Your affiant further says that at the election above referred to he voted for Jesse J. Finley for Congress; and your affiant further deposes and says that there were at least seventy-five qualified voters present when he was elected inspector, and that he was elected without opposition.

JOHN W. TOMPKINS.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this the 6th day of April, A. D. 1876.
[SEAL.] A. A. HOYTE,
Clerk Circuit Court Columbia County, Florida.

Mr. WALLS. John W. Tompkins was one of the inspecors. It will take occasion here to make a correction in connection with a remark I made yesterday, and which appears to-day in the RECORD. It was in reply to the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. HOUSE,] whom I understood to say that the inspectors voted for me. I made the reply that they did not. But I find this morning by looking at the RECORD that he said a certain party swore they were republicans. I wish to say to this House, and especially to gentlemen on the other side, that I do not come here on the suffrages alone of republicans; and neither does the contestant come here contesting on the suffrages of democrats entirely. If I had time to go back and expose the conspiracies and frauds that have been committed, and bring them to the knowledge of the country, it would be the happiest moment of my life so far as it has yet extended. I would be able to show who were at the bottom of those conspiracies and frauds.

I will now send to the desk another document to show what one of the inspectors, who voted for the contestant, says. It is one of the affidavits which, as I have stated, have been sent to me.

The Clerk read as follows:

STATE OF FLORIDA,
County of Columbia:

Personally appeared before me, A. A. Hoyte, clerk of the circuit court of Columbia County, Florida, Charles R. King, who, being duly sworn, deposes and says that he resides in Columbia County, Florida; that he was present at the election in Lake City, Columbia County, Florida, on the 3d day of November, A. D. 1874; that he was one of the inspectors of election on that day at the colored academy precinct in said Lake City; that he was legally chosen as inspector by the electors at said precinct or poll, as provided in section 11 of the laws of Florida, (see Burke's Digest, pages 299, 300,) which section provides for the choosing of an inspector by the electors when the regularly appointed inspectors fail to appear; that two of the regularly appointed inspectors for said poll, to wit, Robert Morehead and E. E. Cleavland, who were regularly appointed inspectors for the colored academy precinct, failed to appear, and consequently when the hour for opening this poll arrived and the above-named inspectors not having arrived, your affiant was duly and legally elected an inspector, as provided for in said section 11. Your affiant further deposes and says that as an inspector at said colored academy precinct he believes the poll was opened at the proper hour, and not at the hour of seven o'clock as testified to by some of contestant's witnesses. He further deposes and says that he has seen the report of the committee of the House of Representatives of the Forty-fourth Congress, first session, in the case of Jesse J. Finley vs. J. T. Walls, and that it is not true, as stated upon page 16 of said report, "that there was a conspiracy to commit a fraud upon the election;" that it is not true, as therein stated, "that the conspirators were Dr. E. G. Johnson," together with Charles R. King, &c., and affiant stands ready to prove said allegations, as far as he is concerned, false in all respects if an opportunity is given him. Your affiant further says that the election at said precinct was fairly, honorably, and legally conducted, all of which he believes can be fully established and would have been established had Josiah T Walls, contestee, taken testimony at the proper time at Lake City. He further deposes and says that the inspectors at said poll did not allow a large number of persons not registered to vote without taking the proper oath as required by section 9 of the laws of Florida, already referred to and quoted upon page 1 of said committee's report. Your affiant administered the proper oath himself and knows whereof he speaks. Your affiant further deposes and says that at the election above referred to he voted for Jesse J. Finley for Congress.

CHARLES R. KING.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this the 6th day of April, A. D. 1876.
[SEAL.] A. A. HOYTE,
Clerk of Circuit Court Columbia County, Florida.

Mr. WALLS. Mr. Speaker, it will have been noticed from the debate and from the testimony that Mr. King was one of the inspectors at the colored academy precinct. He swears that he voted for the contestant. Mr. Tompkins also swears that he voted for the contestant. It was my intention yesterday not to participate in this debate, but I simply introduce those matters because the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE BOLT] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSE] seemed to lay great stress upon the alleged inaccuracy of the minority report.

I desire, Mr. Speaker, to call the attention of the House to another fact. By looking over the report of the majority you will find that they have so mystified the evidence as to make a Charles A. Carroll and a John Carroll appear as clerk at the colored academy precinct. You will also see they have left out in several instances the testimony of Tompkins. I simply refer to this to show that there was a little inaccuracy with the majority as well as the minority, and to give the contestant the benefit of his own witnesses, whom he takes advantage of, not to throw out—I will not say that, but to rob five hundred and eighty-eight legal voters of Columbia County of their suffrage, while there is not a man in Columbia County, who is not a partisan friend of the contestant, who will swear on the stand that those men were not legal voters. I give the benefit of that to the contestant to show what his own men did for him. They voted for him. They concocted this gigantic blunder, or conspiracy, as the majority call it, and they swear now not only that they voted for him, but that the election was fair. That is all I want to say.

Mr. POPPLETON. I have no disposition to prolong this discussion, and in what I have to say I will occupy but a very few moments of time.

It has been agreed in this case that the issue must turn upon the retention or rejection of what is known as the colored academy precinct. Upon the determination of that question the one or the other of these gentlemen must be decided to be entitled to a seat in the Forty-fourth Congress.

It is alleged at the very outset in this case that in the precinct known as the colored academy precinct, at Lake City, a conspiracy was formed upon the part of one Dr. Johnson and others to capture this poll; and it is alleged upon the part of the contestant that the practical working of that conspiracy was such that success attended their efforts, and that the result was that the conservative voters at that precinct were excluded as it were from recognition.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in order that we may get at the foundation of this matter, it is necessary for us to go back and inquire as to who this man Dr. Johnson was, who is the chief of the conspirators, and the person who dictates to all that surround him the manner and the mode of management in connection with this precinct at this election. Dr. Johnson was a candidate upon the republican ticket for State senator. He upon the day preceding the election is found busily engaged in calling around him men from remote parts of the county for the pupose of constituting at his will, and as he may see fit, a board of election for that precinct upon the ensuing day. And who are these men? The testimony is silent upon that question. We are not advised, your committee is not advised as to who these men are. The testimony is silent as to who this man King is. The testimony is silent as to who this man Tompkins is, or where either or both of them resided.

But the first knowledge that your committee have of these men is their assembling upon the requisition and by the direction of this Dr. Johnson upon the eve of this election at the house of Dr. Johnson for the purpose of organizing a board of election to receive the ballots at this election precinct.

Why is it that no other citizen throughout this entire election precinct is summoned and called upon to give his voice or to state his preference as to who shall constitute this board? But there alone, with these men that are to act upon the following day as the election board, with the one who is to record the names of the voters, with the one who is to act as the judge of election, this Dr. Johnson is found in the night-time holding high carnival over the rights of the voters on the following day.

And what does he do? Immediately upon receiving a promise from this Mr. Carroll that he will act as clerk, his first act is to take down a pretended registry-list and ask Carroll—to do what? Why to transfer from that list fifty names of persons. For what purpose, I pray you? Why, Mr. Speaker, as the impression was left upon the mind of this man Carroll by what was said and done by Dr. Johnson, and the same impression was by the testimony left on the minds of your committee, it was for the purpose of fraudulently working them into the polls on the following day, for the purpose of perpetrating a fraud upon the electors of that election precinct, a fraud upon the electors of the second congressional district of Florida, a fraud upon the State of Florida, a fraud upon this House. This is one of the ear-marks of the conspiracy.

Again, Dr. Johnson is found about four o'clock on the day of the election, when news came from the market-house precinct as to the number of votes cast there showing that he was probably defeated, that he was probably to be left at home; in his anxiety, in his desire for his own success right or wrong, by fair means or by foul means; being willing to resort to any means and to perpetrate frauds to any extent, he makes the proposition, "Cannot something be done by virtue of which we can capture the Ellisville returns?" That was a conservative precinct, a democratic precinct, which was giving to Mr. Finley, the contestant in this case, a large majority. This was another ear-mark of the conspiracy.

But, Mr. Speaker, that is not all. Upon the day of the election these men, in furtherance of their plan of conspiracy, assembled at the polling-place about the hour of seven o'clock in the morning, or a few minutes before, and commenced to receive votes. Many of them had staid at the house of Dr. Johnson the preceding night; they had slept together, they had come from the same nest at the dawn of morning and marched together to the polls at early dawn, and opened the polls at an illegal and unlawful hour. In the progress of the poll that day it is admitted, it is uncontradicted by the testimony, and, as I understand the arguments of the gentlemen who have agreed to the minority report, it is admitted by them, that there were men who voted that day whose names were not upon the registry-list and could not be found, and who did not take the oath required by the laws of Florida. The witnesses put the number of such votes differently. Some say that there were seventy-five and some say that there were a hundred votes of this character cast. This testimony can not only be used for the purpose of purging the polls, but it is one of the strong circumstances and facts in the case going to show that, in pursuance of a previously arranged conspiracy upon the part of these men, these votes were to be received without reference to the administration of any oath or without reference to the fact as to whether the names of the parties were on the registry-list or not.

To show with what blindness the persons who acted as inspectors bowed submissively to the will of Dr. Johnson, let me give you an instance which is found in the testimony.

I read from the testimony of John V. Brown:

Answer. There were 600 votes cast for Congressman. Finley got 11 and Walls 588, I think. I derived my information from being present and keeping a tally-sheet. I know one who voted under twenty-one years of age; he voted a green ticket. Timmons Jenkins voted there in the latter part of the evening; he voted a green ticket also. One presented his ticket and called the name of Jake Williams; his name not being found on the registration-list, he then gave the name of Dick Cooper and voted under that name; he also voted a green ticket; he was a colored man.

Question. Was the precinct on that day under the control of republican or conservative influence?

A. I do not think the conservatives had any influence on that day. It was entirely under republican influence.

In pursuance of his rights before these inspectors that my friend from New York [Mr. TOWNSEND] speaks of, this man first tried to vote as Jake Williams, and, as is presumable from the testimony, immediately upon being refused the right to vote on that name, gave the name of Dick Cooper, and was allowed to cast his vote under that name. That is another little fact showing the pretended integrity and honesty of this virtuous board of inspectors.

There are many instances, Mr. Speaker, of the same character that cropped out in this testimony. There is one other case to which I will call the attention of the House. On the morning of the election a platoon of men presented themselves at that poll, claiming to be voters. Objection was made to the deposit of their ballots, and they went away, and in the evening just before the close of the polls they again, under the leadership, under the marshalship, under the captainship of this same Dr. Johnson, marched boldly to the polls, and these inspectors, without requiring them to take the necessary and requisite oaths to admit their votes, allowed them to cast their votes. There is another thing to which I desire to call the attention of the House. During the entire day this man Dr. Johnson, who was the chief conspirator and one of the chief parties to be benefited by the conspiracy, held the registry-list, as the proof shows, while sitting side by side along with and in the same room with the board of inspectors, and called off the number, whatever number he might call off, whatever number it might please his majesty to announce, the voter stepped up to the little hole in the ballot-box and stuck in a ballot, and the ballot was received and recorded. Dr. Johnson was not willing to trust the manipulation of this election in the hands of his co-conspirators, but he willed that the reins of control should remain in his own hands.

The minority say to us that we cannot depend upon the testimony that is before us for the reason that it is the testimony of conspirators; that, because of the fact that we have alleged them to be conspirators, that it has been proven by circumstantial evidence that they were and are conspirators, we cannot credit their testimony. I have to say to the minority, in reply to that proposition, that if you cannot credit their testimony how can you credit their acts? Upon their acts alone depend the sustaining of this poll; unless their acts are to be recognized there is to be no sustaining of the election at that precinct. If you cannot rely upon their sworn statement, their sworn testimony, neither can you rely upon their acts as pretended, assumed, usurping officers of that election.

The minority say that we cannot depend upon the testimony of one Duval Selph. I believe my friend from New York [Mr. TOWNSEND] has had the kindness, out of the graciousness of his heart, to call him Devil Selph; unauthorized by anything that appears from the testimony, for there is not a word of testimony, not a scintilla of testimony indicative of the proposition that this man Duval Selph is not to be relied upon as a witness. No man raises his voice, no man utters a word against the reputation, against the truthfulness and veracity of this man Duval Selph. It is not intimated in the testimony, but the intimation has had its growth, its life, its sustenance in the vivid imaginings of my friends whose names are appended to the minority report.

It is true that he was caught in bad company. When the recollections of his having thus been inveigled came over him, remorse seized him, and in a truthful hour, in an hour of repentance, he makes confession of the fact that he with this man Johnson and the man King and the man Tompkins had entered into a conspiracy to capture the poll at the colored academy precinct. It is said that because he turned his watch ahead an hour and twenty minutes at the suggestion, at the instance, and at the request of the chief, main, devil conspirator, Dr. Johnson—that because he did this and did not divulge the fact on the morning of election, and thus at that time knock out the bottom of the conspiracy, but saved himself for another time to do it, therefore he is not to be believed.

I have said that the purpose and intention of this conspiracy was to capture this poll. What was the result? Before the gaze of this committee and before this House, by authority of this testimony, what is the appearance of the facts? This man Walls, the sitting member, receives 588 votes, and Mr. J. J. Finley, the contestant, receives 11 votes. I am not surprised that my colleague from New York [Mr. TOWNSEND] should say in the presence and hearing of the House that such a division as this might be looked upon with suspicion. They had accomplished their object; their ends had been reached. Out of the nearly six hundred voters at that poll, you have the fact realized, unaccounted for by the testimony or even by the affidavits that are ex parte and presented here by the sitting member, that this disparity exists.

One of the remarkable facts about this case is the fact that this man Armstrong, who was running upon the republican ticket for the Legislature, was conveniently there upon the morning of election when the pools were opened. Another remarkable coincidence is that his watch agrees almost to the minute with the watch of Duval Selph, which had been turned forward an hour and twenty minutes. I say this is a remarkable coincidence; one that does not often occur; one that, at least in my mind, casts a little suspicion upon the testimony of those men who afterward undertook to get rid of the harrowing truth that their conspiracy had been exposed by this man Selph.

Something has been said by the gentlemen who have signed the minority report upon the proposition that the result of the action of the majority is to substantially disfranchise some six hundred colored voters. I beg it to be remembered by this House that the Committee of Elections, a majority of whom are democrats, but yesterday presented to this House their unanimous report in favor of a colored man to a seat on this floor; and that, too, in the face and eyes of the proof of fraud that not only emanated, had its existence and its being in the State of Alabama, but extended its ramifications clear up to the throne at the other end of the Avenue; I speak of the "bacon" case. The gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. HARALSON,] who received his seat at the hands of this House by virtue of the report of this committee yesterday, can well realize the proposition that I have just made. I desire to repel the charge that there is any politics in the report that is before us. I desire my friend from New York [Mr. TOWNSEND] to remember that to the report filed in this case is the signature of one of the republican members of this committee.

Why this is said I know not, unless it be for the purpose of making political capital; as my brethren upon the floor have said during the four months of this session, "so that the country might know it." I desire to assure the gentleman making this charge, together with the members of this House, that in my heart there is no unkindness toward the colored man. On the contrary, I pity his condition, regret his ignorance, commiserate his misfortunes. I most earnestly desire his mental elevation and his moral improvement. I would most willingly favor any measure looking to the elevation of his race, which for two hundred years has walked in sorrow and drunk to the dregs the bitterest cup that can be pressed to the lips of man. But I am unwilling, either by word, act, or deed, to consent to their being used as the tools, the mere unsuspecting instruments in the hands of a dastardly conspirator, an unmitigated scoundrel, for the accomplishment of his own selfish political ends and the elevation to power of the party to which he belongs. And I believe this to be the sentiment of all the gentlemen whose names appear to the majority report.

Mr. THOMPSON. I now move the previous question.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. I hope my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. THOMPSON] will yield to allow the offering of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Hon. Josiah T. Walls have leave to take depositions relating to the election at the "colored academy precinct," so called, in Lake City, in the county of Columbia, and State of Florida, within twenty days after the adoption of this resolution, such depositions to be taken subject to the statutory provisions regulating depositions, so far as the same shall be applicable thereto, and to be used on the trial of the contested-election case of Jesse J. Finley vs. Josiah T. Walls, from the second congressional district of the State of Florida, and that this case be recommitted to the Committee of Elections.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to allow this resolution to be offered?

Mr. THOMPSON. I cannot yield.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. I hope the gentleman will permit the resolution to be offered.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I trust the gentleman from Massachusetts will permit this to be offered as a substitute for the resolution of the majority of the committee. We can vote it down.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. THOMPSON. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. DE BOLT.]

Mr. DE BOLT. I merely desire to correct one statement made by the gentleman from New York, in which he unintentionally misrepresents my position. He says that "the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE BOLT] is the only member of the committee who holds to the idea that other precincts ought to have been thrown out." If the gentleman had referred to the twenty-fifth page of the majority report, which was lying on his desk, he would have seen that four other members of the committee entertain the same views. What would become of the gentleman's argument if we were to apply to him the same rule that he in the minority report applies to the witness Duval Selph, Falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus?

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to go into any extended remarks upon this case, but simply to state the position of it—the real question involved—and then to leave it to the vote of the House. In the presentation of this question by the minority there certainly seems to be some misapprehension as to the real question presented. That question is not whether we shall throw out the votes of 500 men, more or less; it is whether the well-established principles of law shall be applied in this case—principles which have been long established for the benefit of the people. The question is whether we shall now apply those principles or depart from them altogether.

The simple question involved here is this: Has it been shown that the action of the inspectors and the clerk who presided at the election at colored academy precinct was such as to render their return unreliable? That is the whole question presented here. Now, if their return is unreliable, it does not preclude the showing of the vote in some other way. The only question is as to the testimony which shall be taken as to the vote. We say in this case that the action of the persons who presided at this election was such as to make their return unreliable. As to the rule governing such a case I will read a very brief extract from McCrary's American Law of Elections, section 184:

Where the managers of an election are clearly shown to have committed a fraud in the conduct of the election or the count or the return of the votes, and where the effect of the fraud discovered does not effect any change in the result, the question is a grave one whether the vote shall be rejected in toto.

This he says is a grave question; now for the rule:

And a safe rule probably is that where an election board is found to have willfully and deliberately committed a fraud, even though it affect a number of votes too small to change the result, it is sufficient to destroy all confidence in their official acts, and to put the party claiming anything under the election conducted by them to the proof of his votes by evidence other than the returns.

This is the principle clearly laid down and regarded as perfectly well settled. This principle is referred to again in the same work in section 441, where it is said:

We repeat, therefore, the opinion expressed in a former chapter, that willful and deliberate fraud on the part of an officer being clearly proven should destroy all confidence in his official acts, irrespective of the question whether the fraud discovered is of itself sufficient to change the result. The party taking anything by an election conducted by such an officer must prove therefore by evidence other than such returns.

And that is simply the question involved in this case. Now we say this, that to determine this question nothing more need be shown than the action of the board which conducted this election was of such a character as to make their return unreliable.

Mr. Speaker, it is said that the majority of this committee are not angels. I suppose the converse of the proposition is true, that the minority are. If they make that claim I will not quarrel with them about it. So let it be taken for granted they are angels. Well, admitting they are angels, let me say they seem perfectly well adapted to mingle in the affairs of this world. But if they are not angels, neither are the inspectors of election in the State of Florida. I think they have like passions with other men, and I do not think we can presume so much in their favor that they cannot possibly have been guilty of any fraud; and I do not think it requires a great degree of testimony to establish the fact of the possibility at least of a human being having erred.

I will speak of Carroll, the clerk, for one moment. That clerk himself admitted that he was ready to commit fraud and was selected by Dr. Johnson to act in that election because Dr. Johnson knew he was ready and willing to do it. That is the testimony on the part of the party who acted as clerk of the election. Who is to say to the contrary?

We are told by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TOWNSEND] on this committee there is a presumption this officer has done his duty; but when you find he himself admits he is willing to commit fraud, and when you find an irregularity has been committed by him intentionally, will you not presume then that it was done with the fraudulent purpose he has manifested? Will you conclude that it is a mere innocent mistake? Will you not conclude it was the carrying out of his fraudulent purpose?

Let us look a moment at the clerk of this precinct, concerning whom they say the presumption is so strong that he acted honestly and fairly. The Clerk himself admits that he was ready to commit a fraud. He says this:

Answer. I took down fifty names, more or less, at Dr. Johnson's request, from the book Dr. Johnson took from the shelf. Dr. Johnson called off the names and I took them down. I had consented to act as clerk before Dr. Johnson gave me these names.

Question. What was the impression on your mind that Dr. Johnson desired you to do with those names?

(Objected to by counsel for contestee.)

A. The impression created at the time was that he wanted the names worked in to secure his election.

That was the impression. He was there the night before conspiring with Dr. Johnson to commit fraud. And will you say a return made by such a party is entitled to credit? He says himself it is not entitled to credit.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. THOMPSON. Certainly.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. Does my colleague on the committee claim it to be the impression of Mr. Carroll that certain acts which were done were done for the purpose of committing a fraud? Is there any tribunal under heaven which would decide upon such testimony any fraud was committed or intended?

Mr. THOMPSON. I will answer the gentleman. The question involved is the moral act of this party. He admits himself, and that is what I am putting here, that he was willing to commit fraud; that he understood that to be his duty, whether Dr. Johnson understood it or not; that he was ready then and there to commit a fraud. If a man ready to commit a fraud would permit himself to be chosen as clerk under an agreement that he would commit a fraud, I say no reliance at all can be placed on his official acts.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. THOMPSON. Certainly; two of them.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts show this House in what language Carroll, the witness whom the contestant called, and recognized to be honorable and worthy of credit by calling him—in what words he admits he was ready to commit fraud? He says he destroyed the list. Does he say anywhere he was willing to use that list fraudulently?

Mr. THOMPSON. The member of the Committee of Elections from the State of New York misapprehends the force of what I am saying. I was not at the time discussing the character of Dr. Johnson at all. He is not the man; but I am discussing the character of the clerk. I say he himself admits in the strongest possible terms that he was ready to commit a fraud. He asks me what language Dr. Johnson used. It is not in this book, but it is unmistakable. He was in the room with him that night, and perhaps he need not have said a word. His movement, the motion, the mode in which this was done spoke louder than words. The language was unmistakable, so far as Mr. Carroll's understanding of it was concerned. I think we can understand it. We will take Mr. Carroll's understanding of it.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts let me interrupt him again?

Mr. THOMPSON. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. The gentleman from Massachusetts mistakes my question. I ask in what words Carroll admitted he was willing to work any fraud?

Mr. THOMPSON. I say that the taking of that paper in his hand, the taking of it knowing what the purpose of Dr. Johnson was when handing it to him, understanding his purpose perfectly well—I say that in that he speaks by his act much more powerfully than he could by any word. He took the list of names, knowing the purpose for which Dr. Johnson gave them to him. I submit it is language which cannot be contradicted.

But we look a little further into the honesty of this party whose return it seems we are bound to take here without question. This is the position; and I beg the House to understand that in getting this testimony the contestant was compelled to go, to use a common phrase, into the enemy's camp, and to take the evidence of friends of the sitting member. Here is the cross-examination of Mr. Carroll. He was cross-examined by the contestee or his counsel, and to this cross-examination what did Mr. Carroll say? He was the clerk selected there by Dr. Johnson, and he says:

I do not recollect—

And this will be the answer to the gentleman from New York—

I do not recollect that Johnson asked me to work the names in; I don't remember. I suppose he thought I had sense enough to know what to do, or he would not have wanted me to act as clerk.

He supposed that Johnson thought he had sense enough to know what to do, or he would not have appointed him as clerk. Why, sir, there never were men with a more fraudulent purpose than those men entertained.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. Will the gentleman permit me——

Mr. THOMPSON. I will permit the gentleman anything.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. The gentleman from Massachusetts has said that the contestant had to go into the enemy's camp to get evidence. Why did he not examine among other witnesses Charles R. King, whose affidavit has been read, who therein swears he was the friend of and voted for the contestant, and who was subpœnaed as a witness by contestant, and was not examined? Why did he not take his own friend as a witness, instead of going into the enemy's camp?

Mr. THOMPSON. I will answer that question before I get through.

I have spoken with reference to the clerk, and I say upon the testimony here no one can doubt that clerk had a fraudulent purpose and that he was ready and willing to act fraudulently; and when you find acts there that indicate fraud committed by him, will you not at once believe they were fraudulent acts?

Now let us look along a little further. The gentleman from Indiana calls my attention to this: "Why," he says, "did you not call on King, who was your friend and voted on your side?" I will answer the gentleman. I have great doubt about those affidavits put in here. I do not believe the affidavits which have been read from the desk at all. We have something here by which to test the truth of those affidavits. An affidavit was read from Mr. John W. Tompkins, and he also testified. And which are we to take, his testimony or his affidavit? He was one of the inspectors at this election. He is the man that we are to presume could do no wrong. And what do we find in his testimony? We find in the testimony he gave in this case his admission that he did not conduct that election according to law. He says here by his affidavit he did. Which will you take? You may say that his testimony is not entitled to any credit at all. Take it in that way. But it is his return that you are to rely upon; and then if you prove that he is wholly unreliable, will not that of itself greatly shake your confidence in his return? But he says in his testimony, which is the only thing which is entitled to be considered in this case, that he had both oaths, admitting that he knew perfectly well that the oath in section 9 ought to be administered where the name of the party was not found on the registration-list. He admits here that he allowed parties to vote without taking that oath. He admits it in his evidence, and now he comes by an affidavit here and says that it is not true. I submit this: That it is a sound principle of law that when a party admits a fact against him it is entitled to weight and may be of very great weight indeed; while when he is stating a fact in his favor it is not entitled to as much if any weight. We have here his confession under oath that he did allow parties to vote when he knew that they had not the legal right to vote, and I submit that that is such a fraud on his part as to make his return wholly unreliable.

Now I will say no more with regard to the organization of this board, because it is shown here conclusively, beyond all question, that if elected they were elected not at a time when they could be legally elected. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BAKER] said yesterday that the majority of the committee had announced a monstrous doctrine here; that they had said that the action of officers de facto was the same as the action of mere intruders. We lay down no such proposition at all. But we did say this: that when a man obtains a position through fraud—not being legally elected or appointed, but has through fraud and for a fraudulent purpose obtained a position as an election officer—no reliance can be placed upon his act and return. I think that is sound in law and sound in fact, and that is all we have said in the report of the majority upon that point.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, without going over this testimony further, I say that we have the admission, clear and strong on the part of the officers of election, that they themselves were guilty of fraud. And what more proof can the House ask that they were guilty of fraud than their own confession of the fact? And if they were guilty of fraud in conducting the election, then their return is unreliable. That is all we say about it. We say to those men, "It is clearly shown, you having yourselves confessed it, that you are guilty of fraud and we cannot therefore place any reliance on your returns." So says the law and so the committee were compelled to say in this case.

I yield the remainder of my time to the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. HARRIS.]

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to make a speech, nor do I intend to speak upon the merits of the question. I desire simply to speak only to two points that have been raised by gentlemen on the opposite side. The first is in regard to the death of Dr. Johnson, and the second upon the overruling by the Committee of Elections of the motion of the sitting member for leave to take further testimony.

Sir, I do not think it is the part of an American statesman, though it may be of a member of Congress, to try to misinform the public. I think it is wrong. I think that my venerable friend from New York, [Mr. TOWNSEND,] with his experience of threescore if not fourscore years ought to know that it is wrong to misinform the public upon these important questions. He ought to know, and my junior friend from Indiana [Mr. BAKER] ought to know, that it is wrong, especially at this particular epoch, to try to inflame the public mind in regard to the action of our brethren on either side of the line.

Now, notwithstanding the fact that these gentlemen might disclaim the intention of creating that impression, yet there is not a member of the House who heard them who did not believe upon their statements that they sought to make the House and the country believe that Dr. Johnson, who was elected to the senate of the State of Florida, and who figures in this case, was murdered for political purposes, and that the contestant in this case was then in Florida, defending his murderer. They sought to make that impression. I say the statement is without authority, without evidence outside of anything connected with the record. I will read to the House the only allusion from the beginning to the end of the testimony in the whole record to the death of Dr. Johnson, It is in the testimony of Duval Selph:

Question. Was not Dr. E. G. Johnson murdered since the election?
Answer. I don't know.
Q. What is your impression?
A. I heard so.
Q. Have you any doubt about it?
A. I believe he was killed.

That is all the evidence. When he was killed, where he was killed, how he was killed, for what purpose he was killed, no human being has said in any form that would authorize a member of Congress to speak upon the subject on this floor. And yet upon that evidence the gentleman from Indiana, with his softness of manner and the hissing of the serpent almost, says that Dr. Johnson was conveniently killed, as if he had been killed to keep him from being a witness in this case. My venerable friend from New York upon the committee says it was a strange incident that Dr. Johnson was elected to the senate of Florida; that he was a republican. He says: "Ah, I do not say that he was because he was a republican, but we know that they have a way of killing republicans down South. Sir, [addressing Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York,] you know you meant to create the impression that Dr. Johnson was killed because he was a republican, and you knew when you said it that the record in the case did not justify you in making that statement.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. O, no; I believe all I stated.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. You said that you wanted to come with clean hands to the consideration of this question and yet you go outside of the record to make assertions which are not sustained by that record. If I were to travel outside of the record I should say that Dr. Johnson was killed one hundred miles out of the district in Florida, and killed because of matters not touching politics in any phase or in any form; but that is not in the record. Neither of my friends ought to have referred to matters not contained in the record.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. Will my friend from Virginia allow me to correct an error. I would inquire of my friend if Mr. Duval Selph did not testify, when it was literally dragged out of his mouth, that Dr. Johnson was murdered?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. He said what I have just read to you, and I will tell you what he said further; I will read it again. Here is his testimony:

Question. Was not Dr. E. G. Johnson murdered since the election?
Answer. I don't know.
Q. What is your impression?
A. I heard so.
Q. Have you any doubt about it?
A. I believe he was killed My relations with Dr. Johnson at the time of these conversations were confidential and very friendly. I was in frequent conference with him with regard to the election; I advised with him very frequently. I very frequently made suggestions to him with regard to the election.

He was the personal and political friend of Dr. Johnson, aiding him in this election. You seek to blacken the character of Dr. Johnson's friend by the position you take upon this floor.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him another question?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Certainly.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. I ask him whether as a lawyer, having studied this case, he undertakes to say that Mr. Duval Selph, by his own testimony, does not blacken his character far beyond redemption?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. It is not for me to say whether the witness is self-condemned. I am discussing the conduct of my two friends on the committee.

I desire to say a word now upon the other point raised in regard to the overruling of the motion made by the sitting member, that he be allowed further time to take testimony. What are the facts? I know them and you know nothing about them, and I dislike to hear gentlemen speak upon this floor about matters of which they know nothing, but concerning which it is their duty to inform themselves. I know when I state to my friend from Indiana [Mr. BAKER] the facts in the case, if he were sitting as an Indiana justice, as he said yesterday—and I think he must have thought so when he made his speech——

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. I beg to correct the gentleman. I did not allude yesterday to an Indiana justice, but I spoke about certain pleadings presented here, stating as conclusions of law what, in my judgment, would not be held good as a demurrer in any justice's court in the land.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I say that when you made your argument outside of the record it was an argument fit to be delivered before a justice of the peace, but not before a judicial or political body as it ought to have been.

Now, sir, what were the facts in regard to the application of the sitting member for leave to take further evidence? The committee in this case gave the fairest and the fullest and the most complete opportunity. But strange to say—I know my venerable friend does not know it; I know he has never read the record in this case—yet he says he thanks God that he was not there, and he washes his hands clean of it. I tell him that when he reads the record in this case he will think that, if his hands have never been soiled more than by refusing this extension of time, then there must have been much less dirt in his neighborhood for the last eighty years than in most others.

Now, by reference to page 15 of the record of this case, will be found agreement No. 3, between the parties in this case, by which there was allowed to the contestee forty days from the 25th of August, 1875, in which to take his testimony. In other words, he had until the 5th day of October for that purpose. By agreement No. 4, on page 16 of the record, the time was extended to sixty days, or forty days from the 15th of September. He had first forty days from the 25th of August, the expiration of the time allowed to the contestant; and then the contestant agreed that he should have sixty days more from the expiration of that time.

Mr. WALLS. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. With great pleasure.

Mr. WALLS. I would like the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAR-

RIS] to have the record read to which he refers. And I wish to say here, as he has given me the privilege, that the contestant himself at four different times waived the taking of testimony for his own benefit. I suppose he made the arrangement with my lawyer in Jacksonville, but at no time at my solicitation or that of my attorney. But the last agreement will show that the time was extended for forty days from the 15th of September, which would end on the 25th of October. There was no sixty days about it. I wish the gentleman would have the record read.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Well, there was no misunderstanding between the contestant and the contestee. They conducted this campaign as friends.

Mr. WALLS. We are friends now.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I am glad to hear it. They extended the time beyond that required by law. But the point I make is that the contestee showed no diligence. He did not commence taking testimony until fifty-five days of his time had expired, as shown by the record. He allowed fifty-five days to expire before he gave notice of the taking of depositions, and then, as his affidavit shows, he was not present, and it gives no reason why he did not go to the place. His affidavit says that he wrote to his lawyer to be there; but the law requires the personal attendance of the party. If he had been there himself, and his lawyer had been sick, he could have employed another lawyer; but he neither went himself, nor does he in his affidavit give any reason why he did not go. He allowed fifty-five days to pass before he gave notice of the taking of depositions. Was that due diligence on his part? Suppose he had given notice in due time, and his lawyer had been sick, he would have had fifty of the sixty days left. But he did not do that; he let fifty-five days expire, and then gave notice of taking depositions, and then did not go himself to the place.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Certainly.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. Is it not the fact that during those days which were stricken off the contestee was engaged in taking evidence?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. No; it was forty days after the contestant closed his evidence before the contestee gave any notice of taking depositions.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. In no other county?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. In no other county; he took depositions on only two occasions. My friend from Indiana [Mr. BAKER] certainly has not read the record. I thought from his speech that he had read it; but he now shows as much ignorance of the record as my friend from New York, [Mr. TOWNSEND.] He impressed me yesterday when he made so great a flourish over the murder of one man and the injustice to another of not extending the time for him to take testimony. If the gentleman from New York wants to wash his hands clean, he shows he has no knowledge of the facts of the case.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. We are willing graciously to concede all the intelligence and virtue to the other side.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. We have shown every consideration to the contestee. I may be justified in referring to a case in the Forty-second Congress, when the contestee in this case, then a contestee, came forward on the 11th day of December and asked for an extension of time, and it was given to him.

Mr. WALLS. I venture to say that the record of the action of the committee at that time will show that the extension of time was given on the request of Mr. Niblack himself, the contestant. I first made application; but after we had joined issue it was shown before the committee that they would not count the returns from at least nine counties of the State of Florida, there being no signatures to those returns. Mr. Niblack made application himself, as the report of the committee shows, and time was given to both parties to take testimony during the recess of Congress.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. But the gentleman from Florida [Mr. WALLS] made the first application on the 11th day of December, 1872, and it was granted. The case was not decided until—how many days was it before the expiration of that Congress that Mr. Niblack got in and turned you out of your seat?

Mr. WALLS. About thirty days.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. About thirty days. The term of Congress was for two years, and twenty-three months had expired, by reason of these applications for extension of time, before the case was acted on by the House.

I confess I do not propose while I preside over that committee, if I can avoid it consistently with justice to all parties, to have any such proceeding here. I want these cases disposed of according to the rights of the parties, and not to have both sides drawing pay when only one is entitled to it. That is all I have to say.

Mr. WALLS. I do not want to draw pay to which I am not entitled.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. I desire to appeal again to my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. THOMPSON] for permission to present the resolution which I sent to the Clerk's desk a little while ago.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The resolution is not in order.

Mr. BEEBE. Does it not require unanimous consent to receive the resolution?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I trust a vote will be allowed upon it. I do not want to see anything done that may have even the appearance of injustice.

Several members called for the regular order.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. I hope that so just a demand as this will not be voted down or go unheard.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TOWNSEND] for the resolution reported by the majority of the committee.

The substitute was read, as follows:

Resolved, That J. J. Finley was not elected, and is not entitled, to a seat in this House.

Resolved, That Josiah T. Walls was elected, and is entitled, to a seat in this House.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana, called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 84, nays 135, not voting 71; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, John H. Baker, William H. Baker, Banks, Blair, William R. Brown, Horatio C. Burchard, Cannon, Cason, Caswell, Chittenden, Conger, Crapo, Crounse, Danford, Darrall, Davy, Denison, Dobbins, Dunnell, Eames, Evans, Fort, Foster, Freeman, Frost, Frye, Garfield, Hale, Hamilton, Hathorn, Hendee, Henderson, Hoar, Hoge, Hoskins, Hunter, Hurlbut, Hyman, Kasson, Kelley, Kimball, Lapham, Lawrence, Leavenworth, Lynch, Edmund W. M. Mackey, MacDougall, McCrary, McDill, Monroe, Morgan, Norton, Oliver, O'Neill, Packer, Page, Pierce, Plaisted, Potter, Pratt, Purman, Rainey, Robinson, Rusk, Sampson, Seelye, Sinnickson, A. Herr Smith, Stevenson, Stowell, Martin I. Townsend, Tufts, Van Vorhes, Wait, Alexander S. Wallace, John W. Wallace, White, Whiting, Willard, Charles G. Williams, William B. Williams, James Wilson, and Woodburn—84.

NAYS—Messrs. Ainsworth, Ashe, Atkins, Bagby, Banning, Barnum, Beebe, Bell, Bland, Blount, Boone, Bradford, Bright, John Young Brown, Buckner, Samuel D. Burchard, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Candler, Cate, Caulfield, Chapin, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Clymer, Cochrane, Collins, Cook, Cowan, Cox, Culberson, Cutler, Davis, De Bolt, Dibrell, Douglas, Egbert, Ellis, Felton, Forney, Franklin, Fuller, Gibson, Glover, Goode, Gunter, Robert Hamilton, Hancock, Hardenbergh, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Harrison, Hartzell, Hatcher, Haymond, Hereford, Abram S. Hewitt, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Hill, Holman, Hooker, Hopkins, House, Hunton, Hurd, Jenks, Thomas L. Jones, Kehr, Lamar, Lane, Levy, Lewis, Lord, Luttrell, L. A. Mackey, Maish, McFarland, McMahon, Meade, Metcalfe, Milliken, Mills, Money, Morrison, Mutchler, New, O'Brien, Payne, Phelps, John F. Philips, Poppleton, Randall, Rea, Reagan, Rice, John Robbins, William M. Robbins, Roberts, Miles Ross, Sayler, Scales, Schleicher, Sheakley, Singleton, Slemons, William E. Smith, Southard, Sparks, Springer, Stenger, Stone, Tarbox, Terry, Thompson, Thomas, Throckmorton, Tucker, Turney, John L. Vance, Robert B. Vance, Waddell, Walling, Ward, Warren, Erastus Wells, Whitehouse, Wigginton, Wike, Alpheus S. Williams, James Williams, James D. Williams, Jeremiah N. Williams, Willis, and Yeates—135.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Anderson, George A. Bagley, John H. Bagley, jr., Ballou, Bass, Blackburn, Blaine, Bliss, Bradley, Burleigh, Campbell, Durand, Durham, Eden, Ely, Farwell, Faulkner, Gause, Goodin, Andrew H. Hamilton, Benjamin W. Harris, Hartridge, Hays, Henkle, Hubbell, Frank Jones, Joyce, Ketchum, King, Knott, Franklin Landers, George M. Landers, Lynde, Magoon, Miller, Morey, Nash, Neal, Odell, Parsons, William A. Phillips, Piper, Platt, Powell, John Reilly, James B. Reilly, Riddle, Sobieski Ross, Savage, Schumaker, Smalls, Strait, Swann, Teese, Thornburgh, Washington Townsend, Waldron, Charles C. B. Walker, Gilbert C. Walker, Walls, Walsh, G. Wiley Wells, Wheeler, Whitthorne, Andrew Williams, Wilshire, Benjamin Wilson, Alan Wood, jr., Fernando Wood, Woodworth, and Young—71.

So the substitute of Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York, was not agreed to.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. J. B. REILLY. On this question I am paired with my colleague, Mr. ALAN WOOD, who is absent by leave of the House. If he were here he would vote "ay" and I should vote "no."

Mr. WALKER, of New York. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. G. A. BAGLEY, who, if present, would vote in the affirmative, while I should vote in the negative.

Mr. NEW. My colleague from Indiana, Mr. HAMILTON, is absent on account of sickness.

Mr. CABELL. My colleague from Virginia, Governor WALKER, is confined to his room by indisposition.

Mr. SHEAKLEY. My colleague, Mr. JOHN REILLY, is absent on account of sickness. If he were here he would vote "no."

Mr. COOK. My colleague, Mr. HARTRIDGE, is confined to his room by sickness. If present, he would vote "no."

Mr. BROWN, of Kansas. My colleague, Mr. GOODIN, is absent on account of important business.

Mr. WALDRON. On this question I am paired with my colleague, Mr. DURAND. If present he would vote in the negative and I should vote in the affirmative.

Mr. RAINEY. My colleague, Mr. SMALLS, is absent on leave. If he were present, he would vote "ay."

Mr. RIDDLE. On this question I am paired with my colleague, Mr. THORNBURGH. If present he would vote "ay" and I should vote "no."

Mr. DURHAM. I am paired with the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. HUBBELL, who, if present, would vote in the affirmative, while I should vote in the negative.

Mr. BOONE. My colleague, Mr. BLACKBURN, is confined to his room by severe illness.

Mr. McFARLAND. I desire to state that my colleague, Mr. YOUNG, is detained from the House by indisposition.

Mr. MILLIKEN. My colleague, Mr. KNOTT, is confined to his room by sickness.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

The question next recurred on the resolutions reported from the committtee.

The resolutions were adopted.

Mr. THOMPSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolutions were adopted; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. JESSE J. FINLEY then presented himself at the Clerk's desk, and was duly qualified by taking the modified oath.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. No. 176) to authorize the Northwestern Improvement Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Wisconsin, to enter upon the Menomonee Indian reservation and improve the Oconto River, its branches and tributaries; and

A bill (S. No. 760) to protect the public property, turf, and grass of the Capitol grounds from injury.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, bills of the House of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. No. 1439) authorizing the transfer of certain cases from the circuit court of the United States for the district of Alabama, at Mobile, into the circuit court of the United States for the middle and northern districts of Alabama, at Montgomery and Huntsville, in said State; and

A bill (H. R. No. 700) to incorporate the Mutual Protection Life-Insurance Company of the District of Columbia.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, bills of the House of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. No. 522) to define the tax on fermented or malt liquors;

A bill (H. R. No. 1052) to correct an error in the Revised Statutes of the United States, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. No. 1345) revising and amending the various acts establishing and relating to the Reform School in the District of Columbia.

PUBLIC LANDS IN THE SOUTHERN STATES.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour now begins at five minutes to four o'clock, and the regular order is the call of committees for reports of a public nature, the call resting with the Committee on Public Lands. At the expiration of the last morning hour the gentleman from Louisiana, [Mr. MOREY,] from the Committee on Public Lands, had reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (S. No. 2) to repeal section 2303 of the Revised Statutes of the United States making restrictions in the disposition of the public lands in the States of Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, and Florida, and for other purposes. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] had then been granted the floor by the gentleman from Louisiana for the purpose of moving an amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am informed the gentleman from Louisiana, from the Committee on Public Lands, proposes to submit an amendment to the bill. If such is his purpose I hope he will report his amendment at this time.

Mr. MOREY. I desire, from the Committee on Public Lands, to submit an amendment to the bill as reported from the committee and as it passed the Senate.

Mr. KASSON. Let the bill be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

That section 2303 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, confining the disposal of the public lands in the States of Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas and Florida to the provisions of the homestead law, be, and the same is hereby, repealed: Provided, That the repeal of said section shall not have the effect to impair the right, complete or inchoate, of any homestead-settler, and no land occupied by such settler at the time this act shall take effect shall be subject to entry, pre-emption, or sale: And provided, That the public lands affected by this act shall be offered at public sale, as soon as practicable, from time to time, and according to the provisions of existing law, and shall not be subject to private entry until they are so offered.

Mr. HOLMAN. I now ask that the amendment reported by the committee be read.

Mr. MOREY. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands to report the following amendments to the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 13, after the word "act," insert "which are unsuited for agricultural purposes;" and at the end of the section add the following: "That all lands in said State fitted for the purpose of agriculture shall be subject to disposal under the provisions of the act of May 20, 1862, for homesteads to actual settlers on the public domain, and not otherwise: And provided further, That nothing herein shall be construed to affect the disposal of any mineral lands as now provided by law."

Mr. KASSON. I ask for the reading of the bill as thus amended, so we may understand exactly what it is.

The bill as proposed to be amended was then read.

Mr. KASSON. Without taking the gentleman from Louisiana or the gentleman from Indiana off the floor, I desire to suggest that the reference to the act of May 20, 1862, is not now a proper reference, and it should be to some portion of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. HOLMAN. As I understand, the reference is to the Revised Statutes.

Mr. KASSON. Not in the bill as it has just been read. It refers to the act of May 20, 1862, and not to any section of the Revised Statutes. There are one or two other words in reference to which I wish to make suggestions, but for the present will withhold them.

Mr. HOLMAN. I did not notice that there was any reference to the act of May 20, 1862, and that certainly ought to be changed.

Mr. KASSON. It is in the amendment reported from the Committee on Public Lands this morning.

Mr. HOLMAN. That ought to be amended by inserting chapter 5, title "Homesteads," of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. KASSON. It will be better to say "under the provisions of the laws regulating entries for homesteads;" so as to cover any subsequent amendments which may be made.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest that it be amended so as to read as follows: "As provided by chapter 5, title 32, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and any laws amendatory thereof in regard to homesteads," for this chapter seems to be entirely devoted to that one subject.

Mr. LANE. Do I understand the gentleman from Indiana to consent that this shall apply to agricultural lands?

Mr. HOLMAN. That is what the bill proposes.

Mr. LANE. That is what the amendment proposes.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is what the amendment proposes, if it be adopted.

Mr. LANE. Does it apply to timber lands also?

Mr. SAYLER. Will the gentleman from Indiana yield to me?

Mr. HOLMAN. I will yield to a suggestion from the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. SAYLER. I move to so modify the amendment that it will read, "that all lands in said State fitted for agricultural purposes shall be subject to disposal under the provisions of the homestead law of the United States, and not otherwise."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will reduce his amendment to writing.

Mr. KASSON. Of course that amendment comes in with the last proviso about mineral lands.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is retained.

Mr. SAYLER. I now ask the Clerk to read the amendment which I propose.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words "under the provisions of the act of May 20, 1862, providing for homesteads to actual settlers on the public domain," and insert in lieu thereof the words, "the homestead laws of the United States;"

So that if amended the amendment will then read as follows:

Add at the end of section of Senate bill: "And that all lands in said States fitted for the purpose of agriculture shall be subject to disposal under the provisions of the homestead laws of the United States, and not otherwise: And provided further, That nothing herein shall be construed to affect the disposal of any mineral lands as now provided by law."

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, the bill as reported by the Committee on Public Lands proposed to repeal section 2303 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which provides in effect that the public lands in Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, and Florida "shall be disposed of in no other manner than according to the terms and stipulations" contained in the homestead laws. By this provision, which became a law on the 21st day of June, 1866, the public lands in those States ceased to be subject to sale or private entry, and could only be acquired in tracts not exceeding in extent one hundred and sixty acres, and only by actual settlers under the homestead law. The pending bill would simply repeal this provision, and leave the public lands in those States subject to sale and private entry in unlimited quantities at the minimum price of $1.25 per acre.

The committee now report an amendment to the bill, which in effect provides that the lands in those States "fit for agricultural purposes" shall only be subject to be acquired under the homestead law, and all other public lands in those States shall be subject to sale and private entry without limit, subject to the minimum price of $1.25 per acre. This, of course, is intended to apply to timber lands not "fit for agricultural purposes."

The public lands that are now exclusively subject to the provisions of the homestead law in the several States named are as follows:

	Acres.
Florida	16,500,395
Mississippi	4,000,363
Louisiana	5,447,643
Arkansas	5,000,000
Alabama	9,027,426
In all	39,975,827

I will assume that the amendment, which is a great and most valuable improvement on the pending bill, will be adopted by the House, for it is in the main in harmony with the views the House has heretofore expressed, although never incorporated into a law. The purpose of this amendment is to exempt from sale lands adapted to agriculture and to secure them exclusively to the landless settlers. I hold this to be one of the most valuable propositions ever brought into this House. It should be applied to every acre of the public domain adapted to agriculture. It is a principle for which I have earnestly contended for many years. I have again and again arrayed this great principle against the pernicious and fatal policy by which over two hundred million acres of the public domain have been granted to corporations and placed forever beyond the reach of the great mass of the laboring-men of this country. In my judgment the rescuing of the agricultural lands from the grasp of monopoly and the cupidity of speculation and securing them to the landless men of labor would be the highest glory that this or any other Congress could achieve.

I trust this measure is sufficiently guarded to prevent the possibility of combinations being formed strong enough to reach our valuable reservations. The chairman of the committee [Mr. SAYLER] has undoubtedly carefully considered that question. But as to the general effect of this bill, I wish to call attention to a question which is certainly not unworthy of very careful consideration. It is this: Whether the public lands of the United States that are not adapted to agriculture and that are not mineral lands, but valuable for timber, grazing, and perhaps other purposes, especially valuable for their timber, should be allowed to be sold as they have been heretofore, as they are now in many portions of the public domain, in unlimited quantities at the mere nominal prices at which public lands are in the main sold—$1.25 per acre. It is manifest that the minimum price fixed for the public lands, $1.25 per acre, was the result of a desire on the part of Congress, as far back I think as the year 1820, to facilitate the acquisition of homesteads by actual settlers, and to distribute the ownership of lands as widely as might be among the people of the United States. The price was made almost nominal, so as to little more than re-imburse the Government for the amount of money expended in extinguishing the Indian titles, surveys, and the sale of the lands. And the Government, for the purpose of securing general ownership of lands by the people, could well afford to furnish these lands at this comparatively nominal price. Indeed, for the purpose of securing the lands to actual settlers, it is very clear that it was the highest interest and duty of the Government to secure the lands to the settler at the lowest price consistent with the exigencies of the national Treasury; for nothing could add so much to the permanent wealth of the Republic, its solid and enduring prosperity, and the independent and manly spirit of its citizens, as to secure to every household a just proportion of the lands of the country.

But this bill as it stands, with the one provision which subjects all lands not adapted to agriculture to sale at this nominal price, necessarily enables capitalists to monopolize large portions of the public domain at a price greatly disproportionate to its value, and that in my judgment is a serious objection to this measure, though a greatly less evil than the saving of the agricultural lands for actual settlers is a public good. I may be told that this wealth, which may be monopolized, consisting in boundless regions of timbered lands, will not be made available unless these lands are sold in large tracts. I do not think, however, that that argument can be sustained. It is very possible for these lands to be held in smaller quantities and still to be made available by the energy of the single citizen. This policy would make no great fortunes. It would give capital no opportunity to rapidly multiply itself; but it would do what is infinitely better, it would give multitudes of men an opportunity by their own labor to improve their fortunes. If the wealth of these lands, even though not adapted to agriculture, were to be distributed, as contemplated in regard to the agricultural lands under the homestead law, among our landless people, a very beneficial result would follow in at least some diffusion of wealth. It would tend to check, to that extent at least, the growth and centralization of the wealth of the country, which in a republic is a positive evil, if not the greatest evil to which it is exposed; and would withhold the facilities incident to this class of legislation for skillful and enterprising adventurers accumulating vast estates founded upon comparatively slight expenditure.

For the greatest evil in my judgment that Congress can inflict upon our republican institutions is opening up, by legislation and on the basis of the commonwealth of the whole people, facilities for the excessive opulence of the few; for it ends in the impoverishment and wretchedness of multitudes. Indeed, in the States mentioned lands are and always have been held in vast tracts, while the great multitudes of people so recently freed and enfranchised are not only landless, but poor, and with meager facilities for the betterment of their condition.

The Commissioner of the General Land Office in his last report, referring to the public lands in the States I have named, and mentioned in the section I have referred to, says: "In the States to which this act refers a large, and perhaps the largest, portion of the public lands remaining to the Government is covered with valuable timber." Why not grant these lands to the landless people, even if they are only valuable for timber, if they can get no better? Why give a few capitalists an opportunity at a nominal price to monopolize these valuable timber lands? They will monopolize them and coin them into imperial estates if you open up the opportunity. I therefore think, sir, that even as to these timber lands not adapted to agriculture we should either limit the quantity one citizen shall be permitted to take, as under the homestead law, which plan I prefer, or, if the lands must be sold, limit the extent of the purchase and increase the minimum price beyond $1.25 an acre. If these lands are not to go to the landless and laboring-men, then let them sell at least at some approach to their actual value. The minimum price should certainly be made higher for this class of lands, which are not designed to encourage settlement, but which are actually bought for speculation, or else that the lands themselves should be allowed to go under the provisions of a law similar to the homestead law, although not contemplating permanent actual settlement, to the end that this public wealth shall not be monopolized, but diffused.

I fear there is another objection to this amendment. I apprehend that it will be very difficult to discriminate between lands adapted to agriculture and those that are not; and that perhaps will be the great embarrassment that will be encountered, and I fear a source of very great frauds upon the country. There is not a State in the Union to which the swamp-land law applied perhaps which did not acquire dry and arable lands under the provisions of that law, and that to the extent of many hundreds of thousands of acres. I may safely say the aggregate ran up to millions of acres; and these lands, without inuring to the benefit of actual settlers, as experience has shown, have generally gone to the benefit of speculators. It is to be apprehended that the same experience will be encountered here. In the State of California, and in almost every State from California eastward to Ohio, it has been found that frauds were perpetrated upon the Government and the people under the swamp-land laws, and that to the extent in the aggregate of millions of acres, and venal and corrupt men and public officials reaped the profits. And if it should happen, as it may happen under this measure unless most cautiously guarded, in the greed of gain and insatiable venality that unhappily afflicts this country, that dishonest combinations shall be formed to grasp at this public wealth, millions of acres of virgin and fruitful lands adapted to actual settlement and cultivation may be seized upon under the pretense that they are not adapted to agriculture. In a dissolute period like this unhappy epoch in our history who will stand surety that, with such a large discretion as this measure will give, the public officer will resist temptation when the skillful and dishonest combination shall have been formed to seize upon these fertile lands? The robbery of the public lands is far more fatal than the robbery of the Treasury. It deprives the laboring masses of homes and firesides and hope, and the Republic of independent and virtuous citizens.

A discussion of this question twenty-five years ago, or twenty years ago, or even fifteen years ago, in this House would not have arrested attention; for until these imperial grants were made to favored corporations the public domain was still deemed inexhaustible. Congress blindly acted as if assured that our children and children's children would still find public lands upon which to erect prosperous homes, and that our landless people, full of energy and enterprise, would everlastingly find the highways westward leading to fertile lands, prosperous homes, and happy and virtuous firesides, still fostering that independent spirit which the possession of an assured freehold can alone inspire. But we see now that that golden age hastens to a close. The great outlet for the men of labor is rapidly closing. The fertile fields which enabled perseverance and courage to defy the power of capital are already mostly in the grasp of the monopolist.

It is true the Commissioner of the General Land Office informs us in his last report that we have 1,154,471,762 acres of land unsurveyed and undisposed of. This is a magnificent showing. I have heard it quoted as evidence that Congress might safely still be lavish of the public lands in ingenious schemes for giving fortunes to its favorites; but this is a most deceptive statement. It embraces the vast range of the Rocky Mountains, and the Sierra Nevada, and the Black Hills, and the Great American Desert, and the hundreds of millions of acres of the icebergs of Alaska, and boundless other regions which will yield no fruit under the patient labor of the husbandman. No, sir; when the imperial grants to corporations which are rapidly crystallizing into a few imperial private fortunes for unscrupulous and skillful schemers in your great cities shall be deducted, there will be even now but little left of agricultural land for the landless.

Yes, sir, this magnificent inheritance of the American people, this magnificent resource for the laboring people of this country, this field where patient industry was certain of a home and fireside, and which kept within reasonable limits the price of lands everywhere, is rapidly escaping from the grasp of our people, and will be unknown to their children. Monopoly, grasping, heartless, sordid monopoly, seizes upon the whole, and puts the price beyond the reach of labor. There should be no further purchase allowed of public lands that may be devoted to agriculture. This field of speculation should cease. It should never have been allowed. To permit it now is a crime against free government, and should be promptly resisted by the American people, and Congress should not be unmindful of their interests.

These are the questions I present and the suggestions I have sought to make in regard to this measure: First, that as to timber lands which are not adapted to cultivation, it enables capitalists to appropriate them in vast bodies with a view to their future and rapidly increasing value. Large bodies of these lands are in the State of Florida.. General attention has not been directed toward that State until within the last few years. Florida, on account of its salubrious climate and its inexhaustible soil, is destined to be one of the great States of the Union, but not now. The lands are not now generally of much marketable value. How readily speculators may seize upon those lands in vast tracts which seem now to be valuable only for the timber and hold them for their rapid growth in value. The speculator can see very clearly that he need not wait long for his profit. Men who went into speculations in public lands forty years ago, or even twenty-five years ago, waited long for the advance in price, for the whole West was open to private entry; but the now rapid growth of our population and the almost total exhaustion of the public domain, and especially of timber lands, furnish an absolute assurance that these lands in the course of comparatively a short period of time will be called for and the price enormously advanced.

This opens up the most promising field for land monopoly and speculation that the capitalist can hope for. With the Treasury of the nation exhausted, that great lobby that hangs around your Capitol will see in this about the surest chance for speculating off of the public wealth that is left.

I object, therefore, to the principle of the bill that allows unlimited purchase by the wealthy citizen of lands even which are only valuable for their timber, for a merely nominal price. I think that Congress in this legislation should rather encourage facilities and opportunities for men of limited means to acquire an opportunity for the advancement and promotion of their fortunes than facilitate the increase of already overgrown estates.

Thus, in my judgment, Congress may well encourage by legislation general ownership of lands by our people, the general diffusion of wealth, and a general equality of our people in their material condition; at least our legislation should not favor results the reverse of these. Any legislation of Congress that encourages a different result tends to weaken the structure of our Government.

Finally, I object to this bill that the terms used, descriptive of lands that shall not be sold but reserved for actual settlers, is too indefinite. This is my most serious objection to it, the apprehension that under its provisions, unless more carefully guarded, large bodies of the public domain adapted to agriculture will be acquired for purposes of monopoly and speculation in the States to which this bill now relates. The principle of this bill, whatever its form may ultimately be, will probably be extended to the Territories, and other States having public lands within their limits, and I fear that large portions of the public domain adapted to agricultural purposes will be seized upon by unscrupulous combinations on the pretense of not being adapted to agriculture, unless the bill is most carefully worded. The results of the land monopoly of the last few years will be more fearfully exemplified in the rapid exhaustion of what remains if the opportunity for unlimited purchase shall be allowed, for now the monopolist sees that the homestead law will not long stand in his way of rapidly advancing the price.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Are there any public lands undisposed of in the State of Indiana to-day?

Mr. HOLMAN. I believe not, or if there is any it is in such small fragments as not to be taken into the account.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Have they all been disposed of under the homestead act?

Mr. HOLMAN. None of them, I think, or at least very little. The lands of Indiana were disposed of in the main before the homestead law was enacted.

Mr. LANE. Were they not disposed of under the pre-emption laws of the United States?

Mr. HOLMAN. I think they were in part disposed of under the provisions of the pre-emption laws, but mostly by public sale and private entry. The law in regard to the sale of land was wise enough under the old order of things. It resulted, in the olden time, in the acquisition of lands in small tracts, a quarter-section or under, seldom more. The great body of the lands in Indiana was purchased by actual settlers, and in the main before the era of land speculation.

Mr. LANE. Did they pay more than $1.25 an acre for them?

Mr. HOLMAN. O, yes; more than that was paid for a portion of the lands in the southern and eastern parts of the State. The law fixing the $1.25 minimum was enacted in 1820.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. If the gentleman will allow me to interrupt him again.

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I was this morning reading a speech of Mr. Benton on this subject, made many years ago. He said that the public lands sold up to the time he made his speech did not average over $1.25 an acre.

Mr. HOLMAN. That may be true. It is well known that States like Ohio and Indiana were considerably settled before the reduction of the price of lands to the minimum of $1.25 an acre. But the circumstances under which those States were settled were entirely different from the circumstances surrounding us at the present time. There was no tendency at that period to invest large sums of money in public lands for purposes of speculation. There were but few capitalists, the population grew slowly, public lands were abundant, and the price grew slowly. Under the influences of the olden time in States like Ohio and Indiana land was purchased in comparatively small bodies. Whole counties may be found in Indiana where almost every quarter section of land or subdivisions of a quarter was purchased by itself by the citizen who settled upon it. Very frequently tracts were so purchased as small as forty acres.

It has only been during the last fifteen or twenty years—mainly during the last fifteen years—since our population has been so rapidly increasing, capitalists increasing, and the exhaustion of the public lands began to appear, that the advantages of investing large capitals in land at the nominal price of $1.25 have been seen to be a source of immense speculation and profit. When the homestead law was enacted the sale of public lands should have ceased. As a question of political economy and of free government, the money realized by the sale of lands was of no possible moment in comparison with the benefits to the nation of securing the same lands to landless citizens. These independent homesteads are the true sources of the real wealth of the State. They are the only safe fortresses of a free government. In traveling through States like Kansas and Iowa, and even Illinois, I have passed over vast domains, imperial estates, owned by a single citizen, perhaps of New York or of Boston.

Mr. LANE. How did they acquire those vast estates under the pre-emption law? Under that law no man could take more than one hundred and sixty acres.

Mr. HOLMAN. Those lands were not taken up under the homestead law or the pre-emption law; they were purchased, as it is contemplated by this bill lands may be purchased, at public sale or taken up in private entries at the minimum price. Imperial estates were so taken up and are now held for the purpose of speculation, or to hold as an estate; speculating under the law enacted at a time when the wealth of the country was but small, and when even $1.25 would seldom tempt a purchase except for actual settlement. Speculation in public lands grew with the wealth of the country. It never should have been tolerated. The public lands were held by the nation in trust to secure homes for its people. They should no more have been subject to the cupidity and avarice of the capitalist than the free air of heaven or God's blessed sunlight. This speculation in public lands and the great grants to corporations will in the early future render landless, homeless, hopeless, and miserable great multitudes of our people.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. If the gentleman will allow me I will ask him a question here.

Mr. HOLMAN. With great pleasure.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I will ask the gentleman if these large estates of which he speaks were not purchased from grants made for school purposes or for railroad purposes? We have been in the habit of making large grants to States for agricultural colleges, &c. Were not these large estates obtained by the parties of whom he speaks from these grants made by Congress?

Mr. HOLMAN. They could have been, and undoubtedly in some instances they were. But my friend must know that in most of the States and Territories of the West the very policy prevailed contemplated by this bill, of putting up the lands at public sale at a minimum price of $1.25 an acre, and after the public sale selling the unsold lands without limit at $1.25 per acre, and capitalists have flocked from Boston and Philadelphia and New York, and from wherever else capital accumluates, to the land offices with large capitals and invested them in these fertile lands, and thus became seized of vast possessions which, under the beneficent provisions of the homestead law, should have gone in small estates to landless and laboring men, increasing the aggregate of the virtue, happiness, and manhood of our country, and adding greatly to its solid wealth. There was no impediment to the entry of these vast estates by capitalists; there is but little now. The idea that this public domain was inexhaustible has always prevented proper action by Congress for its protection. The idea that we should ever have a large landless population, desiring but unable to obtain homes to shelter their families and lands to cultivate—a pursuit the most of all grateful to freemen—and to raise their children in virtuous industry, has never arrested the attention of the public men of this country, at least until very recently when the tide of emigration so long and steadily and with ever-increasing tide moving westward met a teeming multitude recoiling from the Pacific and seeking for homes eastward of the inhospitable soil that skirts the eastern base of the Rocky Mountains. Then it was seen how soon the public lands—this source of succor and hope for labor and glory and strength of the nation—would be exhausted.

No impediment has been thrown in the way of speculation in the public lands, and even now the subject is an abstraction; and this bill perpetuates as to lands which are said not to be adapted to agriculture the evil of the old system, and gives cupidity an easy access to the public wealth. No scheme could be devised more injurious and unjust to labor than the unlimited right to purchase the public lands at a nominal price. It furnishes to the capitalists of to-day opportunities to acquire countless millions a few years hence at the expense of thousands and hundreds of thousands of citizens permanently deprived of opportunities to obtain homes. For when this public domain shall be exhausted, the young man leaving the old home full of energy, and youth, and hope, bravely turns his steps westward, and however weary his journeys, he finds no lands within his reach; monopoly dictates the price; he becomes a tenant where he should have been the owner, and the landlord takes the bread he has earned, and holding the plow that is not his own leaves him a cheerless fireside and crushes out the hopes of his youth.

We have never felt the fearful consequences of land monopoly in this country; we will not for years to come, in any marked degree; but, sooner or later, the great landed estates, the more than baronial possessions we have permitted to be seized at a nominal price or through the imperial grants to corporations in the most fertile sections of the Union by men who without labor have amassed wealth through the disorder and corruptions of our time, will be a fearful misfortune to this Republic. Land monopoly in our country, as in Europe, means stately palaces, luxury, idleness, and licentiousness on the one hand, and on the other squalid and hopeless poverty; the few excessively rich, arrogant, and licentious, with multitudes of people poor, miserable, and without hope. Against any legislation tending to that result, even in the slightest degree, I must enter my solemn protest. I fear and abhor legislation that even by possibility may bear such fruit.

I feel as anxious about these public lands as I do about the national honor; for I feel that the solidity and permanence of this Republic depend in the times that are coming upon the number of men who are the independent owners of a freehold in the lands of their country. I do not believe that any government can be permanently republican in spirit unless the great body of its people are independent in the ownership of their homes, and the plow held by the hand of its owner. That grand old republic that flourished upon the Tiber—grand at least until wealth and luxury had extinguished virtue and the love of liberty, and labor had ceased to be honorable, so familiar to us all in our boyhood, esteemed ownership in the soil the inherent right of the citizen. The simple homestead and the labor that made it fruitful were the pride and glory of the Roman republican. When Tiberius Gracchus, the champion of the homestead law of the republic, fell under the blows of the patricians, the land monopolists of the olden time, the republic perished. The homage of all the centuries has crowned with honor the simple grandeur of the republic, (and the highest type of its greatness was the Roman citizen in the patient labor of his field,) but pays no such tribute to the power and wealth and luxury, nor even learning, of the imperial city. The agrarian law of the Hebrews fostered the most masculine race that ever drove back an invading army. But I am venturing beyond the scope of my subject.

I earnestly trust we shall have no hasty legislation on a question so vital as this. I have for years resisted the fatal policy which has now almost exhausted the public lands. I trust that we will be able to so perfect this bill that at least the lands in these five States of the South adapted to agriculture shall be secured to our landless people against all the schemes and stratagems that grasping venality can devise, and that the same principle shall be applied to every acre of the public domain wherever situated that will furnish a home and yield its fruits at the bidding of labor. I trust in God that the hand of monopoly will not be permitted to grasp another acre of the public lands, and rob the laboring-man of his rightful heritage. This Republic should not forever forget that these lands are held in trust for the noblest purpose of Government, the happiness of its people.

For these reasons I think a bill like this, instead of being presented without safeguards, should be the subject of very careful consideration, so that it shall open no door for fraud upon the landless people of this country; that no Commissioner of the General Land Office or surveyor-general shall have it in his power to say that vast regions of country are not adapted to agriculture, and shall be subject to sale at $1.25 per acre, when they are in fact adapted to agriculture, thus depriving thousands of landless people of the present and early future of the opportunity of securing homes.

Mr. LANE. Does not the surveyor-general determine what is mineral land?

Mr. HOLMAN. He may determine that with reasonable safety.

Mr. LANE. And with the same safety, with more safety, can he determine what is timber land.

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend from Oregon will permit me to say that the surveyor-general has exercised the power of determining what are swamp lands; and yet what millions of acres of the most arable and beautiful lands in this country were taken under the provisions of that law!

Mr. LANE. Then, according to the gentleman's argument, it would be impossible to classify lands at all; they should all be regarded as agricultural lands. I see the bent of the gentleman's argument.

Mr. RANDALL. Will the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] yield for a recess?

Mr. HOLMAN. I will finish in a moment.

Having discussed this subject in a general way, throwing out some crude ideas in regard to the general effects of this bill, I do not desire to debate it further; but I hope the few remarks I have made will elicit further inquiry. In conclusion, I will say that there are very few quarter sections of land in this country that will not with labor yield to some family a comfortable support. Far better that these lands, not simply in the States of the South but everywhere, should remain for a while undisposed of with opportunity for examination. I would apply the same rule everywhere to all lands adapted to the occupation of the citizen. The highest purpose that can be sought by a Government like ours is to secure by the wise encouragement of its laws homes for its people.

I trust that this bill will not be passed without a most thorough scrutiny and that we shall take no step backward in the effort to secure to the landless people of this country of the present and early future the benefit of the public domain. Let us devote whatever remains of the public domain to the purposes of the actual settlers under the beneficent provisions of the homestead law.

Mr. BRIGHT. I have an amendment which the gentleman from Louisiana agrees to accept, he having charge of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana cannot accept it.

Mr. BRIGHT. Then I desire to offer it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided further, That the lands known as the Hot Spring lands, in Arkansas, shall not be subject to entry or sale under the provisions of this act.

Mr. SAYLER. That is entirely unnecessary.

The SPEAKER. To what part of the bill does the gentleman from Tennessee move his amendment?

Mr. BRIGHT. It is an amendment to the bill, and not to the amendments now pending.

Mr. SAYLER. This bill does not in the least affect the Hot Springs reservation, and I therefore do not see the necessity of any such amendment as that moved by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair begs leave to state the condition of the bill. There is an amendment pending by the gentleman from Louisiana on behalf of the committee. The gentleman from Ohio has moved an amendment to that amendment. There is, therefore, an amendment to an amendment now pending. The gentleman from Tennessee cannot now move his amendment as an amendment.

Mr. SAYLER. The Hot Springs is a special reservation, and not subject to sale at all, and cannot be affected by this bill.

Mr. BRIGHT. I beg leave to state there is a difference of opinion as to the Hot Spring reservation.

Mr. SAYLER. Yes, as to who is the owner.

Mr. BRIGHT. I should like to make a statement, if in order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is in order, and will proceed.

Mr. LANE. I ask the gentleman from Tennessee to yield to me for a moment. I desire to read——

Mr. BRIGHT. Certainly.

Mr. LANE. I desire to read the law relative to the Hot Spring reservation. The third section provides that the Hot Springs in said Territory, together with four sections of said land, including the said springs, as near to the center thereof as may be, shall be reserved for future disposal by the United States, and shall not be entered, located, or appropriated for any other purpose whatever. I therefore apprehend this bill does not apply to the Hot Springs reservation at all.

Mr. BRIGHT. I am apprised of that; but there have been several acts passed since that time, and in order to obviate any difficulty on the subject I offer an amendment for the purpose of preventing the Hot Spring lands being comprehended under the construction of any of those acts. It surely can do no harm, and my reason especially for offering it now is that there is a difference of opinion in relation to the construction of the several acts which have been passed. I will state furthermore, in addition to the pendency of that tract of land in the Supreme Court, information has come to me that there is something like a conspiracy against these lands.

Mr. LAWRENCE. For the purpose of getting them?

Mr. BRIGHT. Yes, sir; for the purpose of getting possession of these lands away from the United States, and I wish to put it beyond dispute, or beyond cavil, so that by no possible construction of law shall they be taken possession of, but shall remain an inheritance worth millions of dollars to the United States.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is bound to say to the gentleman from Tennessee that his amendment, being in the third degree, is not in order.

Mr. BRIGHT. I understand the ruling of the Chair, and, if it be in order, I will offer it as an independent section to the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. You can give notice you will move it when one of the pending amendments is disposed of.

Mr. BRIGHT. I now give notice I shall move my proposition as an amendment when one of the amendments now pending is disposed of.

Mr. MOREY. As the morning hour is about to expire, and as the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations wishes to take the floor for the purpose of making a motion to have a night session, I wish to say that in the morning hour to-morrow I shall ask this bill be debated for and against in ten-minute speeches during the morning hour, at the expiration of which I shall demand the previous question.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 279) to establish a land office in the southern part of Utah Territory, to be known as the Beaver district, and for other purposes;

An act (S. No. 417) for continuing the work of improving the Capitol grounds; and

An act (S. No. 697) authorizing the sale of logs cut by the Indians of the Menomonee reservation, in Wisconsin, under the direction of the Interior Department.

COMMERCE AND NAVIGATION.

The SPEAKER. The House is aware that it requested the return by the Senate of the bill (H. R. No. 2799) to amend certain sections of titles 48 and 52 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, concerning commerce and navigation and the regulation of steam-vessels, for the purpose of correction. The Chair now desires, with the leave of the House, to ask that the Clerk be directed to make the correction which is required in order that the bill as sent to the Senate shall be the bill as passed by the House.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The error appears distinctly from the RECORD, which states the matter accurately. It was the result of an accidental transposition.

Mr. KASSON. What was the error?

The SPEAKER. It consists in having inserted in the bill as sent to the Senate these words:

And in case of the loss of life of any passenger by reason of the negligence, misconduct, defects, or imperfections aforesaid, the legal representative of the person so killed shall have the same right of action as hereinbefore provided.

That was rejected by the House. What was adopted the Clerk will have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lieu of section 4493 as given in the printed bill insert the following:

Whenever damage is sustained by any passenger or his baggage from explosion, fire, collision, or other cause, the master and the owner of such vessel, or either of them, and the vessel, shall be liable to each and every person so injured, to the full amount of damage, if it happens through any neglect or failure to comply with the provisions of this title or through known defects or imperfections of the steaming apparatus or of the hull; and the total liability of such owner or owners shall in no case exceed the amount or value of his or their interest in such vessel and freight then pending; and any person sustaining loss or injury through the carelessness, negligence, or willful misconduct of any master, mate, engineer, or pilot, or his neglect or refusal to obey the laws governing the navigation of such steamers, may sue such master, mate, engineer, or pilot, and recover damages for any such injury caused by any such master, mate, engineer, or pilot; and such officer may also be imprisoned not exceeding three years.

The correction was accordingly ordered to be made.

REPORT OF BOARD OF AUDIT.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I have the honor to transmit herewith to Congress the final report of the board of audit constituted by section 6 of the act for the government of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, approved June 20, 1874, and abolished by the joint resolution approved March 14, 1876, and to call your attention to the statements therein presented.

U. S. GRANT.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, April 19, 1876.

The message, with accompanying report, was referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

LIEUTENANT D. J. EZEKIEL.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report of the Adjutant-General on the bill (H. R. No. 1882) relating to the promotion of Lieutenant D. J. Ezekiel; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PROMOTION OF ENLISTED MEN.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report of the Adjutant-General on the provisions of the act of August 4, 1854, relating to promotion of enlisted men to be commanding officers; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

F. A. PAGE.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a copy of letter of F. A. Page, late second lieutenant United States Army, with indorsements thereon regarding his re-appointment; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

OFFICERS COMMISSIONED FROM THE RANKS.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report on the bill (H. R. No. 358) in relation to officers who have been commissioned from the ranks; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

UTAH WESTERN RAILROAD, ETC.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report on the bill (H. R. No. 2652) granting the right of way, &c., to the Utah Western Railroad, &c.; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SEAL LOCKS, ETC.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, in reply to a resolution of the House of Representatives of the 4th instant, asking information in regard to seal locks, &c., used in connection with the customs and internal-revenue service; which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department.

COLONEL MARSHALL AND OTHERS.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting the petition of Colonel Marshall and others on the retired list, United States Army, for appointment to active duties; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SHAREHOLDERS IN NATIONAL BANKS.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a House resolution of the 8th of January, a copy of the lists required to be filed in the Office of the First Comptroller of the Currency, showing names and residences of shareholders in national banks, &c.; which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was given to Mr. SEELYE until Tuesday next, and to Mr. MILLER for one week.

JUDGMENTS OF COMMISSIONERS OF ALABAMA CLAIMS.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York, by unanimous consent, submitted the following preamble and resolution; which were referred to the Committee of Ways and Means:

Whereas the Secretary of the Treasury, on the 17th day of April, 1876, issued a circular containing the following notice: "Under the provisions of an act of Congress approved April 11, 1876, to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the judgments of the commissioners of the Alabama claims, notice is hereby given that sealed proposals will be received at the Treasury Department until twelve o'clock noon on the 24th instant, and opened immediately thereafter, for the sale of 5 per cent. coupon or registered bonds of the funded loan of 1881, authorized by the acts of July 14, 1870, and January 20, 1871, bearing interest, payable quarterly, from May 1, 1876, in lots of not less than one-half million dollars, to the total amount of $5,883,000. These bonds will be sold for gold, and payment therefor must be made within three days after the acceptance by the Department of the bid." And whereas by the terms of this notice parties who desire to purchase a less amount of said bonds than $500,000 are precluded from making bids and are required to pay gold therefor instead of legal-tender notes, in which the judgments are payable: Therefore,

Resolved, That in the opinion of this House the Secretary of the Treasury should withdraw his said circular and offer the said bonds for sale in sums of $1,000 or multiples thereof, and receive proposals and payment therefor in legal-tender notes, unless there is some provision of law forbidding such payment.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SPARKS. I move that the House do now take a recess until half past seven o'clock, for the consideration of the bill (H. R No. 2677) to transfer the Office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs from the Interior to the War Department.

Mr. RANDALL. I would like the gentleman from Illinois to give the House some assurance when he proposes to call the previous question on that bill.

Mr. SPARKS. I propose to do so to-morrow after the morning hour.

Mr. RANDALL. Then I will make this suggestion to the gentleman from Illinois: that by general consent the previous question be called to-night, so that the bill may come up to-morrow as unfinished business, and be voted upon immediately after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. MILLS. I object to that. We will vote on it some time to-morrow.

Mr. RANDALL. Then it is the understanding that the general debate on the Indian bill will be closed to-night?

Mr. SPRINGER. There is no understanding about it.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPARKS] agree to the suggestion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. SPARKS. I do.

The SPEAKER. That the general debate shall be closed to-night?

Mr. SPARKS. Yes, sir. When the previous question is moved there will be an hour after that.

Mr. MILLS. Do I understand that the proposition is that the debate is to close to-night?

The SPEAKER. General debate.

Mr. MILLS. Then I object.

Mr. COX. There will be no objection to a session to-night for debate only.

Mr. MILLS. A number of gentlemen want to discuss this bill; it is a matter of great importance to the country, and I do not see any necessity for rushing it through.

Mr. SPARKS. No other business will be done to-night.

The SPEAKER. An objection cannot prevent the motion being entertained. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPARKS] that the House now take a recess until half past seven o'clock, to meet for the further consideration of the Indian transfer bill, and that the discussion to-night shall terminate the general discussion, and that no other business shall be done.

Mr. CONGER. That clause of the motion about closing debate can only be done by unanimous consent and not by a vote.

The SPEAKER. In the judgment of the Chair it can.

Mr. SPARKS. Of course that will allow me an hour to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. After the call for the previous question.

Mr. CONGER. Does the Chair decide that the time at which debate shall close can be stated in a motion for a recess?

The SPEAKER. The Chair sees no objection to doing it. It makes the motion somewhat complicated, but the Chair sees no parliamentary objection to it.

Mr. CONGER. Then I move that the House adjourn.

The question was taken; and the House refused to adjourn.

The question was put on Mr. SPARKS's motion; and on a viva voce vote the Speaker announced that the motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. I demand a division; I stand here for the rights of some gentlemen who are not now present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair begs members of the House to tarry a moment, as the gentleman from Michigan demands a division on the last vote.

The question was again put; and on a division there were—ayes 111, noes 9; no quorum voting.

The SPEAKER. Is a further count insisted on?

Mr. CONGER. Further count is insisted on.

Mr. RANDALL. Then I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. SPARKS and Mr. CONGER were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 111, noes 15.

Mr. CONGER. Is that a quorum?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman raise that question?

Mr. CONGER. I desire this opportunity to say——

Mr. RANDALL. I object to debate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan has no right to debate anything now.

Mr. RANDALL. No, we do not allow that.

Mr. CONGER. Do gentlemen think that they will further their interests by pursuing a course like this? I supposed that we had tellers in order to ascertain whether we had a quorum or not. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. Is objection made to the fact that no quorum was present on the last vote?

Mr. CONGER. Will the Chair announce whether there was a quorum voting? That is what we had tellers for.

Mr. RANDALL. Is that point made?

The SPEAKER. Is objection made?

Mr. CONGER. I will withdraw my call for a further count, the number of members present showing that this matter was postponed to a time when almost more than one-half of the House had left, and some of these being gentlemen who wish to partake in the general debate.

Mr. RANDALL. I object to debate.

No further count being demanded, the motion of Mr. SPARKS was agreed to; and thereupon the House (at five o'clock and twenty minutes p. m.) took a recess until half past seven o'clock.

EVENING SESSION.

The House re-assembled at half past seven o'clock p. m., and was called to order by Mr. SAYLER, as Speaker pro tempore.

TRANSFER OF THE INDIAN BUREAU.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the bill (H. R. No. 2677) to transfer the Office of Indian Affairs from the Interior to the War Department.

Mr. PAGE. Pending that motion I move that the House adjourn. There does not appear to be anybody here, and if members have not interest enough in the discussion to attend the session I do not see why a few of us should remain here.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would suggest that the recess was taken at rather a late hour to-day, and that the House had probably better take a recess for a few minutes to enable members to arrive.

Mr. PAGE. I move, then, that the House take a recess for ten minutes.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at seven o'clock and thirty-three minutes p. m.) the House took a recess for ten minutes.

AFTER THE RECESS.

The recess having expired, the House resumed its session, Mr. SAYLER in the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

TRANSFER OF THE INDIAN BUREAU.

Mr. SPARKS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the bill (H. R. No. 2677) to transfer the Office of Indian Affairs from the Interior to the War Department.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the bill (H. R. No. 2377) to transfer the Office of Indian Affairs from the Interior to the War Department, (Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. PAGE] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. PAGE. I yield for twenty minutes to the gentleman from New Mexico, [Mr. ELKINS.]

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the bill under consideration is defective in this, that it does not provide, in the event of its passage, that the debts of the Indian Bureau, created while a part and portion of the Department of the Interior, should be paid before the transfer is fully complete; and at the proper time, when amendments are in order, I propose to offer one providing for the payment of all vouchers of persons who have heretofore furnished supplies to the Indian Department in New Mexico. These vouchers, with the dates and amounts thereof, respectively, will be found at length in a letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, bearing date the 24th of March, 1876, to the Speaker of the House, transmitting estimates of appropriation required by the various Departments to complete the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and prior years. (Executive Document No. 151.)

I was unable on last Wednesday, owing to the objection of the gentleman in charge of the deficiency appropriation bill, to offer an amendment providing for the payment of the various amounts, which are as follows:

List of persons who have furnished supplies to the Indian Department in New Mexico, and for which the Department is still indebted.

Claimant and nature of claim.	Date of voucher.	Amount.
Amount due A. M. Jackson for board and lodging furnished Silas F. Kendrick, late Indian agent, while on business for the Pueblo Indians in 1861, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1873 and prior years.	May 29, 1872	$160 00
Amount due Joseph Ayers for board and lodging furnished Silas F. Kendrick, late Indian agent, while on business for the Indian Department, in 1861, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1873 and prior years.	May 29, 1872	5 00
Amount due the B. B. B. and C. Railroad Company for transportation furnished agent Silas F. Kendrick while on Government business in 1861, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1873 and prior years.	May 29, 1872	4 50
Amount due steamer J. H. Bell for transportation furnished late agent Silas F. Kendrick while engaged on Government business in 1861, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1873 and prior years.	May 29, 1872	15 00
Amount due J. Rinehart for services rendered as acting agent at the Cimarron agency, New Mexico, in May, 1872, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1873 and prior years.	May 29, 1872	56 66
Amount due Ignacio Archetola for salt furnished in June, 1873, for the Abiquiu agency, New Mexico, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1873 and prior years.	May 29, 1872	14 00
Amount due the Maxwell Land-Grant and Railway Company for rent of office for use of the agent at Cimarron agency, New Mexico, from September 30, 1872, to March 30, 1873, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1873 and prior years.	May 29, 1862	85 00
Amount due José Maria Archutella for services rendered in March, 1873, at the same agency, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1873 and prior years.	May 29, 1872	17 00
Amount due John W. Miller for services rendered as blacksmith at the Navajo agency, New Mexico, during the second quarter 1873, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1873 and prior years.	May 29, 1872	210 00
Amount due T. D. Burns for supplies furnished in June, 1873, for the Abiquiu agency, New Mexico, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1873 and prior years.	May 29, 1872	2,670 45
Amount due Louis Clark for 3,772½ pounds corn, furnished in December, 1872, for the Indian service in New Mexico, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1873 and prior years.	May 29, 1872	75 45
Amount due W. B. Truax for expenses incurred in traveling on business in connection with the service at the Pueblo agency, New Mexico, in December, 1872, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1873 and prior years.	May 29, 1872	58 33
Amount due James M. Roberts for expenses incurred in traveling on business, in connection with the service at the same agency, in October and November, 1872, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1873 and prior years.	May 29, 1872	200 00
Amount due Rogue Sanches for fresh beef and mutton furnished in April, 1873, for the Abiquiu agency, New Mexico, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1873 and prior years.	May 29, 1872	78 50
Amount due J. Rinehart for services rendered as acting agent, in 1873, at the Cimarron agency, New Mexico, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1873 and prior years.	May 29, 1872	400 00
Amount due Charles H. Coleman for shoeing public animals during the second quarter 1873, for the Mescalero Apache agency, New Mexico, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1873 and prior years.	May 29, 1872	27 00
Amount due Daniel P. Mowner for services rendered as butcher, in second quarter 1873, at same agency, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1873 and prior years.	May 29, 1872	133 50
This amount, to pay indebtedness incurred on account of the service of the same agency, in second quarter 1873, viz: Pay of one laborer, $90, and one blacksmith, $82.50, as per statement of S. B. Bushnell, agent in charge, on file in the Indian Office, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1873 and prior years.	May 29, 1872	172 50
Amount due W. W. Owen for services rendered as chief herder at the Navajo agency, New Mexico, during the second quarter, 1873, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1873 and prior years.	May 29, 1872	180 00
Amount due Charles Harrison for services rendered as issuing clerk, at the same agency, same quarter, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1873 and prior years.	May 29, 1872	180 00
Amount due P. H. Williams for services rendered as issuing clerk, at the same agency, same quarter, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1873 and prior years.	May 29, 1872	180 00
Amount due A. C. Damon for services rendered as butcher, at the same agency, same quarter, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1873 and prior years.	May 29, 1872	180 00
Amount due Peter Whitney for services rendered as teamster, at the same agency, same quarter, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1873 and prior years.	May 29, 1872	180 00
Amount due Navajo Charley for services rendered as herder, at the same agency, same quarter, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1873 and prior years.	May 29, 1872	90 00
This amount, to pay liabilities incurred on account of the service at the Southern Apache agency, New Mexico, during the second quarter 1873, viz: Richard Stackpole, foreman, $175, and Joseph Durand, issue clerk, $150, as per statement of Benjamin M. Thomas, agent, on file in the Indian Office, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1873 and prior years.	May 29, 1872	325 00
Amount due Fellipie Madrille for beef, wheat, and flour, furnished in second quarter 1873, for the Abiquiu agency, New Mexico, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1873 and prior years.	May 29, 1872	164 25
Amount due Jacob Krummeck for subsistence furnished in March and April, 1873, for the service at the same agency, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1873 and prior years.	May 29, 1872	103 25

List of persons, &c.—Continued.

Claimant and nature of claim.	Date of voucher.	Amount.
Amount due Speigelberg Brothers for provisions furnished in April, 1873, for the same agency, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1873 and prior years.	May 29, 1872	$43 25
Amount due Speigelberg Brothers for blankets, &c., furnished in January and February, 1873, for Indians visiting the New Mexico superintendency, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1873 and prior years.	May 29, 1872	29 00
Amount due Tom Navajo for services rendered as herder at the Navajo agency in June, 1873, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1873 and prior years.	May 29, 1872	10 00
Amount due W. W. Owens for amount advanced to Indian employés of the Navajo agency for herding during the first and second quarters, 1873, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1873 and prior years.	May 29, 1872	388 00
Amount due Lionel Ayers for amount advanced in goods and money to Indian employés at the Navajo agency, New Mexico, during the first and second quarters, 1873, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1873 and prior years.	May 29, 1872	536 00
Amount due Lionel Ayers for goods furnished the principal chiefs and head-men of the Navajo Indians, during first and second quarters, 1873, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1873 and prior years.	May 29, 1872	228 00
Amount due Serfine Chacon for repairing an ambulance belonging to the Abiquiu agency, New Mexico, in February, 1873, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1873 and prior years.	May 29, 1872	12 00
Amount due John B. McCullough for postage-stamps furnished the Cimarron agency, New Mexico, in May and June, 1873, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1873 and prior years.	May 29, 1872	5 00
Amount due J. B. Lamay for the hire of an ambulance to Agent W. D. Crothers, in April, 1874, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	21 00
Amount due Charles Robbins for services rendered as farmer, at the Abiquiu agency, New Mexico, in March and April, 1874, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	136 67
Amount due W. W. Owen for services rendered as chief herder at the Navajo agency, New Mexico, during the third quarter, 1874, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	120 00
Amount due W. W. Owen for services rendered as chief herder at the same agency, in second quarter, 1874, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	180 00
Amount due Charles Harrison for services rendered as issue clerk at same agency, during third quarter, 1873, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	120 00
Amount due P. H. Williams for services rendered as issue clerk at the same agency, same quarter, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	120 00
Amount due A. C. Damon for services rendered as butcher, at same agency, same quarter, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	120 00
Amount due Peter Whitney for services rendered as teamster at the same agency, same quarter, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	120 00
Amount due Navajo Charley for services rendered as herder at the same agency, same quarter, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	30 00
This amount, to be applied in the payment of indebtedness incurred on account of the service at the Pueblo agency, New Mexico, during the first and second quarters, 1874, as per statement and vouchers, certified by E. C. Lewis, late agent, on file in the Indian Office, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	644 72
Amount due Agiela, Ute chief, for services rendered as guide, from August 3 to October 25, 1873, at Cimarron agency, New Mexico, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	50 00
Amount due Z. Staab & Co. for supplies furnished the superintendent of Indian affairs for New Mexico, in November and December, 1873, and January and April, 1874, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	149 14
Amount due Seligman Brothers & Co. for timber, &c., furnished in second quarter, 1874, for the New Mexico superintendency, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14. 1873	20 75
Amount due O. C. Crothers for services rendered in March, 1874, at the Abiquiu agency, New Mexico, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	77 41
Amount due A. Cayetano Garcia for subsistence supplies furnished during the second quarter, 1874, for the New Mexico superintendency, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	69 05
Amount due Manuelo Griego for board furnished two Indian witnesses in March, 1874, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	36 00
Amount due Joseph J. Herrera for services rendered in June, 1874, at the Abiquiu agency, New Mexico, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	102 33
Amount due Probst & Kirchner for 207¼ pounds of beef furnished in June, 1874, for Indians at the same agency, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	16 60
Amount due M. A. Breeden for rent of post-office box to the superintendent of Indian affairs for New Mexico, in June, 1874, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	3 90
Amount due Maxwell Land Grant and Railway Company for rent of building for the use of the agent at Cimarron agency, New Mexico, in January, 1874, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	12 00
Amount due Francisco Griego for keeping Indian horses in February and March, 1874, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	25 50
Amount due Thomas McDonald for board furnished employés of the Cimarron agency, New Mexico, in June, 1874, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	12 00

List of persons, &c.—Continued.

Claimant and nature of claim.	Date of voucher.	Amount.
Amount due John Orme Cole, late Indian agent, for expenses incurred in October and November, 1873, in traveling on Government business, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	$177 55
Amount due Charles Probst for beef furnished in January, March, April, and May, 1874, for the Abiquiu agency, New Mexico, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	920 65
Amount due Charles Probst for beef furnished in June, 1874, for the same agency, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	877 70
Amount due Willi Speigelberg for supplies furnished the Cimarron agency, New Mexico, in February, March, and second quarter 1874, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	4,045 20
Amount due William White for expenses incurred in traveling in April, 1874, on account of the Indian service in New Mexico, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	32 00
Amount due William White for services rendered as acting agent at the Cimarron agency, New Mexico, in April, 1874, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	147-30
Amount due M. Traner for supplies furnished in April, 1874, for the same agency, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	73 63
Amount due T. D. Burns for rent of buildings for the service at the Abiquiu agency, New Mexico, in September, 1873, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	45 10
Amount due Bernardo Sanchez for beef and mutton furnished in August, 1873, for the service at the same agency, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	104 00
Amount due A. G. Irvine for hardware furnished in June, 1874, for the service in New Mexico, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	6 90
Amount due Ilfeld & Co. for supplies furnished the superintendent of Indian affairs for New Mexico in April and May, 1874, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	19 35
Amount due Z. Staab and Alexander Gusdorf for 2,900 pounds of flour furnished under contract in February, 1874, for the Abiquiu agency, New Mexico, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	123 25
Amount due Z. Staab and Alexander Gusdorf for 12,000 pounds of flour furnished under contract in April and May, 1874, for same agency, being a deficiency for the fiscal year, 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	510 00
Amount due W. A. Crocker for services rendered in June, 1874, as clerk at the Cimarron agency, New Mexico, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	40 00
Amount due Julien Lopes for 25 cords of wood furnished in November, 1873, for the Mescalero Apache agency, New Mexico, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	75 00
Amount due Charles H. Coleman for shoeing public animals in December, 1873, and January and February, 1874, at the same agency, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	56 00
Amount due Z. Staab & Co. for supplies furnished in April, 1874, for the Abiquiu agency, New Mexico, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	155 00
Amount due Pedro Y. Jaramillo for beef and wheat furnished in May, 1874, for the same agency, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	194 00
Amount due Culver & Hersey for ammunition furnished in May, 1874, for the same agency, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	94 00
Amount due Charles Roselle for services rendered as teamster in March, 1874, at the same agency, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	8 88
Amount due William A. Crocker for rent of buildings from January 20 to April 20, 1874, for the service in New Mexico, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	54 00
Amount due William A. Crocker for services rendered at the Cimarron agency, New Mexico, from February 1 to April 20, 1874, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	166 66
Amount due Frederick C. Bishop for services rendered as clerk at the office of the superintendent of Indian affairs for New Mexico in June, 1874, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	75 00
Amount due S. C. Dudley for services rendered as clerk for the same officer in May and June, 1874, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	250 00
Amount due Speigelberg Brothers for one sack of flour furnished in February, 1874, to Indians in New Mexico, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	5 00
Amount due George Chase for shoeing animals belonging to the Navajo agency, New Mexico, in October, 1873, and May and June, 1874, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	70 25
Amount due William Bolander for repairing harness, &c., in April and June, 1874, for the superintendent of Indian affairs for New Mexico, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	14 45
Amount due J. B. McCullough for rent of post-office box to the agent at the Cimarron agency, New Mexico, in April, 1874, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	2 00
Amount due E. Andrews for articles of stationery furnished in April and May, 1874, for the office of the superintendent of Indian affairs for New Mexico, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	20 25
Amount due J. L. Gould for services rendered as special agent in November, 1874, at the Navajo agency, New Mexico, and for traveling expenses in returning to his home, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	322 00
Amount due Thomas D. Burns for supplies furnished for the service at the Abiquiu agency, New Mexico, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1874, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	677 11

List of persons, &c.—Continued.

Claimant and nature of claim.	Date of voucher.	Amount.
Amount due Charles Roselle for services rendered as teamster and laborer at the Abiquiu agency, New Mexico, in second quarter 1874, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	$105 00
Amount due Francisco Griego for hire of team for the service at the Cimarron agency, New Mexico, in April, 1874, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	10 00
Amount due Francisco Griego for services rendered as interpreter at the Cimarron agency, New Mexico, in May, 1874, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	55 55
Amount due W. A. Crocker for services rendered as issue clerk at the same agency, in May, 1874, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	53 33
Amount due Maurice Traner for supplies furnished the same agency in February, 1874, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	29 63
Amount due George Schafer for 414 loaves of bread furnished the Indians at the Pueblo agency, New Mexico, in the second quarter, 1874, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	34 50
Amount due Francisco Griego for transportation furnished two Indians, witnesses to United States court, from Cimarron to Santa Fé, New Mexico, in February, 1874, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	39 00
Amount due John E. Murphy for medicines furnished for the service in New Mexico during the second quarter 1874, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	20 75
Amount due J. P. Chase for supplies furnished the Southern Apache agency, New Mexico, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1874, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	563 30
Amount due George B. Duncan for services rendered as issue-clerk at Southern Apache agency, New Mexico, in January, 1874, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	60 00
Amount due Henry Duane for services rendered as physician at the same agency in fourth quarter 1873, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	200 00
Amount due Andrew Berger for services rendered as blacksmith at the same agency in second quarter 1874, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	33 25
Amount due Louis Clark for beef and flour furnished in March, 1874, for Jicarilla Apaches in New Mexico, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	583 20
Amount due J. P. Chase for 7,470½ pounds fresh beef furnished in December, 1873, and January, 1874, for Southern Apache agency, New Mexico, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	933 81
Amount due Luciano Chaner for 12,968 pounds of fresh beef furnished in March, 1874, for same agency, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	972 60
Amount due Frank Frenger for 19,733½ pounds of fresh beef furnished in January and March, 1874, for same agency, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	1,608 54
Amount due Green & Lohenstein for supplies furnished in May, 1874, for Mescalero Apache agency, New Mexico, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	18 00
Amount due F. W. Haskell for sugar, coffee, and flour furnished in February, 1874, for Apaches of New Mexico, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	3,931 75
Amount due Estanislao Montayo for 100,111 pounds of flour furnished in February, 1874, for Southern Apache agency, in New Mexico, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	5,005 55
Amount due Pedro Montayo for erecting school-house in December, 1873, and furnishing sixteen tons of hay in August, 1873, for the same agency, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	224 00
Amount due Numa Reymond for 48,518½ pounds of corn furnished in January, 1874, for the same agency, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	1,280 89
Amount due John H. Riley for fresh beef furnished in the first and second quarters, 1874, for the Mescalero Apache agency, New Mexico, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	7,165 66
Amount due William Rosenthal for corn and hay furnished in September, 1873, for the same agency, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	168 00
Amount due Van C. Smith for beef furnished under contract in fourth quarter, 1873, and January, 1874, for the same agency, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	9,867 03
Amount due Z. Staab for blankets, flour, and other supplies furnished in September, October, and November, 1873, and May, 1874, for the Southern and Mescalero Apache agencies, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	3,789 52
Amount due Henry G. Toussant for 15,163 pounds of fresh beef furnished in May, 1874, for the Southern Apaches of New Mexico, being a deficiency for the service of the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	1,213 04
Amount due Manuel Vigil for 20,800 pounds of mutton furnished in June, 1874, for the same Indians, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	1,560 00
Amount due Paul Dowlire for supplies furnished the Mescalero Apache agency, New Mexico, in May, 1874, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874.	Feb. 14, 1873	96 00
Amount due D. Provencher for 18,840 pounds of beef furnished the Navajo agency, New Mexico, in April, 1875, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1875.	June 22, 1874	942 00
Amounts due Walter G. Marmion for beef furnished the Navajo agency, New Mexico, in March, 1875, and F. K. Nichols & Son for yarn, &c., for same agency, in February, 1875, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1875.	June 22, 1874	1,436 69
Amount due D. Provencher for 12,450 pounds of beef furnished the Navajo agency, New Mexico, in March, 1875, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1875.	June 22, 1874	620 01
Amount due Marmion Brothers for corn delivered at the same agency in March, April, and May, 1875, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1875.	June 22, 1874	$2,080 92
Amount due M. Barth for freight on 49,800 pounds flour to Camp Apache, Arizona, in 1874.	May 30, 1874	2,490 00

On reflection, I am convinced that the proper place to provide for the payment of this indebtedness is in the present bill.

In order to a correct understanding of the exact nature of these vouchers against the Government, I will briefly state their history. As will be seen from the list, there are a very large number of them, all small in amounts, some of them as low as $3.90, some for $5, some for $8, some for $20, some for $50, and some for $100, a very few exceeding $1,000 in amount. They are partly for supplies furnished the Indians under contracts made by the owners of these vouchers with officers of the Government, and partly for services rendered the Indian Department. These vouchers are dated in 1872, 1873, and 1874.

This indebtedness on the part of the Government was created by its authorized agents in the discharge of their official duties. They invited the people of New Mexico to sell to the Government these supplies, and in many instances they were furnished at very low rates. The people, in obedience to the proposals of these officers to furnish supplies, in good faith and generally in accordance with a written contract delivered them to the officers, receiving therefor these vouchers on which it was understood, as is always the case, they were to receive the money immediately, as such transactions with the Government are always on a cash basis. These vouchers were issued by the Indian agents in charge at the various reservations, who received the property and had full knowledge of all the details of each transaction. They were, until the office of superintendent of Indian affairs was abolished, approved by that officer. They have been examined, audited, and approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. They have received the sanction of the Interior Department, passed the board of Indian commissioners, and now are reported to this House by the Secretary of the Treasury as amounts due by the Government of the United States, as the following letters will show:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, D. C., April 17, 1876.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt, by Department reference of the 15th instant, of a letter of Hon. S. B. ELKINS, relative to certain deficiency items embraced in Executive Document 151, House of Representatives, for New Mexico, and in reply have to state that the vouchers covering the amounts estimated for have been examined and approved and are on file in this office, suspended, awaiting appropriation to meet the same.

The letter of Mr. ELKINS is returned herewith.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. Q. SMITH, Commissioner.

The Hon. the SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, April 18, 1876.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 15th instant inquiring whether amounts due for incidental expenses of the Indian service in New Mexico, as set forth in letter of the honorable the Secretary of the Treasury of March 24, 1876, transmitting deficiency estimate to the House of Representatives, have been examined and found correct by this Department, I have the honor to transmit herewith copy of report dated 17th instant, from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, to whom your letter was referred.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. CHANDLER, Secretary.

Hon. S. B. ELKINS,
House of Representatives.

It would seem that the mere mention of the history of these vouchers would induce their immediate payment, but such is not the case.

There is not a breath of suspicion or fraud that attaches to any or either of them. They stand as adjudicated accounts against the Government for property used for its benefit and bought at its instance. That the supplies were furnished to the Government and that the Government received the benefit of them, is not denied or questioned by any one. That the people in good faith turned over their property to the Government upon the promise that they were to be paid, no one can deny. That these vouchers were issued regularly and with all the formalities required, and precisely as all vouchers are issued by the Government, is not disputed. It is also acknowledged in respect of these vouchers that the Government of the United States has had and enjoyed for its own uses and purposes in the administration of the public service the property of its citizens, and up to this date has refused to pay for the same.

It is claimed by some that as to a part of these vouchers the officers exceeded their authority in purchasing supplies after the appropriation had been exhausted. This only applies in part; but I submit if it is not a feeble answer to the poor man who has sold his property in pursuance of a proposal and under contract to duly authorized agents of the Government, and the Government has enjoyed the benefit thereof, in order to advance its own policy and keep its promise to the Indians, that it will not pay the same because possibly the appropriation had been exhausted?

Officers are the agents of the United States, and the United States are bound by their acts performed within the scope of their legitimate authority, and should they in the interest of the Government exceed their authority, and the Government afterward does some act confirming the conduct of their agent, then it is liable. The people who furnished these supplies had no means of knowing, except from the officer, what amounts had been appropriated for the purchase of supplies, and it was impossible for them to find out whether funds were on hand to pay them. They were compelled to rely on the statements of the officers, and it is a miserable subterfuge on the part of a great Government, after having used the property of its citizens, to refuse payment therefor on any ground whatever, much less on the ground that possibly its duly-authorized agents had before exhausted the appropriations for that purpose. It is a well-established principle of law that if an agent should exceed the authority of his principal to the extent of purchasing property even contrary to express instructions, and the principal receives and uses that property, he is liable, and can be compelled to pay for it; and so it is with the Government. In such a case, if the Government desired to act fairly, it should have advised the people there were no funds on hand to pay for these supplies and they must take the risk of payment; but this was not done.

The officer should be held to an account, and not the poor citizen. To refuse the payment of these vouchers, made regularly in due form and in the ordinary way as they have been and, like all ordinary accounts against the Government, being in no wise different and being audited, is repudiation of the just obligations of the Government and an arbitrary confiscation of the property of the people. There is no other and proper way of characterizing the conduct of the Government. The Government has in effect induced the people to give it their property; it has used it for its purposes and refused payment.

But I find in the deficiency bill that passed the House on last Wednesday the amount of $10,780 appropriated to pay the Adams Express Company, $22,374 to pay the Continental Note Company, and $31,776 to pay the American Bank-Note Company, all being deficiencies. Now, why it is or how it is that the Adams Express Company and these bank-note companies are entitled to more consideration or that their claims are better than those of the poor people who have furnished supplies to the Government two thousand miles distant from its seat, I am unable to understand. If the deficiencies reported from New Mexico are to be treated as claims, as the Committee on Appropriations has asserted on this floor, why was not the claim of the Adams Express Company and these bank-note companies sent to the Committee of Claims also?

The Adams Express Company is a rich and powerful corporation, with thousands of employés scattered all over the land, almost in every village, with an office in this city. If the Government, in its discretion, should single out one of its creditors to prefer and make payments to, it seems that of all others the Adams Express Company should be the last. It is powerful, and could enforce its claim even before the Committee of Claims. It is rich, and could better wait than the poor farmer on the distant frontiers, who has given a load of hay, his year's crop of corn, the last cow he has on his place, or the last animal to the Government, hoping thereby to realize something for his family in want, to pay his debts, and educate his children. The Adams Express Company can afford to employ counsel to look after its claim before the Committee of Claims, but the sending to that committee the vouchers of these poor people in such small amounts is equivalent to burying them forever. By such an act the Government in effect becomes the oppressor of the poor, and takes from them their hard earnings without compensation. Can it be that such is the object and purpose of a great Government?

I imagine it will be difficult for the Committee on Appropriations to show how or why the Adams Express Company and these bank-note companies are singled out and entitled to such careful and tender consideration at their hands, while the claims of citizens, just as good but not so large in amount, are denied the same consideration, but are sent to some other committee with a cloud over them to die. The Government in all its transactions with its citizens should be just. It will not in its wisdom permit itself to be sued, and therefore its agents and those intrusted with its administration should be all the more careful that no citizen is for any reason denied payment for his property or oppressed. The Government can never hope for the people in their dealings with it to be honest until the Government itself is just and fair. So long as the Government refuses to pay the rightful claims of its citizens, or avoids payment for any reason, just so long they may expect the citizens to attempt to take advantage of it, and by such policy and conduct the Government encourages and fosters corruption. To have the people honest in their dealings with the Government, the Government should be honest with them. If the fountain is muddy, the stream will be dark. The Government should set an example of honesty, promptness, and fairness to the people in its business transactions.

It is a fact that of late years in many instances people with just claims have gone to their graves in want urging their payment and the Government denying them, while others for large amounts with suspicion hanging over them have been paid. Such conduct cannot and will not establish loyalty and affection in the hearts of the people, and will ultimately drive, as it has already, many honest citizens from having any dealings with it. It is known that it is almost impossible, without great influence or great labor and expense even, in an ordinary life-time to secure the payment of a just claim on which payment has been deferred for a time.

The sending of these vouchers to the Committee of Claims is a new departure on the part of the Committee on Appropriations. It never was done before. Claims against the Government, in the general acceptation of the term, do not arise out of the ordinary daily transactions of the Government wherein the Government becomes the purchaser of any commodity for sale by its citizens, but arise when the obligation of the Government to adjust and pay them is not clear. In such cases they are properly referred to Congress or the Court of Claims and made the subject of investigation; but these vouchers for supplies furnished the Government stand on a different footing, and should not be degraded to claims. They are a debt against the Government about which there is no question, and for Congress to refuse to pay them is the same in effect as if the Treasury officials should refuse to pay their own drafts given to citizens until Congress had investigated them. In all instances when property has been furnished the Government under a contract and the property used for the benefit of the Government, and the appropriation has been exhausted, it has been usual to provide for their payment by a subsequent appropriation. This has been the uniform practice of Congress, and if a different rule is to prevail the people should have notice. To make claims of these vouchers is to put a cloud upon them, is to compel the owners to the expense of attorneys to go before the Committee of Claims.

Indeed, as I said before, it is a slow but sure death to them and to the hopes of their owners. This Congress has appropriated a million and a half to celebrate the hundredth anniversary of American Independence. It was wise, needful, and proper that means for such a glorious purpose should have been provided by the Government, and I fully concur in the zeal and ardor of the supporters of the bill. The leader of the Committee on Appropriations, as I am informed, voted for it, and I hope I do him no injustice when I say he worked for it. This celebration is to be had in his city and was proper that it should be held there. He had a just pride no doubt in its success; but while he votes to take a million and a half from the Government Treasury for the worthy purpose of a great national celebration, on the other hand the statesmanship that prevents him from providing for the payment of all just debts against the Government is certainly of a very questionable character as to its wisdom and open to fair criticism. It is well for the nation to celebrate the first hundred years of its existence, but it is nobler and better that it should pay its honest obligations for property used in its interest.

One searches in vain for the consistency that should characterize a great government in these two acts. The first commends our admiration, the second compels our contempt. The Government should be just before being generous. While the people are celebrating the one hundredth birthday of American Independence at Philadelphia, it will not be forgotten it is being done in part with money justly due and wrongfully withheld from some of its poor and needy citizens; and, sir, in another part of this country far distant from these scenes, the grandest ever enacted in human history save the event they commemorate, there will be another entertainment in which the sheriff and some of the owners of these vouchers, with their children and wives homeless and houseless, will be the principal actors and this for no fault of theirs, and all because their own Government would not pay its just dues. Their hearts may have been kindled with the same patriotic fire, with the same enthusiasm, and with the same ardor that burns in the breasts of their fellow-citizens, and particularly those who voted for the centennial bill. But henceforth the flag of their country will not be to them an emblem of glory, but of oppression, and Government promises and obligations meaningless words.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania, speaking I suppose for the Committee on Appropriations, in his reply the other day to the Delegate from Wyoming, who was also urging the payment of some vouchers similar to these, declared it was mentally and physically impossible for the Committee on Appropriations to investigate these claims. For my part I think the committee could have stood the fatigue, mental and physical, of passing at least a few of those owned by the people of New Mexico. For instance, it would have hardly killed them dead or driven them mad from mental labor to have considered the one for $3.90, the one for five, and some of those for ten dollars, and so on, and allowed them, particularly as they seem to have worried through with $10,780 belonging to the Adams Express Company, and $22,374 belonging to the Continental Note Company, and $31,776 belonging to the American Bank-Note Company, all being deficiencies, to still live, move, and have their being and promise long to adorn their States by their distinguished services to the whole country. In the same breath the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations says that we referred them to another committee to be investigated.

Well, Mr. Chairman, investigation seems to be the order of the day, the noblest calling on earth, and considering the congressional pulse, the fevered state of the public mind, and the readiness to investigate and be investigated, it is not astonishing that the Committee on Appropriations thought, "Well, we will put these vouchers where they can do no harm, into the investigation mills; they are running day and night; and they will never be heard of again, and if they should, they will be so smirched and damaged in their appearance and standing they can never hope for attention hereafter. Happy thought! We will treat these vouchers as we do presidential candidates and aspiring statesmen, throw mud on them and kill them off by investigation."

Well, Mr. Chairman, investigation is the one thing needful under the sun. In life we are in the midst of it; it rides on the hurricane and is foremost in the storm. The gentle zephyrs that visit the congressional brow are freighted down with it; we walk, talk, lie down, and get up with it. It invades every office, every prison, and every household in the land; and therefore it is not surprising that these poor fatherless vouchers, just at this eventful period of our history, given for the people's property, should share the common fate of all sublunary things.

The communications which I have read state that the identical vouchers of which I have been speaking have been examined and approved by the Indian Bureau and Interior Department. I hold that they are just as sacred as any other debt against the Government, and yet they talk about investigating these matters. It would be just as if the Sergeant-at-Arms should go down in the city and purchase a bundle of paper or two chairs, and when he presented his account to the proper officer to have it paid payment should be refused, and then it should go before the Committee on Appropriations for a deficiency, and the committee should say, "We cannot pay this now; we want to investigate it; we want to understand the whole matter; we want the identical chairs here; we want the clerk that sold these articles brought here before our committee or some other to investigate and see if the account is correct." That is exactly the kind of investigation which is proposed for these claims. These are no doubtful claims, they are not claims for depredations, but they are claims for property given up to the Government in pursuance of a contract with the Government, and should not be postponed in this manner. They were deferred last session by the Committee on Appropriations, and efforts are being made to put them over this session. I claim that this is rank injustice, that it is dishonoring the credit of the Government, repudiating its obligations, and in fact confiscating the property of the people.

I thank the gentleman from California [Mr. PAGE] for his courtesy.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Chairman, I shall not detain the House for any length of time to-night in the discussion of this question. I have listened very patiently to the remarks that have been made by gentlemen upon both sides of this question. It would be folly for me to attempt, after the very able argument of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Cox] and the able argument made by my colleague upon the committee from Massachusetts, [Mr. SEELYE,] to elaborate upon this subject.

There are but two questions that enter into the consideration of the bill. The first is the question of economy, the second the greater question of the humane treatment of the Indians. In all the discussions upon this subject I have failed to hear any argument adduced by the majority of the committee that should lead this House to believe that if the proposed change be made it would be the means of saving the Government of the United States a single dollar; on the contrary, in my opinion, all the arguments so far have gone very conclusively to show that the Indian supplies are furnished much cheaper under the present board of Indian commissioners than the goods for the Army are furnished under the control of the War Department. That was shown very conclusively the other day by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. SEELYE,] and I believe it has not been contradicted by any gentleman who has spoken in favor of the other side of the question.

In 1869 there was formed what was known as the Indian peace commission, and I am told that the members of that commission served without compensation. The board is composed of some of the best men in the country, men whose only desire is to protect the Indians, to see that they are properly cared for, and that they are wisely and humanely treated.

General Clinton B. Fisk, the chairman of the Indian peace commission, or the peace board, on the 1st day of August, 1875, addressed the following letter to the various Indian agents and superintendents throughout the country:

BOARD OF INDIAN COMMISSIONERS,
Washington, August 1, 1875.

SIR: The board of Indian commissioners desire more specific information than is now in their possession touching the extent the military forces of the country are brought into requisition in the administration of the Indian service, and whether in this particular any change would have a tendency to promote the efficiency and purity of the service. For this purpose may we request that you will, at your earliest convenience, forward to us such facts as are within your own knowledge or which can be obtained by you touching the following points:

First. State whether any military force is stationed upon or in the vicinity of your reservation, and within what distance of your agency.

Second. For what purpose are the troops so stationed employed or needed in connection with the Indians?

Third. How is their presence regarded by the Indians, and what, in your judgment, is their influence in respect to morality, good order, and progress in civilization?

Fourth. Would the organization of an armed Indian police, under proper restrictions and discipline, for the enforcement of order, arrest of criminals, and the prevention of incursions of evil-disposed persons upon your reservation, prove safe or advisable; and to what extent would such an organization supersede the necessity of a military force?

Please freely state, in addition to replies to the foregoing inquiries, any and all facts within your knowledge bearing upon the wisdom of increasing or diminishing the use of the Army in the management of Indian affairs. Statements from persons not in Government employ, whose position and experience in Indian matters entitle their opinions to consideration, are also earnestly desired.

Please address Hon. F. H. Smith, secretary board of Indian commissioners, Washington, D. C.

Very respectfully,

CLINTON B. FISK, Chairman.

I will detain the House only long enough to read brief extracts from the replies of different agents. A letter from Barclay White, superintendent of Indian affairs of the northern superintendency, under date of "Omaha, Nebraska, Ninthmonth 23, 1875," contains this statement:

Indians of this superintendency dislike the presence of troops at or near their agencies and ask for their assistance only in extremity. As far as my observation extends, I believe the influence of troops stationed at or near Indian agencies is not good in respect to morality, good order, and progress in civilization.

In the reply of E. A. Howard, United States Indian agent, dated "Spotted Tail agency, Nebraska, September 9, 1875," is this statement:

The Indians regard the troops as trespassers, and consider their presence a breach of faith on the part of the Government, as it was part of the agreement at the time the treaty was made that no troops should cross the Platte River. The Indians are permitted by the post commander to go about the camp wherever they choose, thus throwing them in contact with a demoralizing class of men, where liquor is frequently smuggled in; it being but a short time ago that a man in charge of Government wagons was arrested and a quantity of liquor confiscated, but not until after it had got well circulated and several cases of intoxication among the soldiers were reported.

W. J. Cleveland writes under date of "Spotted Tail agency, Nebraska, September 10, 1875," as follows, speaking of the presence of the military:

Their presence is very unfavorably regarded by the Indians. Their influence as to morality is most damaging, and unless the soldiers are distinctly forbid associating with the Indians, and the Indians kept out of the military camp, these troops will do more toward corrupting the morals of the Indians at this agency than any other means which could be designed or brought to bear upon them for that purpose. Their presence here, under the discipline at present maintained, probably has some weight in favor of "good order," but aside from that I do not think they help to promote civilization in the least.

In a letter written by Joseph Webster, "Santee agency, Nebraska, Eighthmonth 26, 1875," is this statement:

I have had no experience in relation to the moral influence, &c., exerted by the presence of soldiers upon Indians. But, from the best information I have been able to obtain, I believe it is always unfortunate to have to resort to white soldiers to maintain order on an Indian agency. With few exceptions these troops are composed of the lowest and worst class of white men, and their influence cannot be other than injurious to the moral growth of Indians.

In a letter written by Jonathan Richards, United States Indian agent, "office Wichita agency, Indian Territory, Ninthmonth 7, 1875," is this statement:

The influence of troops stationed permanently or for any length of time near to Indians is demoralizing and subversive of good order, and disease and ruin is almost, if not altogether, a sure effect of a close proximity of soldiers to the camps of Indians. Consequently they can make no progress, under such circumstances, in civilization, though they may be loyal, peaceable, and friendly.

M. U. Newlin, United States Indian agent, "agency Indians in Kansas, Eighthmonth 23, 1875," writes thus about the military:

Any introduction of the military power, which is certainly peremptory and arbitrary, in the government of the Indians would not only be detrimental to their interests, but seriously retard their advancement.

Another letter, dated Blackfoot agency, Montana, September 12, 1875, says, speaking of the Army:

Their presence is regarded with an unfriendly suspicion, which almost borders on dislike. The distance of the post and its avoidance by these Indians prevent the troops from exercising any influence upon the moral or social condition of these people, or interfering with their progress in any way.

* * * * * * *

My experience leads me to think that the less the military have to do with peaceable Indians the better; because the Indians feel that the presence of soldiers is a menace. This causes irritation among the young men, which should be avoided. Only in cases of threatened or actual hostility should the military be brought among them, for the reason stated.

This is signed by John S. Wood, United States Indian agent.

Mr. Chairman, I might go on at great length in reading extracts from various Indian agents and superintendents, but I do not care to detain the House further. I have read from the seventh annual report of the board of Indian commissioners for 1875. It seems to me there is no disagreement upon this question, and that the peace policy which has been very wisely established will, if carried out as it should be, result in benefit to the Indians, while to transfer the Indian Bureau from the Interior Department to the War Department would in my opinion be a step backward in regard to the civilization of the Indians.

I desire to call attention briefly to a memorial and protest which I hold in my hand, signed by a delegation of Cherokees, Creeks, Seminoles, and Choctaws. It is very well understood that the gentlemen whose names are attached to this document are a very highly educated class of Indians, very capable of determining this question for themselves; and they have in a very fair and respectful manner addressed their protest to this House. I desire to read a few brief extracts:

It is a fact that is even now being verified at the Black Hills, that the presence of troops begets trouble with Indians. Traders, contractors, liquor-dealers, supply men, and that other class of hangers-on, middle-men, and loafers, who follow an army and are found about posts, and all of whom do their parts in producing conflict between Indians and citizens, or with the Army. And a few days of Indian war costs the country more human life and treasure than years of civil control.

We believe that your records will show that your wars, and the consequences growing out of them, with the Indians since the rebellion, provoked by the military and its surroundings, have cost your Government and people many human lives, hundreds of millions of dollars, and retarded the advance of the Indian in civilized life.

We are informed that the Modoc war was notoriously the result of military mismanagement, and cost the lives of over one hundred and twenty white men and millions of dollars. And this is but a single instance.

Mr. MAGINNIS. Does the gentleman from California, [Mr. PAGE,] living near the scene of the Modoc war, indorse that view of its cause?

Mr. LANE. I desire to say to the gentleman from California [Mr. PAGE] that that was not Captain Jack's opinion. He said it was the fault of the civilians.

Mr. PAGE. I will say to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. LANE] that I have never had Captain Jack's version of this affair.

Mr. LANE. Well he attributed it to the civilians, not to the military.

Mr. PAGE. The fact remains nevertheless. Again they say:

No people learn well of those they do not trust, and it is a fact worthy the notice of Congress that the Indians of the frontier are not well disposed toward the Army, and we fully believe that their transfer to military control will not be conducive to peace with or prosperity of the Indians. * * *

The people, acting in honest support of the spirit of free government of the United States, and upon which it has been and now is carried on with all other peoples of whatever race or clime, must abhor this invidious distinction against the Indians, when it is not even claimed that it is for their fault, but for the dishonor of civilized men. And certainly the genius of the United States Government is again invaded in the excuses offered for this transfer; for while the Government is based by its founders on the intelligence and the integrity of the people, this movement is on the basis that there is no honor in civil life worthy to be trusted, and hence a transfer to the military as the only safety in the line of economy and integrity. The sequence of such position must sooner or later transfer other bureaus, and eventually the Government itself, to military control.

I shall not detain the committee further by reading from this report; but it seems to me that if any class of people are prepared to speak intelligently upon this question it is those from whose protest I have read these brief extracts. They are an intelligent people, competent to decide this question for themselves; and I submit that their protest is entitled to the consideration of this House.

Some gentlemen who have spoken in favor of the majority report of this committee have read very copiously from the letters or testimony of General Sherman and other military officers. I hold in my hand a report made in 1868, and signed by N. G. Taylor, president; J. B. Henderson; W. T. Sherman, Lieutenant-General; William S. Harney, brevet major-general; John B. Sanborn; Alfred H. Terry, brevet major-general; S. F. Tappan; C. C. Augur, brevet major-general United States Army, as commissioners. This report expressed the unanimous opinion of the signers against the transfer of the Indian Bureau from the Interior Department to the War Department. I will read very briefly:

This brings us to consider the much-mooted question whether the Bureau should belong to the civil or military department of the Government. To determine this properly we must first know what is to be the future treatment of the Indians. If we intend to have war with them the Bureau should go to the Secretary of War. If we intend to have peace it should be in the civil department.

Mr. MAGINNIS. Did they not afterward change the opinion expressed in that report?

Mr. PAGE. I do not care whether they changed their opinion or not. I am reading from a report made by men selected by the President of the United States to examine this question; and after many weeks of labor they presented this report unanimously signed, and I have a right to state to the House that this was the deliberate judgment of those commissioners.

Whatever may have occured since I leave to gentlemen on the other side who are in favor of this bill or who are in favor of the transfer of Indian affairs from the Interior to the War Department. If they can find any evidence which will convict these men of changing their opinions, all right.

Mr. STEELE. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. PAGE. I do not wish to be interrupted; I have only a few minutes.

Mr. STEELE. Do you not know they did change their opinions?

Mr. PAGE. I do not know whether they did or not. I know the extract I have read is contained in their report, and no minority report was made. I state on the authority of these gentlemen, if you want war turn the Indian Bureau over to the War Department, and if you want peace let it be where it is. I see my friend from Ohio, [Mr. BANNING,] who quoted last night from the report, or rather quoted a remark made by General Sheridan. It has been but recently my friend would quote anything from General Sheridan. But recently General Sheridan's reports down South were not considered to be entitled to much credit by our friends over there.

Mr. BANNING. Will my friend from California allow me?

Mr. PAGE. I cannot.

Mr. BANNING. The gentleman is clever to refer to me and not permit me to reply.

Mr. PAGE. You made your speech last night.

Mr. BANNING. We take Sheridan when he is right and you take Sherman when he is wrong. Sherman's letter is in favor of this transfer, and that is his last evidence.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Chairman, I have read from the report made by General Sherman and other officers of the United States acting in obedience to a summons of the President of the United States to investigate these affairs and report to the Congress of the United States.

Mr. COX. My friend from California will allow me right here to say a word. General Sherman has been quoted on both sides of this matter. General Sherman signed the peace commissioners' report, in which the language quoted by Mr. SEELYE, of Massachusetts, and that quoted by my friend in this discussion was used. Since that time he has said he had no practical knowledge of Indian affairs. I do not rely, therefore, greatly on General Sherman; but I hold in my hand a document, which I will refer to briefly. It shows that General Sherman had some knowledge of this matter as early as 1867 or 1868. It is a Senate report, Executive Document No. 11, Fortieth Congress, third session, not referred to heretofore, where General Harney reports to General Sherman the placing of 28,000 Sioux on the reservation at that time. I will read from that report.

Our past experience has dearly taught us that when persecuted and oppressed they are capable of becoming a foe not to be despised. Where one dollar has been spent for their support and civilization thousands have been expended in warring against them, and where have we gained any great victories? As relentless as death in their hatred and thirst for revenge, kindness secures their confidence. This once acquired, they can be controlled as easily as children.

General Sherman says:

I have no doubt that General Harney has laid the foundation for a system which if persevered in will in time domesticate the larger part of this powerful nation of Indians and withdraw them from the railroads that have been built across the continent.

Yet in this very document, Mr. Chairman, which these gentlemen have not apparently inquired into, this Army officer, General Harney, reports he used up in that fall the $200,000 appropriated and incurred a debt of $485,784.21 in addition to the $200,000, because the Army is not economic. And if economy commences anywhere, let it commence where the gentleman last night undertook to say it should not, right at the rank and file of the Army. When the gentleman talked about Tammany, &c., he knew where the shoe pinched and where the dereliction came in. I thank the gentleman from California for yielding to me.

Mr. PAGE. I thank the gentleman from New York for the suggestions he has just made. I accept them, and willingly incorporate them as part of my remarks.

Mr. BANNING. I ask the gentleman from California to yield to me, as my friend from New York has referred to me.

Mr. PAGE. I decline to be interrupted.

Mr. BANNING. I wish to present the last opinion of General Sherman.

Mr. PAGE. I hold in my hand, Mr. Chairman, a letter from General Sherman, dated Saint Louis, January 19, 1876, in which he says: "I do not profess to know anything of the practical working of the Indian Bureau as now organized." That is what he said. He does not pretend to know anything about it. If you wish to turn them over to the Army, I have no doubt General Sherman in case of an Indian war would advise this House or this committee of the best treatment under that system to dispose of the Indians.

But, Mr. Chairman, I stated in the outset that the majority of this committee have failed to show by this transfer from the Interior to the War Department there will be a saving of one dollar by the Government of the United States. And I ask those who are to follow me to state specifically wherein they expect to save this great amount of money. I know it has been asserted we will save the money paid to some of these Indian agents. But, as I have stated, it has been shown Indian supplies are now furnished at a much lower price than goods are furnished to the Army of the United States. And therefore it is fair to suppose that under this peace policy this board of Indian commissioners, composed of some of the best business men of the country, who serve the Government without pay, have an interest in this matter sufficient for them to examine carefully every contract made, and that they will see that the Indians will be provided for honestly and economically.

It is no argument, Mr. Chairman, to say that some men in the Indian Bureau have proved themselves to be rascals. There are rascals among all classes, I suppose, and there are men who cannot be safely intrusted with the disbursement of Government moneys. But there are honest men who, if they are selected as they should be selected, for their moral worth, for their honesty and integrity, will honestly disburse the funds of the Government and will save many dollars, in my judgment, if we leave this Indian Bureau where it is now.

To transfer this Bureau to the War Department, in my judgment, would be the means of bringing about numerous Indian wars; and history tells us that Indian wars have been very expensive to the Government of the United States. One Indian war cost the Government of the United States $30,000,000, and only thirty Indians killed. It is more economical for this Government to feed the Indians than it is to fight them. The recent war in the Territory of Arizona cost the Government many millions of dollars; but since this peace commission has been established those Indians, I understand, now are peaceable. They are being fed and taken care of on the reservations, and show no disposition to commit outrages on the settlers.

The Legislature of my own State, Mr. Chairman, passed resolutions at its last session instructing its Senators and requesting its Representatives in Congress to vote for this transfer. But, sir, while I am willing at all times to be advised by the Legislature of my own State, and while I am willing and consider it to be my duty at all times and under all circumstances to give respectful consideration to the Legislature, I certainly claim upon this question the right to disagree with them.

It will be remembered, Mr. Chairman, that the Union and Central Pacific Railroad traverses nearly two thousand miles of Indian territory or territory almost exclusively populated by Indians. There are hostile tribes on either side of this great overland railroad. For two thousand miles this railroad is exposed to the attack and to the depredations of hostile Indians. There is no knowing at what time, at what hour of the day or night, these Indians may throw a train off the track or burn bridges. But it is a matter of history that since the completion of the overland railroad in 1869, there has not been one hour's interruption on account of any bad conduct on the part of these Indians. But if they are turned over to the War Department and war should ensue, which, in my judgment, would be inevitable, there would be a very different state of things in that respect. These hostile tribes of Indians are not particularly friendly to the soldiers and the soldiers are not particularly friendly to them. It was only a few days ago that General Crook, I believe it was, made a raid and captured seven hundred Indian ponies, and the next day the Indians turned around and recaptured the ponies from General Crook. These evils would follow, in my judgment, from the transfer of the Indian Bureau and withdrawing from the management of Indian affairs the class of men who now have the control of them and who are teaching the Indians the arts of civilized life. It would be the means of giving rise in all probability to Indian outrages; and should that be the case the result would be that travel to my own State and to the Territory of Wyoming, to the Territory of Utah, to the State of Nevada, and to the State of Oregon would soon be very materially interrupted by depredations committed by these Indian tribes; and I say this is an argument, and a strong argument, in my judgment, in favor of maintaining the friendly relations we now have with these Indian tribes, that such a disaster might be prevented.

The Military Committee are in favor of this transfer, so says their chairman; and yet they are in favor of reducing the Army, as I understand. They are in favor of reducing the Army and in favor of imposing additional burdens upon the Army. It seems to me that they are working at cross-purposes in this, because I do not believe that you can reduce the Army and at the same time, after the reduction, impose additional burdens upon it.

I am surprised, Mr. Chairman, to find so many gentlemen who have made very able addresses upon this floor in favor of this transfer; some of them associated with me upon the committee, and Representatives from the Southern States—I say, I was surprised to find that any gentleman from the South, that any Representative from a single Southern State, could be found upon this floor advocating the transfer from the Interior Department and turning over to the control of the Army of the United States the peaceable and quiet Indians, many of whom are engaged in honest industrial pursuits with a desire to support their families and educate their children. The Representatives from the Southern States have on more than one occasion told this House of the tyranny that was exercised by the Army of the United States in their localities. They have also informed the House that the people of the South were able to take care of themselves, and that they were competent to enforce the laws of the States as well as the Government of the United States.

I must say that their appeals have had the effect upon my mind in many cases to lead me to believe that the Army could be properly withdrawn from many of these States. But, sir, I am surprised to find that these same gentlemen now believe that the only salvation for the Indian is to turn him over to the control of the Army of the United States.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that the peace policy should be continued. Many religious denominations have contributed money year after year for the purpose of civilizing these Indian tribes, educating the children of these Indians, teaching them morality and religion, and I believe that every religious denomination in the country has contributed more or less for that purpose. I hold in my hand a protest addressed to the President and Senate and House of Representatives from a religious society known as the Friends. I read that protest:

> The memorial of a convention of delegates, representing the seven yearly meetings of the religious society of Friends, composed of citizens of the States of New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, and Iowa, respectfully showeth that they have been actively engaged for several years in endeavoring to civilize the Indian tribes of the northern superintendency with marked success.
>
> Believing that the proposed transfer of the care of the Indians to the War Department will be a serious injury to them and of no ultimate gain to the Government, we earnestly remonstrate against such change, and wish you seriously to consider whether true wisdom will not cause you to continue the present humane policy.
>
> Signed by direction and on behalf of the delegates of the seven yearly meetings.
>
> DILLWYN PARRISH, Secretary.
>
> WASHINGTON, Thirdmonth 30, 1876.

Mr Chairman, there has not been, I believe, a single petition sent here by any religious denomination in this country asking for this transfer. If these religious denominations, representing as they do all classes of the people throughout the country, are willing to devote their time and their money to the civilization of the Indian tribes and respectfully ask that the control of the Indians shall be left where it is now, with the Interior Department, that this wise and humane policy shall be continued, I see no good reason why it should not have that effect upon the members of this House.

Sir, I am opposed to this bill most decidedly. I have no desire to argue it. The views and arguments of my colleague [Mr. SEELYE] are conclusive. It seems useless to say more. But I desire to enter my most solemn protest against its passage. Its effect will be to hurry to destruction the meager remnant of a once proud and happy but now decayed and perishing race.

I have no melting sentimentality to waste on the subject. I invoke none from others. The country has had enough of that. These people are God's creatures, and that is enough to know. What commends itself to generous manhood, to charity, and Christian principle, this body cannot ignore with impunity. We make laws, it is true, but we are not above the law. Pass this bill, and you challenge both the natural and divine laws, which are supreme over us all.

It is in vain to urge the benefits it will give the Indians. Nor is it the first time in the history of our dealings with them that great promises and sounding demonstrations have been used to conceal the sword and the bayonet.

When the white man met them here, who were they? Proprietors, were they not? They owned as much land as you do now, and from ocean to ocean. They had an indisputable title to the soil. The white man recognized it. Here was their home. These were their cornfields and their hunting-grounds, and here under the broad canopy of heaven the Great Spirit gave audience to their prayers. Nay, more. They were sovereigns. They marked out the limits of empires. They declared war and made peace. They wore as proud a coronet as any nation under the sun. It was set, too, with the jewel of power, resistless power, until you came. But with gentle approaches, with insidious arts and devices, with rankest trickery and chicane, you uprooted their sovereignty from the soil, and drove the red man from the home of his fathers. Until now the innermost recesses of the land are the only places left for his refuge. And there, even, there is no safety. You shoot down and destroy his food in wanton pastime. You well knew that in your manner of dealing with him he must soon come to dependence and want. He has reached it—starvation. You have got his land. You paid him for it; but you took the money back again as the price of burning up his body and soul with rum. Not content with all this, you want the little nook he has left. But as yesterday, you went to get it. You found him, like shorn Lear, upon the heath, without bread or shelter. You carried him no corn, but mocked him with the semblance of his departed power. You offered him a treaty. He rejected your terms. Failing in this, you dashed from his brow even his crown of worthless weeds, and to-day you mark him out to swift and certain destruction. That is the effect of this bill. No man's sober reflections can lead him to any other conclusion. Is there no limit to man's rapacity? Or mercy in the human heart? Plunge, then, the bayonet into the last of his race, and let the car of your boasted civilization move on.

You seek economy. It has been shown that the present is the most economical plan. Economy, indeed! A great, rich, and powerful nation, have we no bread to feed the hungry or wherewithal to clothe the naked? Cloak it as you may, this bill means the death of the Indian.

But the friends of the measure say it is for the protection of the Indian. Protection from what, I should like to know? From armed enemies? They are ready to fight their own battles. But if it be meant that the Army will protect them from the rapacity of the white man, show me a man intelligent upon the subject who will believe it. Protection! such as vultures give to lambs, covering but to devour them. I mean no disrespect to the Army. I have confidence in the Army. I glory in the brave hearts that rally round the old flag. No man more than I; and no man is readier than I to do it even, exact, and ample justice. But I will not allow either my zeal or affection for the Army to hoodwink me into the infliction of a downright and positive wrong to those whom we are bound by the laws of God and man to care for and maintain.

But I presume the bill will pass. Pass it, then. You will at least have added a new fact to history, that the red race is extinguished and forever. But I caution you that the historian will put that fact with an aptitude and directness that will be discreditable to you and bow your children down in remorse and shame.

Mr. BOONE. Mr. Chairman, I approach the discussion of any question before this body with great embarrassment, and especially the discussion of one of so much importance to the country as the one now under consideration. It has been truly said, Mr. Chairman, that there has been no question before this Congress—and in my judgment there will be none—of more importance to the country than the one we are now considering. It is a question that is above and higher than mere party politics; and I trust that gentlemen will not dwarf it into one of mere party consideration. It is a question that affects materially a large class of our Indian population and also affects materially the interests of the whole country. This bill contemplates a radical change in the management of Indian affairs in this country, which is a subject that has caused as much anxious thought perhaps as any question that has entered into American politics for years past.

Now, sir, I do not suppose that my views are of much value to this Congress or to the country; but, such as they are, I entertain them honestly and shall briefly state them. I am in favor of a transfer of the management of the Indian Bureau from the Interior to the War Department. And in the beginning, Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask that gentlemen shall not be permitted to take advantage of a statement that has been made, and upon which they build an argument, not only by the distinguished gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX,] but also by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. SEELYE,] and followed by the gentleman from California, [Mr. PAGE,] which is that this bill means that the Indians are to be turned over to the management of the Army. I deny that this bill means any such thing or that it has any such purpose. Looking at this question from the stand-point occupied by these gentlemen, of course I, in common with every other member of this body, would oppose this bill, because, if I believed that the object of this transfer was to put the Indians exclusively under the control of the Army, to be governed by soldiers, I would be the last man to record my vote to sanction any such course. But, sir, I again repeat that the bill means no such thing. The opponents of this bill insist, however, that it does transfer the management of the Indians to the Army; and then, of course, they parade before the House and the country a long list of wrongs and outrages which they say have been inflicted upon the Indians by our soldiers.

Why, sir, to have been present and heard the eloquent and distinguished gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX,] one would have supposed that he had but recently emerged from among the arches that support the Rotunda of this Capitol, where he had been looking upon the prostrate form of the dying Tecumseh, and melted to tears while gazing upon the melancholy scene and at the remembrance of the outrages which have been inflicted upon the hapless Indians; that then he had returned to this Hall with his heart burdened with the wrongs done the poor Indian and in strains the most eloquent and touching he pours into our ears the story of the injuries inflicted on the poor Indians and draws a fearful picture of what he conceives will be the condition of the Indians if turned over to the tender mercies of the Army. But I am sorry to say, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman utterly neglected to notice the real object and purpose of the bill under consideration.

Then came the scholarly gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. SEELYE,] with his severe logic and keen analysis, and, arguing from the same stand-point as the gentleman from New York, of course he made a conclusive argument against the passage of this bill. But these gentlemen are not to escape the issue in this way. If they desire to argue the question fairly before the House and the country which is presented by this bill, they must look at its purposes and objects, and determine the question from the text of the bill.

Now, sir, what is the object, intent, and meaning of this measure? It is simply, Mr. Chairman, that the management of Indian affairs shall be taken from the Secretary of the Interior and placed under the control of the Secretary of War. It further provides that the Secretary of War, in the appointment of all agents who are to assist in the execution of this trust, shall select them from among the officers of the Army; but the bill does not propose that he shall go into the field and begin a campaign against the Indians; nor will this be the effect of it. It means no such thing. Sir, if this bill shall pass, there will be no more necessity for soldiers in the Indian Territory than there is now.

And will gentlemen say that simply because a man may have graduated at West Point and served as an officer in the Army he is therefore not capable of managing these Indians as well at least as a man taken from civil life? I see no reason for such a conclusion. While I am no apologist, Mr. Chairman, for the officers of the Army particularly, still I undertake to say, and I say it with the utmost confidence, that in a comparison between them and those who have had the management of Indian affairs in this country the Army officers would not suffer by the comparison, but, upon the contrary, I believe the Army officers, as a class, are greatly superior to our Indian agents in capability and integrity.

The object of this bill is twofold. First, if possible, to secure a more humane policy toward the Indian himself; and, in the next place, if possible, to secure a more honest and economical management of Indian affairs, and thus save money to the people. Upon the first proposition I remark that civilization and Christianity should go hand in hand. But you cannot Christianize until you first civilize the Indian; and the only method by which we shall ever be able to secure the desired object is, first, to give the Indian "a local habitation and a place," because so long as he is permitted to roam at large and at will over the prairies, under the delusive hope that he may secure a subsistence by hunting, unrestrained by law or some sort of government, the effort to civilize or Christianize him is an idle experiment. You must fix the boundaries beyond which he must not go, and thus place him in a position where your civilizing influences can be brought to bear upon him. Then you may begin to teach him the arts of civilized life. And occupying the position of wards, as gentlemen say these Indians do, it becomes our duty as guardians, while we treat them humanely and kindly, to let them feel and recognize the fact that we have also the power over them necessary to enforce obedience to law. And, sir, if the strong arm of the military is necessary to put and keep them on their reservations, it ought to be exerted, and it is no cruelty to the Indian to so exert it. After they are put on their reservations they must be brought under the restraints of law, or some other kind of government, before they can be properly controlled. All admit that. The question then is whether the Interior Department or the War Department is best calculated to accomplish these objects. Of course the object of all is to secure the best management of these Indians upon the most humane principles and upon the most economical terms. I do not suppose that anybody desires to wantonly punish or unnecessarily annoy the Indians. The object of all should be, and doubtless is, to elevate them, and ultimately to make them self-sustaining, and possibly, in the course of time, to make them citizens, entitled to all the rights, privileges, and immunities of other citizens of the country.

But we are told that the best plan to accomplish these high objects is to farm or parcel out these several Indian reservations to certain religious denominations or sects, and to appoint an agent over them because he is a member of this or that particular church, and he is to be charged with the duty not only of civilizing but of Christianizing the Indian. How do they propose to do it? They go among the Indians armed with a recent appointment from partisan authority in the one hand, and a Bible in the other, with the eighth commandment stricken out, which commandment is, "Thou shalt not steal;" and thus armed they are fully prepared not only to civilize but to Christianize the red man of the forest. And right well have these agents carried out their designs; for if the history of their transactions is to be believed, the scenes that have been enacted upon our western borders among the Indians by these agents professing Christianity are absolutely disgusting to every sentiment of honesty and morality. I undertake to say that a more corrupt and unprincipled ring does not exist, and has not existed in this Government, than what is known as the Indian ring. It has swindled the Government out of millions, and the Indians out of millions more.

I am glad, however, Mr. Chairman, to be able to state that I believe the present Commissioner of Indian Affairs is an honorable exception to this rule. I am glad to make this statement, because the exceptions are so rare. So far as I know, or have reason to believe, the present Commissioner is an honest man. There may be other exceptions; doubtless there are; I would do no man injustice; but take the average Indian agent, clothed with authority as he is to disburse the annuities to the Indians, and of issuing the rations to them, and the further privilege of counting the number to whom he is to issue those rations, and I say that, according to the evidence before our committee, and doubtless in the possession of other gentlemen here, there has been a system of fraud and corruption that has never been surpassed if it has been equaled in this country. And this we are told is the arm of the Government which is to civilize, and Christianize, and finally bring these Indians into the Government as fellow-citizens upon an equality with the balance of the people of the States!

I remark further, Mr. Chairman, that in order to civilize the Indian you must go to him with his subsistence in one hand and the power to govern him in the other. It is idle to talk about sending an agent to feed, clothe, and educate these people and expect to accomplish any good results, unless you also invest him with the power to control and manage them. But if the Indian sees in the same person the power to feed and the power to punish, he at once has respect for both, and will the more readily be governed by that person. I am told that the Indian agent now is but a laughing-stock to the Indian. The proud man of the forest thinks he is, and no doubt he is, infinitely superior in many respects to a large number of the men who go there as the agents of the Government to Christianize and civilize him. He has a sovereign contempt for these pretended Christian gentlemen whom he knows go there for the purpose of making money for themselves; while, upon the other hand, not being brought in contact with the military arm of the Government except in a state of war, of course he has not much admiration for the Army.

But the policy proposed by this bill is this: Let the War Department feed him, take care of him, defend him, and protect him, and at the same time govern him; and when the Indian sees that it is able to do all these, my judgment is—let it be worth what it may—that it is the policy by which we shall solve this Indian question with justice to them and to ourselves also.

Under our present system of governing the Indians we have two jurisdictions, the civil and the military. With these two jurisdictions as they necessarily exist—because all admit that the presence of the Army is needed in some portions of the Indian country—with these two jurisdictions we necessarily have conflict and more or less confusion; and the result is that neither performs the functions that it is intended to perform, and the influence of both is thereby neutralized.

Again, Mr. Chairman, I take the ground that the present peace policy, as it is called, for the management of the Indians is anti-republican. In this country, sir, if there is one right that we hold more sacred than another it is the right of every man to worship God according to his own convictions and to unite with that religious organization which he believes best calculated to assist him in promoting his religious interests. Under the present system we farm out these Indian reservations—some to the Methodists, some to the Presbyterians, some to the Baptists, some to the Catholics, some to the Friends, and so on—and give each exclusive control of the religious interests of the Indians in their jurisdiction, excluding all others. We are gravely told that this is right, because they say that any religion is good enough for an Indian and that any religion is better than no religion. While I deny both propositions, it is not my purpose to discuss them now, nor is it material to the point which I make; for whether the Presbyterian, the Baptist, the Methodist, the Catholic, or the Friends be right, I say that we violate a fundamental principle when we undertake to say that any body of Christians shall take possession of any territory or any Indian reservation and exclude all other denominations therefrom; because thereby you virtually establish in that territory or reservation that form of religion peculiar to the denomination in charge thereof. There is but one correct rule on this subject; that is, throw the doors wide upon. Let the gospel be carried by its authorized and accredited agents into every nation and among every people. Let it be carried by men of all persuasions. Let the Indian be instructed in the doctrines of the Bible; but, for God's sake, do not trammel him with the peculiar tenets of any religious denomination. Let him, in common with all other men, be free to choose for himself how he will worship his Creator. The policy now pursued is, it seems to me, clearly in violation of the spirit and meaning of our laws and institutions, as was most clearly shown by the honorable gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. SCALES.]

Now, sir, according to the speeches of the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] and others who have spoken upon that side of the question, the officers of the Army are nothing more nor less than a set of barbarians; for we are told that the moment you turn the Indians over to the management of the War Department that moment you commence a war of extermination. I deny that any such results follow; I deny that they are necessary at all. Unless I could believe the officers of the Army to be an unprincipled set of men, whose only desire is war and bloodshed, I shall and do also deny that simply because a man is an officer of the Army he is therefore necessarily cruel and inhuman. The personal history of our military men does not justify that conclusion. Upon this subject we have the testimony of a number of officers who are presumed to know the feelings of the officers of the Army, and first I quote that of the General of the Army, (General Sherman.) In his testimony before the Committee on Indian Affairs he speaks to this question, as to whether or not it is the policy of the Army to bring about war with the Indians. He says:

> The idea which prevails with some that the Army wants war with the Indians is not true. Such wars bring exposure, toil, risk, and privation, with no honor. Therefore it naturally wants peace, and very often has prevented wars by its mere presence; and if intrusted with the exclusive management, a control of their annuities and supplies as well as force, I think Indian wars will cease, and the habits of the Indians will be gradually molded into a most necessary and useful branch of industry, the rearing of sheep, cattle, horses, &c. In some localities they may possibly be made farmers.

And upon the subject of the propriety of this transfer, I desire also to quote from General Sherman. In a report to the Secretary of War, which he made November 2, 1875, he says:

> During the past winter the troops in the Departments of the Missouri and Texas were employed in an arduous and severe winter campaign against the Kiowa, Cheyenne, and Comanche Indians, on the border of the Staked Plains, that have for years been engaged in depredations on the Texas and Kansas frontiers, resulting in their disarmament and subjection to authority. If the military commanders can have control over the supplies needed by these Indians as they now have over their persons, I am convinced by a recent visit that a condition of peace can be maintained.
>
> The border of Texas on the lower Rio Grande has also been the scene of incursions by Indians and by Mexicans, mostly engaged in stealing cattle and horses. I invite your attention to the report of General Ord on this subject.
>
> In like manner the Sioux located on their reservation have recently, since the date of General Crook's annual report, made inc ursions into Northern Nebraska, mostly to steal cattle and horses from farms along the Pacific Railroad and north of it. General Crook is of the opinion that the whole Army, acting defensively, cannot prevent these incursions, and suggests that the troops be stationed in the midst of the Indians, so as to watch and prevent their leaving on the pretense of hunting. This is impracticable, unless the Army can have supervision of the necessary supplies of these tribes within the reservation, which is now not the case. The reports of the several commissions which have, under military escort, recently been engaged in exploring the country and in negotiating with these Indians, will throw much light on this subject.

Sir, the soldier is the one who suffers by war. It is he who bears the heat and burden of the contest; and while I can see a reason why an unprincipled Indian agent might desire war in order to increase his opportunities of speculation, I cannot conceive how a soldier, whose business it is to fight, should desire war.

In addition to the testimony of General Sherman, we have the testimony of General Sheridan upon the same point. He says:

> It would have been better if the Indians had been considered as a part of the population of the United States, and dealt with generously, and when forced on reservations—which is always the case—let them be reasonable in size, subject to especial rule and government, until they are fitted to obey the ordinary laws of the country for the control of all our people. But at present we see the ridiculous anomaly of having the most stringent laws, municipal, State, and Federal, with penalties, such as imprisonment in penitentiaries, and even the gallows, for the government of intelligent white people, while we are attempting to govern these poor wild savages without any power over them or any laws at all.
>
> The observation of many years in my own command, and throughout most of the Indian country for the last twenty years, has left the impression that this system of civilizing the wild portion of our Indian inhabitants has not met with a success which gives a fair equivalent for the expense, trouble, and bloodshed which have attended it.
>
> I believe there is true humanity in making the reservations reasonably small, dividing them into tracts for the heads of families, making labor gradually compulsory, and even compelling the children to go to school.
>
> To accomplish this purpose, to civilize, make self-supporting, and save many more of these poor people than otherwise will be saved, I believe it best to transfer the Indian Bureau to the military, and let it be taken under the general administration of the Army, governed and controlled in responsibility of accounts in accordance with our present system. The Indians will thus be humanely and honestly dealt with, and I believe, if this had always been the case, there would have been but few of the troubles and bloody records which have characterized the civilization of the Indians in the many years gone by.

These officers give their opinion that this transfer will be beneficial to the country and also to the Indian. In addition to this we have the testimony of General Pope, General Schofield, and others, which I will not stop to read. My time is going rapidly; and it is unnecessary for me to dwell further upon this view of the subject; and there are some other questions to which I wish to call the attention of the committee.

I admit, Mr. Chairman, that the primary question to be decided is whether this measure will be just to the Indians; for, sir, whatever it might cost the Government, upon no principle of economy would I consent to transfer the management of the Indians to the War Department if I believed that their condition was to be injured thereby. But I do not thus believe. I cannot see how their condition can be made worse; I can see how it may be improved.

But, sir, in connection with this there is another important consideration. If we but admit that the officers of the Army are upon a footing of equality with the Indian agents, as now appointed—that they are no better, no worse, but, as a class, equal to the Indian agents—then we have an argument which ought to weigh in the mind of every gentleman who is called upon to vote on this question, an argument which seems to me potent and conclusive, which should turn the scale in favor of this bill and should induce this House, without a moment's hesitation, to adopt it. I refer to the money which will be saved by this transfer.

The question of economy, Mr. Chairman, is one of vast importance at this time. I know the word "economy" has become very common; we hear it everywhere and from everybody.

Nevertheless it is no less important because it is common. In these times, when the people of this country are suffering beneath a public debt that will eventually end in almost, if not quite, universal bankruptcy and ruin; in these times, when they are groaning beneath a system of taxation unequal and unjust; in these times, when the people of the Western and Southern States—I am not familiar with the condition of the people of the Eastern States—are actually staring bankruptcy in the face, in consequence of what I believe to be an unjust system of taxation, it becomes us to economize at every point; and I shall vote for every measure looking to this end consistent with my oath of office. And while it may be but a little here and a little there which we may be able to save, still when you add them all together the aggregate becomes a matter of supreme moment to the tax-paying people of this country. If there is one thing above another that demands the serious consideration of the Representatives of the people to-day it is to determine upon and adopt some plan by which the people may be relieved from this tremendous load of debt. How this is to be done is a troublesome question. There is but one way to do it, it seems to me. Reduce your taxes, reduce your expenses, cut off every surplus officer in the employment of the Government everywhere—every one of them. Let us have an honest, economical, and just administration of affairs, and we may hope for relief. By this bill we propose to accomplish something in the line of economy. I believe myself it will save millions to the people of this country. I will not undertake now to go into the discussion of what this Indian Bureau costs; but I have a table prepared here, a short one, which exhibits, to a limited extent, the enormous expense which this Indian Bureau is to the country, all of which will be saved to the country if this bill passes. And this relates to agents alone, all of whom we propose to abolish by this bill and require their duties to be performed by officers of the Army, who are already on pay, without any additional salary.

Commissioner of Indian Affairs	$3,000
Seventy agents, $1,500 each	105,000
Two special agents, $2,000 each	4,000
Seven special agents, $1,500 each	10,500
One chief clerk at central superintendency	1,600
One assistant clerk at central superintendency	1,200
One copyist at central superintendency	600
One clerk at northern superintendency	1,200
Three inspectors of Indian goods, $3,000 each	9,000
Traveling expenses of inspectors	6,000
For contingencies, including traveling and incidental expenses, (and what they are no man knows)	30,000
For citizen commissioners who serve without pay—to cover expenses	15,000
Incidental expenses at central superintendency	4,000
Incidental expenses at northern superintendency	2,000
For collecting statistics by Secretary of Interior	3,500

We propose by this transfer to do away with this long list of bloodsuckers and fill their places with men already paid by the Government.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. SEELYE] in his remarks considered no doubt he had made a conclusive point against this bill when he discovered, as he thought, that the beef and flour that are furnished to the Army cost more than that furnished to the Indians; but I propose to show that that can be and is explained upon a most reasonable hypothesis, and is not in fact true. In the first place, sir, at the points to which the gentleman alluded, to wit, at Fort Randall and Fort Sill, there are but few soldiers stationed. At Fort Sill there are four hundred and ninety soldiers; at Fort Randall, two hundred and seventy; at Fort Wingate, one hundred and twenty-four; at Camp Robinson, two hundred and sixteen; and at Camp Sheridan, one hundred and twenty-four. These soldiers are furnished with fresh beef from the block. The neck and that portion not considered good beef are thrown away, and only good beef is furnished to the soldiers. Those who furnish that beef must slaughter it; they must prepare it, they must cut it, and they can furnish only small quantities at a time, which necessarily increases the price; while, upon the other hand, the Indian is supplied with beef upon the hoof. It is given to them by the thousand head. Contracts for thousands of beeves are entered into, and they are driven into their camp, some good, mostly inferior, and sold to them in gross. Consequently, those who furnish it are able to obtain it cheaper and to furnish it cheaper than the man who slaughters it, prepares it, and sells it at the block by the pound. If you add to the cost of the Indian beef the cost of slaughtering it and take into account the difference in the quality of it, you will find that the beef furnished the Indians costs quite as much and I dare say more than that furnished to the soldiers.

Mr. DOBBINS. I would respectfully ask my friend from Kentucky whether there is not a fifth quarter, embracing the hide and tallow, which goes to the butcher, and out of the profits of which they get rich?

Mr. BOONE. I know there is a fifth quarter. It consists of a great deal more than the hide and tallow. We all understand what the fifth quarter is. We know that while the Indian will eat it the soldier will not touch it.

Mr. STEELE. If I do not interrupt the gentleman, I would like to say in this connection that the Indians slaughter these beeves themselves. They are turned out to them, they slaughter them themselves, and the fifth quarter goes to the Indian.

Mr. BOONE. Certainly; and goes in as beef.

Mr. BENNETT. There is another thing which ought to be stated, and that is the Indians do not always get the beef which is charged to them. I had occasion, upon a visit to the Indians in Idaho, to take the testimony in writing of an Indian chief. Although I saw from the accounts of the Indian agent that he had been furnished with beef to the amount stated out of the annual appropriation of $20,000 to that tribe for five or six years, yet the chief told me that he had never seen any of the beef of all that had been charged to these Indians. [Laughter.] He positively testified that he had never seen any beef, notwithstanding the large account which had been charged to him by the agent. The truth is, in many cases the Indians are fed on shadowy beef; while the soldier sees he gets tangible beef, and beef of the best quality, and from the block.

Mr. BOONE. Thus the witnesses multiply; and I have no doubt I have another witness in the person of my distinguished friend from California, [Mr. LUTTRELL,] who rises to interrupt me.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I wish to say to the gentleman from Kentucky that during twenty-five years' residence upon the frontier I have seen beef slaughtered and delivered to the soldiers, and it is trimmed as neatly as beef can be trimmed; while shanks, hide, tallow, entrails, and everything else are thrown to the Indian and charged to him, saving at least one-third in favor of the soldier. The Indian Bureau pays as much again as the Army for beef. This I know from personal observation.

Mr. BOONE. If it were necessary, I might take as witnesses every man who lives on the frontier.

Mr. LANE. I can speak of one Indian reservation in Oregon.

Mr. BOONE. Still they come! I have abundant testimony, and here I rest my case on that point.

I desire to devote a few minutes to another article, spoken of by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. SEELYE]—that of flour—because all these questions are easily explained when the facts are known. We are told that the flour costs more to the Army than to the Indians. That is true. But gentlemen must remember that the Army is furnished with the very best grade of flour, while the Indian is furnished with the very worst grade. I fortunately have one case where the test can be exactly applied. It was at Fort Randall and at the Yankton agency; the very same places and the same flour referred to by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. SEELYE.] Now, sir, the figures show that at Fort Randall the flour cost the Army $3.22½, and at the Yankton agency $3.13. There is a difference, Mr. Chairman, of only nine and a half cents in the hundred pounds. Mark that.

Now, then, what is the evidence upon the subject as to what character of flour was furnished to the Indian and that furnished to the soldier? I read, sir, a letter from one of these agencies signed by Charles McClure, captain and commissary of subsistence. It is as follows:

OFFICE PURCHASING AND DEPOT COMMISSARY SUBSISTENCE, U. S. A.,
Sioux City, Iowa, March 13, 1876.

GENERAL: * * * I purchased for the troops the best grade made from spring wheat in this section except that produced by the "patent process." The flour furnished the Indian Department was of a grade known here as XX, while that for the troops was XXXX, or "pearl-white."

* * * * * * *

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

CHARLES McCLURE,
Captain and Commissary of Subsistence.

To the COMMISSARY-GENERAL OF SUBSISTENCE,
United States Army, Washington, D. C.

Now, I understand the XXXX to be a grade of flour very superior to the XX. It is what is called "pearl-white." They were bought at the same place, inspected by the same officer; and while the Army got the best grade of flour that could be obtained they only paid nine and a half cents per hundred pounds more than was paid for that given to the Indians, which was of very inferior grade.

Mr. MAGINNIS. Will the gentleman allow me to make a remark?

Mr. BOONE. Yes, sir; certainly.

Mr. MAGINNIS. The Indian Department never calls in any of its proposals for anything but the XX flour, which is the lowest grade of flour. The Army, on the contrary, always calls for the highest.

Mr. LUTTRELL. If the gentleman will give way for a moment, I would like also to give a little testimony on that point.

Mr. BOONE. If it will not be taken out of my time.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I will give you some of my time. In two or three reservations in my district they advertised for and purchased shorts or middlings for the Indians.

Mr. BOONE. To show this is a fair test, I read another letter from J. H. Gilman, from this agency:

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE MISSOURI,
OFFICE CHIEF COMMISSARY OF SUBSISTENCE,
Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, March 11, 1876.

GENERAL: In reply to yours of 8th instant, I have the honor to state that the flour inspected by me for the Indian Department in the year of 1875 was not of the same grade as that purchased by me for issue to troops. A sample of the flour required was furnished me by the Indian Department, and the flour accepted was required to be equal to that sample, the grade of which was not the same as or equal to the grade of flour purchased by me for issue to troops.

* * * * * * *

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. H. GILMAN,
Captain and Commissary Subsistence, Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel United States Army, Chief Commissary Subsistence, Department Missouri.

Brigadier-General R. MACFEELY,
Commissary-General of Subsistence, Washington, D. C.

I quote another witness, Captain R. J. Eskridge:

OMAHA BARRACKS, NEBRASKA,
March 21, 1876.

GENERAL: In reply to your letter of the 9th instant I have the honor to state that the flour inspected by me for the Indian Department during the present fiscal year is inferior in quality to that generally issued to troops.

* * * * * * *

R. J. ESKRIDGE,
Captain Twenty-third Infantry, Inspector of Supplies.

Brigadier-General R. MACFEELY,
Commissary-General of Subsistence, Washington, D. C.,
(through Major John P. Hawkins, Commissary of Subsistence, Omaha, Nebraska.)

OFFICE COMMISSARY OF SUBSISTENCE,
Omaha, March 22, 1876.

Respectfully forwarded to the Commissary-General United States Army.

JOHN P. HAWKINS,
Major, Commissary of Subsistence.

Now, if credence is to be given to this testimony, if these men are to be believed, all this parade about the Army paying more for its supplies than is paid by the Interior Department for Indian supplies, when you take into account the comparative qualities of the articles furnished, ends in moonshine, and there is nothing of it. Why, sir, what interest would the Army have in paying more for the same article than an Indian agent would have to pay? Why should it cost the one more than it costs the other? Can any gentleman tell me? Is it not reasonable to suppose that an Army officer would buy, for the use of the Indians, just as good and just as cheap an article as an Indian agent who goes out there for speculation? Why, sir, common sense teaches every man, it seems to me, that there can be but one answer to this question.

I desire to present one or two more views of this question, and then I shall have finished. I will occupy only a few minutes in doing so. The Indian agents, as will be observed, go, many of them, to the Indian country on a salary of $1,500 a year. They go as appointees of the President of the United States, and are appointed of course because they are of the same political faith, and for a limited time, say four years. I am told that almost invariably before the four years expire they become rich. Let some gentleman take his slate and pencil and solve the problem how a man can become rich in four years on $1,500 a year and act honestly; and I would like to see the method by which it is done.

Ah, sir, the truth is that this $1,500 is but a small part of the pay which these agents get. How they get rich I leave every man to decide for himself. And permit me to say that another reason why this bill ought to pass is this: that now the appointing power of the President is immense. The patronage that attaches to the office of President of the United States is such as to cause serious apprehension, if not alarm, in the minds of a large number of the people of this country. He wields an influence that penetrates into every nook and corner of this land. From the frozen regions of the North to the sunny climes of the South, from the Atlantic to the Pacific Oceans, there is not a neighborhood where his agents are not found. Being partisan appointees, of course they are ready to do his behest; and they become a potent influence in deciding the political questions of the day. I believe it is the duty of the American people, through their Representatives, as far as they can, to strip the President of as much of this patronage as possible. Do not let it grow until he shall become the autocrat, whose word shall be law. Do not let it grow until through that influence he can make and unmake Congresses and elect whom he pleases to office.

Power is a dangerous thing for man to possess. Too much power in the hands of one man is dangerous to the liberties of the people.

As the law now is, the power to appoint the most of these Indian agents is vested in the President. This bill proposes to take that power out of his hands, and place it elsewhere.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I beg to say that I have no disposition to oppress or injure the Indians. No such motive actuates me in advocating this bill; for I confidently believe that we shall benefit the Indian and save money to the country if this bill passes.

I agree with gentlemen who oppose this measure when they say that we have not kept faith with the Indian in all respects. It is true that we have not been as scrupulous in observing our treaty stipulations with them as we ought to have been, and it is also true that in many instances the Indians have proven treacherous and unreliable, not keeping faith with us; and they have, moreover, murdered our citizens, stolen their property, and burned their houses. But, sir, I trust we cherish no feelings of retaliation or revenge for the cruelties thus inflicted upon our people. We can afford to be not only just but even generous and forgiving to a race which was once great and powerful, but which is now weak and defenseless.

The hand of destiny is upon the Indian race. From three millions, they number now less than three hundred thousand souls. And they are still melting away rapidly before the advancing wave of civilization, despite all our efforts to save and elevate them. Ere another centennial year shall dawn the entire race will have become extinct or absorbed by the white race, and what was once known as the noble race of red men, warlike and brave, will live only in history, in poetry, and song:

Ye say they all have passed away,
The noble race and brave;
That their light canoes have vanished
From off the crested wave,
That 'mid the forest where they roamed
There rings no hunter's shout;
But their name is on your waters,
Ye may not wash it out.
'Tis where Ontario's billow,
Like ocean surge is curled,
Where strong Niagara's thunder wakes
The echo of the world;
Where red Missouri bringeth,
Rich tribute from the West,
And Rappahannock sweetly sleeps
On green Virginia's breast.

I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Virginia, General TERRY, and beg his pardon for not giving him more of it.

Mr. TERRY. It would be selfish in myself if I had regretted that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BOONE] has occupied more of the time than he had agreed to do, for I am perfectly sure that I could not have done so much justice to the bill which we are both advocating as he himself has done. I would have been content if he had continued longer, for I have no other object in view than to secure the passage of this bill, to the support of which I give my most cordial indorsement.

Sir, in the consideration of this question the rights of the white man and the red man are no longer to be considered. The time has passed to consider what rights white men have in this country or what rights the red men have. The rights of the white man are already settled beyond any controversy, and it remains to be seen what rights the red man will have hereafter. One fact is evident, namely, that the red man has to become a civilized man or fade from the face of the earth. And it is evident to any man who has been watching the progress of events in this country that at the farthest it can only be a few years or a few generations when the wild tribes must disappear from the western wilds. Whether what is called the civilized man has a right to exterminate the Indian or not is not the question, because, sir, he stands subjected to the same laws that govern the civilized world. It is a fact which statistics show that the wild tribes of the West have been disappearing, have been diminishing; and the ratio by which they have been diminishing, no matter what protection we may throw around them, will in a few brief years cause them to disappear entirely. We have, therefore, without discussing any of these questions at all, to come down and treat of it and deal with it as a practical question between man and man.

I want before I go further into the discussion of this question to refer to a remark made by the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] the other day when he addressed the House.

I am sorry, because of the great admiration and kindness of feeling that I have for that gentleman, to differ from him and to reject on my part the kind consideration and regard which he may have intended. In speaking in reply to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SCALES] he used this language:

> I ask the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina, who has served in war, not merely to recall his own honorable service and that of his compatriots, but to remember what the Army has been in connection with his section in time of peace during the last ten years? Has it not been used throughout the South to overturn established institutions from the ballot up through various gradations to the Legislatures of sovereign States? Must I rehearse to him the jealousy of arms in free countries, handed down in traditions, bills of right, and constitutions for our guidance in the pursuit of well-ordered civil freedom?

Now, sir, I do not admit the parallel between the people of the Southern States and the wild tribes of the forest. I do not admit the parallel that he drew, or intended to draw, between the intelligent white citizens of Louisiana and the followers of Spotted Tail and Red Cloud. No, sir; our white citizens of the South are as intelligent as the constituents of the distinguished gentleman from New York. They are men who in times past have established and upheld civil liberty, who have established governments; who understand and appreciate civil government and civil liberty. Admitting, sir, that these governments have been overthrown in the Southern States by the bayonet; admitting that we have had Sheridans and Merrills there, still, to the credit of the Army, we have had Hancocks, and Schofields, and Stonemans, and there are plenty yet left in the Army to vindicate civil liberty whensoever it is necessary.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman allow me to say that I think I can show to him that that is an entire misapprehension of the remark of mine which he has read? I made no such parallelism; my remark bears no such interpretation.

Mr. TERRY. I read your language.

Mr. COX. I know you did, and I make my own interpretation upon it.

Mr. TERRY. The gentleman will pardon me.

Mr. COX. Certainly I will; I did not expect that the gentleman would make such an irascible speech on such a small foundation.

Mr. TERRY. The gentleman is a right smart foundation to build upon on any occasion. [Laughter.] Well, sir, what is the difference between the governments of these Southern States and the tribal relations of the Indians in the Territory? And allow me here to say that there is a total misapprehension of the objects, the purposes, and the scope of the bill that we are advocating. We are not seeking to overturn the civilized tribes in the Indian Territory. They have established governments there; they have judicial systems; they have legislative and executive departments of government as we have in the States, though not perhaps quite so perfectly organized. This bill does not touch these tribes or nations, for I will not call them tribes; it does not touch even the wild tribes of the Territories. Whatever organizations they may have, upon whatever principles these tribes are governed, it is not proposed to interfere in the slightest degree with the relations of the tribes to each other and the relations of the members of the tribes. They will be tribes still, governed either by their hereditary chiefs or by their elective chiefs. I believe that some of the tribes yet have hereditary chiefs, and in some of them they have elective chiefs, men who have won their way to position and influence by their service and their gallantry; of this class are Spotted Tail and Red Cloud, two distinguished chiefs among the Sioux.

But, no matter how this may be, it is not intended by this bill to infringe in the slightest degree upon any of the tribal rights. Whatever rights they may have now will be preserved for them. The only object of this bill is to transfer the relation between these tribes and the Government from the Interior Department to the War Department. What are these relations? Under our treaties with the Indians we have agreed to pay these tribes of Indians a certain amount of money annually, or where money is not stipulated, then a certain amount of clothing, blankets, and rations. In the past these supplies have been dealt out through the Indian agencies. We propose to transfer the distribution of these supplies of whatever character they may be to the War Department. We propose that if money is to be paid, it shall be paid out by a bonded paymaster of the Army; if clothing and blankets are to be distributed, they shall be distributed by a bonded quartermaster of the Army; and if rations are to be issued, they shall be issued by the regular Commissary Department of the Army.

How is the matter now managed? At these Indian agencies in the Territories you have side by side the Indian agent distributing the supplies to the Indians, and the quartermaster and the commissary distributing his supplies to the Army. Now, what say the officers of the Army, such men as Generals Sherman, Sheridan, Stanley, Schofield, and others? They all say that all these duties can be performed by the officers of the Army and thus dispense entirely with the machinery of the Indian Bureau.

Can you not see that there is no necessity for this Indian Bureau? Take the Red Cloud agency that has been talked about so much here. You have there your quartermaster. Why can he not issue the clothing that is to be distributed to the Indians, precisely as he does to the soldiers, and make his returns for that as he makes his returns for the disbursements to the soldiers of the Army? Why cannot the commissary issue rations to the Indians as he does to the soldiers? It does seem to me that all you have to do is to dispense with the services of the Indian Bureau and transfer the duties now performed by Indian agents to the officers of the Army. In the Army you have the necessary machinery in full operation. You have in the Army officers of distinguished ability and known integrity to perform these duties. Then why shall you take men from any of the walks of life and send them out there to perform these duties? It is only multiplying the means of corruption and the expenditure of money unnecessarily.

We have been told that demoralization will flow from the contact of the Army with the Indian if this transfer be made. Can it be possible that anybody on this floor is not aware of the fact that wherever you establish an Indian agency in these western Territories you at the same time establish a military post there to protect it? Then right at that very post, if the Army will demoralize the Indian by contact, you have the Army superadded to the Indian agency with its civil employés.

Is not this our experience, that the Army, both officers and privates, is fully as moral as any other class of citizens of the community of equal numbers? I will except the ministers of the gospel from that statement, whether they deserve it or not; I will give them that credit. Then what is the result? If the transfer of the Indian service to the War Department is to have any effect whatever, it will be to remove one element of demoralization from their presence.

It is a fact that none can dispute that the Army is under certain restraints of discipline which the civilians in the Indian Bureau are not subject to. By military discipline you may keep the soldiers within certain limits; but what discipline is there to keep the civil employés of the Indian Bureau within any limits whatever? I maintain, therefore, that it is idle to talk about the demoralization that will be produced by bringing the Army in contact with the Indians.

Something has been said about these Indians. I want to inform the House how these Indian agents are appointed. I will read very briefly from the testimony of one of the high priests in this department of the Government.

A certain Dr. Reid says:

We fix our eyes on a man we know to be fitted for the work and ask him to take it; or such a one applies to us; or some one applies whom we do not know. But he obtains the name of the bishop stating that he is a member of our church. We then correspond with the pastor of the church in the town where he lives, or with other persons whom we know, for we know persons in every part of the country. When our papers are ready, application and recommendations, we submit them to our committee on domestic missions. This committee consists of six or eight persons. They consider the case, recommend it to the board, and the board makes the nomination, which is sent to the Secretary of the Interior.

That is the whole programme. The Secretary of the Interior then makes the appointments. Is the country aware of the fact that the Chief Executive has turned over to men thus appointed the expenditure of millions of dollars? Will Representatives on this floor go to their constituents and tell them that they have voted to continue such a system? Whatever respect I may have for Christianity and its followers, I think that one of the most corrupt men in any community is a man who makes a cloak of religion in order to get position. What are we to say of a member of any church who seeks position in that way, and then conducts affairs in such a manner that of the supplies and money passing through his hands three-fourths are absorbed, so that upon a salary of $1,500 per annum he grows ricd? What respect, I say, can we have for such agents appointed through such agencies?

Now a great deal has been said about the humanity of this measure; and a very distinguished gentleman who has testified before the Indian commission has expressed a view somewhat at variance with that expressed by the gentleman from New York.

I read from the proceedings of the Indian commissioners:

Dr. Nicholson repeated his morning remarks as to the treatment of wild Indians by separating them from the well-disposed and peaceable.

Dr. Nicholson proposes that instead of bringing the wild Indian within the pale of civilization and under good influences he shall be separated from all influence of this kind. What else does he say?

He thought all arms and horses should be taken from them.

What effect do you think that would have on the Indians? The moral-suasion men have given the Indians arms and ammunition. Now Dr. Nicholson, one of these moral-suasion men, one of these Indian agents, proposes to take away from these wild Indians their arms and ammunition and their horses. That is how he proposes to civilize them. What else does he say?

Indians on horseback cannot be civilized.

This is the opinion of Dr. Nicholson; that you must dismount the Indian and bring him under an influence that he is bound to obey. What else does he say?

While they rove after the buffalo they are apt to raid, and it is almost impossible to prevent them except by military power.

So that, according to the opinion of Dr. Nicholson, the only way to keep the Indians from the war-path is by the military power; and that is what the Army officers say. That is what Sheridan says. That is what every distinguished officer upon the frontier who has ever met them says, that there are but two arguments that ever reach the Indian; one is hunger, which drives him to the military post, and then power, that will compel him to obey. Those are the only arguments that will reach him.

I am reminded that Dr. Nicholson belongs to the Society of the Friends and is an agent for that society. He is one of the high priests of the moral-suasion school.

Mr. LUTTRELL. He is now superintendent of Indian affairs for several districts.

Mr. SCALES. And one of the most intelligent among them.

Mr. TERRY. What further does Dr. Nicholson say?

Take them off their horses and plant them.

I am not sure that I know the meaning of this term "plant." I have heard of "planting" when you put a man under the ground. Dr. Nicholson evidently means to tie the Indian down and compel him by military power to remain upon the reservation.

I ask attention to one fact. Who are the gentlemen here in this debate so far who are the representatives and advocates of this moral-suasion idea which has had control of the Indians since the year 1849? Are they the men upon the borders, the men who have seen war, the men who have heard the war-whoop of the Indians and seen the reeking scalp, who have seen the desolation of savage warfare and the smouldering ruins of desolated homes—are they the men who are advocating the continuance in power of this Indian Bureau? No, sir; on the contrary, you find these men almost without exception advocating the transfer of the Indian Bureau to the War Department. Whom do you find to-day the representatives of this moral-suasion idea? Sir, I give their hearts credit for their kindness, but I must say I cannot trust their judgment. They are gentlemen who perhaps never heard a war-whoop or saw a reeking scalp. They are gentlemen who if they were ever in the Indian territory passed through it on the cars under the protection of civilized life. They are men who have spent their lives in their offices or in their libraries or lecturing to the civilized people of the North. This same class of men, headed by the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] and the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. SEELYE,] who have addressed us, are the men who are here advocating this moral-suasion rule which, as I have stated, has prevailed since the year 1849.

I cannot go into the figures, and will briefly say that to my mind these propositions are clearly demonstrated by the testimony which has been taken: first, that it is in the interest of peace that this transfer should be made; secondly, that it is in the interest of economy, and the officers of the Army are the fitest, the most responsible, the most experienced men to whom this authority can be confided. I would be glad to go over it to show the amount of expenditure under this Indian Bureau and the amount of economy which can be practiced. General Sheridan and other officers of distinguished rank tell us they will commence with an economy of three and a half million of dollars in the estimates of the War Department as a mere beginning.

We have been talking about this thing of purchasing supplies for the use of the Army. Do you not know as business men, where the Quartermaster-General of the Army has to purchase blankets and clothing, not only for the Army but for the Indians, he can make more judicious contracts than with two officers competing in the same market for the same supplies? Do you not know when the Commissary-General is in the market to buy rations for the Army and for the Indians, and having no competitor in the Indian Bureau, he can buy more economically than when you have the two separate Departments competing for the same article? Sir, I rely upon the testimony of the distinguished gentlemen who have testified before the committee to establish the fact that the Quartermaster-General and the Commissary-General do make the most judicious purchases for the Government that can be made by any officers whatever.

Upon these general principles I am most decidedly in favor of the transfer of Indian affairs from the Interior to the War Department. But I wish now to go somewhat into details upon the several questions involved in this discussion. I will first call attention to the estimates and appropriations annually made for the Indian service and which is disbursed through the Indian Bureau. These data are taken from official documents:

Amount appropriated for fiscal year ending June 30, 1875	$5,359,898 18
Amount estimated for fiscal year ending June 30, 1876	6,851,681 96
Amount appropriated for fiscal year ending June 30, 1876	5,003,922 61
Difference	1,847,759 35
Amount estimated for fiscal year 1876–'77	5,787,795 64

What the appropriations for the fiscal year 1876–'77 will be remains to be seen.

By reference to the foregoing figures we find the estimates for the year 1875–'76 to exceed the estimates for 1876–'77 by $1,063,883.22, and the estimates for 1875–'76 exceed the appropriations for that year by $1,847,759.35. But to the appropriation of this year should be added $150,000, the amount of a deficiency bill for the Red Cloud agency which recently passed this House, making the true difference in fact between estimates and appropriations of $1,697,759.35. How it is that the estimates and appropriations are growing less in the last few years I am not able to explain, but the circumstance suggests the theory that this result has been induced by the anticipation of this movement to transfer. And even if this bill shall not pass, yet if we keep the appropriations upon this downward plane of reduction the time and labor of this discussion will not have been lost to the country, but be productive of the saving of millions.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. SEELYE] puts the expenses of the Indian Bureau here in Washington at $69,880 per year. To this he should have added $8,000 appropriated for contingent expenses, making the expenses in fact for 1875–'76 the sum of $77,880, and the estimates for 1876–'77 to be $35,520. But this is only a small part of the savings we propose to effect by the transfer. The following figures will show the estimates of the expenses of the Indian Bureau and its agencies, the most of which can be saved:

Office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs:
Salaries, Office of Commissioner of Indian Affairs	$75,520 00
Contingent expenses Office of Commissioner of Indian Affairs	10,000 00
Indian service, current and contingent expenses:
Pay of superintendents and agents	108,000 00
Pay of special agents	12,000 00
Pay of clerks to superintendents	4,600 00
Pay of interpreters	35,700 00
Pay of Indian inspectors	9,000 00
Traveling expenses of Indian inspectors	6,000 00
Buildings at agencies, and repairs	20,000 00
Vaccination of Indians	1,000 00
Presents and provisions for Indians	5,000 00
Contingencies, Indian Department	50,000 00
Total	236,820 00
Expenses of Indian commissions	15,000 00
Grand total	251,820 00

THE EXPEDIENCY OF THE TRANSFER.

The inquiry has been propounded to a number of the most distinguished and experienced officers of the United States Army as to the propriety of transferring the Indian Bureau from the Interior to the War Department, and among some sixty-five responses there has been the most remarkable concurrence of opinion in favor of the transfer, not only upon the score of economy, but also upon that of expediency and humanity.

General Sherman has given the following very satisfactory reasons in favor of the transfer, and his rank in the Army and experience in the public service must be my excuse for making so lengthy a quotation from his letter:

The great mass of the Indians of our country are now located on reservations, and are entitled to receive annuities, goods, and food, according to treaties made long ago, and for the faithful execution of which treaties the faith of the Government is pledged. These Indians vary widely in their habits, and should be dealt with accordingly. The present Army is now stationed in small detachments at military posts, chiefly at or near these reservations, to keep the peace between these Indians and their white neighbors, between whom there have always existed a conflict of interest and natural hostility. Now, as the military authorities are already charged with the duty of keeping the peace, I am sure they will be the better able to accomplish this end if intrusted with the issue of the annuities, whether of money, food, or clothing. Each military post has its quartermaster and commissary, who can, without additional cost, make the issues directly to the Indians and account for them; and the commanding officer can exercise all the supervision now required of the civil agent in a better manner, because he has soldiers to support his authority, and can easily anticipate and prevent the minor causes which have so often resulted in Indian wars. In like manner our country is divided into military departments and divisions, commanded by experienced general officers named by the President, who can fulfill all the functions now committed to Indian superintendents; and these, too, have near them inspectors who can promptly investigate and prevent the incipient steps that are so apt to result in conflict and war.

Therefore I firmly believe that the Army now occupies the positions and relations to the great mass of the Indian tribes that will better enable the Government to execute any line of policy it may deem wise and proper than by any possible system that can be devised with civil agents. The Indians, more especially those who occupy the vast region west of the Mississippi from the Rio Grande to the British line, are natural warriors, and have always looked to the military rather than to the civil agents of Government for protection or punishment; and, were the troops to be withdrawn, instant war would result. If it be the policy of the Government, as I believe it is, to save the remnant of these tribes, it can only be accomplished by and through military authority. These will obey orders, and enforce any line of policy that may be prescribed for them by law or regulation. Sooner or later these Indians, say the Sioux, Cheyennes, Arapahoes, Kiowas, and Comanches must be made self-supporting. Farming and the mechanic arts are so obnoxious to their nature and traditions, that any hope of their becoming an agricultural people can hardly be expected in our day, though there are many individual exceptions; but the Indians themselves see that the buffalo, elk, antelope, deer, and large game are rapidly disappearing, and that they must raise cattle and sheep, or starve. This, in my judgment, is the proper direction in which to turn their attention, and an excellent beginning has been made with the tribes in New Mexico, and more recently with the Kiowas and Comanches, near Fort Sill. This has been done by the influence of the Army stationed in their midst, who are, in my opinion, now and always have been, the best friends the Indians have had. The idea which prevails with some, that the Army wants war with the Indians, is not true. Such wars bring exposure, toil, risk, and privations, with no honor. Therefore it (the Army) naturally wants peace, and very often has prevented wars by its mere presence; and if intrusted with the exclusive management and control of the annuities and supplies as well as force, I think Indian wars will cease, and the habits of the Indians will be gradually molded into a most necessary and useful branch of industry: the rearing of sheep, cattle, horses, &c. In some localities they may possibly be made farmers.

On this subject General Sheridan, the second in rank in the Army, says:

I have always been in favor of the transfer of the Indian Bureau to the War Department. It would relieve the military establishment of great expense and much annoyance. We could diminish the number of posts and be enabled to establish new agencies, when required, at posts already established, instead of being required as we now are to establish a new post for every new agency. This transfer would put an end to the conflict of authority occurring constantly between Indian agents and Army officers, and would also relieve the Government of very much of the expenses of the Indian Bureau, such as pay of agents, &c.

General Hancock says that the transfer would be a decided advantage to the country and to the Indian.

General Schofield is even more emphatic in his indorsement of the transfer. He says:

The transfer of the Indian Bureau to the War Department would undoubtedly result in economy and honest administration, and would be wholly beneficial to the public service, provided too much of the labor of the Bureau be not imposed upon the Army proper.

I especially commend the views of General McDowell on this subject. He does not approve of the transfer of the Indian Bureau as such from one Department of the Government to another, but is in favor of an abolition of the Indian Bureau entirely and of transferring the control and management of the Indians to the War Department. He says:

If the Indian Bureau is merely to be transferred, and not re-organized, I cannot see that it will make any difference whether it is under the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Interior. It was formerly under the War Department, and to put it back again, allowing it to continue as it is, would produce no good results. Things would remain as they now are, being only affected by the personal character of the Cabinet officer who might be in charge. It was formerly under the Secretary of War, and there were as many charges and as grave ones against it then as now.

If, however, with the transfer of the Indian affairs, you will re-organize the Bureau by substituting commanding officers of posts for Indian agents and military district and department commanders for superintendents of Indian affairs; by having the officers of the Quartermaster's, Commissary, and Medical Departments of the Army make all contracts for Indian supplies, transport, care for, issue, and account for them; by having all payments to, or on account of, Indians made by the Pay Department of the Army, and by having an officer detailed by the War Department to act as Commissioner of Indian Affairs, I am of opinion it would be a good thing for the Indians, the Treasury, and the country, and a very disagreeable and thankless one for the Army.

However, the machinery which would accomplish this is already in existence for the needs of the Army, and would require but slight modification to put it in working order to perform this additional duty.

One of the great advantages of such a system would be to take this Indian question—the administrative part of it—out of politics, and correct the frauds on the Indians, either in the original contracts for supplies or in the distribution of them, which has been for generations a reproach to every administration of our national affairs.

General Terry is decidedly of opinion that the Bureau of Indian Affairs should be transferred to the War Department.

General Ord, whose long service on the frontier and experience in Indian affairs entitle his opinion to great weight, is very decidedly in favor of the transfer. Upon examination he said:

Question. What is your opinion about the transfer of the Indian Bureau to the War Department as a measure of policy or economy?

Answer. I think it would be an advantage to the Indians and tend to maintain peaceable relations with the Indians.

Q. Do you think the transfer should be such as to put the entire control of the whole Indian matter into the possession of the War Department?

A. I think to have it mixed would have been worse than at present. Each Department would be able to accuse the other of short-comings. It ought to be entirely transferred, and, as far as practicable, under the control of permanent officers of the Army. It was formerly under control of the War Department, and officers were sometimes assigned to temporary duty in the Indian Bureau as ex officio agents. My father was Indian agent for fifteen or sixteen years, under the War Department nearly all the time.

Q. Tell us briefly what some of the advantages would be over the present system by the transfer of the control of the Indians entirely to the War Department.

A. Promptness in the delivery of rations and supplies. We have to deliver them now to troops in the immediate vicinity of the agents, and the same machinery, in a measure, could do both.

The reduction of the number of employés. A very large reduction would occur. The clerical duties here in Washington and at department headquarters performed by general-service men would be very materially reduced.

Another advantage would be maintaining peaceable relations, because, if we had to fight the Indians, we should want to do it as rapidly as possible. If we want to maintain peaceable relations, we ought to know the Indians thoroughly in time of peace and put the best men in as agents, men who would do their whole duty. The Indians as a rule respect force. They respect men who can successfully enforce the orders they have given. I have found wherever I have been that the military were successful with the Indians in California and Arizona, and the Indians were very well satisfied. When General Crook took charge in Arizona he had no trouble. I myself have gone right amid the wild Indians at war. I directed the establishment of the two posts spoken of in the testimony, and know what they cost. I had some fourteen companies together up there to move the Indians, just as winter was coming on; it begins there in October. I could not get the Department to tell me when they were going to move the agencies until the last minute. It cost the Government between $50,000 and $60,000 to move the troops and establish the posts.

General Augur says:

The Indian Bureau could be transferred, in my opinion, with great benefit to the Indians and to the public service.

General Crook thinks it would be "economical to the Government and promote efficiency."

General Grover approves the transfer, "both as a matter of economy and efficiency."

Colonel Mackenzie thinks the transfer would be a great thing for the Indian, but not for the Army. He says:

Should the Government propose to conduct its Indian affairs without reference to political party, its transfer to the War Department would be very advantageous to the Indians, and no particular disadvantage to the Army.

Colonel Gibbons says:

The question in regard to the transfer of the Indian Bureau to the War Department is one of long standing; and from my experience under both systems, the present one and the one when the War Department had charge of the Indian matters, I do not hesitate to express the opinion that if it is desirable that the Indians should receive the supplies set apart for them by the Government, and the bounty of the Government be made use of to keep the various tribes in order, the matter should be placed in the hands of that Department which is able to hold rewards for good conduct in one hand and the means of punishing crimes in the other. The War Department possesses the requisite organization, which extends in all its branches to the extreme frontiers, and directly in contact with the Indian tribes. By means of this organization the supplies voted by Congress can be distributed through responsible officers, in the same way that Army supplies are, and the receipt of them be made to depend upon the good conduct of the tribes, and in this way nearly the whole of the additional expenses of the Indian Department can be saved, to leave out of question entirely the increased security both to the Indians and the Government. It is popular error to suppose that the Army officers, as a class, desire this increased responsibility; and if they get it, that the Indians will be treated worse than they are now. If there is any question susceptible of demonstration, it is that the Army desires peace with the Indians. In war with them there is but little glory, and no reward except the receipt of empty brevets, which carry with them neither pay nor increased consideration, since the recipient is not even permitted to make use of his honorary title.

Colonel De Trobriand, a name associated with recent southern troubles, and therefore somewhat familiar to southern ears, expresses his opinion freely and fully on the subject, as follows:

I have no doubt that such a measure would be both eminently proper and beneficial. The present Bureau of Indian Affairs is a Pandora's box, whence endless evils issued and are still issuing. The greater part by far of our difficulties with Indians arise from the shameless way in which they are cheated out of the most of the annuities of all kinds which they are supposed to receive from the Government, and for which the people pay in full. It would be a great error to believe that, because they do not know how to read and write, those Indians are unable to keep good accounts and to figure exactly to what extent they are cheated. I have heard Indian chiefs who could tell me how many sacks of flour, how many flannel shirts, how many blankets, how many knives, &c., had been taken away from the agency where they had been stored for them; on what nights these goods had been loaded on wagons, the number of which they stated; to what distant posts the stolen articles had been sent, there to be sold in retail by traders to some other tribes. Many times they asked me why I could not take control of the distribution of their goods among them, unable to understand how their Great Father in Washington, who kept so many warriors, could not secure them their rights, and save them from being plundered year after year by those very people who were sent especially for their aid and protection.

The general corruption which prevails in Indian affairs is a matter of public notoriety, and has been, in some cases, demonstrated by irrefutable evidence. The above is therefore stated, not to criminate anybody in particular, but only to show that I speak of my personal knowledge, not from hearsay. As all efforts have been unavailing to remedy those evils with the present organization of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, it has become necessary to try some different system to realize the reforms so much needed, and it does not appear that there is any other which could attain that end but the transfer of the Indian Bureau to the War Department. The administration of Indian affairs could not be trusted to better hands. The officers of the Army do not desire it. They understand well that such a transfer will bring to those who will be concerned in it much more trouble and labor than credit or compensation. But their devotion and their patriotism would make them accept their new responsibilities and perform these new duties in the same spirit and with the same efficiency which have maintained so high the integrity and the honor of the United States Army.

To this I will add the opinion of General Jeff. C. Davis:

The management of the Indians is better done by the War Department. It was formerly a part of the duties of this Department to keep peace with the Indian tribes on our frontier; it is a difficult job, and requires the presence of soldiers at all times, often the vigorous use of them; the Indians respect and will obey no authority of the Government not enforced by the military; this is seen every day on our frontier. The management of the Indians by the Interior Department has been a failure.

The Indian Bureau has of recent years become a synonym for rascality and corruption. I do not think, however, the officers of the Army, as a general thing, covet the responsibility this change would place upon them, but they can and will, with proper encouragement, perform the task with more efficiency, honesty, and with less hypocritical cant about Christianizing and civilizing the Indians than is now done. The military can teach the Indian how to lay down the rifle and take up agricultural implements and use them; this done, and our honest and sincere Christian workers will see to it that civilization and Christianization follow right along as the savage is prepared for these blessings.

Some sixty-odd officers of the Army were either examined in person before the Committee on Military Affairs or answered interrogatories propounded to them, and all except two or three approve of the transfer. But there are some who dissent, and notably General O. O. Howard and Surgeon-General Barnes.

General Howard, who is somewhat known to the country as president of Howard University, located in this city, has given his opinion on this subject, and I will do him the justice of giving his reasons for "the faith that is in him." He says:

I would not advise the transfer of the Indian Bureau to the War Department for two reasons: First, it turns the attention of the Army from its legitimate work; second, it will subject the Army to the usual public denunciation directed toward Indian Bureau agents, and be constantly detrimental to the reputation, and finally injurious to the morale of the Army. I do think that officers can be selected from the Army who would do the duty with zeal, efficiency, and probably with more general satisfaction to the public than the Indian agents, who are less well paid and further removed from co-equal associates.

He seems to have two reasons; and it strikes me that the very feebleness of the arguments advanced in support of his opinion re-acts and becomes an argument in support of the scheme. He says:

It turns the attention of the Army from its legitimate work.

What is more legitimate for our Army than to stand guard over the Indians and to protect the lives and property of our people upon the frontiers from the attacks and depredations of the savages? His second reason is that—

It would subject the Army to the usual public denunciation directed toward Indian Bureau agents.

Here is an explicit admission that the agents of this Indian Bureau are subject to "usual public denunciation," and in the absence of any proof to the contrary will be accepted by the people as a confession of the truth of the bad estimation in which the agents of that Bureau are held, and to some extent of the corruption prevailing among them. This distinguished witness further adds that the transfer would "be constantly detrimental to the reputation and finally injurious to the morale of the Army." This can scarcely be accepted as an argument; it is mere opinion, unsupported by a single reason. And it seems to me that he concedes fully as much as he contends for when he admits that Army officers can be selected who would do their duty "with zeal, efficiency, and probably with more general satisfaction to the public than the Indian agents."

Surgeon-General Barnes says that he is "decidedly against the propriety or advisability of such transfer," but he does not deign to give a reason for this very decided opinion. Now, upon the weight of mere opinion, persons who have not had the opportunity to become informed by observation and experience cannot fail to be influenced in their action by the opinions of such overwhelming numbers. On the one hand we have the opinions of a large number of the most distinguished and experienced officers in the public service. On the other hand we have the feeble reasoning of one and the mere ipse dixit of another officer, who do not seem ever to have enjoyed opportunities for acquiring personal knowledge on this subject.

I take it, therefore, that upon the question of the expediency of the transfer the weight of authority is with the friends of the bill now under consideration, and that some sound reasons either of humanity or of economy must be found to turn the scale against the passage of the bill. An examination of the testimony taken upon this bill I think will satisfy those who are seeking information to guide them that this transfer is in the interest of humanity and of civilization.

The transfer will tend to stop Indian hostilities.

The reasoning of the officers on this subject is perfectly satisfactory and must impress all impartial readers as true. It is contrary to our experience of human action to believe that the officers and men who have to do the fighting will with reckless disregard of their own safety and comfort stir up strife with the Indian. Indian wars mean untold hardships, exposures, and dangers, with but little honor to be won. These officers therefore are to be believed when they say they want peace with the Indian. When war comes the soldier goes to the front, but the Indian agent, who perhaps has fomented the trouble, goes to the rear.

General Sheridan says:

It is my belief that if the Indians had been in the hands of the military, there never would have been any Indian wars of any consequence. There would be a power over them which would make them respect persons and property, and they would respect that power. The attempt is now being made to govern these Indians without exercising any power over them at all, by simple suasion, while at the same time we acknowledge the necessity of having the severest laws for the government of intelligent white people.

Question. Have you, within the last few years, had frequent meetings and conversations with the Indians?

Answer. Yes, sir.

Q. Then state whether you think they would be better satisfied with such a change.

A. I am convinced the Indians would be better satisfied. Where the military is stationed with them, we see a constant respect for it. The treatment of the Indians by the officers and men, in their intercourse, is always gentle. Sometimes, of course, when we are obliged to make war, we have to be rough; and in order to make war successfully, we are obliged to resort, to some extent, to the rules of warfare which they adopt.

That this transfer would tend to peace with the Indians General Ord heartily indorses. In his examination before the Committee on Military Affairs he said:

Question. Do you not think there would be less liability of war if the War Department had entire control?

Answer. Yes, sir; there would be scarcely any liability. I have some little knowledge of the Modoc war, Florida wars, Rogue River war, and other wars. I have been in some half dozen of them. They nearly all originated from mismanagement of the Indians. I believe the Modoc war originated because certain parties wanted to get possession of the Indian lands, and wanted to move the Indians down to where the Klamaths were. The Klamaths were a large tribe on the lower river, and outnumbered the Modocs, probably twenty to one. The Modocs refused to go; they were a little band, and they had a place where they had some game, and it just suited them. They did not want to go to such a remote distance. The agent asked for a military guard to take the Indians down. The guard furnished was entirely insufficient, being but a handful of men. They had already had two or three engagements with the troops, which the Indian agent did not probably know. If the agent had been a military man he would have known that it would not do to undertake to move them with a handful of men. The Modocs did not want to go to the Klamaths, because the Klamaths, being a very large and overbearing tribe, would not let them have any show in the distribution of supplies. The Indians made some representations in regard to it, but they all seemed to be ignored by the Indian Department. The Department seemed to take it for granted that all that was needed to force them to go was a military guard. The handful of men were attacked and driven back. The agent asked for a little larger force, which was still insufficient, and found difficulty—the Modocs taking the war-path, as they say. Whereas the difficulty could have been avoided if there had been a military man in control, and he would probably have had a sufficient military force immediately at hand.

Q. As a general thing, do the Indians generally not have less confidence in the civil than the military?

A. They have more confidence in the military than the civil authorities. They say, "Here these men tell us this, that, and the other; that we don't get our rations because the roads are bad. But the soldiers get their rations." They come in to get supplies and tell their story. Red Cloud came in to the commanding officer's quarters and stated this through him to me, "because," he said, "you will tell the President what I will say. We haven't got what we were promised, and haven't been treated properly." Spotted Tail came down to see General Sheridan when on his hunt, and told him in my hearing what his troubles were, and asked him to tell the Great Father. General Sheridan told him he would do so, and he did tell him directly. And so it is, time and again; they come to us and appeal to us for assistance, but we have to tell them we are powerless and cannot do anything for them.

Colonel Clitz, of the Tenth Infantry, says:

To transfer back the Indian Bureau to the War Department, I believe, has become a necessity in order to prevent in the near future a big Indian war. I believe that if commanding officers of military posts in the Indian country are made Indian agents ex officio, with their subordinate officers as subagents, the Bureau will be more economically administered, the Indians would be better fed and cared for, would become better acquainted with the officers of the Army and the officers with them. I believe officers in authority over them would use their power mildly but firmly, and not make them any promises that they did not know they could carry out. I believe the Indians would be contented, and therefore peaceable, and at any rate would have a wholesome dread of the officer who had it in his power to punish as well as reward.

On this subject I will only quote from one other officer, for it seems to me that the addition of the opinions of other officers could not add much to the weight of the opinions I have quoted. General Sykes says:

The War Department should have exclusive control of both. It seems superfluous to repeat that the Indian respects only the power of hunger and the power of the sword; and it is notorious, outside of the "Indian ring," that the word of an officer of the Army will be trusted by an Indian beyond that of any other white man. It arises from two causes: the one, that an officer rarely makes a promise to them that he cannot perform; the other, that he represents the force, which, to an Indian, appeals more than any other to the instincts of his own existence. I have had considerable experience with a large tribe of Indians on a military reservation in New Mexico, (Navajoes,) and had very little trouble with them. I carried out the promises of the Government in their behalf, and rarely called upon them to do an act of justice which they were not prompt to recognize and enforce. Most of our trouble with the Indians would cease were their annuities honestly distributed, and treaties with them faithfully carried out. Everybody knows this who know anything on the subject.

General Sanborn, who is a gentleman of intelligence, and served many years on the frontiers, but now in civil life, says that by the transfer—

Active campaigns in the field, which now occur every two or three years, would be entirely avoided. I have no doubt but that the entire expenses of these campaigns would be avoided. If the Army had full control the Indians never would be encouraged to resist the power and authority of the Government to such an extent as to take up arms against our people at all, and in that view comes the saving. On an average it would amount to from six to ten millions a year. I am confident that from 1860 to 1870 the expenses of the military establishment were increased annually on account of our Indian difficulties to the amount of ten millions on an average, or one hundred millions during the decade. This estimate includes the campaign in Minnesota, the campaign in New Mexico against the Navajoes, and the campaign on the Arkansas, closed out by myself in 1865, in doing which I had under my command seven thousand mounted men and one or two regiments of infantry, and they were supported at an expense that was really alarming; corn at many of those posts being purchased at the time I arrived there and took command at $8 a bushel, an expense so great that I concluded it was better to procure a remount every ninety days than to try to keep horses alive by purchasing forage at those rates. I can but consider it, after the study I have given it, as one of the most perfectly one-sided questions connected with the public service as to where that Bureau should be.

It seems to me that the only remaining question involved in this cause is that of economy. Let us again appeal to the opinions of gentlemen competent to speak.

ECONOMY OF THE TRANSFER.

The opinion of the Army officers is not only emphatic as to the expediency and humanity of the transfer, but also as to its economy; that the transfer will save millions of dollars to the already tax-ridden people. General Sheridan says:

Question. You think that the expense to the Government in looking after its Indian affairs would be much less by reason of the transfer?

Answer. To come squarely at the subject, should the Indian Bureau be transferred to the military, I have not the least doubt that the Secretary of War would modify his estimates for the coming fiscal year to the amount of $3,500,000, and this will only be a commencement. I have the assurance of the Secretary for this reduction.

By Mr. COOK:

Q. In addition to getting rid of the expense of Indian commissioners, &c.?

A. Yes, sir; I am speaking of reduction in our own expenses, not what may be saved in Indian affairs. The reduction above referred to, I wish it to be understood, does not embrace the reduction which can be made in the Ordnance, Engineer, Subsistence Departments, &c.; it means the saving we can make in the disbursements through the Quartermaster's Department; and I repeat the sum, $3,500,000.

General Sanborn says:

My belief is that it will save to the Government, in all branches of the service, about ten millions a year on an average, taking a decade together. One year you might not save more than three or four or five millions, and another year you will probably save twenty-five or thirty millions.

Upon this question I might quote many others, but I shall content myself by an extract from the deposition of Dr. Burleigh, who has spent a great many years among the Indians, and was four or five years in charge of the Yankton Sioux in Dakota. He was asked:

Question. Do the agents ever turn over beeves on the foot to the Indians so that they can drive them off?

Answer. Frequently; at least I think so. I have looked at this question very closely and have given it a great deal of study, and my impression is that the transfer of the Indian Bureau to the War Department, by dispensing with civilians whose duties can be performed just as well by officers of the Army—my impression is that the saving in that alone will be $1,500,000. My impression is, (and I think I have seen enough of these matters in the last fifteen years to enable me to come to a correct conclusion,) that it will save in supplies furnished that never reach the Indians at all, fully $500,000; that makes two millions. It will save in the administration of the Army directly, by enabling them to bring the Indians down to navigable highways where supplies can be distributed without the monstrously expensive transportation that is now necessary, fully $3,000,000, making $5,000,000. Take, for instance, the Red Cloud and Spotted Tail agencies, the two largest agencies on the continent, I believe; it cost as much to haul the flour from the point where it is landed on the Missouri to those agencies as it costs to purchase the flour. The distance of those agencies from the river is about three hundred miles and they are in a poor country, whereas the country on the river is pretty good.

In addition to that, our Indian wars for the last twenty years have cost $120,000,000, over $6,000,000 a year, and we are just as sure to be afflicted again with that enormous expenditure as we have been in the past if we continue the present system. Therefore you may add $6,000,000 to the $5,000,000, which will make a saving annually of $11,000,000 by turning the Indians over to the War Department. I think that our Indian wars have been the direct results of the miserable policy that has prevailed under the civil administration of Indian affairs. Now we have the officers already paid for doing all the duties that are discharged at present by the agents. The surgeon at the post can prescribe for the Indians, and the labor that is to be paid for now can just as well be performed by the soldiers who will be called in at the military posts to aid the quartermaster and the commissary in making their issues. Of course you have to have a head farmer, a head blacksmith, a head carpenter, and where there is a mill, a miller, but all the balance of the labor can be done just as well by the Indians, provided you have force enough at the posts to enable the agent to compel obedience to his orders.

ECONOMY OF TRANSPORTATION.

It is maintained by some of the witnesses whose testimony has been taken that there will be great economy in the transportation of supplies if a transfer shall be made. I will make an extract from a report from the Quartermaster's Department, made in March last, showing the rate of transportation now paid by the Indian Bureau and approximate estimates for the same transportation by the Quartermaster's Department:

Comparative statement of the contract rates for transportatian of Indian goods during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and the rates paid by the Quartermaster's Department for similar transportation, (approximate.)

From—	To—	Rate per 100 pounds.	Rate per 100 pounds paid by Quartermaster's Department.
New York	Los Pinos agency, Colorado	$9 00	$4 50
Philadelphia	..... do	9 00	4 50
Baltimore	..... do	9 00	4 50
Saint Louis	..... do	9 00	3 75
New York	Fort Defiance, New Mexico	10 50	5 50
Philadelphia	..... do	10 50	5 50
Baltimore	..... do	10 50	5 50
Saint Louis	..... do	10 50	4 75

Comparative statement of the contract rates for transportation of Indian goods during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, &c.—Continued.

From—	To—	Rate per 100 pounds.	Rate per 100 pounds paid by Quartermaster's Department.
New York	Camp Apache, Arizona	$11 00	$6 80
Do	Chihuahua agency, Arizona	11 00	6 80
Baltimore	Camp Apache, Arizona	11 00	6 80
Do	Chihuahua agency	11 00	6 80
Philadelphia	..... do	11 00	6 80
Do	Camp Apache, Arizona	11 00	6 80
New York	San Carlos agency, Arizona	12 00	7 50
Philadelphia	..... do	12 00	7 50
Baltimore	..... do	12 00	7 50
New York	Sioux City, Iowa	75	1 02
Philadelphia	..... do	75	1 02
Baltimore	..... do	75	1 02
Do	Omaha, Nebraska	60	1 05
New York	..... do	60	1 05
Philadelphia	..... do	60	1 05
Do	Green River, Wyoming	3 30	3 15
New York	..... do	3 30	3 15
Baltimore	..... do	3 30	3 16
Do	Kansas City, Missouri	50	99
New York	..... do	50	99
Philadelphia	..... do	50	99
Chicago, Illinois	Cheyenne, Wyoming	1 05	1 70
Do	Sidney, Nebraska	1 05	1 65
Sioux City, Iowa	..... do	1 31	1 47
Do	Cheyenne, Wyoming	1 31	1 47
Saint Paul, Minnesota	..... do	1 76	1 47
Do	Sidney, Nebraska	1 76	1 47
New York	Shoshone and Bannack agency	5 80	4 40
Philadelphia	..... do	5 80	4 40
Baltimore	..... do	5 80	4 40
Chicago, Illinois	..... do	5 45	4 59
Saint Paul, Minnesota	..... do	5 40	4 59
Sioux City, Iowa	..... do	5 10	4 29
Bryan, Wyoming	..... do	2 20	1 79
Green River, Wyoming	..... do	2 20	1 79
New York	Red Cloud agency	2 70	3 25
Philadelphia	..... do	2 70	3 25
Baltimore	..... do	2 70	3 25
Do	Spotted Tail agency	2 75	3 43
New York	..... do	2 75	3 43
Philadelphia	..... do	2 75	3 43
Cheyenne, Wyoming	Red Cloud agency	1 65	1 56
Sidney, Nebraska	..... do	1 66	1 08
Do	Spotted Tail agency	1 75	1 26

An examination of the foregoing extract is sufficient to show the relevant costs of transportation, and it will be seen the percentage of saving is greatly in favor of the Quartermaster's Department, and would result in the saving of millions of dollars.

I have thus shown by the testimony of witnesses whose statements are entitled to full faith and credit, and who have enjoyed ample opportunities to form correct opinions on this important subject, that by the transfer of Indian affairs from the Interior to the War Department there will be a great saving of money, and that it will tend to the preservation of peace between the whites and the Indians.

That there has been gross mismanagement, to use no stronger expression, in Indian affairs by the agents is clearly shown, and that notwithstanding this Bureau has had charge of the Indians since 1849, yet among the wild tribes but little progress in the arts of civilization has been made, and in very many of the tribes no progress whatever has been made. The moral-suasion theory of the peace men has had a fair trial and has signally failed. They have failed to civilize and Christianize the Indian, and they have failed to prevent the frequent and bloody wars which have scourged the frontiers. Even admit that there has been some improvement in some of the border tribes, that improvement is not commensurate with the cost. "The game don't pay for the candle." Believing that better results can be attained by the transfer in civilization, in economy, and in the interests of peace, I am heartily for the transfer; and it is for the representatives of the people to say whether they will try to save some $5,000,000 annually, preserve the peace, and do at least as much in the cause of humanity and civilization by passing the pending bill.

Mr. WILSHIRE. Mr. Chairman, I arise to oppose the bill reported by the majority of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and to advocate the establishment of a separate Department of Indian Affairs.

The question presented is one of the greatest moment, one that should not be disposed of without the fullest discussion and consideration. It has been the subject of serious consideration by our ablest statesmen, and received the sympathies of our most earnest Christian philanthropists since the organization of the Government. Various plans have been adopted and put into operation, among them recently that of civilizing and educating the Indians; which seems to be the correct one.

It is admitted by all that until the uncivilized Indians are brought up from their wild and savage condition to a higher state of civilization and moral improvement they will continue to be in the future, as they have been in the past, a source of expense and annoyance, and as the march of civilized settlement progresses, which is inevitable, the expense of the management of Indian affairs will necessarily increase until they are educated and civilized.

If we desire to reduce the cost of conducting the management of our Indian affairs, we must adopt and carry out in good faith a policy that will result in their civilization. To do this will doubtless cost a large sum of money annually, until the work of civilization has entered upon the road to certain success; but I submit that it is infinitely better that we begin at once and bring it to a speedy and successful termination.

It is a mistaken idea that it will cost less to manage the Indians under the War Department than under the management of a properly organized civil department, as I shall endeavor to show.

Every one acquainted with the former managements, first by the War and last by the Interior Department, and the condition and location of the Indians now and before 1849, knows perfectly well that when the management of Indian affairs was under the control of the War Department very little of that vast country lying west of the Missouri and Upper Mississippi Rivers was occupied by white settlers. The various tribes of Indians had undisputed possession of all that country, which supplied them with abundant game for their support. There was no occasion for them to ask for or receive food and clothing from the Government until the advance of white settlements westward, which are now located all over that whole country, extending from the Missouri River to the Pacific States, driving away or killing off the game, the Indians' means of support.

Being thus deprived of the means of support nature had provided for them; being thus disturbed in the possession of the country they and their ancestors had enjoyed for centuries, and being brought in contact with those seeking to acquire, and who have in some instances acquired the most valuable portions of their heritage, it very naturally aroused in them a feeling of animosity and distrust against white men which not unfrequently ripened into hostilities.

This condition of things made it necessary for the Government, in addition to its former Indian charge, to extend its management of Indian affairs over this vast territory, embracing many large tribes of wild Indians. This was necessary to protect the pioneer settlements in those Territories and establish and maintain peaceable relations with those Indians, which was absolutely essential to the settlement and development of the rich and varied resources of those Territories that have since contributed so largely to the general wealth of the whole country.

This, sir, accounts for the difference in the cost of the management of Indian affairs at the present time and for the past few years, being greater than when managed by the War Department.

I do not agree with the gentlemen who advocate the transfer, that it will save a large sum to the Treasury. On the contrary, I think I will show before I am through that it will be vastly more expensive. Neither can I agree that all the honor, integrity, intelligence, and capability of this country is confined to officers of the Army.

I believe that men equally educated in civil life, trained to civil thought, and accustomed to civil pursuits are quite as honest, capable, and trustworthy, and much better suited to manage civil affairs, than those whose whole education was to teach them how to order and obey, and whose only idea of government is but the exercise of arbitrary power.

Sir, I believe in a reasonable army, but I want it to be but an army; and to be used only to defend the nation in time of war, and to aid the civil authorities in the exercise of civil power in times of peace, and then only when the civil authorities are unable to execute civil process for the protection of the life, the liberty, the property of the citizen.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPARKS] informs us that about sixty Army officers have declared in favor of the transfer, besides a number of citizens. He does not show that the Indians favor it. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] refers to an argument of Colonel Boudinot, a Cherokee, favoring the transfer. Sir, Colonel Boudinot is one of my most intimate personal friends, a gentleman in every sense of the word, a man of experience and information and entitled to great consideration; but, sir, his opinions are but his individual opinions; while to show that the Indians do not desire the transfer I will read from the protest of the delegates of the five civilized tribes the following:

> War, no matter who with, is not civilization any more than a counter-irritation on the human system is the human system; though sometimes temporarily necessary, it is not long to be continued. It is not used in health, nor should the military be used in time of peace.
>
> Your Army authority is always withdrawn from any troubled section of the country so soon as peace and quiet are restored, and the people left to civil control and pursuits. Why not continue to apply the same principle to the Indians when, as you are informed by the Indian Bureau, they are at peace?
>
> The idleness that is unavoidable about a frontier post, and the drinking and consequent immoralities that are too common there, are not conducive to the industry and sobriety of the Indians near them.
>
> The difference in degrees of civilization of the Indian nations and tribes demands your closest consideration. It is little encouragement to those who have made progress in civilization, education, and industry if we are to be turned back into the hands of the military as violators of law are to the police We earnestly hope that Congress will not treat us with so little consideration.

Sir, that is the voice of thousands of Indians, spoken not by a member of one of the tribes, but by the duly-accredited representatives, sent here not only to look after the interest of their tribes but to represent the wishes of the Indians in matters of this kind. These delegates are intelligent men, many of them the peers of any man on this floor. They are here in person to bear testimony to the fact that Indians can be civilized and educated and rendered capable of becoming good and useful citizens.

The voice of these Indians, brought as they have been up to a high degree of culture and usefulness through the process of civilization, pleading the cause of their race, should burn its way into the minds and conscience of every member of this House.

They are men that know whereof they speak, and truly represent the interests and desires of the Indians. I ask gentlemen on this floor to ponder well the question before utterly disregarding an appeal so intelligently and earnestly made as this.

Mr. Chairman, the most astonishing thing to me is that my democratic friends in this House are the advocates of conferring civil power upon the Military Department of the Government, and especially those representing southern States.

And in this connection I desire to say a word in response to the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. COOK.] He seems to be particularly sensitive when the southern people are mentioned in connection with any subject. The pride of one's locality and its people is a just and commendable one, and I can assure the gentleman that no man on or off this floor will more readily or willingly defend the people of the South against any unjust aspersions than myself. But, sir, I do not regard it as necessary to the consideration of the pending question to allude to the part that the people of either the Northern or Southern States have taken in the wars of the country, or whether the southern people have, from the time of the Revolution, fought under the flag of this nation and watered every battle-field with their blood or not. That is a question not under consideration. The conduct of the people of both the North and South from the Revolution down to the present time is indelibly written on the pages of this nation's history and cannot be changed on this floor, and time alone can efface it.

The language in the minority report so obnoxious to the gentleman from Georgia is as follows:

> The people of our Southern States, since the late civil war, have made grievous complaints of military interference.
>
> Whatever reasons and arguments against military government in the South are valid apply with equal force to the military government of Indians.

How the gentleman could place such a construction upon that language passes my comprehension. There is nothing in it that, with my understanding of our language, can be tortured into a comparison of the southern people with the savage or in any way reflecting upon them; it was simply illustrating a principle, and one, too, not to be lost sight of either by Congress or the people.

From the close of the late war until the reconstruction of the insurrectionary States, and almost ever since then, there has been one universal howl of complaint coming up from that country against the Army officers exercising civil power or interfering with civil officers in the performance of civil duties.

The comparison made by the minority related only to the use of military officials in the administration of civil affairs, and not as the gentleman from Georgia supposed.

Mr. Chairman, independent of the consideration of the welfare of the Indians, there is a principle involved in this question of transfer that rises higher, entering more sacred precincts, and of greater importance to the people of the whole country than the question of dollars and cents or the cost of managing any Department of the Government. It is the safety of the Republic.

For the safety of the liberties of the people, the lines between the exercise of military and civil power should be distinctly drawn, and the military authorities in the exercise of power confined strictly within their prescribed limits.

If we permit the military to step one particle beyond that line, what guarantee have the people that, sooner or later, the Army will not attempt to usurp all civil power and authority and transform the republic into a military despotism? This is no idle thought. It is one that should receive the constant attention of those having the safety and welfare of the country intrusted to them.

Why, sir, immediately after the close of the war, I am informed that there was an earnest effort made by military officials to have all the important positions in the several Departments filled by Army officers; and in the Treasury, for a time, many were employed. Sir, it is manifest to my mind that there is a growing disposition among Army officers to reach out and enlarge their powers. This, I think, accounts for their general testimony in favor of the proposed transfer.

As an evidence of this growing disposition, I find a bill introduced in this House proposing to transfer the Pension Bureau to the War Department. By the bill under consideration it is proposed to turn the management of the Indians over to the tender mercies of the Army.

If this feeling continues, I would not be surprised at any time to hear of a proposition to transfer the management of all Departments of the Government to the War Department.

We are told that General Sherman and many other Army officers state that Indian affairs would be better managed if in the hands of the Army than in any civil Department.

If it be the policy of this House to reduce the Indians "to a mass of helpless paupers," as General Sherman thinks should be done, then the opinion of General Sherman and his officers should be heeded. I have no doubt the officers of the Army would very readily admit that all the departments of the Government, legislative, executive, and judicial, would be much better conducted by Army officers than by any class of civilians. But, sir, the American people, who are always right, will not very complacently assent to so modest a proposition.

Mr. Chairman, I have had some experience in the exercise of civil power by the military authorities. And having been a Federal soldier during the late unpleasantness and having located and resided in my adopted State ever since the close of the war, I know that I can speak from experience, and I believe I can do so without being subjected to the charge that what I say is the spirit of rebellion rekindled.

In my State, from the close of the war until June, 1868, there was no other government, in fact, except that prescribed by the military authorities of that department. The only constitution and laws that governed that people were such as were prescribed by the military commander or tolerated by him. His will was the supreme law to that people.

I hope never again to witness such scenes as transpired there during that time in the administration of civil government by Army officials. To illustrate the beauties of military government and the qualification of Army officers to administer civil affairs, I will state briefly the proceedings in a criminal case in my State during that time which came within my own personal observation. A gentleman was arrested and brought before one of those military courts charged with committing an assault with intent to kill. The proof on the trial, that the defendant committed the assault with a pistol, accompanied with a threat to kill, presented cocked in the face of the assaulted party, but was prevented from firing only by the by-standers interposing, was undisputed. Upon that proof that learned military court discharged the prisoner on the ground that there was no proof that the pistol was loaded.

I will not offend the intelligence of members of the legal profession on this floor by commenting on such a ruling. It speaks for itself.

That court was composed of regular-Army officers, ranking from a brevet major-general to captains—that class of gentlemen who, we are told on this floor, are better qualified to administer civil affairs among the Indians than any other class of men. Mr. Chairman, I have had occasion during the rebellion to become acquainted with regular-Army officers, and I have failed to discover their superiority over other intelligent, educated men of good moral and social standing with regard to integrity and business capacity.

They are men of like passions and subject to the same influences and temptations as other men. Sir, I am sick and tired, and so is the country, of this eternal boast of the proverbial integrity and honesty of Army officers.

Already it appears that the head of the Military Department has been a little crooked; and I doubt not, if the same scrutiny was extended to the Quartermaster's Department, to contracts for supplies and transportation, &c., many astounding things would be developed.

I cheerfully admit that regular-Army officers are educated and honorable gentlemen and skilled in the profession of arms; but I have yet to learn that they are profound in agricultural or the mechanic arts, or that they are noted as common-school educators; and if their knowledge of divine law is no better than that exhibited in the case referred to, it seems to me that they are not well calculated to carry out a policy of civilization that imperatively demands the service of men of an education and experience in those branches of industry and an education required for the civilization of the Indian.

And here I will again call attention to the protest of the Indians, from which I read the following:

The uncivilized Indians should learn daily labor in farming and stock-raising as the only vocation now open to them, neither of which the Army officers have been taught or would be willing to practice, their education and training being that of war.

These Army officers could not follow those employments and remain efficient Army officers if they would.

No worthy competent civilian would occupy a post of instruction as a farmer or stock-raiser under military dictation, in business they did not understand, any more than a worthy and competent military officer would drill under a farmer or herder who was ignorant of military duties.

Drilling men for battle and drilling wheat for growing are quite different employments. If you wish to have the Indians unlearn the former and to learn the latter, the transfer of these people from civil to military control will defeat your good intentions. You will not allow white people—men, women, or children, whether native or foreign—to be governed and controlled by the military in time of peace.

We will now see what the opinions of some of our own statesmen are. I have here a report of a joint and select committee of both Houses of Congress made in 1867 on this subject, recommending the establishment of a separate department for the management of the Indians, which I have not the time to read, but will print in my remarks.

Mr. Chairman, that was the unanimous report of that committee, emphatically opposing this transfer. That report was based upon a large volume of testimony taken by that committee, a few extracts from which I will ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Colonel Bent, being sworn, testifies that:

The last great difficulty previous to the one I have mentioned grew out of the Sioux war. This war originated as follows: Some Mormons on their way to Salt Lake were driving some stock; either a cow or an ox gave out; the Indians killed the animal, and the Mormons reported the fact to the commanding officer at Fort Laramie; the officer sent down for the Indian who killed the animal, but the Indians refused to send him, as he was not present and could not be found, offering at the same time to pay for the animal killed; the officer then sent Lieutenant Grattan, with eighteen men, to the Indian camp, where there were some three hundred warriors, to fetch the Indian away; he demanded that the Indian should be delivered in fifteen minutes, or he would fire on them; the Indian not being forthcoming at the time, Lieutenant Grattan fired on the Indians, and in a few minutes he and his command were all massacred. This occurred in 1854, and was the commencement of the Sioux war, which lasted some time, the Cheyenne band of the North Platte becoming involved in it. Two campaigns were carried on against them, one under General Harney and the other under Colonel Sumner.

ROBERT BENT sworn:

I am twenty-four years old; was born on the Arkansas River. I am pretty well acquainted with the Indians of the plains, having spent most of my life among them. I was employed as guide and interpreter at Fort Lyon by Major Anthony. Colonel Chivington ordered me to accompany him on his way to Sand Creek. The command consisted of from nine hundred to one thousand men, principally Colorado volunteers. We left Fort Lyon at eight o'clock in the evening and came on to the Indian camp at daylight the next morning. Colonel Chivington surrounded the village with his troops. When he came within sight of the camp I saw the American flag waving and heard Black Kettle tell the Indians to stand around the flag, and they were huddled, men, women, and children. This was when we were within fifty yards of the Indians. I also saw a white flag raised. These flags were in so conspicuous a position that they must have been seen. When the troops fired the Indians ran, some of the men into their lodges, probably to get their arms. They had time to get away if they wanted to. I remained on the field five hours, and when I left there were shots being fired up the creek. I think there were six hundred Indians in all. I think there were thirty-five braves and some old men, about sixty in all. All fought well. At the time, the rest of the men were away from camp hunting. I visited the battle ground six months afterward; saw the remains of a good many; counted sixty-nine, but a number had been eaten by the wolves and dogs. After the firing, the warriors put the squaws and children together and surrounded them to protect them. I saw five squaws under a bank for shelter. When the troops came up to them they ran out and showed their persons to let the soldiers know they were squaws, and begged for mercy, but the soldiers shot them all. I saw one squaw lying on the bank whose leg had been broken by a shell; a soldier came up to her with a drawn saber; she raised her arm to protect herself, when he struck, breaking her arm; she rolled over and raised her other arm, when he struck, breaking it, and left her without killing her. There seemed to be an indiscriminate slaughter of men, women, and children. There were some thirty or forty squaws collected in a hole for protection; they sent out a little girl about six years old with a white flag on a stick; she had not proceeded but a few steps when she was shot and killed. All the squaws in that hole were afterward killed, and four or five bucks outside. The squaws offered no resistance. Every one I saw dead was scalped. I saw one squaw cut open with an unborn child, as I thought, lying by her side. Captain Soulé afterward told me that such was the fact.

* * * * * * *

I heard Colonel Chivington say to the soldiers as they charged past him, "Remember our wives and children murdered on the Platte and Arkansas." He occupied a position where he could not have failed to have seen the American flag, which I think was a garrison flag, six by twelve. He was within fifty yards when he planted his battery. I saw a little girl about five years of age who had been hidden in the sand; two soldiers discovered her, drew their pistols and shot her, and then pulled her out of the sand by the arm. I saw quite a number of infants in arms killed with their mothers. There were trading in the village at the time John Smith, a soldier named Louderback, and a teamster of young Colley's named Clark. They were trading goods said to belong to Dexter Colley and John Smith. The goods traded were similar to those they had been in the habit of trading before. I have heard the Indians charge Major Colley with trading their own goods to them.

Colonel KIT CARSON sworn:

I have heard the statement of Colonel Bent, and his suggestions and opinions in relation to Indian affairs coincide perfectly with my own. I came to this country in 1826 and since that time have become pretty well acquainted with the Indian tribes, both in peace and at war. I think, as a general thing, the difficulties arise from aggressions on the part of the whites, from what I have heard; the whites are always cursing the Indians and are not willing to do them justice. For instance, at times large trains come out to this country and some man without any responsibility is hired to guard the horses, mules, and stock of the trains; these cattle, by his negligence, frequently stray off. Always, if anything is lost, the cry is raised that Indians stole it. It is customary among the Indians, even among themselves, if they lose animals, as Indians go everywhere, if they bring them in they expect to get something for their trouble. Among themselves they always pay, but when brought in to this man who lost them through his negligence he refuses to pay and abuses the Indians, striking or sometimes shooting them because they do not wish to give up the stock without pay; and thus a war is brought on. This is the way in which difficulties frequently arise. I have heard read the statement of how the Sioux war arose, which agrees word for word with what I have heard and what I believe to be the facts. And in relation to the war with the Cheyennes, I have heard it publicly stated that the authorities of Colorado, expecting that their troops would be sent to the Potomac, determined to get up an Indian war so that the troops would be compelled to remain. I know of no acts of hostility on the part of the Cheyennes and Arapahoes committed previous to the attacks made upon them, as stated by Colonel Bent.

Mr. WILSHIRE. Mr. Chairman, this is the testimony of white men, living in that country for many years, and one of them, Kit Carson, for nearly half a century, famous throughout the land as the great pioneer and explorer of the far West, whose knowledge of Indian character, the best mode of managing them, and the causes of all our Indian wars is, perhaps, better than that of any man of his period.

Sir, I have presented the testimony of white men. I will now call attention of gentlemen to the testimony of Pa-la-ne-apo-pe, the chief of the Sioux, with whom we were recently at war, as to the causes of that war, which, for want of time to read, I shall print in my remarks. He testifies before the committee as follows:

My friend, we are now done with the agents, and we will now commence with the soldiers. The first year they came up into this country I think my grandfather must have told them to commence on me, and that is the reason I commence thus with them. I would like to know if my grandfather told them to commence against me first; I should think so the way they treated us. The first time they came up our young men had nothing, and had gone over the Missouri River to hunt, and the soldiers killed seven of them. The Two-Kettle band and the Lower Yanktonnais were friendly, and were then on my reservation at the time, and some of them were out with my young men to hunt, and were among the seven that were killed. They were all friendly to the whites. When General Sully returned from his expedition and was crossing my reserve, there were some of the Indian women married to half-breeds, and they had houses, and the soldiers went in and drove all the persons in them out, and robbed the houses of all there was in them. I would like to know if my grandfather told them to do so. I do not know he did. (All the chiefs present assent to this.) One of my chiefs, Little Swan, now here, had a house, and soldiers broke in and destroyed all his goods, furniture, utensils, and tools, and all the property of his band, the same being stored there. I would like to know if my grandfather told the soldiers, when they returned from the expedition with their horses worn out, lost, or stolen, to take horses from the Yanktons in place of those they had lost or had worn out and broken down. I don't believe he did; but that is the way the soldiers did. I think the way the white man treated us is worse than the wolves do. We have a way in the winter of putting our dead up on scaffolds, up from the ground, but the soldiers cut down the scaffolds and cut off the hair of the dead, and if they had good teeth they pulled them out, and some of them cut off the heads of the dead and carried them away.

There are facts disclosed in that testimony, doubtless true, of a character so horrible, brutal, indecent, and inhuman as to shock the moral sense and call forth the severest execrations of any civilized and Christian gentleman.

These cruelties, outrages, and indecencies were committed by the Army——

Mr. A. S. WILLIAMS. Were those officers of the regular Army?

Mr. WILSHIRE. They were recognized as soldiers in the service of the United States. I cannot be interrupted.

Mr. BANNING. Let me ask the gentleman another question.

Mr. WILSHIRE. I say that lieutenant with his eighteen men was a regular-Army officer.

Mr. A. S. WILLIAMS. Was Colonel Chivington a regular officer?

Mr. WILSHIRE. The last officer referred to was a regular-Army officer.

Mr. A. S. WILLIAMS. No; but I speak of the officer, Colonel Chivington, on this occasion. Was he a regular officer?

Mr. WILSHIRE. He was in the United States military service. I will say there is another case referred to, but my time will not permit me to have it read.

Mr. MAGINNIS. As he and all his men we killed, who told the story? [Laughter.]

Mr. WILSHIRE. A committee of Congress told the story. The evidence referred to is the evidence they took. This Congress, in 1868, appointed a joint select committee to go into that country and investigate the condition of affairs, and that is the testimony they took. The report there favors exactly what I am favoring here—the establishing of an independent bureau for the control of Indian affairs.

Mr. PATTERSON. One word. I represent that Territory——

Mr. WILSHIRE. I cannot be interrupted, as I have but little time left.

Mr. PATTERSON. I ask what Colonel Chivington said when he asked the soldiers to remember their wives and children who had been murdered?

Mr. WILSHIRE. Does that become a soldier?

Mr. MAGINNIS. He was a preacher of the gospel.

Mr. WILSHIRE. It makes no difference whether he was a soldier or preacher; it would not become a member of Congress, sir. No, sir; it becomes no man but a brute and a coward.

Mr. MAGINNIS. If he were a soldier he would not have done it.

Mr. WILSHIRE. But he bore the emblems of a soldier. He bore the commission of an officer.

Mr. MAGINNIS. It was soon taken away from him.

Mr. WILSHIRE. And he murdered and slaughtered all the men, women, and children, who were vainly seeking protection under the American flag. That is the kind of men you propose to use to civilize the Indians with. I do not propose that that shall be done. It shall not be done certainly with my voice. I do not propose so far as my voice or my vote is concerned that the Indian shall ever be put under the control of any Army officer; I do not care whether it be General Sherman, or General Sheridan, whose only motto in regard to the Indian is that he did once see a good Indian, but he was a dead one. That is what General Sheridan says about the Indian. He never saw a good Indian but what was dead.

A good deal has been said about the cost of this thing, and Judge BOONE has read from some figures. For his information I will also read a few from figures taken from official sources before I conclude.

Sir, is it any wonder, then, that Indians thus treated went to war and committed murder and plunder? Is it strange that they should hate and distrust the Government which professes to be their friend and protector, that will place them in the hands of such ruthless and cruel barbarians? Can it be expected that they would have much confidence in the protection of our flag, when it but served the purpose of a signal for the commencement of the slaughter of their old men, their women, and their children?

In the face of such facts, besides many others that I have not the time to advert to now, but which are abundantly shown in the history of our Indian affairs and in the light of Christian humanity, can we turn them over to the Army? Sir, I regard it as absolutely inhuman, unchristian, and totally destructive of all hope of civilizing the uncivilized Indians, and would tend to remit back to barbarism many who have been partially civilized should their management be transferred to the War Department.

Experience has shown that with few, if any, known exceptions the immediate presence of military posts in the Indian country is speedily subversive of every idea of Indian domestic morals. Female chastity yields to bribery or fear. Marital rights are generally disregarded, and shameful concubinage, with all its disgusting concomitants, spreads its pestiferous stench through camp and lodge. The most loathsome diseases are spread broadcast, entailing immortality and physical death.

Let me say to gentlemen advocating this transfer, that if it is the desire to exterminate the Indian race, pursue them with ball, bayonet, and blade; massacre them at once wholesale, as we have done on some former occasions, or adopt some quick and easy means to do so; but, in the name of humanity, save them from the control of the Army and the lingering and loathsome diseases contracted at military posts.

Nearly all our Indian wars of late years have been the result of the misconduct and the indiscreet exercise of authority by Army officers and soldiers and mischievous and unscrupulous white men as traders or camp-followers.

As examples I will call attention to a few of the most notable of these wars. The Sioux war of 1852 originated thus: A train of Mormon emigrants passing through their country abandoned a cow; a mischievous complaint was made that the Indians had captured her. A lieutenant of the Army with a squad of soldiers went to the camp of the Indians who had found, killed, and eaten the cow. This officer demanded the Indian who had killed her. The Indians refused to surrender him, but offered to pay for the cow. The lieutenant ordered his men to fire on them, which they did, killing and wounding a number of the Indians, when the soldiers were surrounded by the Indians and massacred, which resulted in war with them. The cost of that indiscreet conduct—if it should receive so mild a name—to the Government was from thirty to forty millions of dollars, many lives, and much valuable property.

Again, at Camp Sanborn, on Platte River, in 1864, a ranchman, who doubtless wanted a little Indian war to produce a market for his stock, went to that post and charged the Cheyennes with stealing some of his stock. A lieutenant was sent out in search of the stock, but could not find it. On his march, falling in with a party of Cheyennes, he attempted to disarm them, (for what purpose is not known,) which the Indians resisted. The result was one soldier killed and many others wounded. Then followed the Cheyenne war, which cost millions of treasure and hundreds of lives, including one hundred friendly Indians, mostly women and children, vainly seeking safety under our flag.

In 1867 a military command burned the peaceful village of the Cheyennes, on Pawnee Fork, Western Kansas, who had been at peace with us since the treaty of 1865, and were then living on lands assigned them by that treaty. These Indians flew to arms at once, and a fearful conflict ensued, in which several hundred soldiers and citizens were killed, a large amount of private property destroyed, and the Government put to heavy expense. The war with the Navajoes, in New Mexico, had its origin in a similar way, and terminated with like results. In fact, when we go into the causes of all our Indian wars, we find the same to be true; which to me seems to show unmistakably that military interference and its encouragement of bad and evil-disposed white men in the Indian countries has been prolific of war even since the management of the Indians has been under civil control.

What peace and tranquillity can we expect if the Indians are placed entirely in the hands of the military?

It is urged that the transfer to the War Department will be a great saving to the public Treasury. God knows that no one desires more than I do to reduce our public expenditures, but it must not be forgotten that while there is a true economy, there is also such a thing as a false or deceptive one.

On this branch of the subject let me call the attention of the House to a little experience prior to those wars. Under the management of the War Department the Government fought about five hundred warriors in Florida on a little pent-up peninsula for seven years with the regular Army and many thousand volunteers, as well as the Navy, at a cost of about fifteen hundred lives on our part and $50,000,000.

How long, then, will it require, and at what expense of treasure and blood, to exterminate the thousands of Indians now occupying more than two hundred thousand square miles of territory?

Mr. Chairman, our Indian wars have hitherto been on an average at a cost of more than $1,000,000 and about twenty-five white lives for each Indian killed in our wars with them.

So it seems that it will cost a great deal less to pursue a peace and civilizing policy and feed and clothe them than to fight them, which we will certainly have to do if we transfer their management to the War Department.

With regard to the cost of the two managements, let us examine and see whether, allowing that peace be preserved with them, there would be any reduction in the cost of their management should the transfer be made.

It will be seen by reference to the last statement of expenditures of the Government from 1789 to the close of the last fiscal year that the cost of the management of Indians has annually increased under any management or any administration.

The cause of that increase is the result mainly of the annual increase of the number of Indians brought under the management and control of the Government in our western Territories, which has been the inevitable consequence of the onward march of the civilization of this progressive age and the restless ambition of the energetic and enterprising young men of the country who first peopled all our western States.

As shown by the statement of expenditures referred to, there seems to be no certain rule by which the cost of the management of Indian affairs and its variations for the several years can be definitely ascertained.

From that statement it appears that the first four years after the War Department took charge of the Indians in 1832, when there were comparatively few to manage, the aggregate cost for those four years was $5,865,798.36, averaging an annual cost of $1,466,449.59. The next three years thereafter the aggregate cost was $14,889,250.41, averaging an annual cost of $4,963,083.47, the latter three years costing on an average more than three times as much annually as the four preceding years. During the remaining ten years that the War Department had the management of Indian affairs, the aggregate cost was $15,659,305.43, averaging a cost of $1,565,930.54 annually.

The difference in the annual cost for those years was doubtless due to emergencies arising that demanded the expenditure, just as they always have and always will until, by a kind, humane, and just treatment the Indians have been brought up to a higher degree of civilization, education, and industry, that will induce them to pursue the paths of peace and become self-sustaining. From the statement of expenditures of the Government from 1789 to the present time, it appears that during the seventeen years the War Department had control of the Indians the aggregate cost of the Indians was $36,414,354.20, or an average annual cost of $2,142,020.82. On this subject, I fear the gentleman from Mississippi, General HOOKER, has not carefully studied the official figures, if I understood him right in saying that the cost of managing Indians by the War Department was about $1,000,000 annually.

At this point I will call attention to the important fact that during these seventeen years the number of Indians under the immediate management and control of the Government was small compared to that of a few years after the Interior Department took control of them.

Up to March 3, 1849, the date of the transfer from the War to the Interior Department, none, or scarcely any, of the Indians in Arizona, California, Colorado, Dakota, Idaho, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, Utah, Washington Territory, and Wyoming were under the management of any Department of the Government.

In the States and Territories mentioned there are, as shown by the last report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, 156,729 Indians, the whole number of Indians, as shown by that report, being 279,337. So, deducting the number occupying those States and Territories, which embrace all the Upper Missouri River, the Rocky Mountains, the great American basin from New Mexico to the British possessions, and all the Pacific slope, it leaves only 122,608 Indians under the War Department during those seventeen years, and those mostly located at points easy of access and to which their supplies and annuities could be transported at comparatively small cost.

Thus it will be seen that when the management of Indian affairs was under the control of the War Department much less than one-half of the Indians now cared for were the subjects of management and support of the Government.

And when we take into consideration, as we should in examining this question, the fact that we now have more than double the number of Indians than when the War Department controlled them, situated at points remote from river or railway transportation, and the increased cost of supplying them consequent thereon, besides the efforts made in the past few years to educate and civilize them, it is not difficult to understand the increased cost of conducting Indian affairs.

Sir, wherever the management may be assigned, as the Indians are now located that cost cannot be reduced. The transfer to the Army will not shorten distances or render the different tribes more accessible; it will not reduce the number of Indians or make their wants any less, unless the ultimate end sought to be attained is extermination, which I fear would be the result of such a transfer.

If no reduction in the amount of supplies necessary, their cost, or the cost of their transportation is made, I fail to see how the transfer will reduce the expense of the Indian management.

It will be seen from the following comparative statement of the cost of furnishing supplies to the War Department, and that of the Indian Office, the same articles furnished at the same points for the years of 1874 and 1875, that the cost to the Indian Office is much the less:

Schedule showing the cost of beef supplies purchased by the War Department and Indian Office during the years 1874 and 1875 for military posts and Indian agencies at or near the same places.

Fiscal years.	Military posts and Indian agencies.	Army cost, gross.	Indian cost, gross.	Army cost over Indian cost.	Indian cost over Army cost.
1874	Fort Hall, Idaho	$5 00	$2 85	$2 15
1875	Fort Hall, Idaho	5 00	2 40	2 60
1874	Fort Sully, Dakota, or Cheyenne agency.	3 74	2 76½	97½
1875	Fort Sully, Dakota, or Cheyenne agency.	3 80	2 30½	1 49½
1874	Tulerosa, New Mexico, or South Apache agency.	4 87	4 48	39½
1874	Camp Verdi, Arizona, or Verdi agency.	6 19½	5 00	1 19½
1875	Camp Verdi, Arizona, or Verdi agency.	4 86½	2 69	2 17½
1874	Camp Bowie, Arizona, or Chiricahua agency.	6 19½	5 00	1 19½
1875	Camp Bowie, Arizona, or Chiricahua agency.	4 86½	2 69	2 17½
1874	Camp Apache, or Apache agency	6 19½	5 00	1 19½
1875	Camp Apache, or Apache agency	4 86½	2 69	2 17½
1874	Fort Sill, or Kiowa and Cheyenne agencies.	*2 70½	*1 76	94½
1875	Fort Sill, or Kiowa and Cheyenne agencies.	*2 06	*1 83	23
1874	Camp Robinson, or Red Cloud and Spotted Tail agencies.	*3 65⅚	*2 65—	1 00
1875	Camp Robinson, or Red Cloud and Spotted Tail agencies.	*3 50	2 46½	1 03½
1874	Fort Randall, or Yankton agency	4 12½	2 30½	1 81½
1875	Fort Randall, or Yankton agency	4 00	2 46½	1 53½
1874	Camp Supply, Indian Territory	3 54	1 64	1 90

Schedule showing the cost of beef supplies purchased by the War Department and Indian Office, &c.—Continued.

FLOUR.

Fiscal years.	Military posts and Indian agencies.	Army cost, gross.	Indian cost, gross.	Army cost over Indian cost.	Indian cost over Army cost.
1874	Fort Sill, or Kiowa agency	6 17	4 29	1 88
1875	Fort Sill, or Kiowa agency	5 38	4 57	81
1874	Camp Robinson, or Red Cloud and Spotted Tail agencies.	*6 35	5 40	95
1875	Camp Robinson, or Red Cloud and Spotted Tail agencies.	*5 07½	4 49	58½
1874	Fort Randall, or Yankton agency	3 22½	3 73		50½
1875	Fort Randall, or Yankton agency	3 22	(†)
1874	Fort Wingate, or Navajo agency	5 55	(‡)
1875	Fort Wingate, or Navajo agency	5 38	7 35		1 97

CORN.

1874	Omaha	69 71 72⅜ 68⅞	59

*Average. †None supplied. ‡No contract.

The same is true as to contracts for flour. It is said by gentlemen on the other side that the difference between the cost of Army and Indian beef is because the Army purchase from the block, and the Indians take it neck, limbs, and all. Sir, judging from the difference in price of from 50 to 75 per cent. in the cost, the cattle furnished the Indians must have remarkably large necks and limbs, as well as unusually long horns. The explanation the friends of the bill make will not do. Whatever may be said about the difference of the quality of beef and flour furnished to the two branches of the service, one fact is known to every man familiar with the grain markets anywhere, that there is never more than from two to four cents per bushel difference in corn that is regarded as merchantable. Yet, by the statement referred to, we see that the War Department paid for the same article, delivered at the same place and during the same year, about 25 per cent. more than was paid by the Indian Bureau. Besides, it is notorious that the beef furnished to the Army in the Indian country is taken from the same herds, and frequently furnished by the same parties; and it seems impossible that beef for the Army should be so much superior to Indian beef as to cost or be worth nearly double as much, as shown by this statement.

I have no doubt but large sums could be saved to the Government by a more faithful discharge of duty by the officers and agents of the Indian Department. That there have been frauds perpetrated upon the Government by its Indian officials there is no doubt; and to the removal of that evil and perfecting a correct Indian policy we should address ourselves. To do so it seems to me that the only certain plan will be to establish a separate department, clothed with the power to secure faithful service.

If because there have been some faithless officers in the Indian Bureau it should be transferred to another Department, then for the same reason, from recent developments, it could with as much propriety be said that the War Department should be consolidated with some other Department.

A fact worthy of some consideration is the one that nearly all those engaged in contracting to furnish supplies or transportation for the Indians are not only in favor of the proposed transfer, but some have interested themselves very industriously to bring it about.

These contractors are known to be shrewd business men, and noted for looking after their own interests. Then the question very naturally arises, if supplies can be furnished and transported under Army contracts, as claimed, so much less than by the Indian Office, thereby reducing the profits of the contractors, why should they be so anxious for the transfer? I submit that these contractors favoring it is, to say the least of it, a suspicious circumstance and one that should not be overlooked.

Mr. Chairman, I think I have shown that the costs instead of being diminished would be increased by the transfer.

But I do not wish to be understood as favoring its longer retention in the Interior Department; I am as much opposed to the management of Indian affairs being under the control of the Interior Department as I am opposed to its going to the War Department.

I agree with my colleagues of the minority of the committee in the recommendation of the establishment of a separate department to take charge of Indian affairs with a competent person appointed to have the control of that branch of the public service, clothed by law with ample power to carry out the policy of the Government, and hold him responsible for the faithful, honest, and economical administration of his department.

The organization of a separate department will, in my judgment, secure the much-needed reform, put a stop to existing abuses, and place the management of Indian affairs in such a condition as to solve the Indian question at an early day.

The present plan of management, while it has accomplished some good results in civilizing and instructing the Indian, is not complete for that purpose, because it is encumbered by being only a Bureau in a Department already overloaded with duties and responsibilities, when it should be committed to, and made the sole charge of, an independent department.

Upon an examination of the official reports of the Commissioners of Indian Affairs it appears that since the adoption of the peace policy the Army is rarely, if ever, called upon by the agents, and then only to furnish troops to serve as a posse to aid the civil agent to enforce order.

Hitherto, under the present system, the control of the Indians, as well as the administration of agency affairs, was left to the agent under the direction of the Indian Office, military force being resorted to only when all other means to preserve order have failed, which, for the past few years, has rarely occurred. To the Indians of an agency the agent is virtually the Government, exercising legislative, judicial, and executive authority. This authority, however, is not delegated and has no special sanction; it has been exercised ex necessitate.

The agents, under the present legislation, can have little if any assistance in governing. Generally, United States laws, United States courts and marshals have no jurisdiction on Indian reservations. To restrain disorder and turbulence, to enforce obedience to such regulations as may be prescribed, to prevent the manufacture and use of intoxicating liquors, to keep Indians upon their reservations, to break up revolutionary councils, to protect Government property, and to punish crime, the agent must now depend mainly on his personal influence, the voluntary co-operation of a few white employés, and the support of such of his ignorant subjects whose good-will and co-operation he has managed in one way or another to gain. To enable the agents and other officers having the immediate management of the Indians to carry out successfully a peace policy, their powers should be sufficient and well defined. The proposed substitute does that.

But with the limited power they possessed, and laboring under the disadvantage that the agents have, the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs shows that at nearly all of the agencies soldiers are neither seen nor required. I ask the Clerk to read from the last report the following.

The Clerk read as follows:

This opinion respecting the transfer to the War Department was rendered before any well-defined plan for civilization had been adopted, and at a time when the Indian service, under civilian management, was in its most unsatisfactory condition, and when open hostilities or a very precarious condition of peace existed among more than half the Indians of the country. That the conclusions thus reached by military officers of the rank and experience of Generals Sherman, Harney, Terry, and Augur were safe and wise, the experience of the last seven years has fully demonstrated. And if the civil arm of the Government was best adapted to the work required then, it is difficult to see how it can be otherwise now, when, with the exception of a portion of the Sioux Indians in Montana and Dakota and three or four thousand vagrant Utes and Apaches in New Mexico, the whole Indian population is quiet, and, except under the most blundering and grossly unjust treatment, will cause no apprehensions of war or serious difficulty hereafter. At five-sixths of the Indian agencies no soldier is ever seen or needed. At one-half of the remainder soldiers are only required to act as a posse to assist the agent in making arrests of turbulent men; and even this posse could be much more cheaply and efficiently provided by dispensing with soldiers and increasing the force of United States marshals wherever needed for the control and discipline of Indians. So far, then, as eleven-twelfths of the Indian agencies are concerned, the question of putting them under the control of the War Department has no more pertinency than that of putting the alms-house and city schools under the metropolitan police.

Mr. WILSHIRE. Facts are abundant to show that, when the Indians are fairly dealt with by the Government and its agents and not allowed to be robbed and cheated by bad white men living and trading among them and designing and unscrupulous land sharks, seeking by any means to defraud them of their lands, four-fifths of all our Indians are as easily managed and made to respect law as the same number of white men equally as ignorant.

Then, to solve the Indian question and ultimately relieve the Government of their care, all will agree that the Indians must be civilized.

To civilize them they must be educated and instructed and encouraged to labor. This can only be done successfully by maintaining a peace policy under the control of a civil Department of the Government.

Mr. Chairman, the present peace policy, though in many instances in the hands of corrupt and faithless men and though inaugurated shortly after the close of the rebellion, at a time when not only the Indians but the whole country was to some extent demoralized, has accomplished a great deal in civilizing the Indians; they have made fair progress in education, in the science of agriculture and the mechanic arts, as well as some Christian progress.

Here, sir, is a recapitulation of the statistical table relating to population, education, &c., by tribes and their respective agencies, found in the report of the commissioner for the year 1875, which shows the most gratifying results of a peace policy:

RECAPITULATION.

Number of Indians in the United States, exclusive of those in Alaska	279,337
Number of Indians who are mixed-bloods (a)	8,732
Number of Indians who come directly under civilizing influence of agencies (a)	112,595
Number of white persons on Indian reservations:
Employés	805
Additional members of their families	873
Other white persons not included (a)	2,928
Number of school-buildings upon Indian reservations	276
Number of schools upon Indian reservations	329
Number of teachers: males, 160; females, 258	418
Number of scholars: males, 5,482; females, 5,019	10,501
Number of Indians who can read: adults, 5,405; youths, 5,771 (a)	11,176
Number of Indians who have learned to read during the year (a)	1,383
Number of Indians who can read in English (a)	8,615
Number of Indians who can read in Indian (a)	6,656
Number of Indians who can read in English and Indian (a)	6,314
Number of missionaries among the Indians (a)	83
Amount contributed by religious societies during the year (a)	$67,410
Number of church-buildings	184
Number of church-members (a)	24,638
Number of Indians who have received medical treatment during the year (a)	46,594
Number of births (a)	1,985
Number of deaths (a)	1,601
Number of Indians who have learned trades during the year (a)	106
Number of Indians who wear citizens' dress (a)	105,961
Number of Indians killed during the year: (a)
By members of the same tribe	30
By hostile Indians	27
By United States soldiers	30
By citizens	23
Number of white persons killed by Indians: males, 54; females, 27 (a)	81
Number of Indians punished by civil and military authorities (a)	209
Number of Indians punished by Indians (a)	22
Number of white persons who have committed crimes against Indians (a)	200
Number of white persons punished for crimes against Indians (a)	31
Number of mills (a)	84
Number of shops (a)	138
Number of agency-buildings erected during the year	105
Number of houses occupied by Indians	19,902
Number of Indian houses built during year	733

(a) Five civilized tribes in the Indian Territory not represented in this number.

I will now show from the same report the progress made in educating the Indians to labor under the management of the same peace policy. The following is taken from the table showing agricultural improvements, stock, productions, and sources of subsistence, of the different tribes:

RECAPITULATION.

Size of reserves, in acres*	164,230,339
Number of acres tillable	4,807,762
Number of acres wooded	10,789,351
Number of acres grazing	27,062,516
Number of acres valueless	13,770,670
Number of acres cultivated by the Government during the year	6,287
Number of acres cultivated by the Indians during the year	329,327
Number of acres broken by the Government during the year	6,056
Number of acres broken by the Indians during the year	40,245
Number of acres under fence	127,555
Rods of fencing made during the year	608,834
Number of Indian families engaged in agriculture (b)	16,732
Number of Indian families engaged in other civilized occupations (b)	668
Number of mixed-blood families engaged in agriculture (b)	991
Number of mixed-blood families engaged in other civilized occupations (b)	214
Number of male Indians who labor in civilized occupations (b)	48,638
Produce raised during the year:
Bushels wheat, by Government, 18,273; by Indians, 329,313; total	347,586
Bushels corn, by Government, 29,285; by Indians, 2,008,074; total	2,037,359
Bushels oats, by Government, 13,817; by Indians, 176,678; total	190,495
Bushels vegetables, by Government, 35,340; by Indians, 445,164; total	480,504
Bushels beans, by Government, 120; by Indians, 26,366; total	26,486
Tons of hay cut by Indians	163,935
Stock owned:
Horses, by Government, 507; by Indians, 331,043; (increase by purchase, 469; natural increase, 5,550;) total	331,550
Mules, by Government, 343; by Indians, 3,842; (increase by purchase, 54; natural increase, 8;) total	4,185
Cattle, by Government, 5,191; by Indians, 374,388; (increase by purchase, 1,496; natural increase, 4,420;) total	379,579
Swine, by Government, 989; by Indians, 439,634; (increase by purchase, 53; natural increase, 4,434;) total	440,623
Sheep, by Government, 13,237; by Indians, 231,816; (increase by purchase, 837; natural increase, 25,548;) total	245,053
Other results of Indian labor:
Feet of lumber sawed	8,785,835
Cords of wood cut	42,733
Value of furs sold	$415,300

Mr. Chairman, these statements show conclusively that great improvement has been made on the condition of the Indian under the peace policy of the Government, though surrounded by many unfavorable circumstances.

Shall we now, chiefly to gratify the Army officers, and enlarge their powers, and furnish employment for surplus officers who ought long ago to have been mustered out of the service, abandon a policy that has produced these results, and throw away the large amount of money thus far expended in establishing it? or shall we carry into practical effect that benevolent and humane policy, pruning it of its defects, by proper legislation? or shall we admit that there is not wisdom enough in this Congress to do so, and transfer the subject to the War Department?

We have stipulated, by solemn treaty with nearly all those Indians, to settle them on reserves of good land adapted to pastoral and agricultural pursuits, to furnish them with necessary subsistence, stock, and farming as long as requisite, and teachers to instruct them in

(a) Five civilized tribes in the Indian Territory not represented in this number.

*Indian lands without agency, viz:

Cœur d'Alene reserve in Idaho	736,000
Reservations in Kansas	126,361
Mille Lac reserve in Minnesota	61,014
Jicarilla reserve in New Mexico	576,000
Total acres	1,499,375

(b) Four largest civilized tribes in the Indian Territory not included in this number.

letters and the arts of civilization. But the furnishing of those things, and imparting the instructions promised, belong to civil affairs, and not the military.

What gentleman, I ask, who wished to make a farmer, a mechanic, a banker, a merchant, or a minister of his son would send him to West Point to be instructed? An Army officer may be able to drill his command in the manual of arms or in movements on the field; but is he well qualified, or would he be inclined, to teach the Indians in the agricultural and mechanical arts, or the young Indian ideas how to shoot? Who would not prefer practical civilians in the erection of corn-cribs, or hay-racks; in the maneuvering of ox-teams, and the successful management of reapers and mowers, to an Army officer? But it is proposed by the majority of the committee to send out among the Indians professional soldiers, with sword in one hand, musket in the other, and tactics and an exalted opinion of themselves on the brain, to teach our Indian wards in the agricultural and mechanic arts.

Mr. Chairman, the great consideration seems to be the cost of managing the Indians under a civilizing policy. Have the Indians any less claim upon the charity or bounties of the Government than any other class of people? Sir, within the memory of every member of this House, to secure the freedom of a class of people in this country then in servile bondage, $4,000,000,000 were expended and near a million of lives destroyed; and to-day the people are paying heavy taxes to meet the gold interest upon a large debt created in the late war for that purpose. Why do not we turn the Financial Department over to the War Department?

Sir, it should be borne in mind by gentlemen that, from the time of the landing of the pilgrims at Plymouth Rock, the Indians, the original owners of all the territory composing the North American continent, have been from time to time, by crafty and cunning white men, dispossessed of their lands for paltry sums, often paid in worthless trinkets, and then by force, if necessary, driven westward and northward, until now they are forced to occupy a country wholly inadequate to their support in their uncivilized state. Hence we ought to make provision that will civilize, educate, and bring them to a standard among men that will make them self-sustaining, and finally become citizens and incorporated into our body-politic. We should do this, not only as a matter of policy, but because we owe it to them for the several surrenders of their most valuable lands to us, now embraced in the great and wealthy States of the Union. It is not only a duty, but a debt we owe them. To do so effectually we should establish a separate Executive Department; enact suitable laws to secure a just and economical administration of its affairs; place at its head a thoroughly competent, honest, and responsible man, and provide for the appointment of all his subordinates from men of known integrity and capability, without regard to what religious sect or creed they may belong to, or whether to any at all. Let the only questions be: Is he honest? Is he capable? And increase their compensation by reducing their numbers, so that honesty and capability can be secured.

On this subject I read from the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, who expresses my views better than I can. He says:

> If the management of Indian affairs by the Bureau under the Department of War was a failure, and if, as is admitted, it has been not fully satisfactory under the Interior, it is clear that the mere transfer of the Bureau from the one to the other will leave the management still a failure.
>
> Why talk of the "transfer" as if the simple turning over of a Bureau from one Department to another would magically cure all the defects of this branch of the public service? To me the proposition seems absurd. What is the "transfer?" Why, only a change, and in my opinion from bad enough to worse; that's all. The War Office operated the Bureau seventeen years, and it did not give satisfaction. In 1849 it was transferred to the Interior Department, where it has remained ever since, and still its conduct of affairs is assailed. Each Department in turn, with ample time for trial, has failed to manage Indian affairs with popular approbation. If either Department is to blame, both are; for both in the public mind have failed. What is the remedy? To know this we must first ascertain the cause. In my judgment, the cause lies on the surface and is simply this: There is too much cargo for the capacity of the vessel and too much vessel and freight for the power of the machinery. We have crammed into a Bureau, which under the supervisory and appellate power is a mere clerkship, all the large, complex, difficult, and delicate affairs that ought to employ every function of a first-class department. Notwithstanding the cause of failure before our eyes, what is the remedy? Surely not merely to put the old Bureau under another crew and commander. Why, such a "transfer" can give neither more capacity to the vessel nor more strength to the machinery. There is but one reasonable answer, and that is, if you would be all prosperous and safe in any sea and any weather, adapt your vessel to her cargo and your machinery to your vessel and tonnage; in other words, launch a new department of Indian affairs, freight it with the vast and complicated reciprocal interests of both races, and the experiment must prove a grand success.
>
> Can it be that the civil departments of this great Government have become so degenerate and weak or the military so exalted and so potent that the functions of the one are to be laid at the feet of the other, and the congenial sway of the republican statesman be replaced by the mailed hand of the military tribune?
>
> Is there not ingenuity and wisdom enough in the American Congress to devise civil remedies for supposed Bureau mismanagement; to strengthen where it is weak; to purge and purify if there is rottenness; to punish if there is crime; to concentrate power for promptness and efficiency, and to make responsibility answerable in proportion to power without transferring the functions of civil government to the military organization? If such a transfer of one Bureau be necessary for successful administration, why not, upon the same principle, of others; and, if of the Bureau, why not of co-ordinate departments? The argument is cumulative with the increase of power; and the appetite which now demands a Bureau may require, at least, to satiate its hunger the transfer of whole Departments.
>
> The grasp for power strengthens and enlarges with every concession of power, and after awhile every vestige of civil authority may yield to its demands, and the liberties of the nation and the glories of the Republic wither together under the blighting scepter of military despotism.

Mr. Chairman, the Indians placed under such a management, I confidently assert that in less than twenty years they will become so far civilized and Christianized as to be absorbed by and incorporated into the Government, and that vast West now occupied by them, and so often heretofore the scene of glittering bayonets, bristling sabers, and the roar of artillery in war, will become the habitation of civilized communities, the hardy industry of which will compel the mountains of that vast country to yield up their hidden treasures of mineral wealth and its valleys to blossom as the rose.

One more word and I am done. And that is once more to call the attention of the House to the fact that the present condition of the wilder Indians is the result of their bad treatment by white men and the cruel treatment of them by the Army. After we have driven them from their rich country of the East, the valleys of the Ohio and Mississippi, into one barren and waste, forced them to where, in their uneducated condition, they cannot support themselves, in the name of justice, in the name of broad humanity, and in the name of Christian charity, and for the sake of future history and the good opinion of succeeding generations, I appeal to this House not to turn the control of the Indians over to the tender mercies of the War Department.

I yield the remainder of my time to Mr. COX.

Mr. COX. I will yield the time thus given me to my friend from Oregon, [Mr. LANE.]

Mr. LANE. I am much obliged to the gentleman from New York. He is always gracious.

Mr. LANE. Mr. Chairman, I will occupy but a few minutes of the committee. Not the least important question before this Congress is that now under consideration. It is indeed a very grave subject, entitled to the careful, candid, and serious consideration of this body. As a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs I signed the report of the majority, and am therefore recorded in its favor; nor have I yet had reason to review or occasion to regret my action. I believe the proposed legislation will result well in this, that it will tend to maintain peace, secure additional protection to the lives and property of our citizens on the frontier, will materially reduce the expenses of our Government, and will in no wise injuriously affect if it does not improve the condition of the Indian.

So far as it has extended, my association with the republican members of this House has been, to me I am sure, of the most agreeable character; and I am not only surprised but somewhat grieved that the most formidable opposition to this measure should emanate from that source. Yes, I am quite surprised that it is the opinion of some of these gentlemen that the officers of the Army are unfitted to assume charge of this peculiar branch of the public service. How long they deemed a military government in the Southern States to be necessary, how long they invoked the presence of the Army to control the white people of this country, this is not the occasion nor is it for me to say. Let history answer and I will be content.

But it is urged that officers of the Army by "training, education, taste, and life-long habits are unfitted to enter heartily into the work of civilization by a personal interest in and supervision of the labors of teachers, missionaries, farmers, and mechanics." Now what is their training? It is obedience to the orders of a superior, which in this instance, if this bill prevails, would result in compliance with instructions from the Department relative to their conduct toward the Indian. And their education? It is usually of a high order; they not only excel in mathematics, but are proficient in other branches of study, in history, the polite languages, and are by no means unfamiliar with the prominent principles of the civil and moral law. Are they not Christian gentlemen? That is a delicate question, which I will not presume to discuss. However it may be with others, I cannot feel myself sufficiently righteous to dwell upon it. Those whose religious status is better assured may experience greater serenity and enjoy greater liberty. They doubtless know better the character of the structure in which they live.

How have the mighty fallen when the officers of the Army should be regarded so unworthy? "One whose training, education, taste, and life-long habits unfitted him for civilizing labors" has led the republican party to important political victories, and to-day presides as the Chief Magistrate of the Republic. And yet his old companions in arms, of equal learning, of equal merit, and of equal integrity are not deemed worthy to preside over an Indian agency. Perhaps some zealous partisan, some noisy, blatant politician, who has neither "training nor education, taste, nor life-long habits," except of getting all he can and keeping all he gets, is just fitted for so responsible a position. Pardon me if I prefer the Army officer, and regard the arguments against his employment in this capacity unworthy serious consideration. I am confident there are those, and many in the republican party, upon this floor who have served with distinguished gallantry in the Federal Army that will join with me in repelling these covert imputations upon a class of men who in war were heroes and in peace are gentlemen.

But I acquit my republican friends who differ with me upon this question. I am certain they are as sincere in their views as I am in mine. How can I fail to do so when I find the champion of the opposition to this measure in the person of my much-loved friend from New York, [Mr. COX?] I was never so much pained as when, with deep and melancholy interest, I listened to his speech upon this bill.

It was able, it was ingenious, it displayed his great literary research and discovered his profound erudition, but to my mind it was not applicable. Whence comes his extensive acquaintance with the Indian character? Has he seen the war-dance, heard the battle-cry, seen the uplifted tomahawk, the scalping-knife glistening in the air, the blazing faggots, and the victim at the stake; houses, the poor and humble homes of our frontier settlers burned to the ground, and men, women, and children indiscriminately butchered? Surely, O, surely not. Indeed, then, where did he acquire his knowledge of Indians? From Cooper's novels? From Longfellow's Hiawatha, in fanciful conception of the graceful and sylph-like form of the mythical Minnehaha? From the legends of Tammany, with which he confesses a familiarity, or from and upon that gigantic mountain from which he contemplated many cities and 600,000 happy Kabyles at its base? A narrow contracted country, fine imagination, or a powerful vision, to say the least.

Ah, those happy Kabyles! No portion of the speech of my accomplished friend, Mr. Chairman, made so great and lasting impression on my mind as that delightful description of the vision spread out to his gaze from that dizzy mountain height. In fancy I was by his side. I, too, saw that regenerate 600,000. I saw their bright, happy faces lit up with the spirit of human kindness. I saw them at their looms, at their plows, at their daily toil. But all their joy, all their happiness, all their gladness, were but comparative in their degree until the revivifying, rejuvenating gaze of my genial friend fell upon them. Ah, Mr. Chairman, it was a blissful moment for those peaceful Kabyles when, upward turning their eyes to the mountain crags, they beheld the benignant countenance of the gentleman bent toward them. What feelings of emotion must have thrilled them! What a glimpse of Paradise opened to their vision! What gleams of centennial radiance must have illumined their peaceful valley! I can see now that Arcadia putting on new glories under such a beneficent and amnestical gaze.

But the picture is too enchanting. I will turn it to the wall, nor even inquire if they had been under the charge of political agents or knew anything of the reservation system. The Indians left Ohio, and so did my distinguished friend. He went to New York, and outside the political war-whoop of Tammany the voice of the red man was unheard. Having heretofore upon most questions been right, he speaks with much confidence and assurance upon this. With all my admiration for that gentleman, I do solemnly protest that he has no right to calmly and deliberately cast an unkind imputation upon the Representatives of the States exposed to Indian disturbances. But for the attack so wantonly made upon a number of Representatives in this body, of whom I am one, I should not utter one single word. He says:

> Every border man, I suppose, is in favor of the extermination of the Indians, or nearly all.

And again he said:

> I do not mean all the border men; I mean all the border Congressmen except the gentleman from Arkansas, [Mr. WILSHIRE,] who so nobly stands up in vindication of the red men of his neighborhood.

There is no disposition, Mr. Chairman, I assure you, anywhere in the West to exterminate the Indian race; but if there was and that feeling was universal, the Indian need not fear any so much as the border men. "The wicked flee when no man pursueth." People very much mistake the border men. They are not ruffians nor murderers. They are a noble, brave, gallant, enterprising people, equaling in intelligence even the polite constituency of my genial friend from New York. They are as magnanimous as brave, as merciful as gallant. They respect the rights of the Indians, and by the Indians are far more respected than those who at a remote and secure distance extol their virtues, and from the extremest height of some Mount Parnassus in Algeria or elsewhere sing of those who, driven by philanthropists and fate, have sought refuge upon the summit of the Rocky Mountains and the green slopes of the Pacific.

Gentlemen talk about injustice done the Indians. They magnify and manufacture massacres of the noble red family. They do not allow their memory to go back only a few years to many painful incidents in the history of our frontier settlement. They forget Mountain Meadow; they forget Dr. Whitman's fate; they forget the massacre at the Cascade, and in my State in 1855, where men, women, and poor little children were horribly murdered. Some were cut to pieces, some thrown into wells before life was extinct; others were burned to death, their bodies roasted and left for hogs to devour, a dainty morsel for the contemplation of philanthropic peace-policy philosophers. They forget Lost River and its sad and grievous story of but three short years ago. They forget, indeed, all the wrongs and sufferings endured by the people upon the border, and yet they assume to dictate to us how the Indians shall treat us, and not how we shall treat them. The Indians have rights; we, forsooth, have none. Let me illustrate by saying that agreeably to the prevailing policy of the Government, if a white man trespass upon the rights or property of an Indian he is mulct in double the value of the property injured, and the Government of the United States stands as security for its payment; but if an Indian, going beyond the limits of his reservation, destroys the property of the white man, he is held harmless and is protected by the Government, and Congress, I regret to say, is disposed to deny indemnification to the sufferer. If, in his despair and desperation, the victim resorts to the doctrine of reprisal, he is denounced even upon the floor of this House as a robber and a murderer. Protect your citizens from the Indian, and the Indian will need no protection from your citizens; and this, I am happy to say, Mr. Chairman, is one of the chief objects of this bill.

It is gravely suggested, even by my distinguished friend from Arkansas, [Mr. WILSHIRE,] that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs should be elevated to the dignity of a Cabinet officer. That is statesmanship with a vengeance. Two hundred and fifty thousand souls entitled to a Cabinet representation! We have, sir, 40,000,000 of people. Just think of it! Divide that number by 250,000 and we have 160 Cabinet officers! How many Belknaps and Delanos we should have among that number I cannot conjecture and I will not undertake to say. As things look now we would occupy the whole time of Congress in the interesting labor of impeachment, and accomplish by no means, or slow means, the necessary legislation of the country.

But of this enough. "I speak with charity for all and with malice toward none." I even love those who despitefully treat me. Thus far I have only meant to vindicate the character of my people from the assaults that have been made upon them, or rather upon their Representative.

Now, a word as to the merits of the bill itself. I am convinced, Mr. Chairman, after candid and mature deliberation, that in point of fitness for the performance of the duties required of them by this bill the Army officers are at least the equal of the civil appointees under the present system. Indeed, I almost blush to pay so qualified a compliment to the honesty and intelligence of the Army.

Of the evils of the present system of Indian management, of the wrongs daily perpetrated upon both the Government and the helpless people whom it tries to benefit, of the disgrace heaped upon the nation by it, I need not speak on this occasion. Its history has been written in every journal in the land, sounded from every stump, and is being hourly recorded before an honorable committee of this House. It is a system which has thus far reflected no credit upon our Government. The people are not merely dissatisfied but thoroughly disgusted with its operations, nor will they be content with a measure looking to its elevation or purification only. They have given it a fair test and no good has come of it. They demand that it be wholly wiped out of our internal policy. In deference to this demand this bill has been framed and its passage is hopefully looked for by all who are on the frontier and speak from practical experience.

Mr. Chairman, there is no design in this bill to use force beyond what now exists. It is not contemplated by it or by any friend of it that there shall be stationed among the Indians any more soldiers than are now with them. In my humble judgment, among the civilized tribes no agent is necessary, and if one be required I can see no reason why an honest officer of the Army cannot conserve the interests of the Indians as well as a politician of questionable antecedents and doubtful or even fair reputation.

Among the wild tribes the presence of the Army is conceded by all to be absolutely necessary. Upon this point I beg to refer to my letter addressed to the gentleman in charge of this bill, [Mr. SPARKS,] embodied in the report accompanying it. I then said:

> Among the wild tribes the presence of the Army is required, and in the performance of their respective duties there is not unfrequently a confusion and even a conflict of jurisdiction between the civil and military authorities. Had the Army alone, and untrammeled by civil instructions, been charged with the duty of returning the rebellious Modocs to their reservation, had the matter been left wholly within the discretion of the commanding officer at Fort Klamath, Oregon, I believe the work could have been accomplished without war, without its expense, and without its sufferings. At all events, I doubt not, such steps would have been taken, such notice of the contemplated movement would have been given to the settlers, as would have averted the horrors of the Lost River massacre.

This view is sustained by General Ord and by other gentlemen of high and unquestionable standing. Whatever may have been the opinion of General Sherman in 1868, referred to by my good friend from Massachusetts, [Mr. SEELYE,] certain it is such is no longer his opinion. His present judgment is no doubt formed in the light of subsequent experience. He surely knows no less of the Indian than he did then, and doubtless better understands the present management of Indian affairs, and therefore favors this change. I repeat that it is not intended to increase the military force among the Indians; it is only designed to abolish an unnecessary, if not mischievous, Bureau of our Government. The Indians will not, cannot realize any change so far as coercion is concerned, and in other respects they will recognize, I hope and sincerely believe, a very great improvement.

It is idle to say that the Army favors war. It is contrary to nature, contrary to reason. One great purpose of an army is to preserve peace and prevent war. War means fight, and fight means danger, pain, death. A strong man may rejoice in his prowess, but I do not believe he would regard pummeling and bruising as absolutely pleasant. A soldier, when necessary, will no doubt endure all the danger, pain, suffering, and privation incident to actual war, but I cannot believe that he would encourage or develop the necessity thereof. Such conduct would be in the highest degree paradoxical. No, gentlemen, this bill is in the interest of peace and economy. I again refer to my letter to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPARKS:]

> It is the policy of the Government to preserve peace with the Indians. The presence of the military contributes to this end. An Indian recognizes and respects power. Understand me, I would not have "the wards of the nation" treated with inhumanity; they should not be treated harshly nor yet petted; they should not be cheated nor yet taught to live in idleness; their rights should be clearly defined and carefully respected; they should be taught to know what they are entitled to receive from the Government and what the Government will require of them; in short, they should be honestly, fairly, and firmly dealt with.

The Army officer has not or should not have any political purpose to subserve nor any political enemy to fear nor friend to reward. He feels his tenure of office secure so long and only so long as he honestly, honorably, fairly, and faithfully discharges his duty. The fact that his conduct, if criminal, is subject to the jurisdiction and examination of two tribunals, the civil and military, is an additional argument in favor of his employment in the capacity required by this bill. It is well worthy consideration that the Army punishes its officers for offenses not known to the criminal code, offenses against personal honor and gentlemanly propriety. The civilian may evade or escape the action of a grand jury or thwart its action by a doubtful petit jury. If an Army officer luckily thus far escapes he is still subject to the scrutinizing and careful examination of his brother-officers.

Much of the trouble arising under the present system is from mischievous white men who are allowed ready access to the Indian reservations, a privilege they would not be so likely to enjoy were the Army in charge. Military discipline and the rigorous law of the military camp are not congenial to the class who have done so much to engender evil among the Indian tribes. The average vagabond and adventurer who now so readily finds his way to the reservation would, in my opinion, give the military authorities a wide berth. There would be less whisky smuggled into the hands of the Indians, fewer of their people mistreated, and far less of low white men's vices introduced into their midst. In short, if we can keep the Indians on and worthless white men off the reservations, we shall have taken a great step toward the civilization of the Indian and the securing of peace on the border, and I know of no better means of accomplishing this than by the adoption of this measure.

But, Mr. Chairman, of still greater importance than any of these considerations, and one that in the present financial distress of our people appeals more strongly to our sense of duty, is the great question of economy. A more economical administration of governmental affairs is imperatively demanded by the people, and the success of this measure will go a long way toward the fulfillment of that desire. Even the opponents of this bill admit that a saving will thereby be effected of several millions per annum, and in the present condition of our country, with business prostration on all sides, with trade languishing and the tax-gatherer becoming a more and more unwelcome guest at our doors, it seems to me that the prospect of such a practical and direct economy is the very best argument in favor of this bill, and one that we cannot ignore. This amount of money if saved to the Treasury might be diverted into other channels looking to our national prosperity. With the present system much of the money expended in the Indian service is at best a mere means to the carrying out of an idea of no practical benefit to the country. A certain portion of the expenditure is, of course, unavoidable, and would have to be made under whatever system the Indians are managed, but let us cut off all that we can in that direction and apply it to some more useful and enlightened purpose. There are national improvements of incalculable importance to which this money might be applied with a certainty of rich returns in the future.

Speaking for my own State, I can say that the expenditure of a small proportion of the annual saving contemplated by this bill, upon the removal of the great obstacle to navigation in the Columbia River, which is now fastened like a tourniquet upon that great artery of trade and commerce in the far Northwest, would in a few years result in a benefit to the whole country which, if it could be computed in dollars and cents, would go no little distance toward maintaining our entire Indian service. We have upon the Pacific an extended seaboard with but few really safe and secure harbors. Some of the money saved by this measure and others thus far projected in the interest of economy could wisely and well be expended in the improvement of our harbors upon that coast. Commerce would thereby be encouraged, trade developed, the wealth of our country increased, and, best of all, ports of refuge would be secured to those brave men "who go down into the sea in ships" and encounter the perils thereof. Such legislation would respond not merely to the voice of wisdom but to the voice of humanity itself, and I profoundly hope will not long be denied us.

In my State, besides fields of gold and silver yet undeveloped, we have inexhaustible deposits of coal, great forests of magnificent timber, a soil so generous and rich that its productive capacity is wonderful to consider, and a climate so genial and friendly that roses bloom in winter even. Give us harbors, secure us communication with the world, and our prosperity would not merely gratify, but would surely astonish you. But this is a digression, and besides, I did not mean to occupy the time of this body beyond a few minutes. The arguments upon this subject have been able and exhaustive. They have left me nothing to suggest nor one word to add. I have listened to them attentively and have reached the conclusion that the Army officer is as well fitted to discharge the duties of an Indian agent as our modern civil appointee; that among those tribes with whom war can be apprehended the tendency of this measure will be to prevent it; that the work of civilization will not be retarded; that increased facilities will be secured to the missionary to prosecute his noble work; and that the true principles of economy, which should influence our action at this time, will be subserved.

Therefore, without hesitation or misgivings, I accord to this measure my earnest and cordial support.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, the natural diffidence that I should feel in addressing the committee is heightened by the remark of the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] "that the border is not a good place to study this Indian problem." The truth of the remark of the gentleman depends upon the basis upon which the problem is looked at. If the study of the problem is to be a practical one, and if the results of the study are to be from an actual knowledge of the facts, the border would seem to be a good place to make the study. But if the study is to be from the poets and romances, I doubt not that the city of New York and the Congressional Library would be the better field of study. And I cannot but think that if the distinguished gentleman [Mr. COX] when he emigrated from Ohio had traveled west instead of east he would have known more of the Indian, though he might have known less of him from the standpoint of romance. But, sir, with the disadvantage in the eyes of that gentleman of having some actual knowledge of the subject, I shall venture to say something on the question before the committee.

The bill now before the committee presents one of the most important questions that this House will have to deal with. And in its effect upon the Indian, upon the peace and prosperity of the border communities, and its economic features, as providing for the better administration of a service whose annual disbursements have reached the enormous sum of nearly $7,000,000, merits, and I doubt not will receive, the earnest consideration of the committee.

Favoring the transfer of the Indian Bureau to the War Department, I will endeavor to state the reasons for the change as they present themselves to my mind.

In the first place, I do not know that the failure of the present system is so much because it is based upon a false theory as that the officers administering its details have been in many instances unfit for their positions. But my own impression is that both causes have combined to make the present system, both as regards the protection of the Government and the civilization and Christianization of the Indians, a failure with but few if any exceptions.

The present system may be said to be based upon the theory of "moral suasion," and herein lies one of the main causes of its failure. The savage, or man in a state of nature, respects that man who is physically his superior; aggregated together as bands or tribes, they respect the band or tribe which is stronger and more warlike than their own. The history of the world in all ages shows that the first government of all savage and semi-civilized peoples has been a government of force and power. The American Indian is not different from other savage and semi-civilized people—he respects power; and when you appeal to his moral nature you appeal in vain. He has not sufficient development to understand that your attempts at conciliation and friendship come from kindness and good-will; but himself seeking to conciliate only those he fears, he believes that the attempts of the Government to conciliate the Indian are dictated by fear, and, as he pays tribute only to superior power, concludes that the agents pay tribute of beef, flour, and blankets only because the Indian is more powerful than the Government, and is consequently feared by it. Feeling this, he has no respect for his agent, who is in his eyes only a "squaw," and treats him in such manner as to show his own superiority; and the agent maintains his place, where not supported by military force, by bribing the Indians to do what they should be compelled to do as a matter of right.

Another prolific source of trouble is the lack of any enforcement of law upon the reservations to punish an Indian for offenses against the person or property of other Indians. And yet, sir, the Interior Department has had control of this matter since 1849. There will never be any substantial progress made in civilizing the Indian until he is made amenable to law. We all know that in every community there are always certain people who respect the rights of person and property of other persons, not from a sense of right, but from respect for the law and a fear of its penalties and punishments, and in the degree of honesty and vigor with which the law is administered to a very considerable extent depends the peace and good order of society. So with the Indian. A knowledge of the law and a fear of its penalties must be a prerequisite of peace and good order in the tribes. And I cannot but think it a disgrace to the Government and the Christian element which has cut so large a figure in the management of the Indian for the past few years that an Indian can to-day commit murder or any other crime against another Indian without fear of punishment, except it be by the Indians, and that he can escape punishment by them if he is only able to pay a sufficient number of ponies or other tribute to satisfy the relatives of the victim. And it is certainly not less disgraceful that they can murder white men and women without question or fear of punishment, can steal their property with impunity, and, carrying it upon their reservations, be protected in its possession even when the plundered owner personally identifies his property and demands its restoration to him; and the Government, protecting the Indian in his possession of the plunder, refuses to pay the citizen for the property in the larceny of which it is by its agents an accessory after the fact.

Such a system is a wrong to the Indian and a gross outrage upon the citizen, a wrong to the Indian, because it encourages lawlessness and puts a premium upon marauding, thus placing the Indian who desires to behave himself in a worse position than he who makes a business of theft and rascality; and an outrage upon the citizen, because one of the first duties of government is to protect in life and property the citizen. And I believe our own is the only government on the face of the earth pretending to be civilized which within its own borders allows an independent sovereignty to exist, and protects its members in the possession of property plundered from its own citizens, to whom it allows no right of recovery either by force or by law.

Mr. Chairman, another serious defect in the present system is that it fosters and encourages the tribal relation, which tends to keep alive the warlike feelings of the Indians. It may be taken for a settled fact that before any great progress can be made in the civilization and Christianization of the Indian his tribal relations must be broken up; he must be made to feel not that he is part of an aggregation, but that he is a man dependent upon himself and his own exertions, and that his prosperity and comfort will very largely depend upon his own industry and intelligence. Not only does the present system tend to strengthen and foster the tribal relation and the importance of a few Indians to the detriment of the many, but in the wild and semi-civilized tribes the individual who attempts to throw off the tribal relation and assert his individuality and rights of person and property must be protected in those rights by the strong arm of the Government, which is not vouchsafed him under the present system.

Again, the manner of selecting agents under the present system is radically wrong. A man is selected by the church not because he is known by the Indians nor because he is acquainted with the nature, capacity, characteristics, and prejudices of the Indian, but very largely because he is a member of some religious creed, and too often, I fear, because they make their religion or pretended religion a stock in trade to obtain positions where they not only wrong the Indians but deceive and bring reproach upon honest, God-fearing men, who in recommending them were actuated by an honest, earnest desire to benefit the Indian and serve the Government. Sir, the churches having the selection of these agents do not know what is needed to constitute a good agent. It is not sufficient that he should pray louder than his fellow-man or sanctimoniously roll his eyes and "thank God that he is not as other men," but he should be a man of executive capacity, of nerve and decision, who, knowing the nature and wants of the Indian, would protect him in all his rights and be equally firm in compelling the Indian to obey the requirements of the Government.

I give credit to the many earnest, honest men who have endeavored to serve the Government and the Indian under the present system by aiding the Government to select agents and employés for the Indian service. I do not believe that any great number of people occupying that advisory position have knowingly done wrong; but they have often been imposed upon by designing men who have sought the places for their own profit and advancement, the class of men who "steal the livery of the court of heaven to serve the devil in," and bring discredit and disgrace upon religion and its professors, and in wronging the poor Indian have not only weakened his faith in the white man, but also in his religion and his God. There has been too much hypocrisy and cant, and too little of earnest, honest faith in this humbug management of Indian affairs by the church; and necessarily so, Mr. Chairman, for it is an old adage "that what is everybody's business is nobody's business." The church management recommending these agents is too far away from the agencies to exercise a direct supervision over them; and Department and church each shelter themselves under the authority and control of the other, as freeing it from responsibility for the mismanagement and fraud of the agents.

Another great difficulty in the present system is the lack of any power in the Department or its agents to enforce the orders given the Indians. With the wild and semi-civilized tribes the agent cannot maintain himself without military force, and without it is utterly powerless to preserve any degree of order. By the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for 1874 it is stated that there are 98,108 wild Indians; or, to use the language of the report:

> Those that are wild and scarcely tractable to any extent beyond that of coming near enough to the Government agent to receive rations and blankets.

The total number of Indians reported as under charge of the Bureau by the report of 1875 is 278,963. Many of these Indians are only nominally under the charge of the Indian Bureau; so that it may be said, I think, fairly that of those supported and maintained by the Government fully one-half are wild and semi-civilized, who cannot be managed by the agents without the presence of the military to support and protect them. The wild Indian respects only power; his agent is to him not a soldier or a brave; he is only a civilian, a "squaw," who is not entitled to and does not receive his respect. If the agent wishes the Indian to obey any order he has no power to enforce it, and he resorts to presents and bribery to induce the Indian to do what, as a matter of right and for his own ultimate good, he should be compelled to do. If obliged to use force to enforce obedience the agent is compelled to call upon the military, and consequently the Indian respects that power which controls him, and not the civil department. At these agencies where troops are needed the agency cannot be carried on without their presence; and it is not an exaggeration to say that nearly one-half of the Indians cannot be managed without the support of the military arm, and that to the Indians who are thus controlled at least one-half of the annual appropriations are devoted.

And one fatal vice in the present system is the divided authority thus brought to view. The agent looks upon the military as opposed to the system he represents and the officers look upon the agent with unfriendliness and often suspicion. The agent does not treat the military authorities with the degree of consideration that they are entitled to, and often looks upon them as spies upon himself and the system he represents; while on the other hand the officers look upon the agent as the representative of a system they believe to be a fraud upon the Indian and the Government. The consequence is that neither receives from the other that confidence and support to which they may be entitled, thus impairing the efficiency of the service. There is a crying necessity for one responsible, undivided authority, and that authority must be, for the wild and semi-civilized tribes at least, the military; for as it is at present the Indian, seeing the division, respects neither branch of the service as he should do.

Mr. Chairman, for the reasons stated among others I am earnestly in favor of the transfer of the Indian Bureau to the War Department. But, exclaims some friend of the present system, the Indians should only be turned over to the War Department in case you intend to have war with them, and the Sherman peace commission so reported in 1868. The gentlemen who make this argument must know better —I cannot bring myself to the belief that they do not—and that by this cry they try to arouse prejudice against the transfer. What would be the result of a transfer at those agencies where troops are required to protect the agent? Would there be any more danger of war to make the military officer also agent for the Indian? Certainly not; and every one who knows anything practically of the question understands that it would diminish the danger of conflict, for the power which hands out rewards should also deal out the punishments, and the Army then would only be responsible for its own mistakes and for the wrongs which its officers should commit against the Indian, not for the mistakes and wrongs of officials and people over whom it has no control.

How would it be at these agencies where no troops are required? I do not understand that at such agencies it would be proposed to station troops, but only to make a change in the class of people from whom the agents are to be selected, instead of appointing incompetent, inefficient men who have failed in all the walks of private life, who have no experience in the command or control of men, or of some sharp, shrewd, unscrupulous man who will have one thought for the Indian and two for himself, and, in either event, men who know nothing of the Indian, his nature and characteristics, and consequently have no knowledge how to deal with him. You will appoint the agent from a class of educated gentlemen whose business it is to control and command men; and if the wise suggestion of the bill of the Committee on Military Affairs be adopted, "That no officer below the grade of first lieutenant shall be appointed agent," you will in all cases obtain a man of experience, who knows something practically of the problem with which he is to deal.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am not one of those who think that the only honest men in the country or the public service are those educated at West Point; but I do think this: that the present compensation of $1,500 per annum paid to Indian agents will not command the ability and integrity necessary to make the present system a success and that the experience of every man is that you take two men of equal capacity and integrity, place one in a position where he is liable to be removed at any time by political influence, and he is not as likely to be honest and to have the moral stamina to stand up against power and corruption as the other man, whose tenure of office is for life if he shall be honest and reputable, and that the last-mentioned will be the best public servant, even if the compensations of the two men are the same. But all must concede that the record of our Army officers is exceptionally bright, so far as honesty and integrity are concerned, which is an additional reason in my mind for desiring to see the change made.

Many friends of the present system oppose this transfer because they think that to place the Indians in the control of the Army would be to hand them over to licentiousness and debauchery, and to quickly remove them from the face of the earth, from horrible and loathsome disease, which it is thought follows in the wake of the Army. I do not believe this, but, on the contrary, do believe that the change would be a protection to the Indian in this respect. My belief is that the Indians are as much debauched by disreputable white men living among them as by the soldiers; that the transfer would give the military control of this element which the agent cannot or will not control, and that the military having control of both Indian and soldier, will be enabled to exercise a supervision over the morals and conduct of both which is now impossible. And at those agencies where a support of troops is not required, there certainly would be no more danger to the morals of the Indians, from the presence of an Army officer as agent, than from the presence of the present class of agents.

Mr. Chairman, the difference of opinion existing on this question by disinterested persons is very largely the difference between those with actual personal knowledge of the subject and those who theorize upon it. Let us see whether this be true. I look through the testimony taken by the committees in regard to this transfer, and with scarcely an exception those who have practical knowledge of the subject favor the transfer. Of course, the agents and inspectors and others employed under the present system do not favor a change which will legislate them into the ranks of private life.

In this connection I desire to call the attention of the committee to the testimony before the Committee on Indian Affairs of General John B. Sanborn, a member of the Sherman commission of 1867 and 1868, to be found on pages 27, 28, and 29 of the report, which is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 7, 1876.

SIR: In response to your request I make the following brief statement:

My personal acquaintance with the Indians and with Indian character commenced in 1855 and has been continuous since. My official acquaintance or connection with them commenced in the winter of 1861-'62. I was then in the military service commanding the frontiers of Minnesota, and continued so to command until April, 1862. The next service rendered in this connection was in July, 1865, when I commenced and conducted a campaign against the Comanches, Kiowas, Cheyennes, Arapahoes, and Apaches of the Upper Arkansas. This campaign terminated in the treaty with these tribes, made in November of that year, at the mouth of the Little Arkansas. From the date of the consummation of this treaty I was on duty in the Indian Territory, under instructions from President Johnson and Secretary Harlan, to settle the difference between the slave-holding tribes of the Indian Territo y and their former slaves, and to establish peaceful relations between them. This service continued until June, 1866.

In February, 1867, I went to the plains again to visit the Sioux Indians, as commissioner, to ascertain the cause of the Phil. Kearney massacre of that winter, and from this date was continuously in the service and among the Indians until October 12, 1868, when the Sherman-Harney commission dissolved. During this time we made treaties with the Apaches of the Arkansas, Cheyennes, Arapahoes, Kiowas and Comanches, Navajoes, Snakes or Shoshones, Mountain Crows, Northern Cheyennes, and Northern Arapahoes, and with the Ogallalla, Minneconjou, Oncpapa, Sans Arc, Blackfeet, Brûlé, Santee, and Yanktonnais bands of the Sioux tribe or nation, and held conferences with many tribes and bands with whom we did not conclude treaties, and all this time I made the Indian question a constant study, learning all possible from the officers who had spent their lives among them, and from the Indians themselves, and from history and official reports, and from personal observations, as to the workin; of our system of dealing with them and managing their affairs.

The question was found by me, as it will be by all who study it, a most complex and difficult one; and at different times I came to different conclusions. But, after the most careful consideration of the subject in all its bearings, my conclusions, in common with those of all the members of that commission, were expressed in the resolutions adopted by the board in Chicago, October 11, 1868, and found on page [reference given heretofore] of the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, of 1868-'69, Taylor, then Commissioner, dissenting from the resolution recommending the transfer of the Bureau to the War Department.

It is, perhaps, sufficient for me to state that I still adhere to all the propositions contained in those resolutions; and, in my opinion, upon no one of them does so much depend, both as concerns the Indians and the Government, as upon that one recommending the transfer of the Indian Bureau to the War Department. This is essential to the successful administration of Indian affairs, for the following reasons:

The Interior Department has no power to protect the Indians on their reservations from the depredations of each other or from the incursions of our people; and that feeling of security and protection in the products of labor and of certainty that the party producing shall enjoy them, so essential to the cultivation of habits of industry and civilization, must always be wanting, as it always has been, under this administration of the Interior Department; while full security, protection, and encouragement could and would be afforded under the War Department.

The short space of time allowed a savage people, in the present state of insecurity, to change their mode of life from that of a savage to that of a civilized people renders it absolutely necessary that the children of savage people should be educated at once in the arts and languages of the civilized people. Without compulsion, all history shows that this is the work of several generations, and that compulsion in this respect is absolutely necessary in the case of our Indians.

The Interior Department can do nothing by compulsion, while the War Department can effect everything possible by this means.

Under the Interior Department the manner of dealing with and conducting Indian affairs varies more or less with the changes of administrations and officers, which is most detrimental to this kind of service, the Indians being at a loss to know oftentimes what the purposes and aims of the Government are concerning them; while, under the War Department, the officers holding their commissions during good behavior, the policy would be uniform and rigorous, and the power of the Government always felt and respected, and its purposes would be always plainly understood and promptly acceded to.

4. The system of procuring, transporting, and issuing supplies to the Indians would be much more systematically and economically done under the War Department. Issuing supplies to the large wild tribes, as now done, is and must remain under the present system an egregious farce. It amounts to little more or less in all cases than a depredation by Indians. They determine the amount they will have and make the demand oftentimes, and, if not acceded to, take what they have demanded and go away; so there is always the greatest disparity between the number of rations issued and the number of Indians to be fed, the rations oftentimes being more than double the number of Indians in camp.

5. Their irregular and wild habits are cultivated under this system, while under a regular system, enforced by the power and discipline of the War Department, regular and civilized habits in this respect would result.

6. Under a regular, well-established system of the War Department, all future wars with Indians would be avoided, their civilization and education rapidly promoted, protection in the products of their labor would be secured, the Treasury saved in the expenses of the War and Interior Departments to the extent, in my judgment, of fully ten millions per annum as an average amount, the safety of the frontiers be assured, and the welfare of both Indians and whites promoted in every respect, and no one of existing evils increased, while many would cease altogether.

To give the events in the history of our management of Indian affairs, the observations and results of study that have led me to the foregoing conclusions, would prolong this communication to an unreasonable length. That the transfer of the Bureau to the War Department would be most advantageous to the service in all respects, I have no doubt. And I cannot believe that any disinterested person can give the subject a full and careful consideration and come to any different conclusion.

The success of the War Department in this branch of service from 1789 to 1849, the massacres, the enormous expense in the management of their affairs since 1860, our unsatisfactory relations with all the large tribes, the continued savage character and barbarity of many of the Indian tribes, all point to one conclusion, and that our Indian affairs are not managed as properly and wisely now as they were under the War Department or as they would be now under the same Department.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN B. SANBORN.

Hon. W. A. J. SPARKS,
Chairman Subcommittee on Indian Affairs.

Let us take a special instance of the success of the present system, and examine the progress of the Sioux, who are located upon what may be termed the Dakota reservation. Since the making of the treaty of 1868 there has been furnished for the support of that people in round figures $13,000,000. Surely such a lavish expenditure of money must have carried the Sioux Nation a long distance upon the hard road to civilization, industry, and self-support. Now, sir, what is the fact? I should hardly dare to state the truth for fear of being charged with prejudice and misstatement, but there is testimony upon this subject to which I beg to call the attention of the committee. The commission of which Senator ALLISON, of Iowa, was chairman, sent during the past summer to effect negotiations with the Sioux tribes, use the following language upon page 11 of their report:

From all the evidence derived from agents, employés, and the Indians themselves, the commission is of opinion that the annual value of all the products secured by cultivation of the soil by the Indians at the several agencies would not exceed $5,000 per annum for the last six years. In this estimate we do not include the products of the Santees or the Yanktons, neither of which tribes resides on the Sioux reservation. And the commission is of opinion that if the present policy is continued the results of the next six years will not differ materially from those of the last. Indeed, the commission very much doubts whether enough has been raised in the aggregate to re-imburse the annual appropriations made for the salaries and expenses of the farmers employed by the Government at the various agencies.

Again, on page 14, the commission say, in speaking of the problem in reference to these Indians:

Nearly seven years have passed away and these Indians are no nearer a condition of self-support than they were when the treaty was signed; and in the mean time the Government has expended nearly $13,000,000 for their support. So that the future treatment of the Sioux becomes a matter of serious moment, if viewed from no higher stand-point than that of an economic question.

The commission state no more than the truth upon this subject. The Sioux have not made progress in civilization and industry; they are idle, lazy, and vicious, spending their time in horse-racing, gambling, dancing, and the practice of the barbarous rites of their tribes and societies. Labor is beneath the dignity of a male Indian; after he is fourteen or fifteen years of age he will not even saddle his own pony, which must be done by the women of the family when in camp. When the supplies furnished by the Government are issued, he will not even condescend to to carry them home, but the squaws must do all such menial labor. He is a mendicant, and never will labor until compelled to do so by compulsion or dire necessity.

Again let me call attention to the same report, on page 12, speaking of the Indians at the Red Cloud and Spotted Tail agencies:

For the reasons just stated, and for others equally obvious to any who will visit their country, but not within our province to discuss, no progress whatever has been made toward civilization or self-support at either of these agencies, or among the tribes receiving their rations and annuities at these agencies, during the last six years, unless we should call progress that dependence which makes the Indian rely upon the Government rather than the chase, or labor for the necessaries of life. During these six years, whatever of food, clothing, or shelter they have had has been provided by appropriations from the National Treasury, and the Indians have done absolutely nothing but eat, drink, smoke, and sleep, except indulging each day in the healthful exercise of horseback riding, (each Indian having at least one pony,) and at intervals, for diversion, engage in a hunt to the north or south. They regard labor as disreputable and disgraceful, unless performed by the women of the tribes, who do the necessary drudgery. It occurs to the commission that so large an annual expenditure of public money, with so feeble results, is expensive and unremunerative to the United States and to the Indians. As long as the present methods continue, very large annual expenditures will be required, but not so large as heretofore, if better methods for issuing supplies should be adopted.

These Indians cannot, in my opinion, be civilized under the present system, but force will have to be used at least in the commencement, and if the plea "that it is cheaper to feed these Indians than to fight them" is to be the pretext for supporting the Indian in idleness and vice, that man is not yet born who will see the Indian self-supporting; for if this tribute from our Government to the Indian is to continue until he voluntarily becomes self-supporting, it will continue for all time.

Sir, this matter of the support of the Indian in idleness is becoming a matter of grave moment. How long the people of the country will consent to submit to taxation in order that the Indian may remain a non-producer and a burden upon the industry of the country may soon be an important practical question. Does the country realize the cost of the present system? By the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for the year 1875, page 28, it will be found that there have been appropriated for the fiscal years from 1870 to 1876, both inclusive, the sum of $43,608,332.72; and that if the appropriation for the present fiscal year shall be expended (and the Commissioner estimates that there will be a deficiency of $200,000) there will have been expended for the fiscal years from 1870 to 1876 the amount of $42,870,744.24; that there is a deficiency of $495,001.23, making a total expenditure of $43,365,745.47, or an average annual expenditure of $6,195,106.50. But in addition to this there has been expended from interest on trust funds, sale of lands, &c., the further sum of $3,613,237.37, or a grand total of $46,978,982.84, or an average annual expenditure from all sources of $6,712,711.83.

And what are the results of this lavish and generous expenditure of money? Is the result commensurate with the cost? Sir, I think not. A few of the Indians may in some degree have improved, but the great bulk of them are idlers and vagrants. The Indians have not become rich under the present system, whoever else may have done so.

Mr. Chairman, the present Bureau is confessedly unable to manage the purchase and disbursements of the Indian supplies. The late Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in his report for 1875, on pages 20 and 21, says:

There is, however, a sphere of service now undertaken by this Bureau which might, to its great relief, be transferred to the War Department. The supplies of clothing and subsistence required to be purchased for the Indian service amounts to about $2,000,000. Much the larger portion of this sum is expended in purchasing for the Sioux and several other tribes a few articles in large amounts. The Indian Bureau has never had an adequate appointment for making such large purchases and for transportation of the articles to the distant parts of the country. The Quartermaster and Commissary Departments of the Army have such appointments in complete organization, through which the War Department would be able to purchase, inspect, and transport the goods and supplies required to subsist Indians and fulfill the treaty obligations with much more regularity and system than is possible for this Bureau as at present organized; and while a comparison of purchases made by the Army with those made by the Indian Bureau of the same article at the same place does not indicate that the transfer will on the whole tend to economy of funds, but rather otherwise, it will yet tend to allay suspicion, and will furnish checks and tests for ready application whenever charges of fraud in the service are made, either on good grounds or for partisan or selfish purposes, or by persons of repute and acting in good faith, who are themselves victims of such purposes on the part of others. If it shall be deemed advisable to transfer this portion of the service to the War Department, rather than to furnish the additional clerical equipments necesssary for its proper administration in the Indian Bureau, I would respectfully recommend for the consideration of the honorable Secretary the procurement of such legislation as will allow the President in his discretion to direct that any portion of this service of buying and transporting Indian goods and supplies be performed by the War Department. But, if the transfer suggested is made without lodging this discretionary power in the President, it should be limited in its operations to the purchasing and forwarding of supplies of which the value of any one class of articles at any one agency shall exceed the sum of $1,000. This limitation is quite important in order to allow the disbursement through the agent of such limited amount of funds as may be required in purchase of articles for immediate use in cases where delay would be damaging to all interests concerned.

Why has not this Bureau a sufficient force of clerks and an efficient system of checks by which it can manage these matters? It has had charge and control of this matter for twenty-six years, and during that time, including the present fiscal year, if the appropriation for this year be all used, it will have disbursed the immense sum of $115,149,385.76, which amount is stated from the best attainable data. Since 1869 it has certainly had the most liberal apprporiations, and should certainly have had a sufficient clerical force to be able to keep as good a system of checks and balances as the Army.

If the agents of this Bureau cannot be trusted to purchase and issue the supplies of food and clothing to the Indian, then in my opinion they ought not to be trusted with the control of those people for any purpose; and if the War Department has to be charged with the purchase and issue of the supplies, then it should be charged with the entire duty of caring for and controlling the Indian.

But the Commissioner is not alone in this recommendation that some other authority should control the purchase and issue of supplies. The commission of which Senator ALLISON was chairman, in the recommendations contained in their report upon this subject, and the incidental one which cannot be separated from it of the honest administration of the present system, on page 18, use the following language in stating their conclusions:

Fourth. That all supplies be issued under the direct supervision of officers of the Army, and that detailed reports of quality and quantity and cost be published annually.

Fifth. Abolish all the present agencies, and re-organize the whole system of officers and agencies for the Sioux Nation, and provide such compensation to officers and agents as will command, if not secure, fidelity and competency.

The commission to investigate the affairs at the Red Cloud agency in their report recommend that Army officers be detailed to inspect supplies, &c.

But, say those opposed to this transfer, to turn the Indians over to the War Department is to put a stop to their education and to close their schools; for the Army officers will not become teachers, and such is not their business. It is well known that the present agents are not the teachers at the different agencies, and that their only duty with reference to the schools is a supervisory one, the teachers being different persons from the agents. And the Army officer is certainly as well qualified as the average agent to exercise a supervisory control over the schools, or even to act as an educator; for I believe those same officers are from time to time detailed as superintendent and instructors at West Point, where as high a degree of intelligence and education is supposed to be required as at an Indian school. If the Army officer is fitted to instruct and superintend the instruction of the youth the country educates for its service at its Military Academy, we are in no danger of turning the Indian over to ignorance by making change of an Army officer to replace the present Indian agent.

Mr. Chairman, whenever the idea is suggested of transferring control of the Indian to the War Department, we are told that if such transfer is made we must needs fight the Indian, and that it will cost a million dollars for each Indian killed, &c., ad nauseam. And then we are cited to the report of the Sherman peace commission of 1867-'68, as follows:

This brings us to consider the much-mooted question whether the Indian Bureau should belong to the civil or military department of the Government. To determine this properly we must first know what is to be the future treatment of the Indians. If we intend to have war with them the Bureau should go to the Secretary of War. If we intend to have peace it should be in the civil department. In our judgment such wars are wholly unnecessary, and hoping that the Government and the country will agree with us we cannot now advise the change. It is possible that, in despite our efforts to maintain peace, war may be forced on us by some tribe or tribes of Indians. In the event of such occurrence it may be well to provide, in the revision of the intercourse laws or elsewhere, at what time the civil jurisdiction shall cease and the military jurisdiction begin. If thought advisable, also, Congress may authorize the President to turn over to the military the exclusive control of such tribes as may be continually hostile or unmanageable. Under the plans which we have suggested, the chief duties of the Bureau will be to educate and instruct in the peaceful arts; in other words, to civilize the Indians. The military arm of the Government is not the most admirably adapted to discharge duties of this character. We have the highest possible appreciation of the officers of the Army and fully recognize their proverbial integrity and honor; but we are satisfied that not one in a thousand would like to teach Indian children to read and write or Indian men to sow and reap. These are emphatically civil and not military occupations.

But it is insisted that the present Indian service is corrupt, and this change should be made to get rid of the dishonest. That there are many bad men connected with the service cannot be denied. The records are abundant to show that agents have pocketed the funds appropriated by the Government and driven the Indians to starvation. It cannot be doubted that Indian wars have originated from this cause. The Sioux war in Minnesota is supposed to have been produced in this way. For a long time these officers have been selected from partisan ranks, not so much on account of honesty or qualification as for devotion to party interests and their willingness to apply the money of the Indians to promote the selfish schemes of local politicians. We do not doubt that some such men may be in the service of the Bureau now; and this leads us to suggest that Congress pass an act fixing a day (not later than the 1st of February, 1869) when the offices of all superintendents, agents, and special agents shall be vacated. Such persons as have proved themselves competent and faithful may be re-appointed. Those who have proved unfit will find themselves removed without an opportunity to divert attention from their own unworthiness by professions of party zeal.

That report was made on the 7th day of January, 1868, and is the unanswerable argument of the friends of the present system. It is familiar. Since I have been in this House it has become as familiar as household words, and the old friend turns up again in the report presented to this Congress by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for 1875, and is to be found on pages 18 and 19 of the Commissioner's report. And in this case, as in all others where I have heard and seen it used, the impression is sought to be created that that extract contains the final matured judgment of the Sherman commission upon the subject. Let us examine whether such be the fact.

The commission was created by an act of Congress approved July 20, 1867, and organized on the 6th day of August, 1867, and during the remainder of the year was engaged in visits to the Indians.

The commission, however, continued in existence during the year 1868, or a large portion of that year, and was in the Indian country in performance of its duties, negotiating during that year the treaty with the Sioux Indians at Fort Laramie.

The commission held a meeting at Chicago, Illinois, on the 9th day of October, 1868, and adopted a series of resolutions which were to constitute their report, and which are to be found on page 371 of the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for the year 1868.

WASHINGTON CITY, December 11, 1868.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a copy of the resolutions adopted by the Indian peace commission at a meeting held in Chicago, Illinois, on the 9th day of October last. These resolutions constitute the report of said commission, which I was directed, on their behalf, to submit to you.

With great respect, your obedient servant,

N. G. TAYLOR.
President of the Indian Peace Commission.

The PRESIDENT of the United States.

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, October 9, 1868.

The PRESIDENT of the United States:

At a meeting of the Indian peace commission held this day the following resolutions, embodying the views of the commission, were adopted, to wit:

Resolved, That this commission recommend to the President of the United States and Congress that full provisions be at once made to feed, clothe, and protect all Indians of the Crow, Blackfeet, Piegan, Gros Ventres, Sioux, Ponca, Cheyenne, Arapaho, Apache, Kiowa, and Comanche Nations of Indians, who now have located, or may hereafter locate, permanently on their respective agricultural reservations.

Resolved, That the treaties of said tribes with United States, whether ratified or not, should be considered to be and remain in full force as to all Indians of such tribes as now have or may hereafter have their homes upon the agricultural reservations described in their respective treaties, and no others.

Resolved, That in the opinion of this commission the time has come when the Government should cease to recognize the Indian tribes as "domestic dependent nations," except so far as it may be required to recognize them as such by existing treaties and by treaties made but not yet ratified; that hereafter all Indians should be considered and held to be individually subject to the laws of the United States, except where and while it is otherwise provided in said treaties, and that they should be entitled to the same protection from said laws as other persons owing allegiance to the Government enjoy.

Resolved, That the recent outrages and depredations committed by the Indians of the plains justify the Government in abrogating those clauses of the treaties made in October, 1867, at Medicine Lodge Creek, which secure to them the right to roam and hunt outside their reservations; that all said Indians should be requested to remove at once to said reservations and remain within them, except that after peace shall have been restored, hunting parties may be permitted to cross their boundaries with written authority from their agent or superintendent; and

Resolved further, That military force should be used to compel the removal into said reservations of all such Indians as may refuse to go after due notice has been given to them that provision has made to feed and protect them within the same.

Resolved, That in the opinion of this commission the Bureau of Indian Affairs should be transferred from the Department of the Interior to the Department of War.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, your obedient servant,

N. G. TAYLOR,
President of the Indian Peace Commission.

Attest:

A. S. H. WHITE, Secretary.

And by reference to the statement of General John B. Sanborn before the Committee on Indian Affairs it will be seen that every member of the commission with the exception of Hon. N. G. Taylor, then Commissioner of Indian Affairs, agreed to the adoption of the resolutions just read, which, as the maturer judgment of the commission, virtually repudiated the report of January 7, 1868. So much for the truth of history and to put to rest this old "dress-parade" report of the advocates of the present system.

Mr. Chairman, I trust the committee will incorporate in any bill which shall pass the provision of the bill of the Committee on Military Affairs that no officer under the grade of first lieutenant shall be appointed an Indian agent, or a provision in lieu thereof that no officer of less than five years' service shall be such agent. This will secure experience. That the recommendation of the Military Committee in reference to a sufficient clerical force under the Secretary of War be adopted, and that no Bureau of Indian Affairs be created in the War Department for the present at least, but the largest control given to the Secretary of War and the department commanders; that traderships be open to all persons giving bonds and complying with the intercourse laws. We find competition beneficial to our own people and monopoly injurious to them; therefore let us give the Indian the benefit of free trade and competition.

Prevent the sale of arms and ammunition to the wild and semi-civilized Indians, and absolutely prohibit the sale to them of intoxicating liquor.

Abolish the peace commission, which is of no earthly benefit, and hold the officers charged with the management of affairs to a strict and rigid accountability. The present system divides the responsibility without any corresponding benefit.

Open all agencies and reservations to the missionary and Christianizing efforts of all religious denominations; let the Indian worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience; and let the control of the Indian by the churches depend not upon the matter of chance of appointment to and division of the agencies among the different denominations, but let it depend upon the honesty, integrity, ability, and earnest faith of those commissioned to preach the Gospel to the Indian, and let us give equal support and opportunity to all denominations and creeds to carry the word of life to these poor people, and we may rest assured that the result will be in favor of that denomination which displays in the character of its propagandists the most singleness of heart and the most earnest devotion to duty, who look not for their reward here, but leave it to the great hereafter.

Mr. Chairman, let us make this good beginning, turn over the control of the Indian to the War Department; let us treat him with honesty and fairness, and in return compel good order and obedience. Break up the tribal relation, and protect the Indian in his individual right of property. Make him amenable to law, and punish him for crime. Discontinue the system of immense reservations, and especially of the right to hunt outside the reservations, and divide the lands in severalty among the Indians. Encourage industry, and stop making a vagabond of the Indian. Where he will labor voluntarily, well and good; but where he is averse to it, compel industry by the necessary force. Cease to treat the Indian as a superior being, and place him upon the same plane and under the same restraints that you would any other human being of no greater capacity and intelligence.

The change to the War Department will be, in addition to its other recommendations, a measure of economy. We shall be able to dispense with the present force of inspectors, superintendents, agents, &c., and use in their place Army officers, who can be detailed for such duties without any increase of force or cost. Supplies can be purchased under the supervision of the officers of the Quartermaster's and Subsistence Departments, who are experienced in their business. And the proposed system of awarding such contracts at the same times and places as those for the Army will do away with the present annual letting at New York of all contracts in connection with the Indian service, which makes possible combinations to control the entire purchases of the Bureau. The transportation of supplies can be made in connection with those of the Army and the cost thereby reduced. But above all merely monetary considerations will be the belief in the country that this important service is being honestly administered.

I do not propose to follow the gentleman [Mr. SEELYE] through his history of the Indian wars, but desire simply to call attention to his remarks in reference to the Sioux war of 1866, which is attributed to the fault of Major General Pope in establishing the posts of Reno, Phil. Kearney, and C. F. Smith in the Sioux country in violation of solemn treaty obligations. This is a serious charge to lay at the door of the officer named. But the facts are not as stated by the gentleman, [Mr. SEELYE,] who has been misinformed in reference to this matter. The posts of Reno, Phil. Kearney, and C. F. Smith were not established in the Sioux country or in country ever prior to that time recognized by treaty as theirs. The posts were established in the Crow country for the protection of the Crows from the Sioux and the protection of the overland emigration to Montana, and while the posts remained the Crows continued in the country.

But the gentleman seems to think that justice was eventually done when the treaty was made abandoning those posts and the country. I must be allowed to differ from the gentleman and to express the opinion that there is not in our history a more imbecile and contemptible page than that which records the closing of that road to Montana, and the abandonment of the posts of Reno, Phil. Kearney, and C. F. Smith. Do I state the case too strongly? Let the facts adjudge. The posts were established by undoubted right. In maintaining the posts and keeping the road open more than two hundred soldiers and citizens were killed, notable among the actions being the massacre of Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel Fetterman and ninety-one officers and men at Fort Phil. Kearney; and yet after that the commission of 1868, before any chastisement had been inflicted upon the Sioux, allowed themselves to be dragooned into the closing of the road and the abandonment of the posts. Surely it was not called a "peace commission" without cause.

The mistake then made has left its baneful effect upon the Indian to this day. The Indian abandons a country only in the face of overwhelming force. And when our Army abandoned the posts, the Indians supposed that they were abandoned because the Indian was stronger than the Army and was consequently feared by it. And the difficulties with the Sioux to-day are largely due to the ideas of their superiority to the Army and the Government, inculcated by the cowardly conduct of the Government in abandoning its military posts. It is a disgraceful page of our history, and should cause us to hang our heads in shame. Let me draw the picture of the abandonment of Fort Phil. Kearney. The post having been established, in defending it Fetterman and his comrades had lain down their lives. And yet the day came when the flag was lowered and trailed in the dust and dishonored; the brave men who had maintained it in that wilderness, turning their backs upon the four or five thousand naked and painted savages howling around them, left that post and abandoned the country, the Indians following and taunting them as cowards. Sir, it was a disgrace which should cause the blush of shame to mantle the cheek of every man who loves his country and respects its honor, and especially of every man who has ever followed his country's flag.

Mr. Chairman, I give full credit to the honesty of purpose of the distinguished gentlemen who so ably oppose this transfer; but, sir, I cannot but feel that they are mistaken as to the ultimate result upon the Indian. There is no use in disguising the fact that the "noble savage" of Cooper and of romance is a myth. The wild and semi-civilized Indian of to-day whom we have to deal with is a lazy, indolent savage, whose highest ambition is to take a scalp, and his next to steal a horse; quick to learn all the bad habits of the white man, but emulating none of his virtues.

We are told that they were the original owners of this vast continent, of which they have been robbed. The Indian has been pushed back, because civilization could not stand still on his account; the fiat had gone forth that this great continent must be redeemed from savage dominion, and the misfortune of the Indian has been that he could not accommodate himself to the changed condition of affairs. And now there is no hope for his future unless he can accommodate himself to the demands of civilization, and become an industrious, self-supporting member of society; the inexorable wave of emigration is surrounding him on all sides; he cannot escape it; he must adapt himself to it or succumb. No portion of this country can long remain peopled one-half by our own people and one-half by savages; one of them must give place to the other.

The Indian is becoming demoralized and pauperized under the present system; let us make one more effort to lift him from his indolence and degradation, by the strong arm if need be.

Mr. Chairman, the condition of the frontier country is such that no system of government for the Indian should be adopted which, while it provides for the protection of the Indian, does not also provide for the protection of the settler upon the frontier. Settlement has so surrounded the Indians that the question of their government cannot be settled without looking to the interest and well-being of the entire section of country in which they may be located. The tax-paying, producing settler is as much entitled to the protection of the Government as the tax-eating, non-producing Indian. While the reservations are homes for the Indians, they should not be "houses of refuge" for them, in which they will be protected after murdering and robbing the settler. The experience of the people of Wyoming Territory has been that the Indians have committed gross outrages upon them, murdering their citizens and stealing their property with impunity and without punishment. And they think it the duty of the Government to protect them as well as the Indian. And their experience is the experience of all frontier peoples. If it is the object to protect both Indian and settler, that object can best be accomplished by the transfer of the Indian Bureau to the War Department.

Mr. Chairman, something has been said by the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] and other gentlemen, during this debate, as to the feeling of the border people upon this Indian question; and it has been broadly intimated that they are a vindictive, desperate people, who desire the extermination of the Indian. This is not true. The border people want no war; their wives, mothers, sisters, and little ones are their hostages for peace and good order. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] grew eloquent over the wrongs of the Indians and told us of the massacres of them by soldiers and border men; but, sir, he failed to tell us of the horrible and inhuman atrocities which, long continued by his Indian friends, at last driving the white man to frenzy and almost despair, brought down upon the Indian the condign punishments he has mentioned.

There are two sides to this question. The border settlers with their malignity and hate have not always been in fault, and the gentle Christian Indian has not always had clean hands in reference to these matters. Sir, I do not know that the western people need any vindication at my hands; their courage, enterprise, and industry are their best vindication. They are pioneers; the class of men who have made this country what it is; who, crossing the Alleghanies, have carried their country's flag across a continent, subduing the wilderness in their course, with the graves of their friends and comrades murdered by the Indian marking their path on the prairie like mile-stones, until the folds of that flag have been kissed by the breezes of the grand Pacific. It is such as they who have builded up this country, and developed its almost boundless resources. They are to-day the best representatives of American enterprise and industry, who going into the wilderness have carried with them the church, the school-house, and civilization. I know those people to be true-hearted, generous, and brave; and I know that they are entitled to more consideration in this House than by implication and innuendo to be branded as desperadoes and murderers who have no regard for the rights of others.

[Mr. LUTTRELL addressed the committee. His speech will appear in the Appendix.]

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Chairman, I would not under any circumstances have taken part in this debate but for the fact that several gentlemen, taking for their theme the atrocities perpetrated upon the Indians, have seen fit to draw into this controversy a transaction which to a certain extent, I may say to a very large extent, is regarded as reflecting upon a portion of the people whom I represent upon this floor. I refer to what gentlemen have been pleased to term, and what is known in the Indian reports, as the "Chivington massacre."

Certainly if members who are opposed to transferring the management of the Indians to the War Department had read the history of that affair, under no circumstances could they charge whatever wrong it may have involved to the Department of War. As a matter of course it was a warlike act; men and women were killed; but it was not the result of any action of the War Department, nor can it be legitimately used as an argument to show that the proposed transfer of Indian affairs should not be made.

It is a matter of history that the men who were engaged in that contest were volunteers who, banding themselves together under the call of the governor of the Territory, placed themselves under command of a man named Chivington; and, under a general order of the governor to pursue, capture, and kill all hostile Indians then in the Territory, this affair occurred. Indeed, sir, before this regiment started from the city of Denver to the scene of hostilities it had in no manner been recognized by the War Department; for it is also a matter of history that time and time again, before the governor of the Territory issued his proclamation for the organization of this regiment, he had called upon the War Department for authority to enlist men for the purpose of protecting the women and children of the Territory from Indian barbarities; and his appeals to the War Department had fallen cold, had received no response.

On account of that failure of the War Department to respond, the governor of the Territory, having under his charge the protection of the property and lives of its citizens, felt constrained to call upon the brave men of the Territory to band together for the purpose of protecting property and life. Under such circumstances that Third Regiment of Colorado Volunteers bound themselves together under a solemn obligation to keep off the bands of Indian warriors who had been filling the plains for months before, not only with robbery, but with murder and outrages of the most barbarous and diabolical description.

Having, Mr. Chairman, so far as I have been able, taken the responsibility of this affair off the shoulders of the Department of War, I desire now to say one word with reference to the condition of affairs in the Territory which led to what is termed the Chivington massacre. Gentlemen who have spoken of it have seen fit to designate Black Kettle's band of Cheyenne Indians as friendly, as a band of Indians at that time at peace with the whites. On the contrary, sir, it is and was in testimony before the congressional committee sent to the Territory for the purpose of making investigation that that and other bands and tribes of Indians were upon the Colorado plains and in the Colorado mountains carrying murder, rapine, and robbery to the home of every unprotected frontiersman within their reach; ay, even to the very gates of Denver. I have listened until my blood fairly curdled at the horrible stories which have been related here by gentlemen who have set themselves up as the especial champions against the wrongs which have been committed upon the Indians, while but very few words, if any at all, have been spoken of the atrocities and barbarities, the crimes and the murders, committed upon the white settlers, the frontiermen and their wives and children, by these same Indians now so earnestly championed upon this floor.

I have sat in the city of Denver and heard the men who went there prior to the year 1864 speak of the horrible sights which were brought to their notice but a few months before what is termed the Chivington massacre. I have heard an old settler describe a scene he witnessed upon the streets of Denver when a cart was driven into the principal street of the city, with the naked bodies of the victims of these Indians, where men were stripped naked, their privates severed from their bodies and placed in their mouths, a horrid spectacle to present to the men, women, and children of the border. Ay, and women seized, first ravished and then murdered, and children having their brains dashed out in the presence of their parents. Yet, forsooth, these things are no palliation in the eyes of these men for the scenes that afterward transpired, and which none more regretted than the men who at the time took part in this affair.

Why, Mr. Chairman, it would be well if these champions of the red men of the forest, as they poetically term them, could place themselves for a few months in the place of the frontiermen of the Territory of Colorado of that day. Let them have their little cabin out on the frontier, let them have perhaps their herd of cattle, or their patch of ground surrounded with a fence, and by means of the hunt and farm endeavor to make a living for themselves and their families, and of a sudden, without any premonition, have a band of these marauding savages come upon them in the night-time, applying the torch to the cabin, taking out the wife, ravishing her in their sight, then destroying her and her children, leaving the husband and father with all the fond recollections and all the fond hopes of life blasted forever to wander abroad in the land. Then have a number of those men meet together and recount their wrongs, have their victims brought into the streets of the capital city of the Territory, have these men refused the protection due them from the Government when they called for troops to keep these red devils off from their homes, have these men band themselves together under a proclamation of the governor, for the purpose of meeting hostile Indians, and do you suppose they would stop to think of the niceties of war? Why, when they meet the Indian they meet the enemy. When they meet the Indian, whether male or female, they meet the men or women whom they recognize as their hereditary foes, because it is a well-known fact connected with Indian warfare that the squaw as well as the warrior is a fiend when the hot and bad blood is aroused.

But I simply ask these men who have been filling this House for days past with stories of atrocities of whites to the Indians to recollect that which produced the state of mind and prompted the brave men of the West for a single moment to forget what was due to the weak and the helpless of any class of people, Indians, blacks, or whites, and become almost fiends themselves. There is palliation for it, there is excuse for it; but to the cause, the direct cause of it, if the cause ever be placed where it belongs, was the inefficiency of the Bureau and the men who had control and charge of the Indians of that day, and who failed to do their duty by the white men and white women and white children of the frontier.

I could read from the volume which has been so often quoted in evidence of the truth of evertyhing I say, but it is too late, and it is hardly necessary to verify the truth of what I say by extracts from this very voluminous report. I simply desired when I rose to remove from the shoulders of the War Department any responsibility whatever for what has been termed the Chivington massacre, and at the same time to call to the notice of the House the cause which raised the fiend in the breast of the white men of the frontier at the time they committed this with which they are charged. But there is one thing that may be said. There is one thing that is the truth. There is one thing that the people of the Territory have realized. It is that from that day to this they have had peace in their borders. It is only when these savages have meted out to them that which they mete out to their enemies that they realize what war is, and they commence to learn that two can play at their game. They have realized it. They have realized it in blood. The people of the Territory through the misrepresentation of committees have realized it in their shame before the world. But those who live in the Territory, those who knew the circumstances of the day and the perils of the hour, those who knew the provocations under which those men acted, while they may not in terms approve of that transaction, yet they do not condemn it as a cold-blooded, as an unwarranted, as an unexampled act of barbarism and slaughter.

Mr. SPARKS. I move the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. SAYLER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the special order, a bill (H. R. No. 2677) to transfer the Office of Indian Affairs from the Interior to the War Department, and had come to no resolution thereon.

And then, on motion of Mr. SPARKS, (at eleven o'clock and forty-five minutes p. m.,) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as stated:

By the SPEAKER: The petition of A. J. Ambler, with his affidavit, for the investigation of charges against Andrew Wylie, associate justice of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, for corruption and malfeasance on the bench of said court, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BANNING: The petition of A. M. Willard and 32 others, for the passage of a law fixing the line of promotion in the Army, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a paper relating to the claim of Louis Frey, for arrears of pay as captain of Company D, Twenty-eighth Ohio Volunteers, to the same committee.

By Mr. BRIGHT: The petition of James M. Shields, for compensation for property taken by the United States Army, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. COX: The petition of Ivison, Blakeman, Taylor & Co., and 18 other publishers, against the excessive rate of the Senate postal bill on books and other printed matter, and for the restoration of the old rate, to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

By Mr. HENDEE: The petition of Patrick O'Donoghue, B. Millburne, William Lord, James M. Carlisle, William Gunton, and others, for the early removal of the jail from Judiciary Square, Washington, District of Columbia, to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

By Mr. HEWITT, of New York: The petition of Edward N. Dickerson and 41 law firms of the city of New York, that notaries public be restored to their authority in the Federal courts, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, the petition of Dorethy Buthner, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, the petition of the Iron and Steel Association, for an appropriation of $50,000 to the United States board appointed to test iron and steel, to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. JONES, of New Hampshire: The petition of George O. White and others, of Ossipee, New Hampshire, for the repeal of the amendment to the postal laws which increased postal rates on third-class mail matter, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, the petition of Pillsbury Brothers and other citizens of Northwood, New Hampshire, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of Andrew J. Roberts, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, the petition of Carolina P. Gerrish, to have her pension commence at the date of the death of her husband, to the same committee.

By Mr. LAPHAM: Resolutions of the Grand Army of the Republic, department of Pennsylvania, that soldiers who have lost an arm below the elbow or a leg below the knee should receive the same pensions, when they are unable to wear artificial limbs, as soldiers who have lost an arm above the elbow or a leg above the knee, to the same committee.

By Mr. LEVY: The petition of citizens of Alexandria, Louisiana, for an appropriation for the removal of obstructions at the falls of Red River, Louisiana, to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. ODELL: The petition of 117 citizens of New York, that such steps be taken as will secure the release of E. O'M. Condon, confined in a British prison, to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. PHILIPS, of Missouri: Memorial of the county court of Dallas County, Missouri, for the quieting of the title to certain overflowed and swamp lands in Missouri, to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. ROSS, of New Jersey: The petition of booksellers, stationers, and publishers of New Brunswick, New Jersey, for such legislation as will relieve them from injurious competition in their business by the Government, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. SWANN: The petition of Charles Myers, for bounty and back-pay due him as a United States soldier, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WHITTHORNE: The petition of citizens of Williamson County, Tennessee, for the establishment of a post-route from Leiper's Fork to Burns's Station, Tennessee, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. WIKE: The petition of P. Kennedy and others, for the release of Edward O'M. Condon, a citizen of the United States, from unjust imprisonment in England, to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. WOODWORTH: The petition of Captain Isaac Ulman and 124 other ex-Union soldiers of the late war, citizens of Stark County, Ohio, for the passage of an act equalizing bounties upon the basis of the actual term of service, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, April 20, 1876.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a memorial of citizens of Jackson County, Ohio, remonstrating against any change of the tariff laws; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. WALLACE presented a petition of citizens of Hazelton, Luzerne County, Pennsylvania, booksellers, publishers, &c., praying that the Government discontinue the printing and sale of stamped envelopes, newspaper-wrappers, and postal cards; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, presented a petition of citizens of Mercer County, Pennsylvania, praying that no change may be made in the present tariff laws; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Northumberland County, Pennsylvania, praying that no change may be made in the present tariff laws; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented two petitions of citizens of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, praying the passage of a law to regulate commerce and to prohibit unjust discriminations by common carriers; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of the Vessel Owners and Captains' Association of Philadelphia, praying the passage of a law abolishing compulsory pilotage on coasting-vessels; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Pennsylvania, praying that the present method of paying pensions at specified localities throughout the country may not be materially changed; which was referred to the Select Committee to Examine the Several Branches of the Civil Service.

Mr. WITHERS. I desire, by request, to submit some additional evidence in support of the claim of Mrs. Annie Wallingford, on which an adverse report has been made, which is lying on the table. I move the recommitment of the report with this new evidence.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CLAYTON presented the petition of Catharine S. Edmondson, praying to be allowed a pension on account of the services of her son, William C. Edmondson, private in Company I, Eighty-second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, in the late war; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY presented a memorial of Henry Ford and 40 other workingmen, of Van Buren County, Michigan, remonstrating against any change in the present tariff laws; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. ANTHONY. I present a petition signed by the governor of Rhode Island and by very many of the leading merchants and navigators of Providence, asking for the abolition of the compulsory pilotage law. I receive letters continually upon this subject from men who have suffered very largely by the oppressive pilotage law upon coasting vessels, from men who are compelled to pay for services that they do not require and do not receive, and which they can perform themselves better than those who are paid for not performing them.

I understand that the theory of compulsory pilotage is that the safety of commerce and of life requires that those who do not need the service should pay a part for the safety of those who do need it; but in the case of pilotage through Hell Gate there is a discrimination in favor of citizens of New York, who are not compelled to pay the half pilotage in case they decline to take a pilot. The packet-masters of Rhode Island, Massachusetts, and Connecticut are just as well acquainted with Hell Gate as the pilots, and they no more require a pilot to go through there than you require a pilot, Mr. President, to show you down Pennsylvania avenue to the Capitol. But if the theory of the law requires half pilotage from those who are compelled to pay it, then the same theory requires it of those who are exempted from its payment, and certainly the law should be uniform if it is not repealed. I hope Congress will repeal it. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING. Which Hell Gate does the Senator mean?

Mr. ANTHONY. The New York gate. [Laughter.]

REPORT OF SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

Mr. ANTHONY. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a resolution to print a number of copies of the report of the Smithsonian Institution, to report it back without amendment, and ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That 10 500 copies of the report of the Smithsonian Institution for the year 1875 be printed; 1,000 copies of which shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,000 copies of which shall be for the use of the House of Representatives, and 7,500 copies for the use of the Smithsonian Institution; Provided, That the aggregate number of pages shall not exceed 450, and that there shall be no illustrations except those furnished by the Smithsonian Institution.

Mr. ANTHONY. This follows the precedent of last year, reducing the number for Congress and increasing the number for the institution, inasmuch as the franking privilege has been abolished.

The resolution was agreed to.

HAYDEN'S REPORT FOR 1873.

Mr. ANTHONY. The same committee, to whom was referred a resolution to print 4,500 copies of the annual report of Hayden's geological and geographical survey of the Territories for 1873, have directed me to report it without amendment and recommend its passage. This resolution passed both Houses last session, but failed to receive the signatures of the presiding officers on account of the shortness of time.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution, submitted by Mr. ANTHONY on the 13th of January:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That there be prepared 4,500 copies of Professor Hayden's annual report of the geological and geographical survey of the Territories for 1873, 3,000 copies of which shall be for the use of the House of Representatives, 1,000 for the use of the Senate, and 500 copies for the use of the Smithsonian Institution.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Printing whether there is any provision made for sending these documents out without cost to the members of Congress.

I do not think it is proper to be accumulating and multiplying the documents to be distributed by members of Congress when a large proportion of the members will not incur the expense of sending those books out. I have no doubt that this is a valuable work; I have no doubt the people of the country will appreciate it; but the members of Congress cannot afford to distribute tens of thousands of volumes at their own expense. I am myself in favor of sending out under the franks of members of Congress every book and document published by Congress for the public information; and I would be glad to see the Senator now add an amendment that this work shall be distributed under the franks of members of Congress without cost to them. I do not believe the people of the country would object to any public documents printed by the authority of Congress being circulated free through the mails under the franks of members. I would make a motion myself to amend the resolution so that this report could be sent free, but I understand there will be an effort made to put such a provision upon the general post-office bill.

Mr. ANTHONY. If there is to be any general law upon the subject it will cover this case. I would hardly like to raise the question of the revival of the franking privilege for the purpose of circulating documents upon a resolution which distributes only a thousand copies among Senators. All the copies of this book which Senators will receive can be sent through the mails at the cost of a dollar and a half to each Senator. It is certainly desirable that this report should be printed. If we are to go to the expense of making geological and geographical surveys and collect information with regard to the resources and capabilities of the country it is desirable it should be printed. There is no use in having such information filed away in the archives of the Government. I would rather that the question about franking documents should be taken up by itself. It must lead to considerable discussion and it would carry us over the morning hour if that question is raised. I know there are Senators here who would address the Senate upon the subject if it were raised. I think this report had better be printed, and then let it take its chance with the other documents in regard to distribution.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I concur in that view entirely. I have no doubt that those surveys were proper to be made. I have no doubt that the printing of the reports and putting them in circulation is all proper. I do not object to that; but I do object to the constant multiplication of public documents which are to lie in the folding-room and never to be distributed unless they are distributed at the expense of members of Congress. I think we had better settle this question before we order any more printing, because my vote will depend upon that in reference to all of these objects. I would not vote for the proposition of the Senator now if I knew that in the future legislation of the Senate there would not be some provision made for free distribution. The fact is that I want to see this question settled; because while I am not opposed to the publication of these reports, I am opposed to the multiplication of volumes that are published for the purpose of distribution, unless there is some provision made to send them out. For one I say unhesitatingly that I do not expect to send out one-half of the volumes that are assigned to me. Take, for instance, the President's message with the accompanying documents. There is not one man in ten who will appreciate a copy when he gets it; yet thousands are published, and it is expected that members of Congress will distribute them. Let us settle this question at a very early day; because I say that we ought not to be multiplying publications and cumbering up the folding-room, unless there is to be some provision made to send them out. For one I do not hesitate to say that I shall be opposed to voting to print public documents unless there is to be some provision for their distribution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. ANTHONY. There is a verbal error in the resolution. The word "prepared" should be "printed."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That correction will be made.

The resolution was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I report from the Judiciary Committee upon the petition of James E. Slaughter, of Alabama, for the removal of his disabilities a bill providing for that object. I will state that this gentleman has filed the proper petition and made the proper proof that he resigned from the Army; and, as shown, the reason why his resignation was not accepted was that it could not reach the Department owing to difficulties over which he had no control, and before going into the confederate service he turned over all the property and other things belonging to the United States in an honorable manner to our authorities at the sea-coast of Texas, where he was. We therefore recommend the passage of the bill which we report.

The bill (S. No. 761) to remove the political disabilities of James E. Slaughter, of Alabama, was read, and passed to the second reading.

Mr. HAMILTON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2289) granting a pension to Jane Bertholf, reported it without amendment.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 307) concerning security on writs of error and appeals, and for other purposes, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. HITCHCOCK, from the Committee on Territories, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1970) relating to the approval of bills in the Territory of Arizona, reported it with amendments.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Claims, to whom were referred the papers relating to the claim of Haskins & Bridgeford, for compensation for the use of their wharf at Rockett's Landing, Virginia, by the United States Quartermasters Department during the late war, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BURNSIDE, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 492) making an appropriation for the erection of a monument and spindle on Whale Rock, at the entrance of Narraganset Bay, reported it with amendments.

Mr. INGALLS. The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2454) amending the laws granting pensions to the soldiers and sailors of the war of 1812 and their widows, have instructed me to report the same with amendments. The bill is accompanied by a report which I ask to have printed; and I give notice that on as early a day next week as I can obtain the floor I shall ask the Senate to proceed with the consideration of the bill.

The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. ROBERTSON, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No 1398) to regulate the practice of pharmacy in the District of Columbia, reported it with amendments.

Mr. BOOTH, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 234) to amend section 4698 of the Revised Statutes of the United States so as to allow a pension of $37 per month to soldiers who have lost both an arm and a leg in lieu of $24 per month now allowed, reported it with an amendment.

ARMS TO THE CENTENNIAL LEGION.

Mr. GORDON. The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 85) to authorize the Secretary of War to issue certain arms to the Washington Light Infantry of Charleston, South Carolina, and the Clinch Rifles of Augusta, Georgia, have instructed me to report it favorably, and I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It authorizes the Secretary of War to issue to the Washington Light Infantry of Charleston, South Carolina, and the Clinch Rifles of Augusta, Georgia, three hundred and twenty improved breech-loading rifles, or such number thereof as shall be necessary to fully arm and equip these organizations in order that they may participate in and form a part of the Centennial Legion of the original thirteen States of the Union, which legion has been designated to appear and participate in the international centennial exposition to be held at Philadelphia in 1876, if the same can be done, in the judgment of the Secretary of War, without prejudice to the public service. The commissioned officers of each organization, or a majority of them, are to make, execute, and deliver to the Secretary of War such indemnity for the safe return of the arms after the close of such exposition as the Secretary shall require.

Mr. HAMLIN. There is now before the Senate or upon our Calendar a bill reported from the Committee on the Judiciary which prescribes that our legislation shall be by act, and not by joint resolution. Joint resolutions were unknown until within a very recent period, and the Committee on the Judiciary have reported a bill to change the statutes into which joint resolutions in some way crept. I have nothing to say of the merits of this measure, but I move to change it from a joint resolution to a bill.

Mr. GORDON. That would carry it back to the House and cause delay.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It would derange the records of the House.

Mr. HAMLIN. Then I will not make the motion to change it to a bill. I supposed the Senator from Georgia reported a Senate resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, and read the third time.

Mr. SHERMAN. There was a bill in regard to a company in Boston or Portland, or some New England city, upon the same subject, giving the same authority. I will ask if that bill has passed?

Mr. GORDON. I will state that there have been a number of applications for arms similar to this; but this is an exceptional case. The committee so regarded it. These two companies have been in existence a very great while. It is known that what is called the Centennial Legion is to make its appearance at the celebration in Philadelphia. These two companies have been designated for that legion, and they are the only two companies in the legion without arms.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to it.

Mr. GORDON. It is only a loan. They are to give bond for the return of the arms as soon as the exhibition is over. The joint resolution is only to enable them to accompany the legion, there being one company from each of the old thirteen States, and these are the two which are without arms.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not rise to make any objection to the bill. It comes from the committee of which I am chairman, although I was not present when it was considered. I will say that no other bill has passed the Senate this session giving arms to any company.

Mr. SHERMAN. This is to be a loan.

Mr. LOGAN. I have not examined the question. I should like to ask, however, (and I am not doing it for the purpose of opposing the joint resolution,) whether the Government has the character of arms in its possession that are required for these companies? If it has, I have no objection to the loan.

Mr. GORDON. I am not aware whether the Government has or not. It is only a loan, however, as the Senator from Ohio suggests. I will say for the information of the chairman of the committee, who was not present when this matter was considered in committee, that it was discussed in the light of an exceptional case, because of the fact that these companies had been designated to make their appearance at Philadelphia as component parts of that legion. Therefore it ought not to be considered on the ground of the general applications that are made here for arms.

Mr. LOGAN. What character of arms does it call for?

Mr. SHERMAN. There is a provision in the joint resolution that this shall be done if, in the judgment of the Secretary of War, it can be done without detriment to the service. I ask that the proviso at the end be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That the same can be done, in the judgment of the Secretary of War, without prejudice to the public service: And provided further, That the commissioned officers of each of said organizations, or a majority of them, shall make, execute, and deliver to the Secretary of War such indemnity for the safe return of said arms after the close of such exposition as said Secretary shall require.

The joint resolution was passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House insisted upon its amendment to the bill (S. No. 472) changing the times of holding terms of the district court for the district of West Virginia, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. B. G. CAULFIELD of Illinois, Mr. C. J. FAULKNER of West Virginia, and Mr. W. P. FRYE of Maine managers at the same on its part.

The message also returned to the Senate the bill (H. R. No. 2799) to amend certain sections of titles 48 and 52 of the Revised Statutes of the United States concerning commerce and navigation and the regulation of steam-vessels, recalled from the Senate for the correction of an error in engrossment.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolution; in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested:

A bill (H. R. No. 3151) to remove the disabilities of John Johnson, of the county of Granville and State of North Carolina; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 34) to print forty-five hundred copies of the annual report of the United States geological and geographical survey of the Territories.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 279) to establish a land office in the southern part of Utah Territory, to be known as the Beaver district, and for other purposes;

A bill (S. No. 417) for continuing the work of improving the Capitol grounds;

A bill (S. No. 697) authorizing the sale of logs cut by the Indians of the Menomonee reservation in Wisconsin; and

A bill (H. R. No. 1439) authorizing the transfer of certain cases from the circuit court of the United States for the district of Alabama, at Mobile, into the circuit court of the United States for the middle and northern districts of Alabama, at Montgomery and Huntsville, in said State.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. EDMUNDS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 762) to abolish the board of health of the District of Columbia, and to transfer its duties to the Surgeon-General of the Army; which was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And printed.

Mr. LOGAN. Is that the proper committee for a bill to go to that imposes additional services on persons belonging to the Army? I move that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have not the slightest objection in the world. The Chair suggested the Committee on the District of Columbia, because the chief object of the bill is as to affairs in the District, but it is certainly quite as agreeable to me that it should go to the Committee on Military Affairs. It is really a double bill, relating both to the civil administration of affairs in the District of Columbia and to the means of doing it, taking it from one body and putting it with another. Either committee undoubtedly is competent to consider it.

Mr. LOGAN. I know nothing about abolishing the board of health; but when it comes to imposing duties on any branch of the Army, I claim that that part of it at least belongs to the Committee on Military Affairs. There is a disposition either on the part of some in the Army, or on the part of persons outside of the Army, to have the Army take control of everything in the country. I am not in favor of it. For that reason I ask that wherever anything pertains to the duties imposed upon the Army it may go to the appropriate committee, the Committee on Military Affairs. I ask that this bill be referred to that committee for the reason given.

Mr. EDMUNDS. In the first place I wish to apologize to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs for not having interposed and prevented the Chair from making what was most certainly the most natural reference of this bill and quite as proper as that to the Committee on Military Affairs. This bill undoubtedly has a double aspect. It provides for two things. One relates exclusively to the administration of civil affairs in the District of Columbia. Another part of it relates to the transferring of those affairs to a civil officer of the Army, if I may use such an expression. And therefore the action of the Chair, I submit to my friend from Illinois, was perfectly natural, and I do not think the Senator is quite justified in intimating that either the Chair or the person who introduced the bill or anybody else on this occasion had any design to prevent the bill from being referred to the Committee on Military Affairs; for I said the moment the Senator suggested it and as soon as I could rise that I had not the slightest objection, that I had acquiesced in the suggestion of the Chair because it seemed to me to be the perfectly natural and proper thing. I have not the least objection now, only I wish to suggest to the Senator that I hope he will not suppose that I was endeavoring to make a raid against the jurisdiction of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator certainly mistook my meaning. I did not intend to say, nor did I make any insinuation, that any person was trying to prevent the bill going to the proper committee. I said no such thing, and did not intimate any such thing. What I said was that there seemed to be a disposition for portions of the Army to take control of everything within their reach. That part of my statement I reiterate. I have nothing to say, as far as the Senator is concerned, about any committee. I said nothing and intimate nothing in reference to it. I only asked that the bill go to the Military Committee, because it pertained to a part of the Army taking control of matters that did not belong to them. For that reason I asked that it go there and for that reason I ask now that it go there.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to referring the bill to the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. DORSEY. I should like to ask the Senator from Illinois if this matter affects the Army any more than the paving bill which details three of the engineers of the Army? The only possible effect this bill has on the Army, I understand, is the chance of conferring the duties of the board of health upon the Surgeon-General, who, as the Senator from Vermont states, is pretty near a civil officer of the Army.

Mr. LOGAN. I did not make my suggestion in order to get up a controversy about this question; but inasmuch as the Senator from Arkansas belongs to the committee who reported the bill in reference to the pavement of Pennsylvania avenue, I will state to him now that that provision in his bill imposing duties upon selected officers of the Army would have no more force than a piece of blank paper if the President to-morrow should order those officers to California. It is in reference to that character of legislation which is going on that I make objection. Under the Constitution the President has a right to order the officers of the Army and assign them to duty. When you select officers of the Army and give them civil duties to perform, they perform them merely with the consent of the President; and if he desires to order them anywhere else he can do it and you cannot help yourself, and neither can Congress.

Mr. SPENCER. I desire to say, in behalf of the Committee on the District of Columbia, that that committee is perfectly willing and very glad to have this bill go to the Committee on Military Affairs. We would rather that committee should decide upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved that the bill be printed and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 763) to change the date of commission of Henry Romeyn, first lieutenant Fifth United States Infantry, which was read twice by its title, and, together with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. LOGAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 765) for the relief of Berthold Loewenthal, of Chicago, Illinois; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GOLDTHWAITE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 766) for making a survey for ascertaining the feasibility of cutting a deep channel from the lower anchorage of the bay of Mobile to the city of Mobile; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. INGALLS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 767) granting a pension to Theodore Gardner; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. BOGY. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day, it be to meet on Monday next.

The question being put, a division was called for, and the ayes were 28.

Mr. SARGENT and others called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. SHERMAN. There are several matters which can just as well be proceeded with to-morrow as not. The bill which comes up at one o'clock will no doubt lead to considerable discussion, and I see no reason why that discussion should not go on. There is plenty of business to do, and if the Senate adjourn over simply on the idea that there is nothing to do on the Calendar, that is a mistake. There is now a great deal of business to be done which can be considered better now than at a later period of the session.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. It seems to me there is a considerable amount of business before us, which, taking into consideration the amount of time that will probably be consumed in the impeachment trial, we shall not be able to get through with before we shall reach other important business which must be attended to. I desire to say, in behalf of others as well as myself, that I shall ask the Senate on Monday to take up the educational bill, so called, reported by the Committee on Education and Labor, as I wish to make some remarks upon it, and other Senators desire to do the same. I hope therefore that we shall sit to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Missouri, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll; and the call was concluded

Mr. CONKLING. I was called from the Chamber for a moment, and although it is out of order I beg to make an inquiry. Has any statement been made that the business before the Senate to-morrow is as important as the business before the committees?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont to the left of the Chair [Mr. MORRILL] stated that he intended to call up business.

Mr. CONKLING. What bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The educational bill on Monday.

Mr. CONKLING. Does the Senator think the business as important as a good deal of business before the committees?

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. My impression is that we have no more important business at this session.

Mr. CONKLING. I do not mean to deny the importance of the business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is out of order at this time.

Mr. CONKLING. It is all out of order, but I merely asked permission to make an inquiry, as I was out at the time the yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to permitting explanations to be made?

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I merely desire to say to the Senator from New York that there are other Senators as well as myself who desire to speak on Monday.

Mr. SARGENT. This is very much out of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has so announced.

Mr. CONKLING. I am sorry my friend from California will not allow me to get a little light to vote by.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The call is completed, and the result will be announced.

Mr. CONKLING. On the information I am not allowed to get, I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 29, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Bayard, Bogy, Booth, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Caperton, Cockrell, Conover, Cooper, Davis, Dennis, Dorsey, Frelinghuysen, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hamilton, Hitchcock, Ingalls, Kelly, McCreery, Mitchell, Norwood, Patterson, Ransom, Saulsbury, Spencer, West, and Withers—29.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Boutwell, Cameron of Wisconsin, Conkling, Cragin, Dawes, Eaton, Edmunds, English, Ferry, Hamlin, Harvey, Howe, Key, McMillan, Maxey, Merrimon, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Paddock, Sargent, Sherman, Wadleigh, Wallace, and Windom—25.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Bruce, Christiancy, Clayton, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Jones of Nevada, Kernan, Logan, McDonald, Morrill of Maine, Oglesby, Randolph, Robertson, Sharon, Stevenson, Thurman, Whyte, and Wright—19.

So the motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE OVER THE EASTERN BRANCH.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont, submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia be instructed to inquire and report whether it be suitable for the bridge over the Eastern Branch of the Potomac to be occupied by two railway tracks to the inconvenience of general travel; and further that said committee be instructed to give notice to the proprietors of such tracks to remove one of them, unless the committee find some adequate reason, to be reported to the Senate, for allowing the present condition to continue.

Mr. DAVIS. That is a resolution of inquiry, I understand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And an order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. And accompanied with directions.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

NAVAL STATION IN GEORGIA.

Mr. NORWOOD submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be directed to furnish to the Senate an estimate of the cost of establishing a depot of naval supplies, and a naval station, on the Government land on Big Tybee Island or Cockspur Island, in the State of Georgia.

IMMIGRATION OF CHINESE.

Mr. SARGENT. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Senate recommends to the President that he cause negotiations to be entered upon with the Chinese government to effect such change in the existing treaty between the United States and China as will lawfully permit the application of restrictions upon the great influx of Chinese subjects to this country.

I shall ask the indulgence of the Senate at such time as will least interfere with its business, and at as early a day as I may, to offer some observations on the resolution before asking its adoption. I move that it be printed and lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

CONCRETE AND ASPHALT PAVEMENTS.

Mr. DORSEY submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia be, and is hereby, directed to inquire into the necessity of adopting proper measures for the repair and maintenance of the concrete and asphalt pavements, laid on the streets, parks, and side-walks in the District of Columbia; to ascertain the cost of such repair and maintenance, and the proportion payable by the United States and the District of Columbia, respectively, and to report by bill or otherwise.

ALBERT TOWLE.

Mr. PADDOCK. I ask for the consideration of the Senate bill No. 727. There is a report in connection with this bill. I would not now ask for the consideration of the bill but that it is a complex claim, and it is required of the Committee on Finance to consider one part of the claim, and a bill has been referred to that committee covering that part of the claim, being for the loss of postage-stamps.

There being no objection, the bill (S. No. 727) for the relief of Albert Towle, postmaster at Beatrice, Nebraska, was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It appropriates $175 to re-imburse Albert Towle, postmaster at Beatrice, Nebraska, for stamps stolen from the post-office at that place on the night of October 25, 1869.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the report.

The Chief Clerk read the following report submitted by Mr. PADDOCK, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, on the 12th instant:

The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the memorial of Albert Towle, postmaster at Beatrice, Nebraska, praying for relief for the loss by burglary of postage-stamps, report:

That on the night of the 25th of October, A. D. 1869, the post-office building at Beatrice, Nebraska, was entered by burglars, and United States postage-stamps to the amount of $175 and other property were stolen therefrom. These facts are stated in the memorial of Albert Towle the postmaster. The affidavits of five prominent business men of Beatrice verify the sworn statement of Postmaster Towle. It appears from the papers that the utmost diligence, faithfulness, and care had been exercised in the administration of the affairs of the office; that the said post-office was kept in a new and substantially constructed building, used exclusively for such purpose; that the doors were securely locked and the windows carefully fastened; that the postage-stamps were deposited in the drawer of a table, which was locked. It being a small office there was no safe. It further appears that one of the windows of the office was entirely broken out in the night-time, the drawer of the table forced open, postage-stamps taken therefrom, and other property of much greater value stolen from other parts of the office by the burglars. It also appears that prompt and most thorough efforts were made by the petitioner for the recovery of the property and the apprehension and punishment of the thieves. A communication from the Post-Office Department, showing that Postmaster Towle had at the time of the robbery a somewhat larger amount of stamps in his possession than that named in his memorial, accompanies this report. A petition, signed by all the prominent citizens within the post-office delivery, indorsing the high character of the petitioner as a man and a public officer, is also one of the papers accompanying this report. He is still the postmaster, and has had the longest continuous service of any officer in the State of Nebraska.

In view of all the facts in the case, the committee unanimously recommend that Albert Towle, postmaster at Beatrice, Nebraska, be re-imbursed for the loss of postage-stamps to the amount of $175, and to secure that result present the accompanying bill with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WEDDING PRESENT TO MRS. M. S. FITCH.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont, asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 764) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to allow Mrs. Minnie Sherman Fitch to receive free from duties a wedding present from the Khedive of Egypt.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I will say, Mr. President, that I have the assent of all members of the Committee on Finance except the chairman, [Mr. SHERMAN,] whom I have not consulted, to present this bill. There was a joint resolution passed in relation to this subject February 18, 1875, authorizing Thomas W. Fitch, engineer in the Navy, and husband of Mrs. Minnie Sherman Fitch, to receive this present from the Khedive of Egypt; but the words "free from duty" were not included in that joint resolution, and the Secretary of the Treasury therefore retains this present in the custom-house.

I will say merely that it was an act of high appreciation undoubtedly on the part of the Khedive of Egypt of the General of our Army which led him to make a present of this kind to his daughter; and I suppose the Senate cannot be ignorant of the fact that the duties upon it, if they were properly levied, would be much more than all the property of this passed assistant engineer of the Navy.

I think there can be no objection on the part of any Senator to allowing this wedding present, which it would be very ungraceful to have sent back to the Khedive of Egypt, to be admitted free. I hope the bill will pass unanimously. It seems to me to be a mere act of grace and courtesy that is due to the parties concerned

Mr. GORDON. Mr. President, I concur in all that the Senator from Vermont has said; and it was my purpose to introduce a bill of the same character myself, and I sincerely trust with him that the bill will be passed by unanimous consent.

It is very well known to us all that to require the duties upon this present would be onerous, to say the least, and perhaps it would be an absolute preventive to the reception of the gift by the party for whom it was intended, and of course to send it back would be an insult to the Khedive. There is, therefore, left to us nothing to do but this very gracious and proper thing, in my judgment, to admit it without duty. I hope the bill will pass.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I will say a single word more. The resolution passed February 18, 1875, was drawn by me and inadvertently omitted these words. That resolution passed unanimously, I believe, in the Senate; and the omission was not pointed out to me by any one, and it did not occur, I suppose, to any member of the Senate.

I will add one other word. I am not aware in any case of a similar presentation to an officer of the Government, either of the Army or Navy, where duties have been expected heretofore on the article presented.

Mr. EDMUNDS. At the risk of being somewhat unfashionable, I must insist that this bill go to the Committee on Finance in the regular way. It will be made a precedent if it does not, and I hope we shall have a written report upon it which will state all the circumstances, so that whatever we may properly do may be done, and whatever we do properly will not be made a precedent for hereafter doing something that is not proper. For that reason I insist that the bill be referred to the Committee on Finance, and I hope we shall have a written report.

Mr. HAMLIN. I think the Senator from Vermont farthest from me [Mr. MORRILL] is accurate in his statement when he says that no present by any foreign power made to any citizen of this Government has ever been burdened with the taxation of a duty. Certainly I have known none, and I think there have been none.

Aside from the bestowal of this present by the Khedive for his high appreciation of the services of one of our distinguished officers, I think we may well adopt the rule laid down in this bill for another reason. These diamonds were not sent here for commercial purposes; they were not imported as merchandise; but they were sent here as a mark of high testimonial. I think for that reason, aside from the precedent we have had in all other cases, we ought to adopt, and I hope we may adopt unanimously, the bill before us.

Mr. CONKLING. The suggestion made by the Senator from Vermont nearest me [Mr. EDMUNDS] proceeds upon the idea that this is not the report of a committee. In a very accurate, not to say technical, sense that is true. It is true in no other, if I heard aright the statement made by the Senator from Vermont the mover of the bill, [Mr. MORRILL.] He says that not only the committee in its constituents, but every member of the committee has acted upon this bill, has given it his assent, save only the chairman of the committee, who being the kinsman of those concerned was for reasons of delicacy omitted from the consultation. Therefore I submit that the whole spirit and purpose of the rule, the reason for the action of a committee, has been substantially and essentially observed; and I cannot see therefore that as a precedent this is likely to be dangerous.

I might add also that the circumstances are so exceptional, so unusual as to be very unlikely to become themselves a precedent dangerous in character. As to the merit of the bill itself I can have no doubt. It must have been the purpose of Congress in the joint resolution now on the statute-book, to do this very thing. The draughtsman of that resolution has avowed that by inadvertence he omitted the very words necessary certainly to secure the purpose. Had he not declared that it was an inadvertence, we should all know as matter of public history that it was inadvertent in Congress, for surely Congress would not adopt a resolution authorizing and enabling one of the citizens of the Republic to receive a gift or even a commodity, meaning thereby that he might receive it on just such terms as a dealer or importer might receive it, so far as regards our customs duties, the toll laid at one of the gates of the kingdom when it comes in. It must be clear that it was the design, as I think it should have been the design of Congress, in that resolution to do this thing.

My immediate neighbor, the Senator from Maine [Mr. HAMLIN] has said that these gems were not imported for commercial purposes. He might, I think, have strengthened that statement. It has been the habit of Congress to refuse free admission to commodities, even to church bells. Such things, in addition to being imported in one sense for commercial purposes, or whether so or not, were imported for use, from option, from choice, either by the managers of a cathedral if it was a chime of bells, or by somebody who acting in view of the laws chose to import those articles. It has been thought dangerous to give or extend permissions of that sort. Here is not only a gift, but a gift not for use in any of the senses which I have adverted to, not an importation moving from the parties who receive it, but a testimonial, an act of respect, an act significant of admiration for a very illustrious citizen of the Republic, a man whose distinguished service has made his name known in both hemispheres and has led the giver of this gift to signify his respect and admiration for him in this way.

I cannot believe that any correct principle will be violated, or that any good thing will be conserved, by what I think I shall give no offense when I term a niggardly proceeding on the part of the Government in regard to it. There has been a great deal said about this matter; and I think the best time is the very earliest time to do what some Senator called a gracious act. I think it is a gracious and a graceful act; and I think to refuse to do it would be neither graceful nor gracious. Therefore I venture to suggest to the honorable Senator from Vermont who made this objection [Mr. EDMUNDS] that, although it may be tenable technically, the rule has essentially been sufficiently observed in this case, I hope, to induce him to withdraw the objection, and let us vote upon the merits of the proposition which I concur with others in trusting will receive the unanimous assent of this body and of the other House of Congress.

Mr. DAWES. Although it seems to be a correction of some of the statements of the Senator from New York, I wish to say that, until there was a slip in the Revised Statutes, church ornaments were always imported free, and there are several instances of special acts of Congress admitting church bells free of duty.

Mr. CONKLING. Not several; only one, I think.

Mr. DAWES. There is, at least, one that went through both branches; and I know of several that went through the lower branch, and after they went through there I lost sight of their progress in this branch. Church ornaments, memorial windows, and the like, were admitted free of duty until, by an accident in the Revised Statutes, some word or two were left out, and they are now taxed. I think every word the Senator from New York has said is correct, with that exception.

Mr. CONKLING. I am obliged to the Senator from Massachusetts for reminding me of the fact; I have no doubt he is quite right in his allusion to the history of legislation on this subject. Scientific apparatus and a great variety of other things came in free whether by general provision or by habit. My recollection is like that of the honorable Senator from Massachusetts. I had in mind, however, what I now state. Long ago, while the Senator was a member of the other House, the then Speaker of the House was interested for the admission of a chime of bells for Notre Dame, Indiana, and such an act passed both Houses. After that act was known several persons in my own State, in one instance a lady residing in the county of Rensselaer, in the State of New York, presented at her own cost to a cathedral a chime of bells. An effort, and a fruitless effort, was made and persisted in to gain free admission for that chime of bells. More recently the communicants in a church, the builders, I think, of a cathedral in the city of Buffalo, in the State of New York, made application for the admission of a chime of bells which they imported and paid for by voluntary contribution. I made, myself, an earnest effort to gain this admission. They were a chime of bells destined for the Catholic cathedral in that city.

Mr. DAWES. Allow me to state another case, if it will not interrupt the Senator—a very interesting case. It was in regard to a chime of bells in Columbia, South Carolina, that had been sent over from England in the olden times and were broken up during the late war. The identical bells were sent back to England and recast at precisely the same foundery and by the same formula, in order as near as possible to reproduce the same bells. A bill to admit them free of duty went through the other House; I do not know the fate it met with here.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senate will see from this recital that this very thing has been done in the case of church bells, for example. It has been refused of late; and upon the general theory that those who were able to import such things were able to pay the duties upon them. The point I seek to make, the distinction I would ask the Senate to observe, is that the farthest of these cases of refusal is not applicable to such a case as this. When we authorize an officer to receive a decoration, an order of honor from a foreign prince, that to be sure is not the subject of import duties, and therefore we say nothing about them. But should we authorize him to accept some gift, be it, as in a recent case, an inkstand, if he happens to be in this country when it comes, it would, I submit, be very extraordinary to haggle about the duties, or insist upon them. Therefore I feel, within the farthest precedents which have been cited, entirely safe in voting in this instance that the articles be released from what would be the impost upon them had a dealer brought them in as a commodity.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, the somewhat elaborate oration of my friend from New York has almost made me suppose that I had risen before to oppose this bill or to express some opinion about it. I did not know that I had done so. I had only endeavored to have the Senate treat this bill as it does other bills of a similar character: give reasonable time for consideration to see the solid grounds, if there were any, on which its passage could rest, and certainly the Senator has stated some very strong ones. That is all I rose to do.

Mr. CONKLING. I did not say that the Senator objected to the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator used the word "objection."

Mr. CONKLING. I did not intimate that the Senator had made objection to the merits of the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The difference between this present proposition to pass this bill unanimously on the day of its introduction without consideration, and any other case, is that there is no other case where a bill to admit free of duty a gift, or any other thing, decoration or whatever, that I know of—and I should be glad to hear of such a precedent if it exists—has been sought to be passed until it had been sufficiently long before the body in order that members of the body might understand its application and its effect. I feel pretty safe in making that statement.

Then, in respect of the act that we did pass, and which is now pressed upon us as the foundation for the correction of a mistake, the ground on which, as I supposed that act stood, was that Mr. Fitch, the husband of this most estimable young lady, was in the naval service of the United States when this present was made and when it reached this country. It was therefore, by the Constitution, somewhat necessary that before this present could be received by his wife there should be the authority of Congress for it. Congress did give that authority. Now, I am not by any means prepared to say that I shall not vote for this bill to-morrow, on a report of the committee, with the greatest cheerfulness; certainly I should do it with the greatest good-will if I could consistently with my notions of public duty; and, after what has been stated, I am quite prepared to think I shall; but what I like is, in the transaction of the business of the Senate, that we should treat rich and poor, great and small, high and low alike, and let this bill take the ordinary course, be reported in the ordinary way, considered in the ordinary way, and passed in the ordinary way. That is all the proposition that I make.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. President, if there were any misunderstanding or different understandings about the facts connected with the history of this importation, it seems to me it would be quite well to have a reference of the bill that we might have the true state of facts ascertained. I do not know that there is any misunderstanding about it. I suppose the people of the United States know quite well everything there is about the matter. In one sense I like the sentiment of the Senator from Vermont that we should treat all alike, high and low, rich and poor, great and small; but in another sense that is not very likely to be done, and I do not think it would be quite judicious to have it done. The donor of this gift, I take it, does not observe that rule. I have not heard of his donating diamonds to all the people of this country. He has unquestionably discriminated; I do not know whether in favor of the great or the small; whether in favor of the rich or the poor; I know he has not sent any diamonds to me, so far as I have heard. Therefore I know that he has not sent diamonds to every citizen of the United States. He has found one citizen, and so far as I know now he has found but one, to whom he has made a tender of diamonds. I have heard that they were valuable; I have heard that to pay the duties on them would impoverish a good many citizens of the United States; I do not know that it would not impoverish and bankrupt the donee herself.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. If we let in these free, does not my honorable friend think there will be danger of everybody getting diamonds? [Laughter.]

Mr. HOWE. I do not turn pale in view of that peril. [Laughter.] I think I could confront a peril of that sort with as much equanimity as any that ever hung over me.

But, Mr. President, for some purpose, good or bad, I know for some purpose good and not bad, one having the power to do it has offered a gift to a citizen of the United States; and if the United States is under any necessity which compels it to tax that generosity, to put money into its Treasury because of it, to levy duties and take toll from the generosity of others outside of this country, I shall be sorry to know it. I do not know of any such necessity; I do not believe in any such necessity; and if anything could make me blush for the legislation of this country, it would be just such an exaction as that.

I myself make a distinction between the donee in this case and some others. I do not know that the donee herself has ever done anything to entitle her particularly to the gratitude of the country. She has a father who has done a great deal which should entitle him to the gratitude of this county, and which I think has secured the gratitude of this country more than most of our citizens have ever had an opportunity of doing, more than most of our citizens will ever have an opportunity to do. And upon all these accounts I should be decidedly in favor, with what little information I have on the subject, of the passage of this bill; and if we are to be divided upon the question whether this bill shall be referred to a committee or not, I shall most assuredly vote with a great deal of pleasure and entire confidence against the motion to refer.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Mr. President, I will add one word to what I have already said and to what has been said by the Senator from Wisconsin. I will say that I should have introduced this bill long ago but that I could not obtain the consent of the chairman of the Committee on Finance to do any such thing. I have the consent of every other member of the committee I believe. I will say that there is an urgency for the passage of this bill because the present has already been in the custom-house nearly two years, and I believe the law requires when articles of this kind shall have remained for the length of two years that they shall be sold at public auction.

I hope therefore that there will be no objection to the passage of the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I merely wish to say one word. It is quite obvious that the sense of the fathers of the Senate is that we should dispense with all formalities on this occasion, and I should be very sorry to stand alone in the way of meeting their wishes, if it could do any good if I did. Therefore I make no objection to the bill taking any course the Senate choose to take with it.

Mr. BAYARD. I think there should be no hesitation whatever in adopting this measure; it is simply the completion on the part of the Senate of what they resolved formerly to do, and that is to make it practicable that a citizen of the United States should receive a gracious courtesy from a foreign power. It was a mistake and an oversight, I apprehend, originally that the joint resolution authorizing the reception of this handsome gift was not accompanied by words of proper authority to permit it to come in free of duty. The object of this bill is simply to remedy that defect. When the Constitution of the United States forbade any person holding an office of honor or profit to receive presents from foreign powers, it coupled that inhibition with the express grant of power to Congress in special cases within their discretion to authorize the reception. When the authority was given, it was meant that it should be exercised according to the discretion of Congress. Congress in this case, and in my opinion very properly, authorized the reception of this gift. They omitted, however, to do it in such phrase as prevented a collision with the revenue laws. It was not intended that this gift should in any way be a source of profit to the people of this country, and this bill is designed to make it in fact as it was intended to be in name, an act of gracious courtesy, bestowed in a spirit of compliment and received in a spirit of the same character. I hope, therefore, that there will be no objection whatever to this act which permits the completion of what should have been done a long time ago.

By unanimous consent, the bill was read three times, and passed.

COLLECTORS OF INTERNAL REVENUE.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour has expired. Is there objection to hearing the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. BOUTWELL. I desire to ask the Senate to act upon a bill which will not consume more than a moment; it is a bill to authorize the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to designate and fix the points at which collectors and supervisors of the revenue shall hold their offices, House bill No. 1585.

Mr. SHERMAN. As a matter of course it is entirely discretionary with the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. BOGY,] who I understand has the floor on the silver bill. Although I have charge of the bill, it is for him to say.

Mr. BOGY. I will inquire whether this bill will take much time?

Mr. BOUTWELL. I presume it can be disposed of in five minutes. If it gives rise to debate I will withdraw it.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. What is the unfinished business?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business is the bill (S. No. 263) to amend the law relating to the legal tender of silver coin.

Mr. BOUTWELL. The Committee on Finance have directed me to change the proposed amendments to the bill, and I offer an amended copy, different from the printed bill.

The Secretary read the bill (H. R. No. 1585) to authorize the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to designate and fix the points at which collectors and supervisors of the revenue shall hold their offices, which authorizes the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to designate and fix the points at which the collectors and supervisors of the revenue shall establish and maintain their several offices within their respective districts.

The Chief Clerk read the amendments reported by the Committee on Finance, which were to strike out, in line 5, the words "and supervisors of the" and insert "the internal revenue;" so as to read: "the points at which the collectors of internal revenue shall establish and maintain their several offices;" and to insert the following additional section:

That the office of supervisor of internal revenue is hereby abolished from and after the 1st day of July, 1876, and the powers and duties conferred upon supervisors by existing law, excepting the power to suspend collectors and other officers, are hereby conferred upon the agents authorized by section 3152 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; but this section shall not be held to increase the pay or allowances of such agents.

Mr. SARGENT. I suppose this bill is open to objection. On the reading of the first clause of the bill I had no objection to its consideration. This is an original amendment, making a change in the system, and I fear not a wise one. I think there is not time to consider it at present, and therefore I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California objects, and the bill goes over.

PRINTING OF A BILL.

Mr. INGALLS submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That five hundred copies of the bill (S. No. 34) to confirm pre-emption and homestead entries of public lands within the limits of railroad grants in cases where such entries have been made under the regulations of the Land Department be printed for the use of the Senate.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter of the Paymaster-General, dated the 12th instant, recommending the enactment of the provisions contained in section 1, act July 17, 1862, allowing mounted pay to all officers assigned to duty which requires them to be mounted, said provision having been omitted in the Revised Statutes, and the War Department having decided that, in view of said omission, payment of such mounted pay is unlawful, and urging that the act be made to take effect from December 1, 1873; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I have the honor to transmit herewith to Congress the final report of the board of audit constituted by section 6 of the act for the government of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, approved June 20, 1874, and abolished by the joint resolution approved March 14, 1876, and to call your attention to the statements therein presented.

U. S. GRANT.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, April 19, 1876.

The message was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

EDUCATIONAL FUND.

Mr. MAXEY. I submit a substitute for the bill (S. No. 334) to establish an educational fund and apply a portion of the proceeds of the public lands to public education, and to provide for the more complete endowment and support of national colleges for the advancement of scientific and industrial education. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] has given notice that he intends to call this bill up on Monday. I move that the proposed substitute be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

AUSTIN-TOPOLOVAMPO PACIFIC ROUTE.

Mr. WEST. By permission of the Senator from Missouri, before he proceeds with his remarks on the regular order, I am enabled to ask the Senate to take up the bill (S. No. 92) to survey the Austin-Topolovampo Pacific route, which has been reported by the Committee on Railroads.

Mr. SHERMAN. I must insist upon the regular order of business.

Mr. WEST. This bill was reported some days ago by the Committee on Railroads, and I will state to the Senator that unless it is passed now its object will be defeated by such lapse of the season as will render it inconvenient to continue the survey during the intense heats of the summer. It is desired by the Department to have the bill put into effect. I do not think it will take a moment to pass it. It will pass in less time than the Senator has taken to object.

Mr. SHERMAN. It cannot pass without considerable explanation. I think there is no harm in letting it go over till Monday. I have no knowledge about it and no opinion about it.

Mr. WEST. I shall not insist, if the Senator wishes to inform himself.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senate bill No. 263 is the unfinished business.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 3151) to remove the disabilities of John Johnson, of the county of Granville, and State of North Carolina, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 34) to print 4,500 copies of the annual report of the United States geological and geographical survey of the Territories was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. No. 2799) to amend certain sections of titles 48 and 52 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, concerning commerce and navigation and the regulation of steam-vessels, received from the House of Representatives, with the correction of the error formerly made in engrossment; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

DISTRICT COURT OF WEST VIRGINIA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives asking for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 472) changing the times of holding terms of the district court for the district of West Virginia.

On motion of Mr. EDMUNDS, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its disagreement to the amendments of the House to the said bill and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. EDMUNDS, Mr. CONKLING, and Mr. CAPERTON.

LEGAL TENDER OF SILVER COIN.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 263) to amend the laws relating to legal tender of silver coin.

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill, and in lieu thereof insert the following:

That there shall be coined at the mints of the United States a silver dollar of the weight of four hundred and twelve and eight-tenth grains troy, of standard silver, the emblems, devices, and inscriptions of which shall conform to those prescribed by law for the gold and siver coins of the United States, with such modifications thereof as may be necessay to render the said dollar readily distinguishable from the trade-dollar; and in the coinage and delivery thereof, the same deviation from standard weight and fineness shall be allowed as are prescribed by law for the trade-dollar; and the said dollar herein authorized shall be a legal tender at its nominal value for any amount not exceeding $20 in any one payment, except for customs duties and interest on the public debt, and shall be receivable in payment of all dues to the United States except duties on imports; and the trade-dollar shall not hereafter be a legal tender.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to exchange the silver dollars herein authorized for an equal amount of United States notes, which shall be retired and canceled, and not be again replaced by other notes. And all United States notes redeemed under this act shall be held to be a part of the sinking fund provided for by existing law, the interest to be computed thereon as in the case of bonds redeemed under the acts relating to the sinking fund.

SEC. 3. That any owner of silver bullion may deposit the same at the mints, to be taken at its market value, as ascertained and publicly announced from time to time by the Director of the Mint, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, and to be paid for either in silver dollars or with gold coin or United States notes; or bullion for the coinage of said silver dollars may be procured in the mode provided for as to other silver coins by section 3536 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, the gain and wastage to be accounted for as provided in said section.

Mr. BOGY. Mr. President I move to amend the amendment of the committee by striking out in the fourteenth line of the first section after the word "amount" the words "not exceeding $20 in any one payment;" and then in the fifteenth line strike out the words "except for," and in lieu of them insert "including," and then after the word "tender" in line 18 at the end of the section, and inserting "and the relative value between gold and silver of lawful standard is fixed at 15½ to 1.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. DAVIS in the chair.) The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri to the amendment reported by the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BOGY. Mr. President, the bill as reported by the Committee on Finance proposes the coinage of the old standard silver dollar of four hundred and twelve and eight-tenths grains, and also further proposes that this dollar shall be a legal tender to the amount of $20, but not receivable in payment of duties. I propose, by way of amendment to the bill of the committee, that silver shall be a legal tender for all amounts, and in payment of all contracts whatsoever, both public and private, and that it shall be receivable in payment of duties at the custom-house. I am fully aware of the state of public opinion on this subject at this time, and particulary in one section of the country, and I am not unaware that I shall subject myself to a great deal of unkind animadversion for proposing this amendment to the committee's bill.

I am fully aware also of the fact that there is a very large, numerous, and influential class who believe not only that gold should be the only legal standard, but that it is our duty to pay our public debt in nothing else, and that any proposition which looks to a payment of this public debt in silver is a violation of the plighted faith. Believing that silver is a legal tender under the Constitution, and that its introduction into the money system of this country will lead to the most beneficial results, I feel it my duty to say so, and to the extent of my poor abilities to impress these views on the Senate and on the country.

What should be a legal tender in the payment of debts both public and private is one of the most interesting and also one of the most important questions in the whole range of political science. It is interesting, because it is identified with the history of the human race from the very earliest ages. It is important, because it lies at the foundation of all national prosperity. And interesting as it is, and important as it is, yet it is still more so in this country than in any other and at this time more than at any other period. When we consider the want of prosperity over the whole land, the shrinkage of values both real and personal everywhere, manufactures stopped, all enterprises suspended, labor unemployed, a scarcity of money felt by every class except one, any proposition which can infuse life and activity in this sad condition of affairs may well be recognized as of the very greatest importance.

While I am willing to admit that the sad condition of the country is not the result alone of our vicious monetary system, but brought about by many well-known causes, nevertheless it is the most important and controlling of all the causes. I believe that the rapid coinage of silver of the proper standard and the making of it a legal tender for all sums in payment and in fulfillment of all contracts, private and public, and quickly and rapidly putting it into circulation, would soon have the effect of infusing new life and activity into the business of the entire country. I furthermore believe that, unless this be done and the resumption law of January 14, 1875, remains unrepealed, the business condition of the country will go on from bad to worse. But, on the other hand, if silver be coined as rapidly as it can be accomplished at the different mints of the United States, and be made a legal tender equal to gold, resumption will be effected easily and permanently, and a feeling of security and confidence will at once be created, which of itself would soon lead to a revival of business in every department.

Gold and silver have heretofore been regarded by all nations, from the beginning of organized society, as the precious or royal metals. Thus the so-called double standard of gold and silver has been settled by the universal practice of mankind in all ages and in all countries, and it may be said that the further you go back, the more important silver appears to have been. It was a measure of value when gold was not. Historically, however, gold and silver have in all ages been considered as the precious and royal metals. At the very dawn of civilization these two metals were used as a medium of exchange and a measure of value. The cities of the plains thousands of years ago used them for the purposes of trade at home, and also in their international commercial relations. In the history of the invasion of the East by Alexander we read of kings and kingdoms which he conquered whose wealth was composed of these two metals. Later in time we know, from the Bible and contemporaneous history, that these two metals were used among the Jews; and the most noted event in the history of the human race was paid for in silver. Judas Iscariot, for thirty pieces of silver, covenanted to betray his Master, the Saviour of the world. When he repented and cast it away, it was not allowed to be received into the treasury, because it was the price of blood; but it was used to buy a piece of land to be appropriated for a burial-place for strangers. This shows that silver at that day was used for all purposes, both public and private. It would have been received into the treasury had it not been stained with blood. It was used to buy a piece of land for a burial-place. It was said to have been thirty pieces, thus indicating that it was coin; no doubt rude, but nevertheless it was coin. Hence on that occasion silver was the measure of values and used as a medium to accomplish the object.

As commerce and civilization traveled westward and spread over the eastern portion of the continent of Europe, in Greece and the islands of the ocean, gold and silver were the metals in use.

Traveling downward historically through all the different periods, including the many centuries of the existence of the Roman power, and throughout all the Middle Ages, and so on down to a very modern time, these were the two metals in use. In England silver, in many respects, was better than gold, although both were recognized by the common law.

I will undertake to show that under our Constitution, in spite of the effort which has been made to change it, silver is yet a precious metal and as fully recognized as gold. Under its sanction it must remain a legal tender, and no power exists in the Federal Government nor in the States to prevent this from being so. I will furthermore attempt to show that the history of the legislation of the Federal Government has until a very recent period always recognized silver and gold as the metals constituting the coin of the nation. There are but two provisions in the Constitution of the United States relating to money. Section 8, article 1, says:

> Congress shall have power * * * to coin money, regulate the value thereof and of foreign coin.

Section 10 of the same article says:

> No State shall * * * coin money; emit bills of credit; make anything bu gold and silver coin a tender in payment of debts.

While this latter section is a restriction of the power of the States, it is equally a recognition of power in them to make gold and silver a tender, in payment of debts. All powers were originally in the States and are there yet, excepting those which have been expressly granted, or by necessary implication grow out of granted powers. The power to coin was expressly granted to Congress. The power to coin was granted, but the power to say what should be a legal tender was reserved to the States. Nor could it be otherwise, in accordance with the theory of the Constitution, for the power to regulate and to enforce private contracts belongs to the States alone, and this being in the States and not in Congress, upon them necessarily was imposed the duty to prescribe what should be a legal tender. The Constitution restricted this to silver and gold; but the power was in the States nevertheless. In that way, and in no other way, gold and silver are made the metals of the Constitution, because nothing else can be made a legal tender by the States.

If the Constitution had said "gold or silver," it would have been competent for the States to have made one or the other or both.

At the time that our Constitution was formed, in 1787, the usage of all the nations of Europe conformed to what I have stated. Gold and silver had become more important at that time than for centuries before—the New World had been discovered—the mines of South America and Mexico yielding millions of both. No nation had an exclusive gold standard but many had the exclusive silver.

The first nation to make gold the exclusive standard was England in 1816. The others have done so since, and have blindly followed her lead. The practice of the Government has conformed to the letter of the Constitution without any departure whatsoever till the act of 7th of February, 1873. Up to that time both metals stood exactly on the same footing. Both were legal tenders, and the relation between the two was fixed by law. This act was passed, without discussion in or out of Congress, by way of amendment to a long act in relation to the Mint, which provided for the coinage of the trade-dollar and smaller coins, and which were not to be legal tenders in sums exceeding $5. It may be true that the old coins were scarce, but nevertheless they remained a legal-tender coin.

This continued to be the law till the revision of the statutes by act of 22d of June, 1874, when all silver coins were demonetized except as to sums of $5. The revised code was to contain nothing but the laws then existing and in force. Yet a law was put in this book not existing before in relation to silver and demonetizing the old coins. Up to 1853 all the silver coin was a legal tender for any amount, as unrestricted as gold. The legal ratio of silver to gold was 16 to 1. I propose in the amendment which I have offered to make it 15½ to 1 for reasons which I shall hereafter give. This ratio caused the exportation of silver from this country to France, where the relative value was 15½ to 1. To remedy this the act of 1853 was passed, which reduced the half dollar and smaller pieces to the condition of token coins by a depreciation of a little less than 8 per cent. The old standard dollar of 1792 (the same intended to be re-instated by this bill) remained the same, but was practically suppressed, because no longer coined at the Mint; yet there was no law preventing the coinage.

Silver of all denominations coined previously remained a legal tender. That is, the old standard dollar, the old half dollars, and the old quarters, coined prior to 1853, remained legal-tenders, and so continued till the acts of February 17, 1873, which constituted the gold dollar-piece the unit of value and restricted the legal tender of silver to $5. It was then, and not before, that the double standard of gold and silver, which had existed from the very beginning of the Government, was abolished.

I desire this point to be well understood, as I shall argue, before I conclude, that the public debt, including the law regulating the payment of duties and the law regulating the sinking fund, having all been passed before 1873, are payable in gold and in silver. To continue to pay our bonds in gold exclusively is a most oppressive and unjust system, calculated to increase the burdens of the public, and is ruinous to the people, whose means of payment are restricted to one metal, while at the time the contract was made there were two, and while it is oppressive upon one portion it is greatly beneficial and advantageous to another.

It cannot be doubted, under the power reserved to the States under the tenth section of the first article of the Constitution, that each one can provide by law that gold and silver shall be a legal tender in payment of debts within its territorial limits. If each State has this power, all can do the same thing. This being so, what becomes of the Federal law which says that silver shall no longer be a legal tender? Can they be controlled in the exercise of this power? And, if they cannot, the act of 1873, passed without discussion in either House and by way of amendment to another bill, and the act in the Revised Statutes are unconstitutional. The power to coin being in the Federal Government gives to it great control over the action of the States. If no silver was coined there would be none for the States to use in the way of a tender. In that way it has great power and control over this question. By the eighth section of the first article power is given to Congress to regulate the value of foreign coin; but if it fails to exercise this power, cannot the States exercise it for themselves?

From the history of congressional legislation it appears that the power to regulate the value of foreign coin was only intended to be exercised for a limited period and until our own coins should be supplied. The first act creating a mint was passed on the 2d day of April, 1792. This act declared a number of foreign coins to be legal-tenders, but that very act limited the time for the duration of this law to three years after the mint should be in operation.

Laws regulating foreign coins continued till the 21st of February, 1857, when they were repealed, and the power was conferred upon the Director of the Mint to make the required assays, and publish the same at different periods of time. Prior to the act of 1792, when Congress first decreed our American coinage, and also fixed the value of foreign coins, the States must necessarily have exercised the power.

I have thus, in a brief manner, given my views of what I consider the constitutional question. It is not my purpose to dwell at greater length on this head.

Having stated these points, each one, here and elsewhere, can examine for himself. Reflection and study have satisfied me that the positions here taken are correct, and that our legislation on this subject is and has been unconstitutional. Congress cannot say that gold alone shall be a legal tender as between private individuals.

My friend from North Carolina [Mr. MERRIMON] asks me what I do with the decision of the Supreme Court. I answer, this decision was simply to the effect that it was a power conceded to exist in the Federal Government as a means of carrying on war.

In 1791, Hamilton, being then Secretary of the Treasury, made a very elaborate report to Congress on the subject of a mint, and, like everything else from this remarkable man, it is very able. The question of the double standard was examined. He says:

> To annul the use of either of the metals as money is to abridge the quantity of the circulating medium of the world, and is liable to all the objections which arise from a comparison of the benefits of a full with the evils of a scanty circulation.

Jefferson was one of his colleagues in the Cabinet of Washington. This report was sent to him. He returned it, and wrote as follows:

> I return you the report of the mint. I concur with you that the unit must stand upon both metals.

This was recognizing what really was the settled policy of mankind in all ages, in all countries, and particularly at that period, and which continued to be our policy until 1873.

It is believed by statisticans that the quantity of gold and silver in the world is about equally divided, and the total quantity, according to Dr. Linderman, is from ten to twelve thousand millions. My friend, the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN,] stated the other day, and quoted Mr. Seyd, that the quantity was $6,750,000,000. Seyd undoubtedly states that fact, and although an intelligent writer, nevertheless I would not classify him as very high authority. I read his book with some care, and it seems to me I have read abler works. I accept the statement of Dr. Linderman as likely to be more correct.

The power of money is in the inverse proportion to its quantity. Where it is abundant interest is low, and where scarce it is higher; and those nations to-day (excepting our own) who are in favor of the single standard of gold are so because it is to their interest, being the creditor nations.

It is supposed that the public debt of all the different nationalities amounts to about $20,000,000,000, and one-half or perhaps more of this is held by England and Germany, and of this amount we unfortunately owe a large portion. If these two creditor nations can in any way appreciate the value of gold by demonetizing silver is it not their interest to do so? Would not their wealth thereby be greatly increased? England saw this as early as 1816. Although yet in the condition of bank suspension, it was already buying the bonds of all the states of Europe that were being resuscitated from the prostrate condition in which they had been during the Napoleonic wars. The Rothschilds established themselves in London; the Baring Brothers, and other great banking houses, became the buyers of the bonds thrown then on the market, thick as the leaves of Vallombrosa. Germany at that time had an immense amount of silver coin and retained it until a very recent day. But recently, intoxicated by its victories over the French people, and no doubt greatly influenced by English diplomacy, it also established the single standard. But however wise it may have been for her as a creditor nation to do this, the attempt has been expensive indeed. From being in a flourishing and prosperous condition the act of demonetization has brought her to a condition of widespread bankruptcy, and now it is reported that this subject will be reconsidered and that she will go back to the double standard. The great mass of her people are not bondholders, and it is ruinous to them to demonetize three hundred and fifty millions of silver coin.

It was believed the nations having the double standard would buy this silver. But the statesmen of France saw this and at once a union was formed with Belgium and Italy to refuse to buy this old coin. The result has been that silver has depreciated greatly and German coin has found no market. Silver to-day is quoted low. While there are several reasons for this, the most important is the fact of the large quantity withdrawn from the channels of trade as money and thrown on the market as bullion.

It affords me very great pleasure to avail myself of a publication made by Mr. George M. Weston, a friend of mine in Boston, which I will read. He has collected the views of some of the leading financiers of France on this very subject and published them. They are pertinent and able:

In his Recherches sur l'or et sur l'argent, 1843, Léon Fauchet said: "If all the nations of Europe adopted the system of Great Britain, the price of gold would be raised beyond measure, and we should see produced in Europe a result lamentable enough. The government cannot decree that legal tender shall be only gold in place of silver, for that would be to decree a revolution, and the most dangerous of all, because it would be a revolution leading to unknown results, (qui marcherait vers l'inconnu.")

In a memoir read before the French Institute in 1868, M. Wolowski said:

"The suppression of silver would bring on a veritable revolution. Gold would augment in value with a rapid and constant progress which would break the faith of contracts and aggravate the situation of all debtors, including the nation. It would add at one stroke of the pen at least three milliards to the twelve milliards of the public debt."

A monetary commission appointed by the French government in 1869 took the testimony of practical financiers, who were unanimous against the proposed demonetization of silver.

Before this commission M. le Baron Alphonso de Rothschild said:

"The actual state of things, that is to say, the simultaneous employment of the two precious metals is satisfactory and gives rise to no complaint. What is most needed in commerce is facility in its operations, and to-day it employs, according to its needs, sometimes gold and sometimes silver, and the partial replacement of silver by gold which has taken place in these later times has been effected without inconvenience.

"They now demand that silver should be demonetized, as fifteen years ago they demanded that gold should be. The French government wisely refused to demonetize gold then, and it will be equally wise to refuse to demonetize silver now. In fact, whether gold or silver dominates for the time being, it is always true that the two metals concur together in forming the monetary circulation of the world, and it is the general mass of the two metals combined which serves as the measure of the value of things. In countries with the double standard the principal circulation will always be established of that metal which is the most abundant. It is scarcely twenty years ago that silver was the principal element in our transactions. Since the discoveries of the California and Australian mines, it is gold which has taken its place. No person can foresee what the future has in store for us, or can predict that the proportion in which the two metals are now produced may not be changed in favor of silver.

"It appears to me that there are real advantages in maintaining silver in circulation, and none in its suppression, since it is now actually a part of the circulation. I should regret the demonetization of silver in its relations to our internal circulation, our commercial intercourse with other countries, and the always uncertain eventualities of the future. But I should regret it even more if our example should be followed by other nations, for that suppression of silver would amount to a veritable destruction of values without any compensation.

"Without doubt the two metals are not always in the same measure at our control; there is always one more abundant than the other; but neither of them has ever completely disappeared, and we have always been able to find the one of which we had need."

M. d'Eichtal, a director of the Bank of France, said:

"In cotton, every fall in price brings an increase in consumption. But in silver, if you take away its title of legal money, which makes an unlimited outlet for it, it must fall exceedingly low before it would find an employment equal to the one you take away."

M. Rouland, the governor of the Bank of France, said:

"We have not to do with ideal theories. The two moneys have actually co-existed since the origin of human society, without any disadvantage, and even with actual advantage in all countries which have availed themselves of them. They co-exist, because the two together are necessary, by their quantity, to meet the needs of circulation. This necessity of the two metals, has it ceased to exist? Is it established that the quantity of actual and prospective gold is such that we can now renounce the use of silver without disaster? In place of the two moneys, is it entirely sure that the whole world can be usefully served with only one?"

Mr. Wolowski said:

"To adopt one metal, gold, to the exclusion of the other, it is not merely as if they closed all existing mines of silver, but as if they suppressed in this regard the labor of all past ages. The sum total of the precious metals is reckoned at fifty milliards, one-half gold and one-half silver. If, by a stroke of the pen, they suppress one of these metals in the monetary service, they double the demand for the other metal, to the ruin of all debtors."

At the sitting of the French senate on the 28th of January, 1870, which has properly been characterized as "memorable," from the magnitude of the subject of the debate and from the dignity and gravity with which the discussion was maintained, Dumas, a senator, to whose words learning, experience, virtue, and age combined to give weight, invoked the body to pause before concluding to make a change, which he said "would affect the whole human race."

"Those," said Dumas, "who approach these questions for the first time, decide them at once. Those who study them with care, hesitate. Those who are obliged practically to decide, doubt and stop, overwhelmed with the weight of the enormous responsibility.

"The quantities of the precious metals which are now sufficient may become insufficient, and we should proceed with great prudence before we diminish that which constitutes a part of the riches of the human race. Sometimes gold takes the place of silver. Sometimes silver takes the place of gold. This keeps up the general equilibrium. Nobody can guarantee that the present vast production of gold will continue. The placers are found on the surface of the earth, and may be exhausted by the very facility of working them. Silver presents itself in the form of subterranean veins. Science may contribute to accelerate its extraction. In presence of the unknown, which dominates the future, we should practice a prudent reserve."

Mr. Hunter, a former distinguished and able Senator from Virginia, in 1852 made a very elaborate report on the subject of finance, in which this question was well considered. He says:

In thus excluding one of these metals from one country we diminish the volume of specie currency of the world below the natural supply. How this would affect mankind will be hereafter examined. But the mischief would be great indeed if all the world were to adopt but one of the precious metals as the standard of value. To adopt gold alone would diminish the specie currency more than one-half, and would prove highly disastrous to the human race. Indeed a reference to the history of the precious metals and the general course of human production can scarcely fail to convince us that there has been a constant tendency to appreciate their value as compared with the residue of the property of the world, and that every extraordinary increase of the supply of the precious metals of which we have any account has exercised a highly beneficial effect upon human affairs. When contracts are made by a standard which is gradually contracting, the advantages are on the side of capital as against labor, and productive energy is cramped by receiving less than a fair share of the profits of its enterprises. Before the invention of substitutes for payments in coin and before the increased supply of specie from the discovery of America, human history is full of the strifes between debtor and creditor, and human legislation is rife with experiments to limit the encroaching and engrossing power of capital.

The most ancient legislation of which we have authentic accounts extinguished all debts in every seventh year. Interest was often prohibited, and generally regarded with abhorrence; for although the reason was not perceived, yet the fact was felt that capital received profit enough for its use in the appreciation of the standard of value. Up to a recent period the debasement of coin has been practiced in all countries. The English pound, which in the days of William the Conqueror contained a pound weight of silver, contains now three ounces, twelve pennyweights, and sixteen grains. The French livre, whose original weight would now be worth $18.16, is so reduced as to be worth only 18.478 cents. Such are the effects which would have naturally flowed from a constant tendency toward contraction in the standard of value upon which contracts were based. The attempts which were made to relieve these evils were unskillful and often mischievous; but these expedients were sometimes called for by the necessities of the times, and were the evidences, if not the remedies, for mischiefs actually endured. To have prevented the contraction of the specie standard of value, it was necessary that the precious metals should have increased as fast as the residue of the property of the world; but we know that before the discovery of America the annual supply of the precious metals was very small, while it is notorious that capital and property accumulate rapidly in times of profound peace. That this must be so becomes still more evident when we trace the history of the precious metals since the discovery of America, and during a period when we have better means for ascertaining facts in relation to the relative progress of specie and property. That capital has increased with great rapidity even in the last two centuries, although there were long periods of wasteful warfare in both, there is abundant evidence. Since the time of William of Orange, capital in Great Britain, and perhaps in Europe generally, must have doubled; for the rate of interest, notwithstanding the increasing demand for capital from increasing population, has diminished nearly one-half.

Says Mr. Hunter further on:

How much of the depression of commerce, during the Middle Ages, arose from the decline of prices consequent upon a diminution of the stock of precious metals, has probably never been sufficiently estimated. And yet a comparison between the deep decline of all the great interests connected with commerce and human industry during that period, and the wonderful impulse given to all sorts of productive enterprise after the discovery of the American mines, must suggest the effects which the existing state of the standard of value produced during the two periods. But it may be asked why it is that this contraction of the standard of value has not been more seriously felt in modern times, if, in truth, the relative additions made to the stock of specie and property of the world were much larger in the latter than in the former case. If all the pecuniary transactions of society had been settled in currency, and there had been no currency but specie, there is reason to believe that the present state of things would give unmistakable evidences of the effects of a contraction of the currency upon our enterprise and industry.

We require, then, for this reason the double standard of gold and silver; but above all do we require both to counteract the tendency of the specie standard to contract under the vast increase of the value of the property of the world. And what harm can arise from any probable increase of the precious metals if both are allowed to swell the volume of currency? On the contrary, a more beneficial event for the trade, the industry, the moral and political condition of the world, could scarcely be imagined. Of all the great effects produced upon human society by the discovery of America there were probably none so marked as those brought about by the great influx of the precious metals from the New World to the Old. European industry had been declining under the decreasing stock of precious metals and an appreciating standard of value, human ingenuity grew dull under the paralyzing influences of declining profits, and capital absorbed nearly all that should have been divided between it and labor. But an increase of the precious metals in such quantities as to check this tendency operated as a new motive power to the machinery of commerce. Production was stimulated by finding the advantages of a change in the standard upon its side. Instead of being repressed by having to pay more than it had stipulated for the use of capital, it was stimulated by paying less. Capital, too, was benefited, for new demands were created for it by the new uses which a general movement in industrial pursuits had developed; so that, if it lost a little by a change in the standard, it gained much more in the greater demand for its use, which added to its capacities for reproduction and to its real value.

I have read from this report these few extracts to show that in 1852 this subject was brought to the mind of Congress; and yet in all this report, able as it is, showing evidences of great industry, the question as to what should be made a legal tender was not at all discussed. It was only whether we should make a double or a single standard; that is, a question of coinage growing out of the exclusive power given to the United States to coin money; and in that view, and confined to that view, the subject was examined by him, as it had been many years before by Mr. Hamilton.

I will read from the report made by Dr. Linderman in 1873–'74:

The gradual adoption of the gold standard, and consequent demonetization of silver, will of course be followed by an increase in the value of gold, or, what is the same thing, a decrease in the price of articles measured by it.

Here is a most important point, which I will read again:

The gradual adoption of the gold standard, and consequent demonetization of silver, will of course be followed by an increase in the value of gold, or, what is the same thing, a decrease in the price of articles measured by it.

Apply this idea to the two classes contending in this world, the rich and the poor, the capitalist and the laboring-man, and judge what will be the result if you have only one standard.

Indeed it is quite certain that this effect is already perceptible in some portions of Europe. Be that as it may, however, it is safe to assume that Germany will soon have substituted three hundred millions of gold for silver heretofore used as standard money, and that Denmark, Sweden, and Norway will require nearly as much more in consequence of changing their standard from silver to gold. Now, add to the foregoing the requirements of France and the United States in the near future, and it will be readily understood that gold must appreciate in value.

It is true that the mines of the world produce annually about one hundred millions of gold; but in considering this as a stock to be drawn upon for coinage, it must be remembered that the consumption of gold in the arts has largely increased during the last twenty-three years, and now approximates to about twenty-five millions per annum.

It is not within the province of this report to consider or discuss the bearing of the above-stated facts upon financial questions, and I will therefore dismiss the subject with the remark that countries, however wealthy and prosperous, cannot, even with the aid of bills of exchange, maintain an exclusively metallic currency, and that the use of paper money as an auxiliary to and convertible into coin is more likely to increase than diminish in the future. A more extensive use of subsidiary coin than heretofore is also probable. In support of this latter view reference is made to the fact that during the year 1872 the subsidiary silver coinage of Great Britain amounted to about $6,000,000, all for home circulation, and in a country which was previously well stocked with coin. The French subsidiary coin for the same year amounted to about $7,000,000.

Report of 1874–'75:

The world's stock of precious metals is generally estimated at from ten to twelve thousand millions of dollars, nearly equally divided as to the two metals. The estimate appears to be based on the assumption that the stock at the commencement of the fifteenth century amounted to two thousand millions, and that from eight to ten thousand millions have since been added, principally from the mines of North and South America and Australia.

The present production of gold being estimated at one hundred millions and silver eighty millions would give an annual addition to the accumulated stock of 1½ per cent. The estimates of the earlier writers must be taken with a good many grains of allowance; and, generally in connection with this subject and its practical bearing upon the affairs of the present period, it may be proper to observe that there have been so many important changes in monetary systems and in the financial and industrial condition of different countries, as well as redistributions of specie, during the last half century, as to render the statements and conclusions on various points connected therewith contained in the old standard works comparatively useless.

The period referred to has been one of unparalleled activity and progress, and the utilization of steam and electricity in the intercourse of nations and the great extension of international credits have effected a complete revolution in the commerce of the world. These important changes have not, however, enabled the world to dispense with the precious metals as the common measure of value and medium of exchange. On the contrary, those metals remain in that respect, the same as they were at the commencement of authentic history, the only money of universal recognition and unlimited acceptance.

Report for year ending June 30, 1875:

The principal money markets of the world have been occasionally disturbed during the last three years, and the margin of the exchanges has been such as to afford a wide field for speculation. In seeking for the causes of these disturbances, it would appear, at first glance, that the supply of gold is unequal to the legitimate demands of the rapidly increasing commerce of the world. A careful examination of the subject, however, will show that the monetary troubles have not been caused by insufficient supplies of gold, but by its having been withheld in large sums from circulation, "and the diminished use of silver as money." It will be of some interest to note the events and circumstances which have caused this abnormal state of affairs.

In 1871, provision was made by law for a new money-system in the German Empire, the principal features of which were the establishment of the exclusive gold standard, the demonetization of silver, and the issue of national coins, involving, as a necessary consequence, the withdrawal of all gold and silver coins then in circulation or held as treasury and bank reserves.

The amount of silver coin in the empire, at the time of the enactment of the new monetary law, was estimated by the best authorities at about $350,000,000. It was expected that two-thirds of this amount would be exported to neighboring countries, and the balance converted into subsidiary coin.

* * * * * * *

The closing of the Netherlands mint was followed by the enactment of a law which authorized the coinage of a legal-tender gold piece, and prohibited the coinage of silver, except for government account. These measures were skillfully taken, and closed the door against silver, and correspondingly opened it for gold.

The delay in completing the great monetary reform in Germany must be attributed mainly to the action of the neighboring countries in practically closing what was expected would be the best and largest markets for silver. Under the former money system Germany was a purchaser of silver; but when the change from the silver to the gold standard took place, ceased to be so and became a large seller.

The condition of the state bank of Russia would appear to indicate that the prospective fall in silver had caused some uneasiness at St. Petersburg, and that protective measures had been taken from the fact that the bank held on the 1st of January, 1856, 67,897,561 roubles, gold, and 45,234,372 roubles, silver; and on July 22, 1874, 194,049,231 roubles, gold, and 23,315,329 roubles, silver.

Notwithstanding the large amount of specie received in payment of the French indemnity, Germany has, from time to time, since 1872, been a purchaser of large sums of gold, and the manufacture of the new standard national coins has already amounted to about $285,000,000. The coins, however, have not gone into general circulation to the extent originally expected, for the reason that the old standard silver coins which are inferior in value continue, under the provisions of the new monetary law, to be effective money in payments. Gold has, therefore, to a large extent been held in the vaults of the imperial treasury, mints, and the banks.

* * * * * * * *

The question of returning to a specie basis is receiving general and earnest consideration, and, while its discussion does not come within the limits of this report, certain well-settled principles and facts in connection with the subject of money and the monetary system of this country may with propriety be briefly referred to.

A money standard subject to as little variation as possible, and by which values may be computed, exchanges effected, and contracts fulfilled with uniformity and equity, has long been regarded as a necessity by every well-regulated government.

The experience of nations has proved the precious metals, and particularly gold, to be the least variable as a monetary standard and the best adapted for a circulating medium of all known substances; their peculiar properties, and particularly those of easy manipulation and resistance to the elements and agencies which either destroy or injuriously affect other metals and substances, rendering them eminently adapted for this service.

No material or substance not of intrinsic value, and comparatively imperishable, is suitable for a circulating medium and permanent standard of value. The value of the precious metals depends, as in the case of all other commodities, on certain inherent qualities and the cost of production. By value is meant the rate in the legal money-terms of a nation or government at which labor and property of all kinds are exchanged one for another. A given weight of gold or silver, unlike all other things, has a fixed value by law in the legal money terms of all countries, and this peculiarity contributes greatly to maintain uniformity in their value.

The units of the money of account of all countries associated in modern civilization were originally based on or declared by law to be represented by a certain weight of pure metal in the form of coins, and the latter made a legal tender without limit.

The quantity of pure metal representing the ideal unit of the money of account, once being fixed by law, becomes the basis of exchange and measure of contracts, and its steady maintenance has always been regarded by the most enlightened statesmen and eminent writers on finance as an imperative duty of governments.

The precious metals being the real basis of all well-regulated money systems, no one commercial country can even temporarily depart from such without subjecting itself to serious evils.

Without dwelling at any greater length on the reports of Dr. Linderman, it would appear that although he does not recommend the double standard, his arguments tend to prove its absolute necessity.

All the obligations of the Government issued prior and up to 1873, payable in coin, can be paid in silver as well as in gold. The act of February 25, 1862, authorizing the issue of 5.20 bonds, specially provides that the interest shall be paid in coin; not gold, but simply coin. This act also provides that duties on imports shall be paid in coin; not gold, but coin. The same act created the sinking fund, payable in coin. The act of 17th of February, 1862, made its obligations payable in coin; that of 11th of July, 1862, is also in coin; act of March 3, 1863, to issue $900,000,000, is payable in coin; act of March 3, 1864, for a loan of $200,000,000, coin; the act of 30th of June, 1864, to borrow $400,000,000, coin; the act of 3d of March, 1865, "coin or other lawful money," meaning coin or greenbacks, and that was for $600,000,000. The act of March 18, 1869, which I will read, recognizes in words silver as well as gold. I have no doubt the act was drawn by my distinguished friend from Ohio, for he was at that time, as he is now, the able head of the Committee on Finance, and I would suppose naturally that he drew this act himself:

An act to strengthen the public credit.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That in order to remove any doubt as to the purpose of the Government to discharge all just obligations to the public creditors, and to settle conflicting questions and interpretations of the laws by virtue of which such obligations have been contracted, it is hereby provided and declared that the faith of the United States is solemnly pledged to the payment in coin or its equivalent of all the obligations of the United States not bearing interest, known as United States notes, and of all the interest-bearing obligations of the United States, except in cases where the law authorizing the issue of any such obligation has expressly provided that the same may be paid in lawful money or other currency than gold and silver.

This act shows that at the time the minds of those Senators who voted for it understood the obligation to be payable in silver as well as with gold; and, if my friend from Ohio drew it, he himself thereby admitted that we could discharge our obligations with silver as well as with gold. There is no room to escape; the conclusion is inevitable.

If we look at all those acts from the first to the last, we will find they all provide for payment in coin. Since 1873, however, we have made our bonds payable in gold.

It is proper to notice an argument which is advanced to refute the position that our bonds, being payable in coin, can be paid with silver. It is said by the act of 1853 silver was demonetized and was no longer a legal tender; and therefore in 1862 and the years following, when we obligated ourselves to pay coin, we could not have meant silver, it being demonetized and no longer a coin recognized by law. But the fact is not so. The act of 1853 did not in the least demonetize silver. It only provided for the issue of a subsidiary coin of a lower value, so as to prevent its exportation abroad. That subsidiary coin was only made a legal-tender to the amount of $5. The old silver dollar and halves and quarters remained good legal-tenders, and, with gold, constituted the legal coin of the nation.

Up to 1873 it does not appear that any one in this country ever advanced the idea that it was competent for Congress to demonetize silver. The history of our legislation from the very beginning of our Government to that time recognized it as the equal of gold. The law of 1873 was surreptitiously interjected into a bill pending at that time before the Senate in relation to the mint. The effect of this amendment, apparently so small, has been most disastrous to the prosperity of this country. Gold has been at a high premium from that day to this.

Now, after all this, can we retrace our steps and make silver coin a legal tender, as the letter of the Constitution undoubtedly provides? Would it be wise to introduce the double standard coin as a part of our monetary system? If it is to be understood by a double standard that there would be two measures of value, I would deplore its introduction; but this is not so. There would be but one measure. It would not be gold nor silver, but it would be the two; these two composing the coin of the nation.

The relative value of the two becomes of very great importance. We had it once at 16 for 1. It had been 15 to 1 before, which was an error. To remedy this, it was fixed at 16 to 1, which, from what we can now see, we think was also an error. It should have been 15½ to 1.

This is an international commercial question. England, Germany, and France, the great commercial nations of Europe, have fixed the relation at 15½ to 1. That being so, we cannot err at fixing it ourselves at the same ratio. As to the Asiatic trade and that of the Indies, different conditions exist, and which do not apply to the European nations. And as it has been fixed at 15½ to 1 in Europe, I would fix it at that for this country. It is true that there is at times a slight variation in their commercial value. Sometimes gold is slightly up and sometimes it is silver, but the difference has been so little for two hundred years as to amount to nothing of importance.

It is said that, the production of silver being on the increase, if we make it a legal tender, the danger is that in a short time there will be a great glut of it in this country. To this I answer that the amount we produce of both is about equal, being about $40,000,000 of each. While the total production of gold is greater than that of silver, it is diminishing, while the other is increasing. In the future perhaps gold will diminish yet more rapidly, and silver is likely to increase. We have 40,000,000 of people. If the silver coinage could be increased to the amount of $400,000,000, it would only give a circulation of $10 per head. The Senator from Ohio stated the other day that to pay our debt with it would be a violation of public faith and would impair our credit. While I would not wantonly injure our credit, yet I am not willing to allow our creditors to be the exclusive judges. There are always two parties to all contracts, and if we did not promise gold, our creditors have no right to construe the contract so as to make it so.

It is again said that if we make silver the standard gold will go from this country, and in a very short time we will have nothing but silver. That may be true. And it may be true, also, that it might be well to demonetize gold, as has been done in Holland, and make this the great silver nation of the world. We have no new fields where gold can be obtained, but many new ones of silver are being discovered every day. We have reason to believe that the deposits of silver in our country are vast and inexhaustible. With the limited gold supply and the large demand that exists now and must continue to exist hereafter, and for years to come, I do not see how we can continue to pay our obligations in gold. We lost by exportation $25,000,000 last year, and what evidence is there that it will not be as much this year? From all I can learn the amount will be larger. And at this rate how long will the amount we have be able to supply this demand? In six years it will be exhausted.

There is no one so blind as not to see that the present tendency is to centralization of capital and concentration in large cities. This is effected at the expense of the great mass of mankind. Are you going to foster a system of legislation which yet accelerates that bad tendency? It seems to me the part of wisdom and true statesmanship is to prevent the unnatural concentration of wealth in the few at the expense of the many.

I have heard many superficial arguments advanced by persons who have thought but very little on this subject, against the use of silver as coin. I am yet to hear the first good solid reason in opposition to it. We have blindly followed the lead of England, and have sacrificed the interests of the debtor class to the other and wealthier class. We have, in my opinion, at this time the finest opportunity ever presented to a nation to establish a system of our own, based not alone upon silver, but upon both metals. The day is not far distant when every nation, including England, will have to go back to the silver and gold standard. It must be so. The gold production is not increasing in proportion with the expansion and augmentation of commerce. Hence the necessity in all commercial nations to issue a large quantity of paper money as a substitute. It would be better and wiser to introduce a larger portion of silver and less of paper money.

As I view this question, it is not one between silver and gold, but between gold and paper, and this paper not convertible; for with a scarcity of coin you will not be able to redeem the vast amount of paper which the necessities of mankind and of commerce require. The only way to make paper answer the purposes for which it is designed is to increase the means of its redemption by increasing the coin, and which can be done only by making silver a legal tender. To return to a metallic currency, or to a currency convertible into metal as we are trying to do, while we reduce the precious metals by one-half, strikes me indeed as being most absurd. Let the nation rather stand by its silver coinage as the ally and the friend and the coworker of its gold, and in that way make of the two an impregnable money structure on which we may again build a new prosperity unequaled in the history of the past.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada, Mr. President——

Mr. SHERMAN. At this late hour it is scarcely worth while to continue the discussion to-day; and if the Senator from Nevada is willing, I will move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After eight minutes spent in executive session the doors were re-opened, and (at four o'clock and eighteen minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, April 20, 1876.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. I. L. TOWNSEND.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. HARRIS, of Georgia, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 1439) authorizing the transfer of certain causes from the circuit court of the United States for the district of Alabama, at Mobile, into the circuit court of the United States for the middle and northern districts of Alabama, at Montgomery and Huntsville, in said State.

HALLET KILBOURN—RETURN TO WRIT OF HABEAS CORPUS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House a full transcript of the return made by the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House to the writ issued in the Kilbourn case. The Chair assumes that no gentleman desires to have the return read. It is quite lengthy, and the reading of it will occupy a considerable time. It is accompanied by a brief communication from the Sergeant-at-Arms. The return to the writ and the communication of the Sergeant-at-Arms will be printed in the RECORD.

They are as follows:

OFFICE SERGEANT-AT-ARMS, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., April 20, 1876.

DEAR SIR: In accordance with the request and order of the House, I herewith transmit to you, and through you to the House of Representatives, a true copy of the return made by me to the writ of habeas corpus heretofore issued by the chief justice of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, commanding me to produce the body of said Hallet Kilbourn in said court and show cause for his detention.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN G. THOMPSON,
Sergeant-at-Arms.

Hon. M. C. KERR, Speaker.

Hon. DAVID K. CARTTER,
Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia:

The undersigned, John G. Thompson, Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives of the United States of America, respectfully represents that, in obedience to the command of the within writ of habeas corpus ad subjiciendum, the said undersigned makes the following return, to wit:

That ever since the first Monday in the month of December, in the year of our Lord 1875, the undersigned has held and still continues to hold the office of Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives aforesaid; that the said House of Representatives was in session at the time of the arrest of Hallet Kilbourn, the relator named in said writ, and was for a long time before that and also thereafter and at all times hereinafter mentioned lawfully in session.

That on the 24th day of January, in the year of our Lord 1876, and when the said House of Representatives was so lawfully in session, the House of Representatives duly and lawfully adopted the certain resolution, a true copy of which is hereto attached duly certified, marked Exhibit J. G. T., No. 1, and prayed to be read and considered as a part of this return.

That thereupon and thereafter, to wit, on the 28th day of the said month of January, the Speaker of said House of Representatives duly appointed certain members of said House of Representatives as the special committee authorized by said resolution, to wit: JOHN M. GLOVER, JEPTHA D. NEW, BURWELL B. LEWIS, HENRY O. PRATT, A. HERR SMITH, all of which will more fully and at large appear, reference being had to the copy of the certain journal entry, duly certified, set forth in said "Exhibit J. G. T., No. 1."

That said House of Representatives by said resolution, being then duly in session in the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, duly and lawfully referred to said select committee the investigation of certain matters coming within the constitutional and legal cognizance of said House of Representatives and within its power to make inquiry, to wit: into the nature and history of said "real-estate pool" in said resolution mentioned and the character of said settlement, with the amount of property involved in which Jay Cooke & Co. were interested and the amount paid or to be paid in said settlement; all of which are likewise mentioned in said resolution.

That said House of Representatives, in order to facilitate and make effectual said investigation and inquiry, likewise duly and lawfully by said resolution authorized and empowered the special committee to be appointed by virtue of said resolution to send for persons and papers and report to said House of Representatives; all of which will more fully and at large appear, reference being had to said Exhibit J. G. T., No. 1.

That afterward, and in virtue and pursuance of the authority of said resolution, and of the power of said select committee acting as the duly-constituted organ of said House of Representatives, the said committee duly summoned and caused to appear before it the said relator, Hallet Kilbourn, to give testimony before said committee touching certain matters pertinent to the aforesaid subject-matter of inquiry there pending before said committee, and likewise caused a certain subpœna duces tecum to be served on said relator, Hallet Kilbourn, requiring him to diligently and carefully search for, examine, and inquire after, and bring with him and produce at the time and place in said subpœna duces tecum mentioned certain papers relating and pertinent to the subject-matter of inquiry then pending before said committee.

That the undersigned submits the following true copy of said subpœna and subpœna duces tecum, and of Exhibit A thereto attached, to wit:

HALLET KILBOURN: We command and strictly enjoin you that, laying aside all manner of business and excuses whatsoever, you appear in your proper person before the select committee of the House of Representatives, appointed on the 28th day of January, A. D. 1876, of which Hon. JOHN M. GLOVER is chairman, at their room in the Capitol, the room of the Committee on Mines and Mining, in the city of Washington, District of Columbia, on Saturday, the 4th day of March, A. D. 1876, at the hour of ten o'clock a. m. of said day, to testify what you know in regard to the matters to be inquired of by said committee; and that you also diligently and carefully search for, examine, and inquire after, and bring with you and produce, at the time and place aforesaid, the certain deeds and deeds of trust, declarations of trust, and printed papers referred to therein, relating to the following squares, parts of squares, lots, and parcels of ground, or real property situate in the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, to wit: All the property described in the paper writing hereto attached marked Exhibit A and made a part of this subpœna; also relating to any other property purchased or sold by you as trustee for either the real-estate pool, in which the firm of Jay Cooke & Co., or Messrs. Stewart, Hillyer & Sunderland, or either of them, had an interest, together with all copies, draughts, and vouchers relating to said documents, and all other documents, letters, and paper writings whatsoever, including bank-books, bills of exchange, bank-checks, stubs of checks, ledgers, blotters, day-books, and other books of accounts, maps, that can or may afford any information or evidence relating to the said matters to be inquired of by said committee, belonging to you or subject to your control, either individually, or as trustee, or as a member of the firm of Kilbourn & Latta.

Herein fail not, and make return of this summons.

Witness my hand and the seal of the House of Representatives of the United States, at the city of Washington, this 28th day of February, A. D. 1876.

[SEAL.] MICHAEL C. KERR, Speaker.

Attest:

GEORGE M. ADAMS, Clerk.

By GREEN ADAMS, Chief Clerk.

EXHIBIT A.

Square.	Lot.	Area.	Rate.	Assessment of 1875.	To whom assessed.
		Square feet.		Value.
66	of 1	22,628	25	$5,627	J. M. Latta.
	2	8,529	18	1,535	Do.
	3, 5	39,501	15	5,925	Do.
	6, 8	37,413	20	7,483	Do.
67	3, 5	33,920	12	4,070	Do.
	of 6	3,440	15	516	Do.
	9, 11	25,750	12	3,090	Do.
	12	10,000	15	1,500	Do.
	13, 16	34,294	20	6,617	Do.
	17	11,322	25	2,831	Do.
	19	8,174	18	1,471	Do.
68	2, 3	14,700	10	1,470	Do.
	15, 16	14,872	15	2,231	Do.
	12, 26	30,000	12	3,600	Do.
	27	2,000	15	300	Do.
	28, 34	14,000	12	1,680	Do.
69	35, 43, alley.	13,500	8	1,080	J. F. Olmstead.
	16, 17	20,350	10	2,036	J. M. Latta.
70	of 1	10,207	30	3,062	J. F. Olmstead.
	of 2	5,285	12	634	Do.
72	8	11,472	10	1,147	Do.
	10	8,461	12	1,015	Do.
	of 12	3,906	15	586	Do.
	20	1,907	15	286	Do.
	1, 7, 12, 17, all.	64,937	25	16,234	Do.
93	2, 6, 13, 16	97,468	30	29,240	J. M. Latta.
	1, 6	15,172	30	4,552	Do.
	2, 7, all.	22,400	25	5,600	Do.
92	3 G. N.	39,441	22	8,677	Do.
97	18, 25	20,195	15	3,020	Do.
	of 9	3,139	15	471	Do.
	of 10	4,515	35	1,580	Do.
	1, 5, 9, 10, 12	47,304	50	23,652	Do.
	2, 4, 13, 14	40,166	45	18,075	Do.
115 (all)	6, 8	35,313	35	12,360	Do.
	1	14,856	65	9,656	Do.
	36	2,200	25	550	Do.
134	27, 35, 37, 42	39,887	20	7,977	Do.
	43, 49	12,989	15	1,948	Do.
138	3	41,388	70	28,972	Do.
151	17, 19	5,989	20	1,198	Do.
	23, 24	4,000	20	800	Do.
	27, 37	23,300	20	4,660	Do.
	38	2,200	25	550	Do.
	39, 114, 149	9,900	18	1,782	Do.
	148, 117, 78, 113	67,974	15	10,696	Do.
	4, 75	119,308	12	14,317	Do.
	76	1,760	18	31,680	Do.
	115, 77	3,960	18	713	Do.
155(all)	14, 16	41,580	15	6,237	Do.
	17	7,520	20	1,504	Do.
	18	10,000	25	2,500	Do.
	19, 22	33,360	20	6,672	Do.
156(all)	1	10,000	35	3,500	Do.
	2	7,080	30	2,124	Do.
	3, 8	74,340	20	14,868	Do.
	9, 10	24,780	25	6,196	Do.
	11	7,080	30	2,124	Do.
	12	10,000	35	3,500	Do.
	13, 15	23,606	25	5,903	Do.
	16, 26	123,680	20	24,735	Do.
	27, 32	48,168	30	14,452	Do.
157	1	19,493	45	8,772	Hallet Kilbourn.
	2	11,593	40	4,637	Do.
	3	14,000	35	4,900	Do.
	of 5	2,820	35	987	John F. Olmstead.
	23, 38	38,932	....	----------
158	of 2	6,213	40	2,485	J. M. Latta.
	3	14,464	40	5,786	J. M. Latta, trustee.
	8	8,820	45	3,969	Do.
	½ of 9 and 10	15,759	40	6,303	Do.
	17	16,632	40	6,653	Do.

EXHIBIT A—Continued.

Square.	Lot.	Area.	Rate.	Assessment of 1875.	To whom assessed.
		Square feet.		Value.
	18	13,794	35	$4,828	J. M. Latta, trustee.
	19	12,163	35	4,257	Do.
	of 21	4,133	40	1,653	Do.
176	16	1,626	22	358	Do.
	2, 4	6,139	18	1,100	Do.
177	E.	4,110	20	822	Do.
	F.	2,683	18	483	Do.
181	1	1,883	75	1,412	Hallet Kilbourn, trustee.
	32, 43	33,322	40	13,327	Do.
	31	2,390	45	1,719	Do.
	3, 2	5,459	45	2,457	Do.
182	36	4,148	60	2,489	John F. Olmstead.
	37, 38	5,767	40	2,307	Do.
	40, 46	23,938	40	9,595	Do.
	47	1,981	70	1,387	Do.
195	11 and 12	14,620	40	5,848	James M. Latta.
	13	6,075	50	3,038	Do.
	14, 17	25,790	45	11,606	Do.
	18	6,075	50	3,038	Do.
	19, 21	20,695	40	8,278	Do.
	22, 25	25,790	30	7,738	Do.
204	5, 8	38,036	25	9,509	Hallet Kilbourn, trustee.
	9, 10	15,100	20	3,020	Do.
	11	10,000	25	2,500	Do.
	12, 14	27,988	20	5,598	Do.
234	30	3,172	15	476	James M. Latta.
241	39	3,019	65	1,962	John F. Olmstead.
	40, 42	10,887	60	6,533	Hallet Kilbourn.
	43, 44	3,634	35	1,272	Do.
	63, 66	15,076	65	9,799	Do.
242	4, 6	27,216	80	21,774	Do.
	of 8, 9, and A.	19,617	70	13,732	Do.
	63	18,015	75	13,511	J. F. Olmstead.
280	of 3	104	90	94	Do.
	F.	2,386	90	2,147	Do.

as a part of this return to said writ.

That the said relator, Hallet Kilbourn, thereupon and thereafter appeared before said committee, to wit, on the 4th day of March, A. D. 1876, at their room in the Capitol, the room of the Committee on Mines and Mining, in the city of Washington, District of Columbia, as required by said subpœna.

That the said relator, Hallet Kilbourn, was then and there, to wit, on the day last mentioned, duly sworn according to law to give testimony before said committee pertinent to said subject-matters then and there under investigation as aforesaid before said committee, and after being so sworn as aforesaid was interrogated as follows, to wit, by Mr. NEW:

By Mr. NEW:

Question. State your name.

Answer. Hallet Kilbourn.

Q. How long have you resided here?

A. About fifteen years.

Q. Are you the Hallet Kilbourn referred to in this subpœna duces tecum?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What has been your occupation?

A. For ten years I have been in the real-estate business here.

Q. State whether or not Mr. Latta was a partner of yours.

A. He is.

Q. You are the same Hallet Kilbourn spoken of and who testified before a joint committee at the last session of Congress?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. State whether you have in your possession now and have brought to the committee-room the papers, documents, memoranda, &c., referred to in the subpœna duces tecum served upon you.

A. I have not.

Q. State whether you are prepared to produce them at this sitting of the committee.

A. I am not prepared to produce them to-day.

Q. State whether you are willing to produce them now or at any future sitting of this committee.

A. As at present advised, I am not prepared.

Q. You refuse to produce them before the committee in response to this subpœna?

A. Yes, sir. I would like to state the reasons therefor, my personal reasons. My partner and myself are in a private business. We have no connection with the Government of the United States, and never have had; are conscious of having violated no law; are not charged with any fraud. Our business that we do is done with private citizens throughout the country, and I stand upon the right which I think belongs to every private citizen not accused of violating any law of being protected in his papers. Whatever the law decides, however, I am willing to abide by. I sustain but one relation to the Government, and that is to pay taxes and obey the law. That is the only transaction I have with the Government at all.

Q. Are you still Mr. Latta's partner?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the business relations with reference to these matters heretofore subsisting between you still exist?

A. Yes, sir; except what may have been changed by the transactions of the partnership business, the purchases and sales that have since been made.

By Mr. LEWIS:

Q. When did Mr. Olmstead become a member of this firm?

A. He has had a special interest within the last year or two. He is interested in the profits; that is the relation he sustains to it.

By Mr. SMITH:

Q. Do you refuse to answer because you think such answer would criminate you?

A. O, not at all, sir; not at all. If anybody will make an oath, an affirmation, or affidavit that in anything in connection with this we have violated any law, or committed any fraud, we will give you our books, give the whole history of our firm from the day of our baptism until the present time.

MARCH 11, 1876—10 o'clock a. m.

HALLET KILBOURN recalled.

By Mr. NEW:

Question. Mr. Kilbourn, before an announcement is made by the committee of the conclusion to which they have arrived in reference to the questions raised as to the subpœna duces tecum, they desire to ask you some additional questions. I believe you have already stated before this committee that you are a resident of this District, and that your business is that of real-estate agent or real-estate broker?

Answer. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you been in that business in this city?

A. A little over ten years, I think.

Q. When did Mr. Latta become your partner?

A. When I commenced business; we commenced in 1865, I think.

Q. When did Mr. Olmstead become a partner?

A. Within a couple of years, according to my recollection.

Q. Are they both still your partners?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you acquainted with Henry D. Cooke?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you known him?

A. Well, I think for ten or twelve years.

Q. During what part of that time did Henry D. Cooke reside in this city?

A. I think he has resided here ever since I have known him.

Q. Is he the same Henry D. Cooke who was governor of this District and ex officio president of the board of public works?

A. Yes, sir; I think so.

Q. Was he a member of the banking house of Jay Cooke & Co., lately doing business in this city?

A. I understand he was.

Q. Can you tell about when that banking house began business in this city and when it ceased to do business here?

A. I cannot tell when it commenced. I think it ceased in September, 1873.

Q. For about what length of time was it in business in this city as a banking house?

A. For ten or twelve years, I should judge; possibly over. I do not know exactly.

Q. State whether you have any knowledge of the existence of what was and is known as the "real-estate pool" in this city, the same referred to by you in testimony given by you before a congressional investigating committee during the first session of the Forty-third Congress.

A. I know all there is about it, I think.

Q. You mean to answer that you have knowledge upon that subject?

A. Yes, sir; I think I know all about it.

Q. Upon page 255 of Senate report of the investigation in which you testified during the last Congress, a letter is referred to in which you are represented as using this language: "Henry D. Cooke has authorized me to draw on him for $25,000 cash for real-estate pool." I wish you to state to whom that letter was addressed.

A. I think it appears in the testimony there. I think that is a letter I wrote to Mr. Huntington.

Q. I fail to discover that fact, and therefore I ask this question.

A. I think that is a letter I wrote to Mr. Huntington.

Q. Did you or your firm, as real-estate brokers, do business for said pool in the matter of buying and selling for the persons constituting that pool?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were Jay Cooke & Co. members of that pool?

A. Jay Cooke & Co. put in $25,000.

Q. Did they furnish to you any money to be used for them in making purchases of real estate for said pool?

A. They never furnished but the $25,000.

Q. Did you expend it on behalf of Jay Cooke & Co. in purchasing real estate for the pool?

A. We did; or I did, in connection with the other moneys put in for a common purpose.

Q. In purchasing real estate for the pool?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. When did Jay Cooke & Co. furnish this money? To refresh your recollection, I will say that Mr. Latta testified that it was about August 25, 1871.

A. I think it was in 1871. That is my recollection, that it was along in that year.

By Mr. LEWIS:

Q. About the time you wrote that letter to Mr. Huntington?

A. I do not know. I do not know that we had invested any at that time, but probably arrangements were made at that time.

By Mr. NEW:

Q. You think it was in the summer of 1871?

A. Yes, sir. I do not know that it was all expended during 1872, but I presume the arrangement was made, as I stated, to use the $25,000.

Q. Was there a fund raised by those who constituted the pool?

A. Certain parties put in a certain amount of money each.

By Mr. LEWIS:

Q. That constituted a general fund?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. NEW:

Q. Was this money put in your hands?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Thus constituting what is commonly called a real-estate pool?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How much was thus put into your hands, or the firm of which you were a member?

A. Of course I have held the right to decline to answer that, and I will not now hesitate to do so. I will detail all the history of this pool to that extent. Five gentlemen each put in $5,000, and Jay Cooke & Co. put in $25,000. Now you have the whole extent of the pool.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. That was the entire sum at any time put in?

A. There was an assessment made after Jay Cooke & Co. failed of $2,000 each to meet payments. Jay Cooke & Co. did not pay this, and these other parties paid $2,000 apiece. I may say now that is the whole of it. Out of this great, big, world-wide-noised-abroad pool, that is the whole sum of money that was ever put in it in the world.

By Mr. LEWIS:

Q. Was that assessment of $2,000 in addition to the $5,000?

A. Yes, sir; to meet payments, five gentlemen paid. Jay Cooke & Co. never paid that.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. No member of your firm put in any after that?

A. Never.

By Mr. NEW:

Q. There was $5,000 each originally put in by each of five different persons?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And $25,000 in addition by Jay Cooke & Co.?

A. Yes, sir; that is the whole sum and substance of it.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. What was the aggregate amount of the assessment?

A. Ten thousand dollars, so that $60,000 was all that was ever put in.

By Mr. NEW:

Q. You may state whether this money was used by you in purchasing real estate for the pool.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were purchases made by you as trustee for the members of the pool?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In purchases that were made for the pool, how were conveyances taken; to members of the pool or to some other person or persons in trust?

A. They were generally taken to me as trustee.

Q. You say generally. Was there any exception?

A. There may have been when I was away.

Q. I mean was there any exception?

A. None, except to some person as trustee or some other member of the firm.

Q. Were the conveyances in such cases executed to you as trustee?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did such instrument of purchase or conveyance name the beneficiaries?

A. No, sir.

Q. Was there at the time of the execution of such instrument of trust any other or separate instrument showing for whom the purchases were in fact made?

The WITNESS. At the time the several purchases were made?

Mr. NEW. Yes.

A. No, sir.

Q. Was there at the time of the execution of those instruments of trust any other or separate instrument showing for whom the purchases were made in fact?

A. I think when we received the money we gave to the parties or beneficiaries a statement showing what proportion each had put in.

Q. There were, then, when money was paid separate instruments of the kind named executed?

A. There was a statement given by us, signed by me, I think, given to the parties furnishing the money. That is my recollection of it.

Q. You say at the time the money was furnished?

A. I think that was at the time the money was paid in.

Q. But when a purchase was made and a conveyance taken to yourself as trustee, did you at that time, as trustee, or at any time, execute to the members of the pool, or any of them, any declaration of trust?

A. I understand it now. I stated when they advanced this money. I think it was after we made the purchase and invested the money; I think then we gave a statement showing what property we had purchased. That is my recollection of it now.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. There was nothing indicating title for the benefit of these gentlemen?

A. O, no; we have all the abstracts and everything to show in our office.

By Mr. NEW:

Q. Were there any other written declarations of trust executed by yourself or your firm or any member of the firm, as trustee, and delivered to the parties other than what you have named?

A. No, sir; that is all.

Q. Had you or your firm or any member of your firm any interest except as agents or real-estate brokers and trustees in said pool?

A. Not at first.

Q. Had you at any time?

A. We purchased one interest; we have purchased all the interest.

Q. You first purchased one interest?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was that a purchase by yourself or by the firm?

A. A purchase by the firm.

Q. By the firm consisting of Kilbourn & Latta, or Kilbourn, Latta & Olmstead?

A. I do not remember whether Olmstead was then in the firm or not.

Q. About when was that interest purchased?

A. That was in 1873, I think. It was before the last investigation.

Q. To refresh your recollection, you then stated that you thought it was about six months prior to that time.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That investigation commenced March 5, 1874.

A. The purchase was made in 1873 some time.

Q. From whom did you purchase the interest you referred to—the first interest that your firm purchased?

A. From the owner. I respectfully decline to answer who the parties were.

Q. Did you purchase his entire interest?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was it a purchase from one member of the pool, or more than one?

A. At that time I purchased the interest of one man who had put in $5,000.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. What amount was paid for that interest?

A. Precisely what he gave, $5,000. And we paid the assessment of $2,000 ourselves; gave him exactly what he gave without interest.

By Mr. NEW:

Q. How many members of the pool were there before you became a member? I believe you have in fact answered.

A. Five gentlemen besides Jay Cooke & Co. put in $5,000 apiece.

Q. Will you state where each of these five members reside?

A. I do not know that I could do that. Mr. Chairman, if you will indulge me, I respectfully decline to give any testimony as it relates to these individuals.

Q. Do you decline to state where they reside?

A. I do not know that I could. I could upon reflection, probably.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Would you refuse to state, if you knew? We want to know whether that is one of the questions you decline to answer.

A. I decline to answer except upon consultation with my counsel.

By Mr. NEW:

Q. For the present you decline to state, even if you were certain as to the locality, where they do reside?

A. Yes, sir; I respectfully decline to state anything in relation to individuals who did business with us except upon consultation with my counsel.

Q. Will you please state their names?

A. That I beg to include in the same answer.

Q. State by what members of the pool you were supplied with money to be invested therein, other than Jay Cooke & Co.?

A. The money was supplied by five gentlemen who comprised the other members of the pool aside from Jay Cooke & Co.

Q. And, as already stated, you decline to give their names?

A. Yes, sir. I will state this: If it can be shown in any way that the Government is interested or that it will promote the interests of the Government in any way to the extent of one dollar, I will tell everything about it. I will tell everything about it if the Government has been wronged in any shape or manner.

The CHAIRMAN. That is what we expect to show, and we hope you will co-operate with us in doing it.

WITNESS. I am willing to do anything that will do that.

The CHAIRMAN. But we would not allow you to be the entire judge about that.

WITNESS. Anything that you can show; but it seems to me it must be brought around in some other way than by going through our books.

Mr. NEW. We are calling you to aid us.

WITNESS. If the Government has been defrauded in any way through us we are ready to give you all information; but this being a purely private business matter of course we must decline to give publicity to that until it is shown that it has some connection with the Government.

Mr. NEW. Is the instrument executed to you or the firm as trustees recorded in your books or is there any official record of it in this District?

WITNESS. The papers we gave to the parties that furnished the money?

Mr. NEW. No, sir; the instrument executed to you, or your firm, or any member thereof, as trustees.

WITNESS. Yes, sir; all were recorded in the recorder's office of the District of Columbia. They are all on record here in the District.

Q. Did such recorded instruments set forth all or any of the trusts upon which you or any of your partners, as such trustee or trustees, held the property described in such instrument?

A. The records will speak for themselves. We can furnish you with the deeds and deeds of trust.

Q. Do you recollect how that is?

A. My recollection is that all that was put on the record is the conveyance of title to us as trustees and the trust deed we gave back for deferred payments. The negotiations we had with the owners of the property.

Q. When did you first begin to keep a record in your office of such instruments, if you kept one?

A. That I cannot tell.

Q. Did you keep a record in your office of such instruments?

A. The presumption is that we have a record of all our business transactions.

Q. So far as you do know, that is the fact, is it not?

A. Yes, sir. I do not think we have transacted any business except we have a record of it.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Has that been known to the members of the pool?

WITNESS. What is that?

The CHAIRMAN. The fact that you have kept a record.

A. I do not know that we have kept any record of that part of it. I presume we kept copies of the papers we gave them.

Q. The beneficiaries have knowledge that you are keeping an exact account of your transactions, have they not?

A. I suppose so. I think, Mr. Chairman, you will find in that previous examination there the record of all the property purchased for this pool. If you desire it, we can give it to you. It is a matter of record. I think it is all stated there, but I am not positive.

Mr. NEW. We know that to be a fact.

By Mr. LEWIS:

Q. Do you mean this exhibit attached to your subpœna duces tecum?

A. Probably four-fifths of that belongs to Sunderland & Hillyer; four-fifths of that property.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Was the other property embraced in that bought by you as trustee?

A. I say that my impression now is that four-fifths of the property you call for is property we bought for Sunderland & Hillyer, and I presume the other property is purchases we made for the pool.

Q. In addition to what you say is embraced in this list as having been purchased for the pool by you, are there any other lots or blocks of ground here that you have purchased, not in that?

A. I do not know. I have not looked over it carefully. After looking it through, I presume that all the property you have got in there is purchased by us as trustees; and four-fifths of that property is for Sunderland & Hillyer, and the other one-fifth is for this pool. I find upon examination of the list of property attached to the subpœna that while it includes all the real estate purchased for the pool—Stewart, Sunderland & Hillyer—it also includes property purchased for Kilbourn & Latta and the individual members of the firm, and also thirty-five pieces of real estate which we know nothing about, never having had anything to do with it.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Now, Mr. Kilbourn, it is due to you to say that the committee have considered very maturely the question submitted by your attorney and the response made by Mr. Christy, and not only that, but the general subject in all its lights, and have come to the conclusion that they require you to respond to the requirements of that subpœna duces tecum—that you shall produce the books and papers as therein set forth; and we hope that you will at once see the necessity of it. We are engaged in a legitimate investigation, one in which every good citizen ought to give his assistance. We do not mean to do any harm or detriment to any interest, and hope you will at once respond in good faith to the requirements of that subpœna. We are very anxious to facilitate this investigation and get rid of it. It has now been upon the hands of Congress for nearly three years, and we think the whole thing can be explained satisfactorily to Congress and the country in thirty days, perhaps even in less time, in ten days. I do not see why it cannot be in a single meeting, and we hope you will aid us to do so.

WITNESS. As I stated, I should have counsel to speak for me, but he is not here. I stated on oath the extent of this pool, and that it was such a trivial matter, and I thought that that would be satisfactory. At the same time I can make this further statement, that, if it can be satisfactorily shown in the remotest degree that the Government or the public interest is in any way concerned in this matter, we are willing to give the whole thing to the country. And I would like to have this put on record too, that I think fully four-fifths of that property belongs to Sunderland & Hillyer. Mr. Hillyer, the representative of said firm, was here the other day, and is now willing to come and tell all about that. If we should bring up the books and papers in reference to Sunderland & Hillyer's business, would it not necessarily expose our books and papers in regard to all our transactions with everybody?

The CHAIRMAN. We do not want to expose any matter connected with your private transactions, but only those bearing upon this question, which affects the public interest. We had supposed that there was not a gentleman in this city, of any intelligence, who could not see at a glance that the Government of the United States is interested in this particular property. Jay Cooke & Co. are indebted to Jay Cooke, McCulloch & Co. Jay Cooke, McCulloch & Co. are indebted to the United States in an amount exceeding $1,500,000, and by an assignment of their claim to the Secretary of the Navy the rights of Jay Cooke & Co. are subrogated to the Government. Now, this original investment of Jay Cooke & Co. of $25,000 and the subsequent profits inure to the Government. We could not suppose you would fail to see that at a glance.

WITNESS. I understand from the attorneys of Mr. Lewis that the Government is entirely secured for every dollar.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Lewis is not the party to determine that question. Congress has appointed a committee to determine that question, and it seems to me that it is improper for you to resist this investigation as far as you have. It has cost the Government a vast deal of money.

WITNESS. I want you to understand that I do not resist it because I want to shield anything from the Government interests. I am only resisting it and protecting my own interests as a citizen who has but one relation to the Government, and that is to obey the law and pay taxes. The Government has no interest, one way or the other, in this matter. If it had, through Jay Cooke, or Lewis, trustee of Jay Cooke & Co., it was all settled. We have settled through the courts. If the settlement was not fair, the court is open for it, I understand. Instead of resisting anything that affects the Government, as I said, I would help to promote the Government's interests, if it can be shown wherein I can do it.

The CHAIRMAN. You will not let us show that, because you resist us.

WITNESS. I understand that it is not stated that we are shielding anything, but it is a general inquiry for looking through our books and papers, with the idea that possibly something might be found in which the Government is interested.

The CHAIRMAN. No, you are laboring under a misapprehension. I will make this brief statement to you, and then leave it to you either to comply with the subpœna or take the consequences.

Mr. NEW. And also as to answering the questions that he has refused to answer.

The CHAIRMAN. We know, (whether you do or not,) as a matter of record, that Jay Cooke, McCulloch & Co., directly, and Jay Cooke & Co., indirectly, are indebted to the Government. We know, if you do not, that Jay Cooke & Co. have an interest in this real-estate pool. Can you not see that to this extent the Government is interested in it, as all those interests have been transferred to the Government? And now we are trying to ascertain what that interest is.

WITNESS. Excuse me right there. We have settled with Jay Cooke & Co.

The CHAIRMAN. We say that that settlement has not covered the interest.

WITNESS. That is the point I want to get at.

The CHAIRMAN. Your own, like a great many other settlements in the past, has been made to the detriment—whether intentionally so or not—of the parties concerned.

WITNESS. I understand. As I said, of course I have had counsel in the matter all the time, but he is not here now——

The CHAIRMAN. We have heard everything that counsel could say.

WITNESS. Of course it is proper for me to consult with him. As I stated, anything that I can do to promote the interests of the Government in any way, shape, or manner I will do cheerfully.

By Mr. LEWIS:

Q. If your counsel advises you, after the announcement of the decision of the committee, to respond to this subpœna duces tecum and also to answer the questions that have been propounded to you this morning, are you prepared to do it?

A. I think he would be a very poor client that would not stand by the advice of his counsel. That is what I employ one for. It is only the question of my legal rights that I wish protected.

Mr. NEW. Do you desire to consult with your counsel further as to whether you shall, or shall not, or will, or will not, reconsider your declination to produce the books and papers, &c., named in the subpœna duces tecum, and your refusal to answer the questions that have been asked you during this investigation?

WITNESS. I think it is but proper that I should; I would certainly like that privilege.

Mr. NEW. And at what hour during the day can you inform us whether you will maintain your present attitude in that regard before the committee, or whether you will respond?

WITNESS. I have been trying all morning to find Judge Black.

Mr. NEW. You can see him during the day.

WITNESS. I think so.

Mr. NEW. Suppose you indicate some hour now.

WITNESS. I can communicate with the chairman or any one of the committee at any time the committee indicate. I do not know where Judge Black is, and I can let you know at ten o'clock Monday morning.

Mr. NEW. We would like to know to-day.

The CHAIRMAN. We must press this matter forward, it has been delayed so much, and you owe it to the committee at least, if not to yourself, that your attorney should be here.

Mr. NEW. Do you think you could appear here at the adjournment of the House this afternoon with your counsel?

WITNESS. If I can find him. I certainly will appear anyhow and let you know whether I can find him or not.

Mr. LEWIS. Perhaps we had better say three o'clock.

WITNESS. If you will indicate any hour I will be here.

Mr. NEW. We will expect you here at three o'clock, and then a determination of this matter by you, whether counsel shall be with you or not.

The committee then took a recess till three o'clock.

The committee resumed its session at three p. m.

Mr. NEW stated that at the meeting of the committee this morning the witness, Hallet Kilbourn, had expressed a desire to confer further during the day with his counsel, and that in order to give him the opportunity to do so the committee had adjourned to this hour. The committee had now met, not for the purpose of hearing further argument in the premises, but of knowing what the witness had finally determined upon, as to whether he would or would not respond to the subpœna duces tecum, and whether he would or would not answer those questions which he has heretofore failed to answer.

Mr. BLACK, counsel for the witness, said that he wanted a record made up, which would justify one party or the other in doing what they respectively intended to do. He wished, therefore, to put some questions to the witness.

By Mr. BLACK:

Q. Please state to the committee, on your oath, whether there is anything in the nature or history of this real-estate pool connected with any public affair, or whether it is purely a private matter.

A. It is purely a private matter, and has no relation in the remotest degree to any public interest whatsoever.

Q. Was it, or not, a private partnership?

A. It was entirely so.

Q. Relating to private business?

A. Yes.

Q. Was there any public money invested in it by anybody?

A. Not a dollar.

Q. Is it connected in any way with the public act of any officer of the District of Columbia or the United States Government?

A. Not in the remotest degree. Jay Cooke & Co. put in $25,000.

Q. Are they in it now?

A. No, sir; nobody is interested in it now but Kilbourn & Latta.

Q. Have you ever objected to a revelation of that business on any other ground than that it is a mere private transaction?

A. That is the only reason why I have ever objected to answering questions about it, that it is a purely private business.

Mr. BLACK. That is all that I want to ask the witness. But I want to go a little further and have this record put into shape so that it will bear the test of the scrutiny of any other tribunal before which it may hereafter be brought. To that end I call the attention of the committee to a fact which occurred before the committee at a former meeting, namely, a call upon the party who was promoting this investigation for any contradiction of the statement which the witness has just made that this is purely a private affair; and I now repeat (representing the witness, and as his counsel) his entire willingness to answer any interrogatories that the committee may put to him concerning the nature and history of the real-estate pool, so called, provided that any gentleman here, or any member of the committee, will express his conviction, grounded on any fact known to him, that there is any connection whatever with any public man that Congress has a right to investigate or to found any legislation upon. If that be so, then there is an end of all controversy; the witness "comes down" immediately and gives the committee any information that may be wanted on the subject. Otherwise it must be taken for granted that the nature and character of that transaction is what he described it to be on his oath, a purely private matter.

Mr. NEW. I desire to say, in answer to counsel and with reference to the questions which he has propounded to the witness, that in the opinion of the committee those questions, in their very nature, contemplate the statement of a conclusion and not the statement of facts on which a conclusion may be based; not the facts from which the committee could or would form a conclusion. Therefore the committee will not ask Mr. Kilbourn any questions by way of cross-examination.

In the next place I desire to say in respect to what has been said about there being no party or about the necessity of some party making certain statements or declarations, to the effect that this is a public matter, and not a private matter, that on a former occasion the same proposition was suggested by yourself, and the committee then answered, as the committee now answers, that we are acting on a resolution adopted by the House of Representatives. In other words, so far as we may know from the record, the party complaining or suggesting that there may be some discovery that will be of benefit to the Government as a creditor of Jay Cooke & Co. is the House of Representatives. We feel that we have no alternative, and no duty to perform, except to proceed with the investigation for the purpose of discovering what may be (if anything) discovered as to the history of the real-estate pool, and as to the indebtedness of Jay Cooke & Co. to the Government. I desire, in conclusion, to have the witness state whether or not he desires still to abide by his action heretofore in refusing to respond to a subpœna duces tecum and in refusing to respond to questions which have been propounded to him.

Mr. BLACK rose to make some remarks.

Mr. NEW. The committee cannot hear any further argument in the matter. There has been oral argument on both sides, and if the committee is to make any progress in this investigation these arguments must of course have a termination.

After conference with the other members of the committee, Mr. NEW said: For the purpose of giving Mr. Kilbourn and yourself a little further time to consider, we have concluded to meet again on Monday morning at ten o'clock for the purpose, and sole purpose, at that meeting, without any further argument, of having the witness state definitely and positively what he will do in the premises.

The committee then adjourned.

MARCH 13, 1876—10 o'clock a. m.

Hallet Kilbourn, the witness, being present before the committee, the chairman said: By the agreement at the last meeting on Saturday evening, this morning was set apart to hear your final decision as to whether you would respond to the subpœna duces tecum and would answer those questions which you were asked and to which you refused to respond last week.

The WITNESS. I have nothing further to say, except that I respectfully decline to answer, for the reasons heretofore stated.

That thereupon and thereafter, to wit, on the 14th day of March, A. D. 1876, Hon. JOHN M. GLOVER, chairman of said committee, and by and with the authority and consent of the other members of said committee, made the report following to said House of Representatives, to wit:

Mr. GLOVER. It does, and is therefore a privileged question.

The Clerk read as follows:

On the 24th day of January, A. D. 1876, the House adopted the following resolution:

Whereas the Government of the United States is a creditor of the firm of Jay Cooke & Co., now in bankruptcy, by order and decree of the district court of the United States in and for the eastern district of Pennsylvania, resulting from the improvident deposits made by the Secretary of the Navy of the United States with the London branch of said house of Jay Cooke & Co. of the public moneys; and whereas a matter known as the real-estate pool was only partially inquired into by the late joint special committee to inquire into the affairs of the District of Columbia, in which Jay Cooke & Co. had a large and valuable interest; and whereas Edwin M. Lewis, trustee of the estate and effects of said firm of Jay Cooke & Co., has recently made a settlement of the interest of the estate of Jay Cooke & Co. with the associates of said firm of Jay Cooke & Co. to the disadvantage and loss, as it is alleged, of the numerous creditors of said estate, including the Government of the United States; and whereas the courts are now powerless by reason of said settlement to afford adequate redress to said creditors:

Resolved, That a special committee of five members of this House, to be selected by the Speaker, be appointed to inquire into the nature and history of said real-estate pool and the character of said settlement, with the amount of property involved in which Jay Cooke & Co. were interested, and the amount paid or to be paid in said settlement, with power to send for persons and papers, and report to this House.

Under said resolution the undersigned committee was appointed, and in conformity with the power therein conferred have sent for persons and papers. The committee caused a subpœna duces tecum to be issued and duly served on one Hallet Kilbourn, a resident of this District. Said subpœna is in the words and figures following, to wit:

Hallet Kilbourn, we command and strictly enjoin you that, laying aside all manner of business and excuses whatsoever, you appear in your proper person before the select committee of the House of Representatives, appointed on the 28th day of January, A. D. 1876, of which Hon. JOHN M. GLOVER is chairman, at their room in the Capitol, the room of the Committee on Mines and Mining, in the city of Washington, District of Columbia, on Saturday, the 4th day of March, A. D. 1876, at the hour of ten o'clock a. m. of said day, to testify what you know in regard to the matters to be inquired of by said committee; and that you also diligently and carefully search for, examine, and inquire after, and bring with you and produce, at the time and place aforesaid, the certain deeds and deeds of trust, declarations of trust, and printed papers referred to therein, relating to the following squares, parts of squares, lots, and parcels of ground, or real property, situate in the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, to wit: All the property described in the paper writing hereto attached, marked Exhibit A, and made a part of this subpœna; also relating to any other property purchased or sold by you as trustee for either the real-estate pool, in which the firm of Jay Cooke & Co., or Messrs. Stewart, Hillyer & Sunderland, or either of them, had an interest, together with all copies, draughts, and vouchers relating to said documents, and all other documents, letters, and paper writings whatsoever, including bank-books, bills of exchange, bank-checks, stubs of checks, ledgers, blotters, day-books, and other books of accounts, maps, that can or may afford any information or evidence relating to the said matters to be inquired of by said committee, belonging to you or subject to your control, either individually, or as trustee, or as member of the firm of Kilbourn & Latta.

Herein fail not, and make return of this summons.

Witness my hand and the seal of the House of Representatives of the United States, at the city of Washington, this 28th day of February, A. D. 1876.

[SEAL.] MICHAEL C. KERR, Speaker.

Attest:

GEORGE M. ADAMS, Clerk,
By GREEN ADAMS, Chief Clerk.

EXHIBIT A.

Square.	Lot.	Area.	Rate.	Assessment of 1875.	To whom assessed.
		Square feet.		Value.
66	of 1	22,628	25	$5,627	J. M. Latta.
	2	8,529	18	1,535	Do.
	3, 5	39,591	15	5,925	Do.
	6, 8	37,413	20	7,483	Do.
67	3, 5	33,920	12	4,070	Do.
	of 6	3,440	15	516	Do.
	9, 11	25,750	12	3,090	Do.
	12	10,000	15	1,500	Do.
	13, 16	34,294	20	6,617	Do.
	17	11,322	25	2,831	Do.
	19	8,174	18	1,471	Do.
68	2, 3	14,700	10	1,470	Do.
	15, 16	14,872	15	2,231	Do.
	12, 26	30,000	12	3,600	Do.
	27	2,000	15	300	Do.
	28, 34	14,000	12	1,680	Do.
69	35, 43, alley.	13,500	8	1,080	J. F. Olmstead.
	16, 17	20,350	10	2,036	J. M. Latta.
70	of 1	10,207	30	3,062	J. F. Olmstead.
	of 2	5,285	12	634	Do.
72	8	11,472	10	1,147	Do.
	10	8,461	12	1,015	Do.
	of 12	3,906	15	586	Do.
	20	1,907	15	286	Do.
	1, 7, 12, 17, all.	64,937	25	16,234	Do.
93	2, 6, 13, 16	97,468	30	29,240	J. M. Latta.
	1, 6	15,172	30	4,552	Do.
	2, 7, all	22,400	25	5,600	Do.
92	3 G. N.	39,441	22	8,677	Do.
97	18, 25	20,195	15	3,020	Do.
	of 9	3,139	15	471	Do.
	of 10	4,515	35	1,580	Do.
	1, 5, 9, 10, 12	47,304	50	23,652	Do.
	2, 4, 13, 14	40,166	45	18,075	Do.
115 (all)	6, 8	35,313	35	12,360	Do.
	1	14,856	65	9,656	Do.
	36	2,200	25	550	Do.
134	27, 35, 37, 42	39,887	20	7,977	Do.
	43, 49	12,989	15	1,948	Do.
138	3	41,388	70	28,972	Do.
151	17, 19	5,989	20	1,198	Do.
	23, 24	4,000	20	800	Do.
	27, 37	23,300	20	4,660	Do.
	38	2,200	25	550	Do.
	39, 114, 149	9,900	18	1,782	Do.
	148, 117, 78, 113	67,974	15	10,696	Do.
	4, 75	119,308	12	14,317	Do.
	76	1,760	18	31,680	Do.
	115, 77	3,960	18	713	Do.
155 (all)	14, 16	41,580	15	6,237	Do.
	17	7,520	20	1,504	Do.
	18	10,000	25	2,500	Do.
	19, 22	33,360	20	6,672	Do.
156 (all)	1	10,000	35	3,500	Do.
	2	7,080	30	2,124	Do.
	3, 8	74,340	20	14,868	Do.
	9, 10	24,780	25	6,196	Do.
	11	7,080	30	2,124	Do.
	12	10,000	35	3,500	Do.
	13, 15	23,606	25	5,903	Do.
	16, 26	123,680	20	24,735	Do.
	27, 32	48,168	30	14,452	Do.
157	1	19,493	45	8,772	Hallet Kilbourn.
	2	11,593	40	4,637	Do.
	3	14,000	35	4,900	Do.
	of 5	2,820	35	987	John F. Olmstead.
	23, 38	38,932	....	.....
158	of 2	6,213	40	2,485	J. M. Latta.
	3	14,464	40	5,786	J. M. Latta, trustee.
	8	8,820	45	3,969	Do.
	½ of 9 and 10	15,759	40	6,303	Do.
	17	16,632	40	6,653	Do.
	18	13,794	35	4,828	Do.
	19	12,163	35	4,257	Do.
	of 21	4,133	40	1,653	Do.
176	16	1,626	22	358	Do.
	2, 4	6,139	18	1,100	Do.
177	E.	4,110	20	822	Do.
	F.	2,683	18	483	Do.
181	1	1,883	75	1,412	Hallet Kilbourn, trustee.
	32, 43	33,322	40	13,327	Do.
	31	2,390	45	1,719	Do.
	3, 2	5,459	45	2,457	Do.
182	36	4,148	60	2,489	John F. Olmstead.
	37, 38	5,767	40	2,307	Do.
	40, 46	23,938	40	9,595	Do.
	47	1,981	70	1,387	Do.
195	11 and 12	14,620	40	5,848	James M. Latta.
	13	6,075	50	3,038	Do.
	14, 17	25,790	45	11,606	Do.
	18	6,075	50	3,038	Do.
	19, 21	20,695	40	8,278	Do.
	22, 25	25,790	30	7,738	Do.
204	5, 8	38,036	25	9,509	Hallet Kilbourn, trustee.
	9, 10	15,100	20	3,020	Do.
	11	10,000	25	2,500	Do.
	12, 14	27,988	20	5,598	Do.
234	30	3,172	15	476	James M. Latta.
241	39	3,019	65	1,962	John F. Olmstead.
	40, 42	10,887	60	6,533	Hallet Kilbourn.
	43, 44	3,634	35	1,272	Do.
	63, 66	15,076	65	9,799	Do.
242	4, 6	27,216	80	21,774	Do.
	of 8, 9, and A.	19,617	70	13,732	Do.
	63	18,015	75	13,511	J. F. Olmstead.
280	of 3	104	90	94	Do.
	F.	2,386	90	2,147	Do.

Said Kilbourn appeared as a witness before the committee on the 4th day of March, 1876, at ten o'clock a. m., and, after being duly sworn according to law, was interrogated as follows:

By Mr. NEW:

Question. State your name.
Answer. Hallet Kilbourn.
Q. How long have you resided here?
A. About fifteen years.
Q. Are you the Hallet Kilbourn referred to in this subpœna duces tecum?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. What has been your occupation?
A. For ten years I have been in the real-estate business here.
Q. State whether or not Mr. Latta was a partner of yours.
A. He is.
Q. You are the same Hallet Kilbourn spoken of and who testified before a joint committee at the last session of Congress?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. State whether you have in your possession now and have brought to the committee-room the papers, documents, memoranda, &c., referred to in the subpœna duces tecum served upon you.
A. I have not.
Q. State whether you are prepared to produce them at this sitting of the committee.
A. I am not prepared to produce them to-day.
Q. State whether you are willing to produce them now or at any future sitting of this committee.
A. As at present advised, I am not prepared.
Q. You refuse to produce them before the committee in response to this subpœna?
A. Yes, sir. I would like to state the reasons therefor, my personal reasons. My partner and myself are in a private business. We have no connection with the Government of the United States and never have had; are conscious of having violated no law; are not charged with any fraud. Our business that we do is done with private citizens throughout the country, and I stand upon the right which I think belongs to every private citizen not accused of violating any law of being protected in his papers. Whatever the law decides, however, I am willing to abide by. I sustain but one relation to the Government, and that is to pay taxes and obey the law. That is the only transaction I have with the Government at all.
Q. Are you still Mr. Latta's partner?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And the business relations with reference to these matters heretofore subsisting between you still exist?
A. Yes, sir; except what may have been changed by the transactions of the partnership business, the purchases and sales that have since been made?

By Mr. LEWIS:

Q. When did Mr. Olmstead become a member of this firm?
A. He has had a special interest within the last year or two. He is interested in the profits; that is the relation he sustains to it.

By Mr. SMITH:

Q. Do you refuse to answer because you think such answer would criminate you?
A. O, not at all, sir; not at all. If anybody will make an oath, an affirmation, or affidavit that in anything in connection with this we have violated any law, or committed any fraud, we will give you our books, give the whole history of our firm from the day of our baptism until the present time.

MARCH 11, 1876—10 o'clock a. m.

HALLET KILBOURN recalled.

By Mr. NEW:

Question. Mr. Kilbourn, before an announcement is made by the committee of the conclusion to which they have arrived in reference to the questions raised as to the subpœna duces tecum, they desire to ask you some additional questions. I believe you have already stated before this committee that you are a resident of this District, and that your business is that of real-estate agent or real-estate broker?
Answer. Yes, sir.
Q. How long have you been in that business in this city?
A. A little over ten years, I think.
Q When did Mr. Latta become your partner?
A. When I commenced business; we commenced in 1865, I think.
Q. When did Mr. Olmstead become a partner?
A. Within a couple of years, according to my recollection.
Q. Are they both still your partners?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Are you acquainted with Henry D. Cooke?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. How long have you known him?
A. Well, I think for ten or twelve years.
Q. During what part of that time did Henry D. Cooke reside in this city?
A. I think he has resided here ever since I have known him.
Q. Is he the same Henry D. Cooke who was governor of this District and ex officio president of the board of public works?
A. Yes, sir. I think so.
Q. Was he a member of the banking house of Jay Cooke & Co., lately doing business in this city?
A. I understand he was.
Q. Can you tell about when that banking house began business in this city, and when it ceased to do business here?
A. I cannot tell when it commenced. I think it ceased in September, 1873.
Q. For about what length of time was it in business in this city as a banking house?
A. For ten or twelve years, I should judge; possibly over. I do not know exactly.
Q. State whether you have any knowledge of the existence of what was and is known as the "real-estate pool" in this city, the same referred to by you in testimony given by you before a congressional investigating committee during the first session of the Forty-third Congress.
A. I know all there is about it, I think.
Q. You mean to answer that you have knowledge upon that subject?
A. Yes, sir; I think I know all about it.
Q. Upon page 255 of Senate report of the investigation in which you testified during the last Congress, a letter is referred to in which you are represented as using this language: "Henry D. Cooke has authorized me to draw on him for $25,000 cash for real-estate pool." I wish you to state to whom that letter was addressed.
A. I think it appears in the testimony there. I think that is a letter I wrote to Mr. Huntington.
Q. I fail to discover that fact, and therefore I ask this question.
A. I think that is a letter I wrote to Mr. Huntington.
Q. Did you or your firm, as real-estate brokers, do business for said pool in the matter of buying and selling for the persons constituting that pool?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Were Jay Cooke & Co. members of that pool?
A. Jay Cooke & Co. put in $25,000.
Q. Did they furnish to you any money to be used for them in making purchases of real estate for said pool?
A. They never furnished but the $25,000.
Q. Did you expend it on behalf of Jay Cooke & Co. in purchasing real estate for the pool?
A. We did; or I did, in connection with the other moneys put in for a common purpose.
Q. In purchasing real estate for the pool?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. When did Jay Cooke & Co. furnish this money? To refresh your recollection, I will say that Mr. Latta testified that it was about August 25, 1871.
A. I think it was in 1871. That is my recollection, that it was along in that year.

By Mr. LEWIS:

Q. About the time you wrote that letter to Mr. Huntington?
A. I do not know. I do not know that we had invested any at that time, but probably arrangements were made at that time.

By Mr. NEW:

Q. You think it was in the summer of 1871.
A. Yes, sir. I do not know that it was all expended during 1872, but I presume the arrangement was made, as I stated, to use the $25,000.
Q. Was there a fund raised by those who constituted the pool?
A. Certain parties put in a certain amount of money each.

By Mr. LEWIS:

Q. That constituted a general fund?
A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. NEW:

Q. Was this money put in your hands?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Thus constituting what is commonly called a real-estate pool?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. How much was thus put into your hands or the firm of which you were a member?
A. Of course I have held the right to decline to answer that, and I will not now hesitate to do so. I will detail all the history of this pool to that extent. Five gentlemen each put in $5,000 and Jay Cooke & Co. put in $25,000. Now you have the whole extent of the pool.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. That was the entire sum at any time put in?
A. There was an assessment made after Jay Cooke & Co. failed of $2,000 each to meet payments. Jay Cooke & Co. did not pay this, and these other parties paid $2,000 apiece. I may say now that is the whole of it. Out of this great, big, world-wide-noised-abroad pool, that is the whole sum of money that was ever put in it in the world.

By Mr. LEWIS:

Q. Was that assessment of $2,000 in addition to the $5,000?
A. Yes, sir; to meet payments, five gentlemen paid. Jay Cooke & Co. never paid that.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. No member of your firm put in any after that?
A. Never.

By Mr. NEW:

Q. There was $5,000 each originally put in by each of five different persons?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And $25,000 in addition by Jay Cooke & Co.?
A. Yes, sir; that is the whole sum and substance of it.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. What was the aggregate amount of the assessment?
A. Ten thousand dollars, so that $60,000 was all that was ever put in.

By Mr. NEW:

Q. You may state whether this money was used by you in purchasing real estate for the pool.
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Were purchases made by you as trustee for the members of the pool?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. In purchases that were made for the pool, how were conveyances taken; to members of the pool or to some other person or persons in trust?
A. They were generally taken to me as trustee.
Q. You say generally. Was there any exception?
A. There may have been when I was away.
Q. I mean was there any exception?
A. None except to some person as trustee or some other member of the firm.
Q. Were the conveyances in such cases executed to you as trustee?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Did such instrument of purchase or conveyance name the beneficiaries?
A. No, sir.
Q. Was there at the time of the execution of such instrument of trust any other or separate instrument showing for whom the purchases were in fact made?
The WITNESS. At the time the several purchases were made?
Mr. NEW. Yes.
A. No, sir.
Q. Was there at the time of the execution of those instruments of trust any other or separate instrument showing for whom the purchases were made in fact?
A. I think when we received the money we gave to the parties or beneficiaries a statement showing what proportion each had put in.
Q. There were, then, when money was paid separate instruments of the kind named executed?
A. There was a statement given by us, signed by me I think, given to the parties furnishing the money. That is my recollection of it.
Q. You say at the time the money was furnished?
A. I think that was at the time the money was paid in.
Q. But when a purchase was made and a conveyance taken to yourself as trustee, did you at that time, as trustee, or at any time, execute to the members of the pool, or any of them, any declaration of trust?
A. I understand it now. I stated when they advanced this money. I think it was after we made the purchase and invested the money; I think then we gave a statement showing what property we had purchased. That is my recollection of it now.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. There was nothing indicating title for the benefit of these gentleman?
A. O, no; we have all the abstracts and everything to show in our office.

By Mr. NEW:

Q. Were there any other written declarations of trust executed by yourself or your firm or any member of the firm, as trustee, and delivered to the parties other than what you have named?

A. No, sir; that is all.
Q. Had you or your firm or any member of your firm any interest except as agents or real-estate brokers and trustees in said pool?
A. Not at first.
Q. Had you at any time?
A. We purchased one interest; we have purchased all the interest.
Q. You first purchased one interest?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Was that a purchase by yourself or by the firm?
A. A purchase by the firm.
Q. By the firm consisting of Kilbourn & Latta, or Kilbourn, Latta & Olmstead?
A. I do not remember whether Olmstead was then in the firm or not.
Q. About when was that interest purchased?
A. That was in 1873, I think. It was before the last investigation.
Q. To refresh your recollection, you then stated that you thought it was about six months prior to that time.
A. Yes, sir.
Q. That investigation commenced March 5, 1874?
A. The purchase was made in 1873 some time.
Q. From whom did you purchase the interest you referred to—the first interest that your firm purchased?
A. From the owner. I respectfully decline to answer who the parties were.
Q. Did you purchase his entire interest?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Was it a purchase from one member of the pool or more than one?
A. At that time I purchased the interest of one man who had put in $5,000.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. What amount was paid for that interest?
A. Precisely what he gave, $5,000. And we paid the assessment of $2,000 ourselves; gave him exactly what he gave without interest.

By Mr. NEW:

Q. How many members of the pool were there before you became a member? I believe you have in fact answered.
A. Five gentlemen, besides Jay Cooke & Co., put in $5,000 apiece.
Q. Will you state where each of these five members resided?
A. I do not know that I could do that. Mr. Chairman, if you will indulge me, I respectfully decline to give any testimony as it relates to these individuals.
Q. Do you decline to state where they reside?
A. I do not know that I could. I could upon reflection, probably.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Would you refuse to state, if you knew? We want to know whether that is one of the questions you decline to answer.
A. I decline to answer except upon consultation with my counsel.

By Mr. NEW:

Q. For the present you decline to state, even if you were certain as to the locality where they do reside?
A. Yes, sir; I respectfully decline to state anything in relation to individuals who did business with us except upon consultation with my counsel.
Q. Will you please state their names?
A. That I beg to include in the same answer.
Q. State by what members of the pool you were supplied with money to be invested therein, other than Jay Cooke & Co.?
A. The money was supplied by five gentlemen who comprised the other members of the pool aside from Jay Cooke & Co.
Q. And, as already stated, you decline to give their names?
A. Yes, sir. I will state this: If it can be shown in any way that the Government is interested or that it will promote the interests of the Government in any way to the extent of one dollar, I will tell everything about it. I will tell everything about it if the Government has been wronged in any shape or manner.
The CHAIRMAN. That is what we expect to show, and we hope you will co-operate with us in doing it.
WITNESS. I am willing to do anything that will do that.
The CHAIRMAN. But we would not allow you to be the entire judge about that.
WITNESS. Anything that you can show; but it seems to me it must be brought around in some other way than by going through our books.
Mr. NEW. We are calling you to aid us.
WITNESS. If the Government has been defrauded in any way through us we are ready to give you all information; but this being a purely private business matter, of course we must decline to give publicity to that until it is shown that it has some connection with the Government.
Mr. NEW. Is the instrument executed to you or the firm as trustees recorded in your books or is there any official record of it in this District?
WITNESS. The papers we gave to the parties that furnished the money?
Mr. NEW. No, sir; the instrument executed to you, or your firm, or any member thereof, as trustees.
WITNESS. Yes, sir; all were recorded in the recorder's office of the District of Columbia. They are all on record here in the District.
Q. Did such recorded instruments set forth all or any of the trusts upon which you or any of your partners, as such trustee or trustees, held the property described in such instrument?
A. The records will speak for themselves. We can furnish you with the deeds and deeds of trust.
Q. Do you recollect how that is?
A. My recollection is that all that was put on the record is the conveyance of title to us as trustees and the trust deed we gave back for deferred payments. The negotiations we had with the owners of the property.
Q. When did you first begin to keep a record in your office of such instruments, if you kept one?
A. That I cannot tell.
Q. Did you keep a record in your office of such instruments?
A. The presumption is that we have a record of all our business transactions.
Q. So far as you do know, that is the fact, is it not?
A. Yes, sir. I do not think we have transacted any business except we have a record of it.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Has that been known to the members of the pool?
WITNESS. What is that?
The CHAIRMAN. The fact that you have kept a record.
A. I do not know that we have kept any record of that part of it. I presume we kept copies of the papers we gave them.
Q. The beneficiaries have knowledge that you are keeping an exact account of your transactions, have they not?
A. I suppose so. I think, Mr. Chairman, you will find in that previous examination there the record of all the property purchased for this pool. If you desire it, we can give it to you. It is a matter of record. I think it is all stated there, but I am not positive.
Mr. NEW. We know that to be a fact.

By Mr. LEWIS:

Q. Do you mean this exhibit attached to your subpœna duces tecum?
A. Probably four-fifths of that belongs to Sunderland & Hillyer; four-fifths of that property.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Was the other property embraced in that bought by you as trustee?
A. I say that my impression now is that four-fifths of the property you call for is property we bought for Sunderland & Hillyer, and I presume the other property is purchases we made for the pool.
Q. In addition to what you say is embraced in this list as having been purchased for the pool by you, are there any other lots or blocks of ground here that you have purchased not in that?
A. I do not know. I have not looked over it carefully. After looking it through, I presume that all the property you have got in there is purchased by us as trustees; and four-fifths of that property is for Sunderland & Hillyer, and the other one-fifth is for this pool. I find upon examination of the list of property attached to the subpœna that while it includes all the real estate purchased for the pool—Stewart, Sunderland & Hillyer—it also includes property purchased for Kilbourn & Latta and the individual members of the firm, and also thirty-five pieces of real estate which we know nothing about, never having had anything to do with it.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Now, Mr. Kilbourn, it is due to you to say that the committee have considered very maturely the question submitted by your attorney and the response made by Mr. Christy, and not only that, but the general subject in all its lights, and have come to the conclusion that they require you to respond to the requirements of that subpœna duces tecum—that you shall produce the books and papers as therein set forth; and we hope that you will at once see the necessity of it. We are engaged in a legitimate investigation, one in which every good citizen ought to give his assistance. We do not mean to do any harm or detriment to any interest, and hope you will at once respond in good faith to the requirements of that subpœna. We are very anxious to facilitate this investigation and get rid of it. It has now been upon the hands of Congress for nearly three years, and we think the whole thing can be explained satisfactorily to Congress and the country in thirty days, perhaps even in less time, in ten days. I do not see why it cannot be in a single meeting, and we hope you will aid us to do so.
WITNESS. As I stated, I should have counsel to speak for me, but he is not here. I stated on oath the extent of this pool, and that it was such a trivial matter, and I thought that that would be satisfactory. At the same time I can make this further statement, that, if it can be satisfactorily shown in the remotest degree that the Government or the public interest is in any way concerned in this matter, we are willing to give the whole thing to the country. And I would like to have this put on record too, that I think fully four-fifths of that property belongs to Sunderland & Hillyer. Mr. Hillyer, the representative of said firm, was here the other day, and is now willing to come and tell all about that. If we should bring up the books and papers in reference to Sunderland & Hillyer's business, would it not necessarily expose our books and papers in regard to all our transactions with everybody?
The CHAIRMAN. We do not want to expose any matter connected with your private transactions, but only those bearing upon this question, which affects the public interest. We had supposed that there was not a gentleman in this city, of any intelligence, who could not see at a glance that the Government of the United States is interested in this particular property. Jay Cooke & Co. are indebted to Jay Cooke, McCulloch & Co. Jay Cooke, McCulloch & Co. are indebted to the United States in an amount exceeding $1,500,000, and by an assignment of their claim to the Secretary of the Navy the rights of Jay Cooke & Co. are subrogated to the Government. Now, this original investment of Jay Cooke & Co. of $25,000 and the subsequent profits inure to the Government. We could not suppose you would fail to see that at a glance.
WITNESS. I understand from the attorneys of Mr. Lewis that the Government is entirely secured for every dollar.
The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Lewis is not the party to determine that question. Congress has appointed a committee to determine that question, and it seems to me that it is improper for you to resist this investigation as far as you have. It has cost the Government a vast deal of money.
WITNESS. I want you to understand that I do not resist it because I want to shield anything from the Government interests. I am only resisting it and protecting my own interests as a citizen who has but one relation to the Government, and that is to obey the law and pay taxes. The Government has no interest, one way or the other, in this matter. If it had, through Jay Cooke, or Lewis, trustee of Jay Cooke & Co., it was all settled. We have settled through the courts. If the settlement was not fair, the court is open for it, I understand. Instead of resisting anything that affects the Government, as I said, I would help to promote the Government's interests, if it can be shown wherein I can do it.
The CHAIRMAN. You will not let us show that, because you resist us.
WITNESS. I understand that it is not stated that we are shielding anything, but it is a general inquiry for looking through our books and papers, with the idea that possibly something might be found in which the Government is interested.
The CHAIRMAN. No, you are laboring under a misapprehension. I will make this brief statement to you, and then leave it to you either to comply with the subpœna or take the consequences.
Mr. NEW. And also as to answering the questions that he has refused to answer.
The CHAIRMAN. We know, (whether you do or not,) as a matter of record, that Jay Cooke, McCulloch & Co., directly, and Jay Cooke & Co., indirectly, are indebted to the Government. We know, if you do not, that Jay Cooke & Co. have an interest in this real-estate pool. Can you not see that to this extent the Government is interested in it, as all those interests have been transferred to the Government? And now we are trying to ascertain what that interest is.
WITNESS. Excuse me right there. We have settled with Jay Cooke & Co.
The CHAIRMAN. We say that that settlement has not covered the interest.
WITNESS. That is the point I want to get at.
The CHAIRMAN. Your own, like a great many other settlements in the past, has been made to the detriment—whether intentionally so or not—of the parties concerned.
WITNESS. I understand. As I said, of course I have had counsel in the matter all the time, but he is not here now——
The CHAIRMAN. We have heard everything that counsel could say.
WITNESS Of course it is proper for me to consult with him. As I stated, anything that I can do to promote the interests of the Government in any way, shape, or manner, I will do cheerfully.

By Mr. LEWIS:

Q. If your counsel advises you, after the announcement of the decision of the committee, to respond to this subpœna duces tecum and also to answer the questions that have been propounded to you this morning, are you prepared to do it?
A. I think he would be a very poor client that would not stand by the advice of his counsel. That is what I employ one for. It is only the question of my legal rights that I wish protected.
Mr. NEW. Do you desire to consult with your counsel further as to whether you shall or shall not, or will or will not, reconsider your declination to produce the books and papers, &c., named in the subpœna duces tecum, and your refusal to answer the questions that have been asked you during this investigation?
WITNESS. I think it is but proper that I should; I would certainly like that privilege.
Mr. NEW. And at what hour during the day can you inform us whether you will maintain your present attitude in that regard before the committee or whether you will respond?

WITNESS. I have been trying all morning to find Judge Black.

Mr. NEW. You can see him during the day?

WITNESS. I think so.

Mr. NEW. Suppose you indicate some hour now.

WITNESS. I can communicate with the chairman or any one of the committee at any time the committee indicate. I do not know where Judge Black is, and I can let you know at ten o'clock Monday morning.

Mr. NEW. We would like to know to-day.

The CHAIRMAN. We must press this matter forward, it has been delayed so much, and you owe it to the committee at least, if not to yourself, that your attorney should be here.

Mr. NEW. Do you think you could appear here at the adjournment of the House this afternoon with your counsel?

WITNESS. If I can find him. I certainly will appear anyhow and let you know whether I can find him or not.

Mr. LEWIS. Perhaps we had better say three o'clock.

WITNESS. If you will indicate any hour I will be here.

Mr. NEW. We will expect you here at three o'clock, and then a determination of this matter by you, whether counsel shall be with you or not.

The committee then took a recess until three o'clock.

The committee resumed its session at three p. m.

Mr. NEW stated that at the meeting of the committee this morning the witness, Hallet Kilbourn, had expressed a desire to confer further during the day with his counsel, and that in order to give him the opportunity to do so the committee had adjourned to this hour. The committee had now met, not for the purpose of hearing further argument in the premises, but of knowing what the witness had finally determined upon, as to whether he would or would not respond to the subpœna duces tecum and whether he would or would not answer those questions which he has heretofore failed to answer.

Mr. BLACK, counsel for the witness, said that he wanted a record made up, which would justify one party or the other in doing what they respectively intended to do. He wished, therefore, to put some questions to the witness.

By Mr. BLACK:

Q. Please state to the committee, on your oath, whether there is anything in the nature or history of this real-estate pool connected with any public affair, or whether it is purely a private matter.

A. It is purely a private matter, and has no relation in the remotest degree to any public interest whatsoever.

Q. Was it, or not, a private partnership?

A. It was entirely so.

Q. Relating to private business?

A. Yes.

Q. Was there any public money invested in it by anybody?

A. Not a dollar.

Q. Is it connected in any way with the public act of any officer of the District of Columbia or the United States Government?

A. Not in the remotest degree. Jay Cooke & Co. put in $25,000.

Q. Are they in it now?

A. No, sir; nobody is interested in it now but Kilbourn & Latta.

Q. Have you ever objected to a revelation of that business on any other ground than that it is a mere private transaction?

A. That is the only reason why I have ever objected to answering questions about it, that it is a purely private business.

Mr. BLACK. That is all that I want to ask the witness. But I want to go a little further and have this record put into shape so that it will bear the test of the scrutiny of any other tribunal before which it may hereafter be brought. To that end I call the attention of the committee to a fact which occurred before the committee at a former meeting, namely, a call upon the party who was promoting this investigation for any contradiction of the statement which the witness has just made, that this is purely a private affair; and I now repeat (representing the witness, and as his counsel) his entire willingness to answer any interrogatories that the committee may put to him concerning the nature and history of the real-estate pool, so called, provided that any gentleman here, or any member of the committee, will express his conviction, grounded on any fact known to him, that there is any connection whatever with any public man that Congress has a right to investigate or to found any legislation upon. If that be so, then there is an end of all controversy; the witness "comes down" immediately and gives the committee any information that may be wanted on the subject. Otherwise it must be taken for granted that the nature and character of that transaction is what he described it to be on his oath, a purely private matter.

Mr. NEW. I desire to say, in answer to counsel and with reference to the questions which he has propounded to the witness, that in the opinion of the committee those questions, in their very nature, contemplate the statement of a conclusion and not the statement of facts on which a conclusion may be based; not the facts from which the committee could or would form a conclusion. Therefore the committee will not ask Mr. Kilbourn any questions by way of cross-examination.

In the next place I desire to say in respect to what has been said about there being no party or about the necessity of some party making certain statements or declarations, to the effect that this is a public matter, and not a private matter, that on a former occasion the same proposition was suggested by yourself and the committee then answered, as the committee now answers, that we are acting on a resolution adopted by the House of Representatives. In other words, so far as we may know from the record, the party complaining or suggesting that there may be some discovery that will be of benefit to the Government as a creditor of Jay Cooke & Co., is the House of Representatives. We feel that we have no alternative, and no duty to perform, except to proceed with the investigation for the purpose of discovering what may be (if anything) discovered as to the history of the real-estate pool, and as to the indebtedness of Jay Cooke & Co. to the Government. I desire, in conclusion, to have the witness state whether or not he desires still to abide by his action heretofore in refusing to respond to a subpœna duces tecum and in refusing to respond to questions which have been propounded to him.

Mr. BLACK rose to make some remarks.

Mr. NEW. The committee cannot hear any further argument in the matter. There has been oral argument on both sides, and if the committee is to make any progress in this investigation these arguments must of course have a termination.

After conference with the other members of the committee, Mr. NEW said: For the purpose of giving Mr. Kilbourn and yourself a little further time to consider, we have concluded to meet again on Monday morning at ten o'clock for the purpose, and sole purpose, at that meeting, without any further argument, of having the witness state definitely and positively what he will do in the premises.

The committee then adjourned.

MARCH 13, 1876—10 o'clock a. m.

Hallet Kilbourn, the witness, being present before the committee, the chairman said: By the agreement at the last meeting on Saturday evening, this morning was set apart to hear your final decision as to whether you would respond to the subpœna duces tecum and would answer those questions which you were asked and to which you refused to respond last week.

The WITNESS. I have nothing further to say, except that I respectfully decline to answer, for the reasons heretofore stated.

The committee are of opinion and report that it is necessary, for the efficient prosecution of the inquiry ordered by the House, that said Hallet Kilbourn should be required to respond to the subpœna duces tecum and answer the questions which he has refused to answer; and that there is no sufficient reason why the witness should not obey said subœpna duces tecum and answer the questions he has declined to answer; and that his refusal as aforesaid is in contempt of this House.

J. M. GLOVER, Chairman.
J. D. NEW.
B. B. LEWIS.
A. HERR SMITH.

Mr. PRATT is absent.

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. Speaker, I presume the House is now fully in possession of facts enough to enable it to understand the attitude of this witness toward this House. I am instructed by the committee to ask the adoption of the following order, upon which I ask the previous question:

Ordered, That the Speaker issue his warrant directing the Sergeant-at-Arms attending this House, or his deputy, commanding him to take into custody forthwith, wherever to be found, the body of Hallet Kilbourn, and him bring to the bar of the House to show cause why he should not be punished for contempt; and in the mean time keep the said Kilbourn in his custody to wait the further order of the House.

Your respondent is advised, and so avers, that the action of the said House of Representatives in adopting said resolution duly acted in the exercise of its constitutional and legal jurisdiction and power and touching the subject-matter so reported by said committee.

And thereupon and thereafter the Speaker of said House of Representatives, by virtue and in pursuance of said resolution last mentioned, issued his warrant, duly attested by the Clerk of said House of Representatives, and having the seal of said House of Representatives thereto attached, to your respondent, a true copy of which here follows, to wit:

Forty-fourth Congress, first session, Congress of the United States.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
March 14, 1876.

To JOHN G. THOMPSON, Esq.,
Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives:

SIR: The House of Representatives this day adopted the following:

"Ordered, That the Speaker issue his warrant, directed to the Sergeant-at-Arms attending this House, or his deputy, commanding him to take into custody forthwith, wherever to be found, the body of Hallet Kilbourn, and him bring before the bar of the House, to show cause why he should not be punished for contempt, and in the mean time to keep the said Kilbourn in his custody to wait the further order of this House."

Now therefore, I, MICHAEL C. KERR, Speaker of the House of Representatives, do hereby command you to execute the foregoing order of the House.

In witness whereof I have hereto set my hand and caused the seal of the House of Representatives of the United States of America to be attached the day and year first above written.

[SEAL.] M. C. KERR, Speaker.

Attest:
GEO. M. ADAMS, Clerk.

I hereby certify the foregoing to be a true copy of the original order of the House.

JOHN G. THOMPSON,
Sergeant-at-Arms, House of Representatives.

That by virtue of and in obedience to said warrant the undersigned, as such Sergeant-at-Arms, brought the said Hallet Kilbourn before the bar of said House, on the day last aforesaid, the said House being then and there lawfully in session, and duly reported to the said House that he had, in obedience to its order, the said Hallet Kilbourn in custody at its said bar.

Thereupon the Speaker of said House duly interrogated said witness, Hallet Kilbourn, touching his alleged breach of the privileges of said House in refusing to answer the questions aforesaid, and in failing to produce and submit to said select committee the papers called for in the subpœna duces tecum aforesaid.

That said Speaker likewise propounded all said questions to said witness, which he had refused to answer as aforesaid, and inquired of him whether he was willing to produce before said committee the papers in said subpœna duces tecum mentioned, which he had theretofore neglected and refused to produce.

That thereupon said relator, Hallet Kilbourn, refused to answer said questions and to produce said papers, although required so to do upon the demand of the proper committee of said House.

That thereupon the chairman of said committee then and there offered the following resolution, which was adopted by the said House, then and there lawfully in session, to wit:

"Resolved, That Hallet Kilbourn, having been heard by the House pursuant to the order heretofore made requiring him to show cause why he should not answer questions propounded to him by a committee, and respond to the subpœna duces tecum by obeying the same, and having failed to show sufficient cause why he should not answer said questions and obey said subpœna duces tecum, be, and is therefore, considered in contempt of the House because of said failure."

That thereupon, on the day last mentioned, the said House, being still lawfully in session, adopted the following resolution, to wit:

"Resolved, That in purging himself of the contempt for which Hallet Kilbourn is now in custody the said Kilbourn shall be required to state to the House whether he is now willing to appear before the committee of the House to whom he has hitherto declined to obey a certain subpœna duces tecum and answer to certain questions and obey said subpœna duces tecum, and make answer to said questions; and if he answers that he is ready to appear before said committee and obey said subpœna duces tecum and answer said questions then said witness shall have the privilege to so appear and obey and answer forthwith or so soon as said committee can be convened; and that in the mean time the witness remain in custody; and in the event that said witness shall answer that he is not ready to so appear before said committee and obey said subpœna duces tecum and make answer to said questions as aforesaid, then that said witness be recommitted to the said custody for the continuance of such contempt; and that such custody shall continue until the said witness shall communicate to this House, through said committee, that he is ready to appear before said committee and make such answer and obey said subpœna duces tecum; and that in executing this order the Sergeant-at-Arms shall cause the said Kilbourn to be kept in his custody in the common jail of the District of Columbia,"

That thereupon the said JOHN M. GLOVER moved to reconsider the vote by which said resolution was adopted, and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table; which latter motion was agreed to by the said House while it was still lawfully in session as aforesaid.

That afterward, to wit, upon the said 14th day of March, A. D. 1876, in pursuance and execution of the order contained in the resolution last aforesaid and in virtue of the authority and power thereby conferred and of all the premises aforesaid, MICHAEL C. KERR, he, the said MICHAEL C. KERR, then and there being the Speaker of the said House of Representatives, executed, and George M. Adams, being then and there the Clerk of said House, duly attested, the warrant of said Speaker, under the seal of said House, and, prior to the arrest and detention of the said Hallet Kilbourn, delivered the said warrant to this respondent, as Sergeant-at-Arms of the said House of Representatives, and that in obedience to the warrant aforesaid and the order and command of the House of Representatives of the United States of America, duly and lawfully made in open session of said House, this respondent, as Sergeant-at-Arms as aforesaid, as in duty bound to do, did on the said 14th day of March, A. D. 1876, arrest the said Hallet Kilbourn, and now holds the body of him, the said Hallet Kilbourn in custody, and now here produces and exhibits the said warrant, precept, and order as the cause of the capture and detention by him as aforesaid of the body of the said Hallet Kilbourn, as part of this respondent's return.

That said special committee has not completed but is still prosecuting its inquiry into the matters embraced in said resolution in said exhibit J. G. T., No. 1, set forth.

That the said relator, Hallet Kilbourn, has not hitherto expressed his willingness to appear before said committee and obey said subpœna duces tecum and make answer to said questions as aforesaid, but, on the contrary, still remains in contempt as aforesaid, and still refuses to answer said questions and produce said papers.

That your respondent has executed said order or warrant of said Speaker of said House by causing the said relator, Hallet Kilbourn, to be kept in his, respondent's, custody, in the common jail of the District of Columbia; and that said relator, Hallet Kilbourn, was so confined at the time of the issuing of said writ of habeas corpus ad subjiciendum.

That said House or Representatives still continues lawfully in session.

Whereupon this respondent protests that, upon the facts disclosed by the return now made, showing that the relator is lawfully held by this respondent as Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives, in pursuance and execution of the order of said House, duly adjudging the relator to be in contempt of the authority of said House, the issuance of said writ was in derogation of the privileges of said House, and that the capture and detention of said relator, under and by the authority of said House as aforesaid, being evidently and conclusively established by the certified records of said House, and appearing on the face of the petition of said relator, no further proceeding or interference in the respondent's custody of the relator can be lawfully had under the said writ of habeas corpus ad subjiciendum, and asks that the relator be remanded to the custody of this respondent as Sergeant-at-Arms of said House of Representatives as aforesaid, and that said writ of habeas corpus ad subjiciendum be dismissed as improvidently issued.

Respondent denies all the averments in said petition inconsistent with this return.

I hereby further certify that the foregoing is the cause of the taking and detention of the said Hallet Kilbourn under my custody.

Yet the body of him, the said Hallet Kilbourn, I have before you, as the said writ of habeas corpus ad subjiciendum requires.

JOHN G. THOMPSON,
Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives, U. S. A.

Sworn to before me and signed in my presence this 18th day of April, A. D. 1876.
R. J. MEIGS, Clerk.

[Final warrant.]

Forty-fourth Congress, first session, Congress of the United States.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
March 14, 1876.

To JOHN G. THOMPSON, Esq.,
Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives:

SIR: The following resolution has this day been adopted by the House of Representatives:

"Resolved, That, in purging himself of the contempt for which Hallet Kilbourn is now in custody, the said Kilbourn shall be required to state to the House whether he is now willing to appear before the committee of this House to whom he has hitherto declined to obey a certain subpœna duces tecum and answer certain questions, and obey said subpœna duces tecum and make answer to said questions, and if he answers that he is ready to appear before said committee and obey said subpœna duces tecum and answer said questions, then said witness shall have the privilege to so appear and obey and answer forthwith, or so soon as said committee can be convened, and that in the mean time the witness remain in custody; and in the event that said witness shall answer that he is not ready to so appear before said committee and obey said subpœna duces tecum and make answer to said questions as aforesaid, then that said witness be recommitted to the said custody for the continuance of such contempt, and that such custody shall continue until the said witness shall communicate to this House through said committee that he is ready to appear before said committee and make such answer and obey said subpœna duces tecum, and that in executing this order the Sergeant-at-Arms shall cause the said Kilbourn to be kept in his custody in the common jail of the District of Columbia."

Now, therefore, you are hereby commanded to execute the same accordingly.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the House of Representatives to be affixed the day and year above written.

[SEAL.] M. C. KERR, Speaker.

Attest:
GEO. M. ADAMS, Clerk.

Exhibit J. G. T., No. 1.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES UNITED STATES,
January 24, 1876.

Mr. GLOVER submitted the following; which was adopted:

"Whereas the Government of the United States is a creditor of the firm of Jay Cooke & Co., now in bankruptcy by order and decree of the district court of the United States in and for the eastern district of Pennsylvania, resulting from the improvident deposits made by the Secretary of the Navy of the United States with the London branch of said house of Jay Cooke & Co. of the public moneys; and whereas the matter known as the real-estate pool was only partially inquired into by the late joint select committee to inquire into the affairs of the District of Columbia, in which Jay Cooke & Co. had a large and valuable interest; and whereas Edwin M. Lewis, trustee of the estate and effects of the said firm of Jay Cooke & Co., has recently made a settlement of the interest of the estate of Jay Cooke & Co. with the associates of said firm of Jay Cooke & Co. to the disadvantage and loss, as it is alleged, of the numerous creditors of said estate, including the Government of the United States; and whereas the courts are now powerless, by reason of said settlement, to afford adequate redress to said creditors:

"Resolved, That a special committee of five members of this House, to be selected by the Speaker, be appointed to inquire into the nature and history of said real-estate pool and the character of said settlement, with the amount of property involved in which Jay Cooke & Co. were interested and the amount paid or to be paid in said settlement, with power to send for persons and papers, and report to this House."

JANUARY 28, 1876.

The SPEAKER announced the Select Committee on the Real-Estate Pool and Jay Cooke & Co.'s indebtedness: Mr. JOHN M. GLOVER of Missouri, Mr. JEPTHA D. NEW of Indiana, Mr. BURWELL B. LEWIS of Alabama, Mr. HENRY O. PRATT of Iowa, and Mr. A. HERR SMITH of Pennsylvania.

Attest:
GEORGE M. ADAMS, Clerk,

OFFICE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES UNITED STATES,
April 12, 1876.

I, George M. Adams, Clerk of the House of Representatives, hereby certify that the foregoing are true copies of extracts from the Journal of the House of the dates therein stated.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of the House of Representatives of the United States of America the day and year last above written.

[SEAL.] GEORGE M. ADAMS, Clerk.

PARTITIONS OF REAL ESTATE IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. LAWRENCE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3168) relating to partitions of real estate in the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

POWER OF COURTS TO PUNISH FOR CONTEMPT.

Mr. LAWRENCE also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3169) to limit the power of courts to punish for contempt, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

WRIT OF HABEAS CORPUS.

Mr. LAWRENCE also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3170) to enlarge the privileges of the writ of habeas corpus; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SINGLETON. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to report back the bill (H. R. No. 1594) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, with the amendments of the Senate thereto, with a recommendation that the amendments of the Senate be non-concurred in.

It will be remembered that this bill, with Senate amendments, was reported on Saturday, and at the suggestion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] was recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed. I am instructed by the committee to report it back again, and to ask non-concurrence in the Senate amendments.

The amendments of the Senate were non-concurred in.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman ask for a committee of conference?

Mr. SINGLETON. Not at this time. I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendments were non-concurred in; and also move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JURISDICTION OF COURT OF CLAIMS.

Mr. DOBBINS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3171) extending the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Patents, and ordered to be printed.

TROUBLES ON THE RIO GRANDE.

Mr. YOUNG. I ask unanimous consent to present for reference to the Committee on Military Affairs a preamble and resolution in reference to existing troubles on the Rio Grande between Mexican and American citizens.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas, in consequence of the unsettled state of affairs in the Republic of Mexico and the many outrages perpetrated upon the property and persons of American citizens residing not only in that country but in the neighborhood of the Rio Grande River, in the State of Texas, such a feeling of hostility has been engendered between the people living near the border of Mexico and the United States as may involve the two countries in an unnecessary war; and whereas it is the interest of the people of the United States and the wish of their representatives in Congress to maintain peaceful relations with all other governments, so long as the same can be done without sacrificing the honor of the nation or in any way impairing its obligations to protect the rights of its citizens, and that in order to avoid war and at the same time protect our citizens in person and property, it is important that we should be in a condition to restrain the people of our own country from acts of violence and hostility against the government and people of Mexico, and enforce due respect for the dignity and power of our own Government: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to order such military force to rendezvous at some suitable point on the Rio Grande River, in the State of Texas, as may in his judgment be sufficient to enforce existing neutrality laws, prevent hostilities between Mexican and American citizens along the border, and preserve peaceful relations between the two countries; and to direct the General of the Army to proceed in person to the scene of the threatened outbreak and take such measures as may be necessary to maintain peace with the republic of Mexico and protect the honor and dignity of our own Government and the rights and safety of our citizens.

Mr. CONGER. Where does that resolution come from?

Mr. HURLBUT. Is it presented for adoption at this time?

The SPEAKER. The resolution is presented only for reference. It is a resolution offered by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. YOUNG.]

Mr. CONGER. To what committee does the gentleman propose to refer it?

Mr. YOUNG. To the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HOLMAN. I would suggest that it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. YOUNG. I accept that suggestion.

There being no objection, the preamble and resolution were referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

CHARLES H. SMITH.

Mr. COX. I present, on behalf of the Committee on Rules, a report in the case of Charles H. Smith, journal clerk of the House, which I ask to have read at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Rules, having considered the following resolution of the House, adopted on the 15th of April, 1876, namely—

"Resolved, That the communication of Charles H. Smith be referred to the Committee on Rules with instructions to ascertain whether said Charles H. Smith in relation to the subject-matter of said communication has violated any law or done any act inconsistent with his position as an employé of this House, and that they report by resolution or otherwise."

report as follows:

The committee called before them Mr. Charles H. Smith, who on oath verified the statements contained in his letter of the 4th of April, 1876, hereto attached. The committee has no reason to doubt the statements in said letter as true.

Does this statement show that Mr. Smith has violated any law or done any act inconsistent with his position? While the committee esteem it their duty to take high grounds touching the relations of the officers of the House to the House itself, it is but just to say that they find nothing in this case against Mr. Smith that evinces an intention to violate the laws or to exceed or neglect any of his duties, and that his conduct simply involves a grave error of judgment which tends to create a conflict in his mind between duty and interest.

The committee therefore cannot exculpate this officer from a breach of his duty under the law. What is that duty? Next to that of Speaker, no position is more important than that of journal clerk.

Upon the careful record of our proceedings hang interests of immense magnitude. The Journal should import unquestioned verity, and its recorder should be a person of irreproachable character. He makes a record indispensable in the transient and daily conduct of legislation; and as a record for judicial and other purposes it should be above suspicion in determining the validity of our laws. It is impossible for the Speaker, under whose control, by our rules, our minutes are subject, or the House itself, which approves or disapproves its Journal, on its hurried reading, to exert that vigilant scrutiny which its importance requires. This is especially so in the closing days and hours of the session. At this critical time, when the most important bills are considered or passed, there is the greatest necessity for a journal clerk who intelligently comprehends his duty and discharges it with unselfish, conscientious fidelity. The committee are aware that delinquency or culpability on the part of the clerks of this House with reference to journalizing our actions and to the enrolling, engrossing, and custody of bills is of the greatest moment. It cannot be overstated or too strenuously insisted upon. If our clerks are derelict, it involves the reputation of the House and the interests of every citizen. In this view our inquiry is magnified beyond personal considerations.

Whatever may have been the intent of Mr. Smith in soliciting claims under a bill which had not become a law, the committee cannot too strongly reprehend his conduct in seeking to acquire a pecuniary interest in the bill by soliciting the agency of claims under it. It is not a mere matter of percentage, either great or small It is not a question whether or not before the passage of the bill he had actually secured claims conditional on its passage.

The question is, whether the intent and attempt to procure an interest in such claims would not create an interest in the passage of the bill utterly inconsistent with his duty as an officer. There should be no temptation to self-aggrandizement.

The journal clerk may have absolute integrity; he may record the action of the House with scrupulous trustworthiness, but it is neither wise nor expedient to allow that officer for one moment to seek or hold any inchoate or other interest in matters pending before the House. No legislative body, as a matter of self-protection and public duty, could for a moment tolerate an officer who might be tempted or who had a motive to miswrite its Journal, impair its privileges, influence its members, or exercise any functions involving even the semblance of a conflict between duty and interest.

APPENDIX TO REPORT.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 15, 1876.

SIR: A bill is now pending before Congress which proposes to pay every non-commissioned officer, musician, artificer, wagoner, private soldier, sailor, and marine (except substitutes) who faithfully served as such in the military service of the United States, and was honorably discharged from such service, the sum of eight and one-third dollars a month for all the time actually so served between April 12, 1861, and May 9, 1865. In case of death of the person before described, the bounty is to be paid to the widow, if alive and not remarried, but, if there is no widow or she has remarried, then to the children. In computing the bounty due any person there shall be deducted the amount of bounty heretofore received by said person from the United States. The bill declares that no agent or attorney shall receive a sum greater than $10 for the prosecution of any claim under the provisions of this act and that no soldier shall sell or transfer his claim.

As the records under your control readily give you the names of soldiers in your town or ward, I invite you to accept the provisions of the inclosed agreement. Please sign both the inclosed blanks and return one to me, at the address in the agreement.

If you do not wish to undertake this yourself, please pass the agreements and circular to some active man who will give the subject his earliest attention, and write me an answer.

You will see the importance of attending to this matter the present week, for if the bill passes hundreds of agents will send circulars to parties granting the percentage which you may now obtain for yourself.

CHARLES H. SMITH.

Know all men by these presents, that we ——, of ——, in the county of —— and State of ——, of the first part, and Charles H. Smith, of Washington, in the District of Columbia, of the second part, agree as follows:

Said party of the first part agrees to collect the discharges of all persons (except substitutes and commissioned officers) in the town or ward in which he resides, who served in the United States Army for any time during the war of the rebellion, to forward said discharges to said party of the second part, at the Imperial Hotel, Washington, District of Columbia, and to do all other acts within said town or ward, which may be made necessary by an act now pending before Congress for the equalization of bounties.

Said party of the second part agrees that said party of the first part shall receive upon every successful application for bounty, furnished as aforesaid, 25 per cent.

Witness our hands this —— day of ——, 1876.

CHARLES H. SMITH.

At that time I had full knowledge of section 5498 of the Revised Statutes prohibiting an employé of the House from acting as an agent or attorney for prosecuting any claim against the United States, but I could not then see nor do I now understand how the above circulars made me an agent or attorney for the collection of these claims until after the passage and approval of the bill, without which there would be no such claims to collect and after which I should cease to act as an employé of the House.

I have not undertaken, nor do I propose to undertake, the collection of any claim against the Government of the United States while acting as one of its employés; but I simply sought in the circular to place myself in condition to become an agent for that purpose at such time as I might see fit to tender my resignation as journal clerk of the House, not supposing that there was the slightest impropriety in my taking steps in this direction so long as I did not use my official position to promote my private interests. I have never obtained any information concerning the situation of said bill in the committee or in the House by means of my position as employé. I have never, directly or indirectly, held any communication with any member of Congress or officer thereof in relation to the subject embraced in said bill.

I have never, directly or indirectly, heard or sought to obtain the opinion of any member of Congress or officer thereof as to the probable fate of said bill, nor have I attempted in any manner to influence legislation on this or any other subject.

While I never consulted any person concerning the propriety of my course, the circulars were issued without any attempt at concealment.

Upon every statement contained in this communication and upon every fact bearing upon this subject I court the closest scrutiny and investigation.

Very respectfully,

CHAS. H. SMITH,
Journal Clerk.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I would ask for the reading of the letter and circular of Mr. Smith.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest that the circular and the letter have already been read to the House and are on record, and unless it is required by some gentleman the reading might be omitted. Does any gentleman require the reading again of the circular upon which this report is based? The Chair hears no such demand.

Mr. COX. I move that the report be adopted.

Mr. LEWIS. Would it not be in order to offer a resolution in connection with that report?

The SPEAKER. That can be done after the question of concurrence in the report has been settled.

Mr. KASSON. What is the conclusion of the report in which we are to agree?

The SPEAKER. The conclusions are stated throughout the report; the report is not accompanied by any specific resolution declaring the conclusion of the committee.

Mr. KASSON. Then I submit that there is hardly any occasion for a vote of the House on concurring in the report. The committee has reported an opinion without anything calling for the action of the House. I supposed that the report would conclude with a resolution.

Mr. COX. I would say to the gentleman from Iowa that the committee could draw no resolution, but the conclusion is that we condemn as strongly as possible the relation which the journal clerk had to this House by the revelations which he himself made. We cannot take any action in the matter, as the committee were advised that the relations between Mr. Smith and the House had ended.

Mr. KASSON. Is that stated in the report?

Mr. COX. It is not stated in the report.

Mr. KASSON. I submit that it ought to be stated as the reason for non-action by the House; it should be on record in some way.

Mr. COX. It was considered by a majority of the members of the Committee on Rules that the whole report was equivalent to a resolution of condemnation in one sense, and upon that ground the journal clerk resigned his office.

Mr. KASSON. There will probably be no objection in any part of the House to the report of the committee. I submit to the gentleman from New York whether he ought not to make the statement in the report as a reason for non-action by the House that the journal clerk has resigned.

Mr. COX. If the gentleman from Iowa has any resolution to offer he can do so, but if the committee had undertaken to draw a resolution it would only have been a repetition of the opinion expressed in the report.

Mr. KASSON. I would inquire of the Chair if the resignation of the journal clerk appears on record?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed of the fact.

Mr. RANDALL. Is the Chair officially informed of the fact?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed of the fact that the journal clerk has resigned.

Mr. KASSON. I ask, then, that his letter of resignation be read if the committee are not prepared to report a resolution on the subject.

Mr. COX. It is a matter of record, made so by the resignation.

Mr. KASSON. When the letter of resignation is read it will be, I suppose.

Mr. COX. I propose to call the previous question on concurring in the report, but if any one desires that the letter of resignation be read, I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the letter of resignation.

The Clerk read as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., April 20, 1876.

As the course fully set forth in my communication of the 16th instant to the House of Representatives may be considered indiscreet and liable to subject both you and me to unfavorable criticism, and as I would carefully avoid any course which might embarrass you or leave my conduct open to suspicion, I hereby tender you my resignation of the position of journal clerk. In order that I may not seem to avoid the investigation which I have myself invited, I desire that this resignation shall not take effect or be made public until after the report of the honorable committee to whose consideration my communication was referred.

Very respectfully,

CHARLES H. SMITH.

HON. GEORGE M. ADAMS,
Clerk United States House of Representatives.

The question was taken on concurring in the report of the committee; and it was concurred in.

DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri, from the Committee on Appropriations, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3128) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and for prior years, and for other purposes, with the amendments of the Senate thereto, having considered the same, beg leave to report as follows:

They recommend concurrence in amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 10, 11, 12, 13, 16, 18, 19, and 21.

They recommend non-concurrence in the amendments numbered 3, 9, 14, 15, 17, and 20.

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. Unless some gentleman desires a separate vote upon the amendments of the Senate, I move that the report of the committee be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri, moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SCHOOL LANDS FOR ALABAMA.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Alabama, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3172) to donate to the State of Alabama one additional section of land for each township in the State for the benefit of public schools; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

INDIAN TREATIES.

Mr. GAUSE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3173) to carry out the stipulations of certain Indian treaties; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Territories, and ordered to be printed.

CREDITS TO SETTLERS ON PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. PAGE. I ask unanimous consent to have taken from the Speaker's table House bill No. 1052, to correct an error in the Revised Statutes of the United States and for other purposes, for the purpose of concurring in an amendment of the Senate thereto.

Mr. WALLING. I ask that the bill be read.

The bill was read. It provides that, for the purpose of correcting an error in the act entitled "An act to revise and consolidate the statutes of the United States in force on the 1st day of December, 1873," so as to make the same truly express such laws, section 2403 shall be amended by striking out, in the second line, the word "seven" and inserting the word "one;" so that it will read:

When settlers make deposits in accordance with the provisions of section 2401, the amount so deposited shall go in part payment for their lands situated in the townships, the surveying of which is paid for out of such deposits.

The amendment of the Senate was to strike out the latter portion of the section, commencing with the words "credits to settlers for moneys deposited," &c., and inserting in lieu thereof the words, "proceedings under said section 2403 shall have the same force and effect as though enacted as herein amended."

Mr. PAGE. The effect of the amendment is to change the number of the section referred to in section 2403 so that will read "2401" instead of "2407."

No objection was made, and the amendment of the Senate was concurred in.

Mr. PAGE moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

OATHS AND CONTEMPTS.

Mr. CATE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3174) to amend section 725 of the Revised Statutes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

CHARGES AGAINST SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

Mr. CATE. I ask unanimous consent to submit at this time and have referred to the Committee of Ways and Means the preamble and resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk to be read.

The Clerk commenced the reading of the preamble, but before concluding,

Mr. CONGER said: I cannot see why all the records of the courts should be brought in here in a resolution. I object to this preamble and resolution.

Mr. CATE. If the gentleman will allow the Clerk to conclude the reading, he will see what it amounts to. I call for the reading of the preamble and resolution.

Mr. CONGER. If it can be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means without being printed in the RECORD, I will not object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has a right to have it read.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the preamble and resolution; which are as follows:

Whereas on the 10th of June, A. D. 1869, G. W. Hazelton, United States district attorney for the (then) district of Wisconsin, presented to the United States district court for the (then) district of Wisconsin, Hon. Andrew G. Miller, judge, an information against the bark Mary Merritt. The information charged that Samuel T. Hooker, collector of customs for the district of Milwaukee, did, on the 9th day of June, A. D. 1869, at the port of Milwaukee, seize as forfeited to the United States the bark Mary Merritt; that the vessel was owned by citizens of the United States; that the vessel was built in Canada; that during the greater part of the time from the 1st of January, A. D. 1868, to the time of the seizure the bark Mary Merritt was employed in transporting foreign goods and merchandise, all the products of the British dominions, to ports in the United States; that on the 8th day of June, A. D. 1869, the Mary Merritt arrived in Milwaukee from Kingston, Canada, where she had received her cargo, with a cargo of one hundred and fifty tons of pig-iron, the product of the dominion of Her Britannic Majesty Queen Victoria; that on the 9th day of June, A. D. 1869, the bark Mary Merritt was seized by the collector of customs by reason of violation of acts of Congress in respect to the premises mentioned in full in the information. The information prayed the usual process and monition of the court.

And whereas the court ordered a hearing on the 28th of June, 1869. On the 11th day of June, A. D. 1869, James Murray, the claimant, presented his stipulation for costs in the sum of $250, and his stipulation in the sum of $30,000 for the release of the vessel, William Young and Greenleaf D. Norris as sureties. Emmons & Van Dyke appeared as proctors for the claimant and excepted to the libel.

And whereas Judge Miller's decision was as follows: The United States of America vs. The Bark Mary Merritt, her boats, tackle, apparel, and furniture, James Murray claimant, in admiralty. This day came the district attorney, and also the claimant by his counsel, and the exceptions to the libel of information being argued, in consideration whereof it is ordered by the court that the said exceptions be sustained; and it is further ordered and decreed by the court that the said libel of information be, and is hereby, dismissed. It is certified by the court that there was probable cause of seizure. A. G. Miller. Decree signed, recorded, and enrolled December 6, 1869. J. M. Miller, clerk. And the district attorney here in open court prayed an appeal to the circuit court of the United States for the district of Wisconsin; whereupon, it is ordered by the court that an appeal be, and hereby is, granted.

And whereas a petition of James Murray and others for remission of forfeiture, filed November 16, 1871, discloses that James Murray was a resident of St. Catherine's, Canada. It further discloses that William L. Trice and Stephen E. Trice, of Hopkinsville, Kentucky, were part owners of the vessel. It also discloses that Murray sold his interest in the Mary Merritt to the Trice brothers, and that he (Murray) was employed as commander of the bark. The United States circuit court, Judge Thomas Drummond presiding, decreed forfeiture of the vessel on the 22d of April, 1871. The Supreme Court of the United States sustained Judge Drummond's decree, April 3, 1874.

And whereas on the 20th of March, 1874, William A. Richardson, then Secretary of the Treasury, before whom the case had been brought for a hearing, decided not to remit to the petitioners any right, claim, or demand of the forfeiture. On application the case was then referred to a committee of experts, who decided not to remit the forfeiture, and the report was approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, William A. Richardson.

And whereas on the hearing before the committee of experts Mr. B. H. Bristow, the present Secretary of the Treasury, appeared as counsel for the owners of the vessel Mary Merritt, and after the said B. H. Bristow became Secretary of the Treasury, the said judgment of forfeiture still remaining unpaid, the officer who made the seizure was paid the sum of $7,000, the sum claimed by him as his moiety of the amount of said forfeiture, on condition that he would cease further opposition to a remission of said forfeiture, and thereupon one of the attorneys for the owners of said vessel applied to said B. H. Bristow, Secretary of the Treasury, for a remission of said forfeiture, to which said Bristow replied that he would do nothing himself, but his private secretary could fix it up, and the said attorney met his private secretary and had the forfeiture remitted: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee of Ways and Means be directed to inquire into the said charges and the circumstances of the remission of said forfeiture, after the same had been decreed by the United States circuit and Supreme Courts, and its remission denied by the former Secretary of the Treasury, and after said committee of experts had decided that it should not be remitted, and upon what grounds and for what reasons said judgment or forfeiture was remitted, and for that purpose the said committee are authorized to send for persons and papers.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the reference of this resolution?

Mr. HALE. I did not hear all of the first part of the resolution. I wish to ask the gentleman presenting it whether the allegations in this matter are based upon the statement of any responsible individual?

Mr. CATE. All the statements contained in the resolution are based upon the records of the court as they appear, except that part of the resolution which refers to the interview between the attorney and Mr. Bristow and what transpired at that time. Those allegations are based upon the statement of a person in whom I have the utmost confidence.

Mr. HALE. Are the statements based upon any affidavits; and does the gentleman say that these statements, which must be intended as some form of accusation upon a gentleman of high character, are upon oath?

Mr. CATE. They are not, so far as I know; but I have no doubt of their truth; none whatever.

Mr. HALE. Has the gentleman stated in this paper the name of the accuser?

Mr. CATE. I have stated the facts as I understood them. I do not know that there is any accuser in particular. The matter has been submitted to me as being a proper subject of inquiry. I do not present the name of any accuser here.

Mr. HALE. But does the gentleman in this paper state the name of the person who makes these insinuations against the Secretary of the Treasury? Unless he does that, I object; because it is, as I believe, time for us to require that something definitive should appear whenever charges of this kind are brought before the House.

Mr. CATE. Well, sir, I am responsible for this resolution.

Mr. HALE. That is not the question. The gentleman does not vouch for any alleged fact; and unless the name of the person is stated in this paper so that notice may be given to the world, I object.

Mr. KASSON. Perhaps the gentleman [Mr. CATE] will state whether the witness he refers to is one who was present at the alleged conversation with the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. CATE. It is expected to prove that conversation by the gentleman whose name is mentioned in the resolution.

Mr. KASSON. Is he the authority of the gentleman?

Mr. CATE. That is the authority I have, although not immediately from him.

Mr. KASSON. Then it is hearsay merely. No person who was present at that alleged conversation makes this statement.

Mr. CATE. I have not consulted the gentleman myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the reference of this resolution?

Mr. CATE. All I desire is its reference to the Committee of Ways and Means. That is the object of its introduction. I do not think I am called upon to state the name of any person in regard to this matter.

Several members called for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. There is objection to the resolution, and it is not received.

Mr. HEREFORD. Who objects?

The SPEAKER. Several gentlemen have called for the regular order.

AMENDMENT OF REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. CHAPIN. I desire to report back from the Committee of Ways and Means, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 2867) to amend section 2958 of the Revised Statutes.

The SPEAKER. This bill, as the Chair understands, is presented for consideration at this time. Is there objection?

Several MEMBERS. "Regular order!"

Mr. KELLEY. I would like to know what this section relates to.

The SPEAKER. Is their objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. KELLEY. I object.

The SPEAKER. In reference to a bill like this, the Committee of Ways and Means has a right to report it to the House now for commitment, but not for immediate consideration, without leave of the House; and objection is made.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. I understood that last evening the agreement was reached that, as the first thing this morning, the previous question should be called on the Indian transfer bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood that to relate to the time when the Committee on Indian Affairs should resume the control of the floor, which, under the order of the House, will be after the morning hour. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania desire to move to dispense with the morning hour?

Mr. RANDALL. I do not see that any committee is pressing for business in the morning hour. I would like to have the House dispose of the Indian transfer bill, and then I would like to make a motion to proceed with the consideration of the legislative appropriation bill. I make that motion now. I am willing to yield that the previous question may be called on the Indian transfer bill, because we are committed to that. If the gentleman having charge of it do not desire to have a vote on that bill, I shall insist on my motion that the House proceed now to the consideration of the legislative appropriation bill.

Mr. BANNING. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPARKS] who has charge of the Indian transfer bill is not now on the floor. I think his understanding was that the bill should come up after the morning hour.

Mr. SPARKS, (having just entered the House.) That was the order as I understood, that the bill should come up after the morning hour.

Mr. RANDALL. Well, I will state to the gentleman that I have made a motion to proceed to the consideration of the legislative bill now.

Mr. BANNING. But the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] is willing to give way for the Indian transfer bill.

Mr. SPARKS. If we can proceed to the consideration of our bill prior to the termination of the morning hour, I move that we now do so.

The SPEAKER. It is competent for the gentleman to take the sense of the House upon that proposition, whether to proceed at once to the consideration of the Indian bill.

Mr. SCHLEICHER. I rise to a point of order. The report of the Special Committee on Mexican Border Troubles has been set by the House as the special order for this day immediately after the morning hour. I do not ask that it shall be taken up now, but am willing to yield to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and also, as the order provides, to the legislative appropriation bill; but I wish to reserve the right for the bill to come in its proper place. The order of the House is that it be made the special order for this morning after the morning hour, and from day to day until disposed of.

Mr. RANDALL. Subject to the appropriation bill. The gentleman's bill is in the best shape it can be, as it will come up immediately after the disposal of the legislative appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The bill to which the gentleman refers has precedence after the Indian transfer bill and other special orders of prior date. There are several special orders which come in before the one to which the gentleman refers. What is the motion of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. SPARKS. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering House bill No. 2677, to transfer the Office of Indian Affairs from the Interior to the War Department; and pending that motion that all debate be limited to one hour, when I propose to move that the committee rise and in the House will demand the previous question upon the bill, so as to dispose of it to-day.

Mr. RANDALL. As I understand it, the gentleman proposes to allow the bill to remain in committee under the five-minute debate upon amendments for one hour.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman proposes to allow the debate under the five-minute rule to continue not exceeding one hour.

Mr. RANDALL. That is my understanding.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. That motion cannot be entertained, in my judgment. The House may limit debate to five minutes, but so long as there is an amendment to be offered by any gentleman, a motion to rise and report the bill will not be in order. To be sure, by unanimous consent we may discharge the committee from the further consideration of the bill and consider it in the House. All that can now be done is to limit debate to five minutes on amendments.

The SPEAKER. The suggestion of the gentleman from Iowa is well taken. The motion of the gentleman from Illinois is that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering the special order under the five-minute rule.

CHARGES AGAINST THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

Mr. HALE. I rise, Mr. Speaker, to withdraw the objection I made a moment ago to the resolution submitted by the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. CATE.] I made objection, of course the House will understand, without consultation, and only upon the general principle that charges of that kind against honorable men and faithful public servants should be made more definitely and more specifically. In this case I know the honorable gentleman alluded to in the resolution has desired and courted investigation upon the very subject-matter in reference to which his name has been mentioned. I believe the most searching investigation in his case will have only one result, and that is to bring him out with a brighter record than ever before. I withdraw my objection to the resolution.

Mr. KASSON. I ask that the gentleman from Wisconsin add to his resolution the provision that the investigation shall be conducted with open doors and report made at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. CATE. I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department.

The SPEAKER. The suggestion of the gentleman from Iowa is an objection unless accepted by the mover of the resolution.

Mr. CATE. I do not accept the amendment.

Mr. WHITE. I must object to the resolution unless I can hear it read again.

Mr. CATE. The resolution has already been read more than once.

The SPEAKER. This entire proceeding is irregular, and the Chair will hold the resolution cannot be again read, objection being made.

Several MEMBERS on the republican side. Withdraw your objection.

Mr. WHITE. I withdraw my objection, but I desire to say just here——

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. WHITE. I do not desire to debate the resolution.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman objects to the resolution, it cannot be received.

TRANSFER OF THE INDIAN BUREAU TO THE WAR DEPARTMENT.

Mr. SPARKS. I now ask for a vote on my motion that the rules be suspended and the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, to proceed with the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2677) to transfer the Office of Indian Affairs from the Interior to the War Department, and, pending that motion, I move that all debate be limited to the five-minute debate.

The SPEAKER. The question will first recur on the motion to limit debate to five minutes on pending amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

The question next recurred on the motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the bill (H. R. No. 2677) to transfer the Office of Indian Affairs from the Interior to the War Department, (Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN. The committee, under the order of the House, will now proceed to consider the bill by paragraphs under the five-minute rule, and the Clerk will read the first section.

The Clerk read as follows:

That from and after the 1st day of July, 1876, the Secretary of War shall exercise the supervisory and appellate powers and possess the jurisdiction now exercised and possessed by the Secretary of the Interior in relation to all acts of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, board of Indian commissioners, or otherwise, and shall sign all requisitions for the advance or payment of moneys out of the Treasury on estimates or accounts, subject to the same adjustment or control now exercised on similar estimates by Auditors and Comptrollers of the Treasury, or either of them.

Mr. WHITE. I move to strike that section out.

I desire, Mr. Chairman, to say that I am in favor of this bill in the main, but I am not in favor of the bill as it now stands. I think it can be so amended that it will meet the object intended by the committee and at the same time not effect so radical a change as now proposed.

I believe, sir, that the present system of appointing agents and traders is accompanied with a great deal of fraud and corruption. I believe the Army officers can be detailed to perform the duties now performed by citizens with a great saving to the Government and at the same time with much more honor to the country. For that reason I would be glad to see Army officers detailed for this purpose. But is that a sufficient reason to transfer the Indian Bureau from the Interior to the War Department?

I believe, furthermore, that these corrupt practices that have been reported to us here are true. I have seen enough, of my own knowledge, from my own observation, to convince me that these traders as a rule go into the business for the purpose of making money out of it; and I believe, as the Army officer receives a salary annually, without regard to the service he performs, it will be more to his interest and more to the honor of the country if he performs these duties than to appoint civilians.

But I cannot see that even that is a sufficient reason for making this thorough transfer from the Interior to the War Department. If the amendment that I suggest shall be adopted, it will be a modification of the bill as it now stands, and it will also be an improvement on the system as it is at present. In other words, it will detail the Army officers to discharge these duties, and at the same time it will leave the control of the Department under the Secretary of the Interior.

I hope, therefore, my motion will be adopted. When we come to other sections I may give other reasons in support of the views I take.

Mr. COX. I do not propose, Mr. Chairman, exactly to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky. I oppose the whole bill. This bill presents to me one of the saddest of the experiences of my legislative life. On the 6th of January, 1861, I voted, as I hoped, to remove causes of discontent and stop the progress of revolution. At that time I reminded the House that a Persian once said to a Theban, in predicting the destruction of an invading army: "When one would give faithful counsel, no one heeds. We go on, bound to our destiny; and this is the bitterest of a man's grief, to see clearly and have not power to do anything." I can see too clearly the trouble impending in a measure of this kind, and yet I am utterly powerless to stop it. It is a foregone conclusion that this bill will pass, or some such measure. But it is well, Mr. Chairman, to consider whether or not we would be entirely wise in not challenging it on the ground of principle and humanity before we let it go to the Senate to be killed, as assuredly it will be killed there.

Gentlemen have argued this question as if the War Department were entirely innocent and the Indian Department were entirely guilty. I do not stand here to defend any set of contractors or rings belonging to our Indian system. Of them, I know nothing except as the papers and our committees report. Nor do I stand here to apologize for any delinquency in the War Department. But if we were consistent in voting for this measure, this House should reverse its action on the Belknap impeachment. Every day the Military Committee have revelations about the corruption of the War Department. What does it mean, this "greasing" of quartermasters? What does General McCook mean by presents of carriages and horses given to Army officers, as presents, by citizens furnishing supplies? What is the meaning of the thorough badness of men more or less connected with the Army, who are guilty of this or that crooked thing? I do not refer merely to Babcockism and all that. And yet we look on the spectacle of this House marching to the Senate for the impeachment of the head of that Department, a Department all bad and worse with every revelation, and at the same time giving it new privileges and powers and fresh responsibilities.

Perhaps I have already argued this question overmuch, I have pressed overmuch the dangers of military power. I may have offended the amour propre of some of the gentlemen of the South by my remarks. I will come to that directly. But I will ask this House, if it were the last thing I had to say to them in connection with Federal legislation, to consider carefully civil and military dominancy.

Why is it that the Canadian system without the military has been economy and success? Why has our system been such utter extravagance and failure? Did gentlemen ever think of inquiring into that Canadian system? Have the Military and Indian Committees ever inquired into it?

I have here before me the report of the secretary of the interior in Canada, ending June 30, 1875. From its careful perusal, I declare that there they have no war nor rumor of war in connection with the Indians. They have their aboriginal disquietudes; but at small cost they are reconciled.

I am kindly permitted by the committee to print pertinent extracts from this report:

The first steps taken by the Dominion government with a view to the introduction of law and order in the territories were the passing of the acts prohibiting the introduction of intoxicating liquor into the territories and for the establishment of the "mounted police force," the latter in 1873 and the former in 1874. The one struck at the root of the crying evil of the territories—the infamous liquor traffic—while the other supplied, in the officers and men of the mounted police force, efficient machinery for the prompt enforcement of the liquor law.

During the three or four years immediately preceding the advent of the police force into the territory, bands of outlaws and desperadoes from Montana and the neighboring Territories had established trading posts or "forts" on British soil, whence they supplied poisoned "fire-water," arms, and ammunition to the Blackfeet and other Indians, in exchange for buffalo-robes and other peltries which they carried out of the country in great numbers down the waters of the Mississippi. They had in fact organized a traffic which effectually impoverished the country and demoralized the Indian while supplying him with the means of making himself dangerous.

By the united operation of these acts, the liquor traffic in those portions of the territories where the mounted police force have their stations has been effectually stamped out. The American trading posts have been broken up and the whisky traders have recrossed the line. Lawlessness and crime are now in fact almost unknown in the territories, and life and property are as safe there as in other portions of the dominion.

All the official reports received from the northwest show that the Indians generally appreciate the great boon conferred upon them by the Dominion government and ascribe the peace and security they now enjoy mainly to the operation of these acts and to the presence in the country of the mounted police force.

This explains the general tenor of Canadian policy, for which the accomplished governor-general of the Dominion deserves great honor.

However, I desire to be more specific. This debate would be without interest but for the Sioux. Gentlemen say that we have the Sioux on our border, wild and warlike. So we have. They are our only present trouble. By this Canadian report of 1875, for which I have to thank the distinguished head of the Dominion government, Earl Dufferin, who must have noticed this debate, I find that the American Sioux Indians, to the number of fourteen hundred and fifty, took refuge in Canada after the massacre in Minnesota in 1862. How were they cared for?

I am graciously allowed to present further extracts:

These Indians occupy a somewhat anomalous position in our country. They are in fact a portion of the Sioux tribe of American Indians who took refuge in British territory after the Indian massacre in Minnesota in 1862. They could not therefore reasonably claim to be placed on the same footing or treated with the same liberality as the Indian bands who had always been British subjects resident in British territory. After a full consideration of the circumstances connected with their peculiar position in Canada, the government consented last year to grant them a reserve, and selected what was believed to be a suitable locality for the purpose at the forks of the Little Saskatchewan and Assiniboine Rivers. This reserve, which was intended for the whole band, was found by the Sioux chiefs who went to take possession of it to be without wood, and consequently unsuited for their purpose, and the chiefs requested to be allowed to change their reserve, at the same time intimating their wish to have two or, if possible, three small reserves instead of one large one. Governor Morris recommended the application of the Sioux to the favorable consideration of the government, and in November, 1874, instructions were accordingly sent to the Indian commissioner to take measures to select for the band, in concert with their chiefs, two or, possibly, three reserves farther west, on the same basis as to acreage as the reserve originally proposed, namely, eighty acres for every family of five persons, it being of course understood that the original reserve should be formally surrendered by the band. Early in the year the Indian commissioner obtained, accordingly, a formal surrender of the original reserve, and in company with the Sioux chiefs selected a reserve farther west on the Assiniboine at Berry Creek or Oak River, and another still farther west on Bird Tail Creek, near Fort Ellice.

These reserves were surveyed during the summer; the former contains, approximately, eight thousand and the latter seven thousand acres. Both present all the conditions necessary for an Indian settlement, and already a number of Sioux families have removed to them, erected houses, and begun farming operations. The Sioux settled in British territory are estimated at about fourteen hundred and fifty in all. They are reported as being sober and industrious, and many of them have already acquired some knowledge of agriculture, having worked on the farms of the settlers near Portage La Prairie, Rat Creek, and other portions of Manitoba, where they have hitherto resided. Indeed some of the settlers in these localities regretted the proposed exodus of the Sioux, finding their assistance useful in their farming work; but the generality of the settlers will no doubt be pleased at their removal, having had frequent occasion of late to complain of their depredations.

The capital thing revealed in this report is that the Dominion government have a mounted police. It carefully guards the border. Against whom? Against American marauding and fraud; against the incursions of American whisky traders and others, who for bad purposes follow these Indians for their corruption across the border. This police is kept up in the Dominion. It is kept up in a settlement where the Mennonites and the Icelanders, the English and the Celts, are all more or less settling; and without military surveillance, without the force and terror of arms. The report is that even the Sioux in Canada are quiet and laborious. At times they are absolutely indispensable to the labor of that new country.

If the argument of the gentlemen who supports this bill holds good, why does not the military argument apply to Canada? Why have you not inquired into the Canadian system? Not one reference has been made to it; and yet is it not successful without the army? They would transfer our Indian service from the bad conduct of our Indian agents—to what? To the War Department, now undergoing investigation. Investigation into what? Why, sir, before I would erect a structure I would first clean out the rotten débris. Then I would build on something substantial, even if Christian and unwarlike.

According to all rules of logic, when a change of policy is proposed the onus is upon the changeling to show the necessity for the change. The gentlemen who favor this transfer have had the most of the time of the House in this discussion. Have they shown any reason that cannot be answered in the light of economy and humanity?

Some gentleman, commenting upon my previous speech, said that I was unfit to deal with this question because I happened to emigrate from Ohio and had some connection with the Tammany organization at the East.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. COX. I am stopped just when I have got to the very point on which I wish to speak.

The CHAIRMAN. Discussion on the pending amendment has been exhausted.

Mr. MILLS. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending motion is to strike out the whole section.

Mr. MILLS. Then I move to strike out the enacting clause of the bill.

Mr. Chairman, I desire a few moments——

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a question of order. In Committee of the Whole the motion to strike out the enacting clause has the same effect as the motion in the House to lay on the table, and like the motion to lay on the table is not debatable.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the motion of the gentleman to be to strike out all of the first section after the enacting clause.

Mr. HOLMAN. The motion is to strike out the enacting clause of the first section, which of course is the enacting clause of the bill; which motion, like the motion to lay on the table in the House, is not debatable. I mention it as a very important point of practice in Committee of the Whole and as the only way to stop debate in committee. I will not make a point of order, but simply call attention to the rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hold that the motion is debatable.

Mr. MILLS. I do not wish to take the floor from my friend from New York, [Mr. COX,] if I can obtain it again.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. MILLS. I will yield my five minutes to him.

Mr. COX. I thank the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] for his courtesy in yielding his time to me.

When the hammer fell I was about showing to this committee the way in which they manage these things in Canada. I wish we had an honest and successful Indian service like theirs.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must remind the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] that debate must be confined, under the rule, to the pending amendment.

Mr. COX. The present occupant of the floor has been chairman of the Committee of the Whole for six weeks, and knows how strictly that rule has been enforced heretofore. I would like to show this committee the way they manage things in Canada in reference to their Indians, if that is in order.

I have the report referred to, showing the names of the bands or tribes, reservations, dwellings, agricultural implements, shops, stock, children, schools, religious establishments, &c. I wish we had such tabular methods. Here are the Methodists, Episcopalians, Roman Catholics, the latter predominating. This report shows how they keep their Indians and the children of Indians in order and without great expense. I wish I had time to quote further.

It was said by some one on this side of the House that under our present system the Catholics were discriminated against in some way by our present Bureau. My friend from North Carolina [Mr. SCALES] referred to it in a quotation that he made. I am not about to discuss that question. It rises, in one sense, to the dignity of a constitutional question. But as I understand it, there is no infraction of the religious test in the present arrangement.

If the Catholics have been badly treated on any reservation, I ask whether they are going under this bill to turn over this Bureau, with all its religious and educational relations, to the present head of the War Department? He began his political life only last year in Ohio by a bigoted foray against one denomination. Let gentlemen who understand what I mean ponder that. I will not quote from Judge Taft's speeches against Catholics. While I believe him to be an honest man, I will not make any quotation to show what is the intensity of his intolerant religious inclinations. But one thing I do say, that, if the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SCALES] be properly understood, the War Department, under its present head, is not the place just now to take charge of this Indian service on religious grounds.

The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TERRY] said last night that I was unfit to discuss this question because I had not been on the border. I had never heard the war-whoop, except in this House, I suppose. [Laughter.] I had never seen an Indian scalp-dance, except in the House of Representatives. He held that to be properly fitted to discuss or vote on this bill, a man ought to have had some border experience of that kind. In other words, that, in order to vote right as a Congressman, a man ought to lose a part of his head. [Laughter.] Or at least that he was unfitted to be a Congressman if he had any hair on his head. [Renewed laughter.] In that case we might be left without a quorum in this House as it is constituted to-day.

Now, I admit that I have not been so much in war as some of the gentlemen here who are advocating this transfer. I will not say that I have not been in war; gentlemen seem to think that all my travel has been from Ohio to New York. O, no! I venture to say, without boasting, that I am the only member here who has been upon every continent of our star, and in a great many curious relations with barbarians in and out of Congress. [Laughter.] I will not rehearse to this House the battles I have been in; they shall remain unknown, as a modest soldier would have such things remain. How I have been wounded, what red blood I have shed, what particular class of barbarians I have fought, I will not boast of. I do not think that us soldiers should celebrate our own prowess in battle!

Mr. MORRISON, (in his seat.) You have no war record.

Mr. COX. My friend here says I have no war record; and his has been expunged from the Congressional Directory. [Great laughter.]

Mr. MORRISON, (in his seat.) And you have none to expunge.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CONGER. I rise to oppose the amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment to the amendment is to strike out the enacting clause.

Mr. HOAR. Is that amendment debatable?

The CHAIRMAN. It is debatable, five minutes for and five minutes against.

Mr. CONGER. The few remarks which I wish to make to this Committee of the Whole on this bill may as well be made upon this amendment as upon any other. I desire to present to the committee the general proposition of this bill, to which I ask the candid and serious attention of members.

I desire to call the attention of the House to the particular position of the Indian question at this time. I think it will be admitted by every member of this House that in the organization of the Interior Department, in the organization of the Indian commission and the board making contracts and purchases for the Indians, in the whole management of our Indian affairs there has not for many years been so much regularity, such an approach to honest, efficient administration, to care and consideration, both of the Government and of the Indians, as exists to-day. I venture to say that no gentleman in this House will deny that for the last few years the tendency has been—and that it is especially at the present time—to stop the abuses in the Indian Department in all its branches, to correct errors, to make its management better and more economical for the Government and better for the whole Indian service.

I ask gentlemen of this House, (and there are some here I am proud to say to whom considerations of a religious character, considerations of Christian civilization may be addressed without being received with a sneer,) I ask gentlemen to consider that the Congress of the United States, the Government of the United States, has invited the whole religious people of the country in their various denominations to engage with emulation, if not with rivalry, in the work of presenting, for the government and management of the Indians, for their civilization, for their religious education, their best and choicest men, both to preserve the peace with this Government and to promote the civilization and Christianization of the Indians. I ask gentlemen to remember that this Government, and this House as a part of it, has invited all religious denominations of the United States, embracing more than half the people of the country, to join in ameliorating the condition of the Indian tribes, to bring honesty and faithfulness and their accompaniments, peace, concord, civilization, and Christianization, to the wards of the Government.

Just as they have entered into this work, just as they have brought their energies to bear upon it, just as they have tendered to the Government all the efficient influences that they can bring to aid the Government in its humanizing and civilizing process, look at the spectacle! The Congress of the United States turns aside the whole Christian community of this country, with all their efforts, all their churches, all their religious organizations; it tells them, just as they have entered the threshold of their great work, that they are unfit even to designate agents; that they are unfit to take the responsibility of aiding the Government as they have been invited to do. Sir, I say to gentlemen in this House that it is not one religious denomination alone that will look with amazement upon this effort to withdraw from them the power and the influence and the energy and the emulation with which they have entered upon this work.

It is useless for men to say here that when they remove the control of Indian affairs from the Interior to the War Department, when they set the soldier with his sword in place of the missionary with his Bible they do not destroy all that has been commenced; that they do not effectually and practically cast out at once all the influences that have gathered around these denizens of the forest and the plains. Who of us all does not know this?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment, and yield my time to the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. MILLS.]

The CHAIRMAN. Debate upon the amendment is exhausted.

Mr. MILLS. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. POPPLETON. I move to substitute the third section for the second, and yield my time to the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. MILLS.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not regard that motion as in order, as there is now pending a motion to strike out the first section.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I renew the pro forma amendment of the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. MILLS,] and yield my time to him.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will suggest that the vote be taken on the motion to strike out the first section, unless the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE] withdraws that motion. Other amendments can then be offered.

Mr. WHITE. I do not withdraw my motion. I think the section ought to be struck out.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. WHITE to strike out the first section, it was not agreed to.

Mr. HOOKER. I move to amend by striking out the last word, and yield my time to the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. MILLS.]

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I am very grateful to my friends around me for the generous sympathy they have manifested in my behalf. I desire to occupy only a few moments of the precious time of this House in discussing a question of very great importance to a portion of my constituency. In the discussion of this question by gentlemen who have preceded me, it has been taken for granted that there are but two points which demand consideration. I propose to present a third. However startling it may seem to the intelligence of these assembled legislators, I propose to present the interests of the border white men. It seems that the question of economy and the question of humanity to the Indians are the only questions that the Congress of the United States think they have a right to consider.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] has treated this question very learnedly. He told us of his extensive travels. He gave to this House the results of his learning acquired in those travels, as well as his study in books, concerning the government of conquered people by the conquerors. He has been unfortunate in his citations of history so far as it has been in my power to investigate them. I have not had the benefit of his Canadian citation, which he has repeated the second time to the House, but I have before me the Statesman's Year-Book, giving an account of the government of India by the British and of Algeria by the French. Algeria, this book says, was governed by France exclusively through her military arm until 1871. And why did she abandon exclusive military control over the Arabs in 1871? Because she had demonstrated by force that her laws must be respected by her conquered subjects. She does not put them under the civil department, even those she has conquered. But strange, harsh, and grating as it may appear to the ears of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX,] the Algerians are under the domination of a French general who has spent thirty-seven years of his life in the French army, an officer clothed with legislative powers as absolute as the powers of the Czar of Russia, and beyond the settled districts in Algeria the nomads, like the Kiowas, Comanches, Sioux, Apaches, and Cheyennes, are still under the control of the sword of France.

Now to the books:

Algeria, the largest and most important of the colonial possessions of France, was entirely under military rule till the year 1871, when, after the extinction of a widespread rebellion among the natives, various reforms, tending to organized civil administration, were introduced by the French government. In place of the former military governor, a civil governor-general at present administers the government of the colony, directing the action of both the civil and military authorities. But the new civil government extends only over the settled districts, and the territory of the Sahara and adjoining districts, inhabited chiefly by nomadic tribes, remain under exclusively military rule. The country under civil government is divided into three provinces, Algiers, Constantine, and Oran, which are subdivided into twelve departments, at the head of which is a prefect.

GOVERNOR-GENERAL OF ALGERIA.—General Auguste Chancy, born 1822, entered the army 1839, and served in Africa till 1870; commander of the army of the Loire in the war against Germany, 1870–'71; appointed governor-general of Algeria, March, 1873.

The governor-general is invested with legislative powers in civil affairs. In all important cases he has to take advice from a colonial council appointed by the French government.

The governor-general is invested with the high prerogative of legislative power in civil affairs even over the settled districts of Algeria, and over the wild, roaming, and nomadic tribes he is invested with the power of a military autocrat.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York, took the floor and yielded to

Mr. DOBBINS. Mr. Chairman, I cannot by words express the gratitude I feel to my friend from New York for the courtesy he has kindly extended to me by giving me his time. I am the humble representative, sir, of that very honorable set of people called Friends and Quakers, or a very large number of them. In one of the counties I have the honor to represent I think they have over twenty meetings. These people profess, and I think to a very great extent practice, the principle of doing unto others as they wished others should do unto them. They are readers of their Bibles. They believe in the truth of the prophecy that there is a good time coming, when the sword will be beaten into the plowshare and the spear into the pruning-hook, and the lion and the lamb shall lie down together.

There is in all men, sir, an inherent principle, be it the white man, the red man, or the black man, that he is worthy to be trusted. I remember to have heard an anecdote some years ago of two persons traveling together when night came suddenly upon them in the neighborhood of an Indian encampment. They had valuables with them, and while one took pains before going among the Indians to hide his valuables in the hollow of a tree, the other took his and gave them to one of the tribe for safe-keeping. In the morning after they had taken their breakfast and started off the one who had concealed his valuables in the tree came to look for them but found they were not there. They had been taken away and returning to the tribe he made his complaint that they had come as friends but had been treated as enemies. The chief asked, "What did you do with your valuables?" To which he replied: "I hid them with all imaginable care and supposed no human eye would see me. I supposed they were perfectly safe." "Did you," said he; "then go find them. If you had delivered them to the meanest of my tribe he would have brought them safely to you in the morning."

I mention this to prove that the red man is born with a fine feeling of soul and likes to be trusted. We are imitative creatures, and I should like to ask any friend of this bill how long he supposes it would take an Indian tribe to learn from the War Department any of the duties of good citizens or those duties generally? We know the soldier has certainly the privilege, which is denied to the Indian, of drinking good or bad whisky, [laughter;] and last night we heard the soldier gets the best of beef, while the Indian gets the worst. Is this course to be kept up still, or do they propose to treat Indians to whisky because the soldier drinks it? Are the Indians to be dressed up in bell-buttons, with epaulets upon their shoulders, and are we to teach them to be proud of being good for nothing? Is that the lesson they are to be taught? If so, I think it would be well to send the Army to them for a pattern. That is my idea.

I have no doubt in my own mind that the teachings of the different Christian denominations are salutary and produce good results.

There seems to be a strong prejudice existing in the minds of gentlemen who have spoken on the opposite side against Indian agents. I am happy to know, sir, there are some honorable exceptions. I know of men who have gone from my section of the country at great sacrifice of time and money—who have sacrificed their money largely for the good of the Indians. I could mention the names of these men. One of them returned to his home after having been away some six years engaged in this way. He told me himself that he was in dolt lars poorer, while his health had well-nigh gone. He is a neighbo- of mine, and his name is Mr. Barclay White, and I think he need nor be ashamed of it. He was conscientious in this matter. He went there carrying principles with him. I have received many interesting letters from him on the subject, and they are all to this effect—"The experiment is working well. While I am not making money, while I am not having the comforts of life I used to have in old Burlington County, New Jersey, yet at the same time I have the satisfaction of knowing I am doing my duty by the red men of the forest. I am learning him to farm, and the result of it is salutary indeed."

I met this morning a red man at the hotel where I am stopping. I was curious to know his mind upon the subject, and I asked him, "What are the sentiments of your people?" He answered me very positively, "Sir, we are opposed to it altogether." He went on to tell me something of his experiences. He inquired about certain ladies who went from my own county into his tribe, and who spent their youth in teaching those Indians to read. One of them, whom I knew well, a worthy young lady, taught this very Indian to read; and as he talked about it his soul seemed to swell with emotion, as though he felt a sense of gratitude in his heart to which he was unable to give proper expression.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DOBBINS. I ask to be allowed the privilege of presenting a memorial from the Society of Friends on behalf of the Indians, and ask that it may be read.

The CHAIRMAN. It can be printed as part of the gentleman's remarks.

Mr. DOBBINS. Very well.

The memorial is as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

The memorial of the "associated executive committee of Friends on Indian affairs," appointed by and representing ten yearly meetings of the Society of Friends, residing in twenty-one States, respectfully represents, that they have learned with great regret that a bill is pending before your honorable bodies to transfer the management of Indian affairs to the War Department for the following reasons:

1. Because our experience for the past seven years has convinced us that the present policy has resulted in a large aggregate of benefit to the Indians.
2. Because of the diminished number and unimportant character of the Indian insurrections during this period.
3. Because of the demoralizing influence of soldiers stationed among Indians.
4. Because a very small part of the Indians are hostile, and it is a special injustice to peaceable men to place them under military control.
5. Such transfer would indicate a want of confidence on the part of our nation in the civil administration of government.

Instead of the course proposed in this bill, we advocate—

1. The perfecting of the present system of civil management.
2. To extend civil law, by wise legislation, over all reservations in such simple forms as may be adapted to the varying needs of the Indian communities.
3. To provide courts for the prompt administration of justice upon reservations and also an adequate police force for the arrest and control of offenders.

Signed by direction and on behalf of the "associated executive committee of Friends on Indian affairs," held in Baltimore the 12th and 13th of Fourthmonth, 1876.

JOHN BUTLER.
EDWARD EARLE.
EDWARD W. HOWLAND.
BARNABAS C. HOBBS.
EVAN L. JOHNSON.
FRANCIS T. KING.
JAMES E. RHOADS.
BENJ'N TATHAM.

Mr. HOOKER. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. BANNING. I move to strike out the last two words; and I yield my time to the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. MILLS.]

Mr. MILLS. I will resume my remarks interrupted a short time ago by the fall of the hammer. I was discussing the French rule in Algeria. The French have there to-day to maintain their authority the seventh army corps, consisting of 60,000 men. This, sir, shows the benignity of the peace policy which we heard so highly extolled by the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] a few days ago. How has that peace been brought about which the gentleman extolled in such eloquent language in his splendid speech? Has the gentleman forgotten the history of the campaign of Marshal Pelissier; how he shut Arabs up in caves and piled faggots against the entrances and smoked them to death before he got them to acknowledge their subjection to French power? The domination of the French in Algeria proves the truth of the doctrine that has been laid down as fundamental in all governments, that without force there is no government.

It is the same thing in India. Who does not remember that in 1857, in the Sepoy rebellion, the British bound insurrectionary Sepoys in the mouths of their cannon and blew them to pieces to maintain British authority. How much force has great Britain there to day to maintain the dignity of its peace establishment? Sixty thousand English troops and 300,000 native troops, with 5,300 pieces of artillery. This is your splendid peace establishment that maintains the power of Great Britain in India. It takes that force to keep peace there to-day; and, sir, if the French and the British troops were withdrawn from Algeria and India it would not be twenty-four hours until the Gallic and the British standards would be stricken down and the natives again resume authority over those lands.

The great fault of the peace policy in the government of the Indian is the total ignoring of the question of force. It is proposed to govern the Indians by sentiment. Sentiment, sir, however powerful it may be among civilized people, will not do to awe savages into obedience to law. I have before me a book written by a Quaker who was for fourteen months among the Kiowas rambling with them. He is an advocate of the peace policy; and what does he say about it? Why he tells you that when he organized his school and was teaching his scholars to read and write the English language, from the A, B, C onward, ruffians entered his school, dispersed his scholars, and drove them away; and there was no force there he could appeal to to protect him.

Not only that, but he tells you in this book that the female schoolteachers who had gone down to teach these Indians had to quit their places and leave the Kiowas to keep themselves from being captured and carried away on the plains. He says that in one instance while he was in the tent with a Kiowa chief, Stumbling-Bear—

He (Stumbling-Bear) informed me of a war while General Hazen was there in which he himself killed and scalped five men and Kicking-Bird seven. I suppose it would be a difficult thing to find in the whole tribe a man over whose head twenty years have passed whose hands have not been imbrued with blood.

What a declaration for an advocate of the peace policy! This minister of peace says that among these wild savages there is not one who has arrived at the years of maturity whose hands do not drip with the blood of innocent victims on our frontier. Men who have a right to call upon you for protection, because they are your fellow-citizens who sustain by their labors, by their lives, and by their blood the sovereignty of your Government, appeal to you in vain. While you sit in council and gravely deliberate as to what is humanity to the savage, he burns down the house of the settler over his head, scalps his children, and carries into captivity his wife to satisfy the lusts of demons. And you talk about your massacres and raids!

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CHITTENDEN. I think I do the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] no injustice in saying that he seems to be in favor of "giving the Indians hell." From his tone and the examples he cites I can draw no other inference. He may be right, sir, but I think that this country is not quite prepared to adopt his policy. Fifteen years ago I knew something about the Indian business. I had occasion to know something of the frauds which were perpetrated upon them and of the gross injustice which was practiced by Indian traders and by officials of the United States in supplying them with their goods. But, sir, I know now that there has been a vast improvement within the last fifteen years in administering the Indian Department, and while it is perfectly true that every other Department of the Government has been increasing in extravagance and wrong, I believe it to be equally true that there has been an improvement in the administration of this Department which it is now proposed to hand over to the War Department.

Now, sir, I am not clear but that this may be the ultimate wise disposition of this question, but there are various reasons which have been alluded to in this debate why it should not be done hurriedly, and why it should not be done in the spirit which is indicated on the part of those who propose to make the transfer. We have gained something by the policy of peace which has been pursued for the last eight years, and we have every reason to hope that we shall gain more. And neither prayers nor force are to be excluded by pursuing the policy which we are now carrying on. Missionaries are not to be driven by soldiers from Indian camps, neither are the United States forces to be withdrawn and prevented from punishing the Indians when they deserve it.

I am convinced from the course of this debate that it is premature to hand over this Bureau to the War Department. I hope it will be deferred. I am not prepared to say that it may not be wise in the future to do it, but I am sure that it would be very unwise to do it at this juncture.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BANNING. I withdraw my formal amendment.

Mr. BLOUNT. I renew the amendment, and yield my time to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX.]

Mr. COX. I make an apology to the House for speaking so frequently on this subject. I do so for the reason that last night for three hours I had not the opportunity to respond to attacks made upon me. I am not responsible for the profanity which has crept in this debate and which has been reiterated by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. CHITTENDEN.] It started from North Carolina, or rather from John Milton in the very apt quotation which my friend from North Carolina [Mr. SCALES] made.

I have already made a statement as to how Canada cares for our Sioux, fourteen hundred and fifty in number, who have crossed within her borders. How do we look after our Sioux? Twenty-eight thousand of Sioux "souls" (Senate Executive Document No. 11, Fortieth Congress, third session) were placed on reservations by General Harney in the fall of 1868. General Harney reports that he paid out nearly half a million dollars more money than the $200,000 appropriated for the purpose. He created an extra debt of $485,744.21 for the purposes of peace. He thought it was a wise expenditure, because by peace the Indians "could be controlled as easily as children." General Sherman, whose opinion is sought for, then confirmed this peace policy. It was war and costly; but it was confirmed January 4, 1869, by Lieutenant-General Commanding W. T. Sherman.

Now, we are having expeditions, and that is the only present impending border trouble with the Indians, into the Indian country of the Yellowstone, &c., after these Sioux. What reports have we of these expeditions? Why our soldiers under General Crook, and by order of General Sheridan I suppose, marched nine hundred miles. They are after Crazy Horse and his tribe. It is indeed a crazy expedition. They march through the frost and snow for nine hundred miles. They reach the Indian village. What do they do? Shoot one old squaw in the thigh, and then retreat beaten. That expedition will cost a million; the next the same sum.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Were not General Harney's expenditures in violation of law?

Mr. COX. I would have stated that, if I had had more time. I have not devoted much time to discussion of this subject, but a good deal of quiet thought.

Now, if you examine into the question you will see the difference in the articles furnished at the border posts by the War Department and the Interior Department. According to my friend from Tennessee, [Mr. YOUNG,] who has critically examined it, there is a difference of $567,000 against the Indian Bureau. Yet we talk of economy in this connection. Gentlemen say that the expenses of the Indian Department have increased in several years past from several hundred thousand dollars up to six or eight millions. How have they been increased? By contingent expenses or by the purchase of land and the sale of land and in interest paid to the Indians and their annuities under treaties. That has never been explained here. Why do not the economists of the House tell us the whole truth in this matter? If they did, this bill would be killed as dead as Julius Cæsar, who must be the model of the gentlemen who proposed this military bill.

As to the Sioux, I have done with them. They are nearly done fighting, though General Crook, it is said, will make another expedition at the cost of another million in a few weeks, and doubtless with the same result. It is chasing the wind and trying to hold water in a sieve.

Mr. MAGINNIS. Is not that expedition to be made at the request of the peace commission?

Mr. COX. I know how it is with you border gentlemen. If the Indians were voters you would not talk so much against them.

Now, one word about Algeria, in response to what gentlemen have said. I did get on the misty mountain-top. My friend from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] went up himself like an eagle on a granite peak. My friend from California [Mr. LUTTRELL] stood on Mount Shasta before he got through. Sentiment and rhetoric, sir, do not belong altogether to our side. My honorable friend from Mississippi, [Mr. HOOKER,] whom I do not see now in his seat, but who speaks so gracefully that I would be willing to give one of my arms if I could only gesture as gracefully with the other as he does——

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. [Laughter.]

Mr. FORT. It is really surprising to witness the efforts of sentimental gentlemen to misrepresent this bill and its objects. The evangelist of New York [Mr. COX] and the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER,] who certainly ought to be a missionary, and my friend from New York who knows so much about the Indians, [Mr. CHITTENDEN,] have dwelt with great emphasis upon what they deem to be the horrors couched in and the purposes of this bill. One would think, after listening to them, that the object of this bill was to hand over these lambs of the forest and of the plains to be butchered by the Army, to be devoured by the wild beasts who are commissioned Army officers by the Government to maintain peace and order on the frontier.

Now I ask if such discussion is fair? Is it calculated to induce a reasonable man to come to the conclusion that any such purpose is contemplated? Is it likely that officers of the Army are going to destroy these poor red people? What object would they have in doing so? What is there in the history of the Army which can be pointed to that would justify any such conclusion?

Moreover, is not the Army under the orders of the President, who is elected by the people? Is not the Army also bound to obey the laws which Congress enact, the same as other officers and other citizens? And furthermore, is it not true that not a single one of these gentlemen, not even the evangelist from New York, can go and preach the gospel or read the Bible to these Indians unless he is guarded by the Army? All ask the protection of the Army, which has and will always be rendered.

Mr. STEVENSON. In order that there may be no misunderstanding, I desire to know of my colleague to whom he refers as "the evangelist from New York."

Mr. FORT. The gentleman from a city district. I do not know what number it is. The peaceable district.

Mr. COX. It does not make any difference.

Mr. FORT. As I said, no one of these sentimental gentlemen on this floor can go—ministers of the Gospel cannot go to propagate religion among any of these hostile people—without calling upon the Army to go with them. Nay, more; they cannot send the civil officers designated by the Interior Department to issue the supplies which we give these Indians without a guard must be detailed from the Army to go with them and protect them. Why not let the officers of the Army do both duties, and thus save complication and save money?

These gentlemen are very much interested now in having all the influences and protection and control of the Army withdrawn. In my judgment the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] might just as well propose to abolish and dispense with the police force of his city, and to rely upon religion alone, to rely upon the peace policy to protect the good people of that city from violence, as to remove from these Indians the care and control of the Army.

For my part, I have not the slightest prejudice against Indians. I sympathize with them and wish their welfare and ultimate civilization and Christianization. I wish them all peaceful prosperity, and therefore I propose that they shall be treated in a humane manner and their hands stayed from shedding the blood of their white brothers, and that they shall be taught first of all things to obey law and cease war and devastation. You cannot civilize any people, you cannot Christianize any savage people until you first teach them to obey and respect civil authority. It has often been necessary to precede the cross with the sword.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BLOUNT. I withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I renew it. In answer to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX] who has spoken so eulogistically about the Canadian system of treating the Sioux who fled to their borders after the Minnesota massacre, I would request him to turn to that very report which he holds in his hand, and there he will find that even now the Canadian government has taken steps to turn these Sioux over to their military authorities and to put them on a reservation, and that, while some of their people have worked these Indians, yet the great majority of their settlers are glad, on account of their depredations, to have them removed from their vicinity and placed upon a reservation by the military.

The gentleman made a great mistake when he said that on their arrival in Manitoba a mounted police had been placed over these Sioux. That mounted police force is stationed nearly a thousand miles from the vicinity mentioned, and this statement shows that the gentleman is as much mistaken in his geography as in his argument. Why was it necessary for the Canadian government to place a mounted police on the northern borders of Montana to control Indians who receive annuities from the United States? To the shame of the United States be it said that this is because our Indian system was so feeble, so inefficient, so weak, and wicked that we could not keep down the vile traffic in villainous compounds of alcoholic poisons carried on across the border, and no power to end the internecine wars continually waged among the different bands of Indians by which they decimated and destroyed each other. And so the Canadian government was obliged to organize military force and place it on the border, and to put these Indians of ours, which we equally failed to restrain or to protect, under the control of their military authorities when on their side of the line. That is the position of the Canadian government on this question as shown by the very document which he has so triumphantly flourished at us. And the supports for his argument, driven from our own borders, dislodged from the misty peak of Africa, and chased around the world, can find no resting place in Canada.

The gentleman, by way of comparison, asks us how we treat our Sioux? Well, I will answer. Some five or six years ago we purchased a peace from these barbarians after the manner of Rome in her decadence, at the cost of a million and a half a year. To do it we hauled down the American flag from our forts, and we abandoned the graves of our soldiers massacred at Fort Fetterman, and we turned an immense tract of country over to the Sioux, not one foot of which belonged to them, but which belonged to the Crows from time immemorial. We not only abandoned the white settlers, but we turned over to their fury our defenseless Indian allies. We robbed our friends of their country, and we gave it to their foes and ours. By it we sought to meanly purchase a peace, and we have had our reward, for we have had no peace. And this is one of the vilest parts of this miserable Indian system, that we do purchase peace with the warlike Indians, and we turn over to destruction our faithful allies and friends.

In the Territory of Montana all our own Indians are peaceable; but three or four times a year these same Sioux drive the Crows and the Shoshones from their agencies and reservation into our settlements for protection. This Government, having so long ignored the fact that our white men are butchered along the frontier, is apathetic when they appeal for help, and often turns an unwilling ear to their cries; but when they ravaged whites and Indians alike, then the miseries of these Crows and Shoshones touched the tender hearts of the peace commissioners, and they petitioned General Sheridan to send out that late expedition which the gentleman ridicules, not only to protect the white settlers of Montana, but to protect our allies and our friends the Crows and Shoshones, who are to-day joined with our forces and marching under our flag.

And the gentleman from New York ridicules General Reynolds, whose command, after riding nine hundred miles through winter snows, failed to kill the enemy as well as to capture their camp. Why? Because, with more humanity than judgment, instead of charging the camp he endeavored to surround it, and so the Indians fled, and the officer receives the sneers of the gentleman. How can he be satisfied? But the other day he denounced Baker, because after a similar desperate march, with the thermometer 30° below zero, he charged the Indian camp at the moment of the surprise, and in the mêlée some squaws were killed. If that charge had not been made, then the failure of the expedition would have been sneered at, and the cost of killing Indians contemptuously flung in the faces of the Army.

Why should an Army officer desire war? What glory can he win? What satisfaction for the toils and dangers can he expect? If after a long and dangerous midwinter march, from which the most hardy and brave might flinch, the Indians take alarm and fly, ridicule and sneers are his portion, and the cost of his failure is calculated to his disgrace. But if by almost superhuman energy and diligence he catches and surprises the enemy, (and, sir, there are but two kinds of battle with Indians; one where they surprise and slaughter the troops, and the other where the troops surprise and slaughter them,) do we glory in the victory of our own side? Does he receive credit for his diligence, his bravery, his success? No, sir. He is vilified and libeled by the humanitarian press, and denounced and slandered on this floor as a barbarian and a murderer. Why should the soldier want a war in which he can gain no glory, and where discredit follows failure and success alike? Why should the settler want war, in which he may see his wife outraged and scalped, or his children butchered and mutilated by the light of his blazing cabin? None of these want war or provoke war. Those who do so are the corrupt officials and contractors, who applaud and fatten on your present Bureau, and rob at once the Indians, the Government, and the frontier people. This House has now an excellent chance to improve our policy, and I hope for such action as will do away with this weak and vicious system by which the Treasury has been plundered and under which so much violence has been done; a system which, having become ensanguined with blood and foul with corruption, is an offense in the sight of God and a stench in the nostrils of humanity.

Mr. COOK. I rise to oppose the amendment. I want to read what the purchasing committee of these Christian commissioners say of their agents and the way in which they conduct this Indian Bureau. I read from the report of the purchasing committee of Indian commissioners, which has been furnished to me by one of those gentlemen. In reference to transportation they say:

> The rates paid for railroad transportation this year were exceedingly low, and there has been no complaint that the work has not been well done. But the rates paid contractors beyond the reach of railroad facilities have not been satisfactory, and the enormous amounts paid annually for transportation of this kind suggest the propriety of bringing the larger agencies nearer our railroads and navigable rivers.
>
> The class of inspectors who have acted hitherto at Sioux City, Kansas City, and Cheyenne have not performed their duties satisfactorily, and, as the committee were unable to find civilians in their stead in whom confidence could be placed, a request was made to the President of the United States to order a detail of Army officers to act as inspectors of flour, pork, bacon, corn, and oats at each of the above localities.

These very men whose friends are complaining of the Army called upon the President of the United States to appoint Army officers to inspect these supplies. Here is the result:

> In compliance with this request, Lieutenant-General Sheridan was directed to make the detail, and Captain R. J. Eskridge was detailed to inspect at Cheyenne, Captain J. W. Gilman at Kansas City, and Captain Charles McClure at Sioux City.
>
> We have had reports from the work done by Captain Eskridge, and I believe he has done his duty faithfully, rejecting considerable quantities of supplies at Cheyenne which, however, by the connivance of warehousemen and store-keepers, have been forwarded to the Red Cloud and Spotted Tail agencies. After the arrival of such supplies at these agencies without the approval of the inspector, parties in the interest of the contractors telegraphed to the late Commissioner of Indian Affairs—

Some gentlemen here know who he was—> to have a local inspection, and he replied directing a board of appraisement to be called in; and, as this body is usually made up from the hangers-on at the agency, the previously-rejected articles have almost invariably been accepted, thus neutralizing the object of the inspection provided by the board; and this has been practiced largely in corn, oats, and flour.

The truth is that the clothing and provisions furnished to the Indians are just such as could be picked up anywhere.

I want to read one other thing from this report. This is the purchasing committee, not the military, not the Government, but these men selected by these Christian people. Here is what they say of one of their contractors:

> The committee deem it proper to say, at this point, that the appropriation by Congress for the purchase of the beef in question was $120,000. At $3 per hundredweight, this would buy 4,000,000 pounds, and to the purchase of that amount the committee gave its approval. The contract, however, was executed on the 17th of March by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, without further consultation with the committee, for 5,000,000 pounds, amounting to $150,000, being $30,000 in excess of the appropriation. The committee are unable to see why this was done in the face of an appropriation specifically limiting the expenditure for this object to $120,000.

We are now called upon in the deficiency bill to appropriate $30,000 to carry out that contract, $30,000 for the expenditure of which this agent had no more authority to contract than for a million dollars. He makes the contract without consulting the purchasing board, who had undertaken to represent the Government and to see that the laws were faithfully administered with reference to the Government as well as the Indians in the purchase of supplies.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. If no further amendment be offered to the first section, the second section will be read.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope the gentleman having charge of this bill will move that the committee rise.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have a further amendment to the first section. I send it to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the President of the United States is authorized to detail from time to time such officers of the Army as may not be required in the military service, to perform the duties of inspectors, special commissioners, superintendents, agents, and special agents in the administration of Indian affairs, and that while performing such duties the officers so detailed shall be governed by all the provisions of law in regard to the duties of inspectors, special commissioners, superintendents, agents, and special agents in the Indian service: Provided, however, That this act shall not authorize the increase of the number, rank, pay, or allowances of officers of the Army in excess of that now authorized by law, nor shall it apply to the officers on the retired list.

Mr. BANNING. I make the point of order that that comes too late, as the section had been passed.

The CHAIRMAN. The section had not been passed; on the contrary, the Chair stated that it was still open for amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I have not taken any part in this debate heretofore and did not intend to do so, and while my first impression was very favorable to this measure, I admit I have not found the subject free from very grave difficulty in the examination I have been able to give it. My first impulse in favor of the transfer of the Bureau of Indian Affairs from the Interior to the War Department was in order, if possible, to break up the widespread fraud in the administration of Indian affairs, and there seemed to be a reasonable guarantee furnished that if this transfer were made the present enormous expenditures in the management of Indian affairs would be greatly reduced. The examination which has been made since the introduction and first consideration of this measure has led to an apprehension that perhaps the same frailty of expenditure is to be found in the War Department that exists in the management of Indian affairs by the Interior Department. Indeed, sir, when the charge is made of corruption in the Interior Department, gentlemen are compelled to bear in mind it is a charge which can be made with the same truth unhappily in reference to all of the other Departments of the Government, as events have disclosed from time to time during the last few years. Corruption in this particular Department has been disclosed more strikingly from the facility given to the perpetration of fraud and from the fact that the appropriation for this specific object being comparatively less than to the other great Departments of the Government, but it is very questionable whether in the administration of the War Department for the last few years the same wanton and extravagant expenditures of the public funds will not be found substantially to have prevailed.

Now, so far as transportation of supplies is concerned and the purchase of food for the Indians in comparison with the corresponding service in the Army, the tendency of the proof is to show extravagance on the part of the Army even as against the monstrous extravagance, if not fraud, on the part of the Indian Bureau.

But, Mr. Chairman, there is a fact to which I am anxious to call the attention of the committee, that there is a large body of unemployed officers of the Army whose services can be made available in connection with Indian affairs. They are authorized now to be employed by law, but it seems to me their services can be made specially valuable not only on account of their large experience, but valuable on account of the vast reduction of expenditures now made necessary by the employment of a great army of superintendents, agents, commissioners, and subagents under the Indian Bureau.

There are considerations, sir, which to my mind argue very powerfully against the transfer of the Indian Bureau to the War Department. It confers upon the War Department the administration of a quasi civil department of the Government—all that pertains to the Indian tribes in connection with their progress, civilization, education, improvement, and christianization in all their multiplied forms. I doubt therefore the policy of so far identifying the Army with the administration of civil affairs of the Government as to give it absolute control in reference to the important interests connected with the Indian tribes now under the care and guardianship of the Government. I doubt whether it will be found to promote the purity of the Army, or whether it will tend to promote that subordination of the military to the civil power which is among the crowning glories of our country.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HURLBUT. Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to say anything in this debate, but to content myself with voting. At the same time, it seemed to me, on a question of such vast importance, that if any gentleman believed he had anything to suggest which would lead the House to a right conclusion, he should not withhold it.

Now, two committees of this House, one by a majority and the other unanimously, have proposed this transfer of the Indian Bureau from the Interior to the War Department. That of itself deserved consideration, because these committees have acted upon the evidence before them, evidence which it is difficult to bring to the attention of members of the House generally, evidence which even when printed many members of the House probably would not read.

The question after all, Mr. Chairman, resolves itself into this, In what manner can we best and most justly control and govern these Indian tribes? The fault about the old system is this, that there is a divided, scattered, broken responsibility. Follow any of these things in the Indian Bureau, and you cannot name any man or put your finger upon any man who seems to be the responsible party. That is the fault now prevailing in all of our Departments, growing out of the division into irresponsible Bureaus, thus destroying the responsibility of public servants intrusted with the discharge of important public duties. And this is especially so in this Indian Bureau. It is proposed by this bill to transfer all jurisdiction over the Indians from that Indian Bureau in the Interior Department to the War Department. Is there any reason for so doing? I have heard a great deal from the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX.] I think he has been heard by the House three times on this one subject, in which he followed his usual fashion, for no man under heaven ever heard him argue any proposition relating to anything in these United States that he did not give in illustration how much better they did it in Algeria or Canada. That is his habit; but I was utterly surprised when he held up the treatment of France in Algeria as something worthy of imitation, for, as we all know, there is no history blacker, stained with more horrible crimes, filled with more base, cowardly, brutal murders than that of the conquest of Algeria by France.

But the point we have to consider is how can we put these people into hands which will at the same time respect the rights which they have and maintain the peace and good order of the society which is crowding in upon them? Now, sir, I am not upon the border. My neighborhood has grown out of that some forty years ago. But I know that these Indian tribes are crushed in and driven to the wall by a wave of white population composed of the most enterprising and energetic men in this country, which you cannot stop any more than you can stop the tides of the Atlantic. I know that all this sickly sentimentality about our owing anything to the Indians is of the most remote and visionary character. They are simply in the same condition with all other inferior races when they come face to face with the civilization which they can neither resist nor adopt; and they perish under laws which we do not make, and which we cannot control.

How will you save them? Save them by inducing them to accept civilization. Save them by breaking up their tribal organization. Save them by teaching them to recognize the individual duty of each man to obey the law as he knows it. Save them by impressing them with all the good influences you can. But while they are in this transition state you must govern them as you govern all other uneducated classes, as you govern the uneducated classes in all our great cities, by the administration of force. That is one thing which the uneducated class recognizes and respects. And under that show of force let all these advantages which may lead to the educating of them up to a higher point come in.

If I believed that this bill would in any way interfere with sound, genuine, christianizing, civilizing agencies among these people, I would not vote for it. But it does not exclude any of these things. It cannot be that the Christian sentiment of this country is dependent solely upon the question whether an Indian agent gets $1,500 or not. But the trouble we have to-day is this: there has been one hand that fed and pampered and clothed and protected, or pretended to protect; that hand annually gave gifts, but had no power to control; and whenever the necessity came for the exhibition of force, then the military arm of the Government is invoked by these very men.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. COX. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last word. I propose now to speak in my own time.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HURLBUT] is one more of the military men who have come to the rescue of this doctrine of force. When he applies that doctrine to the cities, he must know that the police are subordinate to the civil authority. As to Algeria and India, referred to by my distinguished friend from Texas, [Mr. MILLS,] I desire to say that the illustration about Algeria was exclusively with reference to the Kabyles—the 600,000 who had fought the French armies and had only been subdued by peaceful policies. No one palliates the atrocities which characterize the military command and conduct in that province. The Kabyle illustration was an attempt to show how that, after the army had done its bloody work, after the French generals Pelissier, McMahon, Lamoricière, and the rest of he African generals had stricken down the Algerian indigènes and had failed to make them contented with French rule, then came in conciliation, peace, and wisdom, and the Kabyles became prosperous and progressive.

And so it is and will be as to the Indian. My friend from Texas [Mr. MILLS] would not undertake to defend the shooting of Sepoys out of cannon in India as a policy of wisdom. This the British did in India. It aroused the whole Indian population. But Britain to-day, and her Queen as the Empress of India, rules in that land because Britain gives India her laws, her customs, and even her religion, and she adds to them those elements of western civilization which have given India so much prosperous glory and power as a part of the British empire. So much for these illustrations which I had a right to use when arguing against the policy proposed in this bill.

I have argued the question of economy. I have argued this question in every light. What I have said has not been answered.

This measure is not one which properly comes from this side of the House. It started with the republicans three or four years ago, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] leading off. But it never could get the consent of the intelligent and best men in the Senate or the country; nor did it get the assent of the Christian men of this country, who look at this matter from a higher stand-point. When gentlemen undertake to say that this is a bill to be forced through here because it comes from democratic committees, I beg to say that gentlemen on this side of the House are not or should not be partial to placing the military above the civil. Sir, this measure is nothing but a plaster-cast whose features came from the other side and for purposes which do not now exist.

The other day the honorable gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. HOOKER,] to whom I was referring when I was cut off so suddenly a few moments ago, in closing his remarkably eloquent speech in reference to the Indians, went out of his way to be both classical and sentimental. Sentiment and rhetoric have not been limited to our side of the question. He referred to Jove as sometimes nodding and to Apollo as not always true in his archery. He was kind enough in that connection to refer either to the gentleman from Massachusetts, Professor SEELYE, or to myself; whether he called me Jove and the honorable professor Apollo I do not know, but one thing is sure——

Mr. HOOKER. The gentleman will allow me to interrupt him to say that I meant both expressions for himself. [Laughter.]

Mr. COX. Well, Mr. Chairman, I can take it in only this one sense. I am a very humble instrument in this House and I do not belong to any pagan or classical terminology. I have come here to speak to this question because it is a matter of higher importance than our ordinary discussions. I believe in the doctrine of peace not only among all those within our borders, but even among the denizens of the woods and forests of our land.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. COX. One word and I shall have no more to say in this debate. I would repeat simply that the words of the gentleman from Mississippi——

Mr. SPARKS. I claim the floor to oppose the amendment.

Mr. COX. If the gentleman will grant me a moment more I shall then have done.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time can only be extended by unanimous consent.

Mr. SPARKS. I object.

Mr. COX. Then I will only say that I hope we will vote this bill down.

Mr. SPARKS. I rise simply for the purpose of yielding my time to another. I yield the five minutes to which I am entitled, in opposition to the pending amendment, to my colleague from Illinois, [Mr. HURLBUT.]

Mr. PAGE. I do not understand that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPARKS] can yield any time until the previous question has been ordered.

Mr. SPARKS. I think I am entitled to five minutes to oppose the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman rises to oppose the amendment and yields his time to his colleague.

Mr. HURLBUT. Mr. Chairman, if the mythological question between the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] has been settled now by the graceful acceptance of the latter of the double honor of being both Jove and Apollo—and I think he himself perhaps might have gone a little lower and found himself Hercules—I will proceed to the discussion of this question, for I am not now disposed to follow out the mythological question.

When the five minutes to which I was entitled expired I was endeavoring to demonstrate to the House the evils that come from divided jurisdiction. I can illustrate it in this way: I suppose that all of us in our time have raised a pet dog, and I presume that none of us would have wished to have one hand feed and the other flog him. That is the trouble with us in all this matter. There has been division; there has been pampering on one side and punishment on the other.

Now, sir, it has been alleged in this debate, and I was very sorry to hear it, that the officers of the Army desired this transfer. I beg to say in their behalf that they do not desire it. There is not an officer of the Army who does not know that this change will impose upon him duties that are inglorious and subject him to abuse at the hands of the public press. There is no man in the Army who asks for this change. If the House chooses to cast the burden of this duty upon the officers of the Army they will accept it as they accept any other duty. But they are not now here asking it, nor is there any reason why they should do so. There is no honor to be gained in an Indian war, and vast danger, vast fatigue, and in case a man falls in such a war he gets but some casual notice in a general order. There is no fame in the thing.

Now, why is it that Army officers as accounting officers for money are safer than the rest of our people? It is this: I do not say for our officers of the Army that they are better than any other class of our citizens, but they are under different laws, different impulses, and different feelings. They occupy a position for life, which they value, and which position depends upon their good behavior and their honor. There is one little clause in the Articles of War that is more potent to keep an Army officer within his jurisdiction and to the honorable performance of his duties; it is more potent than any investigation by Congress or any proceeding in civil courts, and it is that phrase which renders any officer of the Army liable to be cashiered and dismissed from the service for conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman. That is the penalty that awaits him if he wanders from the right. As I have said, no investigation is necessary by Congress, no process of civil court, but he is watched all the time by the mass of his comrades whose honor is involved like his, and then he is subject to the prompt and sharp action of a military court, or the more sudden action of the President of the United States dismissing him from the service for dishonorable conduct. That is the real reason why these officers are reliable as accounting officers. The education they receive, of course, may stimulate them in the positions they occupy and hold them to a sentiment of honor, but they are governed and controlled by these Articles of War, which hold them liable to a sharp and sudden decision, and therefore it is better that the accounting and use of these vast sums of money that we have to pay out should be put in the hands of men who are held by honor, by personal hopes, by hopes in their future, and by the penalty of this sharp and decisive judgment of a court-martial.

Now, sir, I have felt called upon to say only this at this time. I stated, I think in my opening, that no single one of all the civilizing agencies is ruled out by this bill, not one. No officer of the Army, no Secretary of War, no general would stand in the way of anything of that kind. But the single individual responsibility of control in peace and war is given to officers, having the advantages which I have said belong to them. The particular amendment which is offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] is objectionable to my mind, because it makes patch-work of a bill which is already in better shape.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. COX. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. CONGER. I renew it. I am not surprised to hear old Army officers like my friend from Illinois, [Mr. HURLBUT,] and perhaps my other friend from Illinois, whose name [Mr. FORT] is suggestive at least of military occupation, advocate the transfer of the Indian Bureau to the War Department. But I am surprised to hear those gentleman cast a sneer on the opponents of this bill—cast a sneer upon the combined religious denominations of this country as they have done. I did not expect it from that source. I did not expect my friends from Illinois to ridicule this great, energetic, effectual work of all the religious denominations of the United States in their effort to procure the appointment of honest men, and to watch them carefully in their administration. I did not expect to hear them ridiculed as missionaries and evangelists; that I did not expect from that source, and I regret it. I tell the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FORT] that he had better take the Sankey songs and sing "Hold the fort," than to throw out these reflections upon gentlemen engaged in this service of the United States.

I do not wonder at my friend, now from Illinois, but formerly one of the chivalry of South Carolina, [Mr. HURLBUT,] speaking sneeringly of the missionary and the evangelist. But the great fact stares us in the face, and no such remarks can remove from the minds of the people the influence of that fact, that the Government of the United States has invited all the Christian denominations of America to combine all their influences, and all their energies, and all their watchfulness, and all their zeal, to aid the Government in the work of caring for, managing, civilizing, and Christianizing these wards of the nation.

If you pass this bill, I tell you that you will be casting back into the teeth of those you have invited to labor—and they will feel it, and make you feel it, too—you will be casting back into their teeth the reproach that with the short time given, with the feeble means placed in their hands, you have decided that they are unfit to be trusted.

Ah, says the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. HURLBUT,] the honor of the soldier will make him honest, the watchful care of his comrades will make him honest in the administration and expenditure of money. Sir, will not the watchful eyes of millions of men in this country make the agents of the religious denominations honest, men nominated in the face of the world for responsible positions? I have little faith in anybody making any man honest; but if all this watchfulness and care can make men honest and keep them honest, I tell you the watchful eyes of all the religious denominations, the emulation and rivalry between them as to their respective agents will be a stronger guarantee for their integrity and faithfulness and honesty than any esprit du corps of the Army can ever make its men.

Mr. FORT. I want to state to the gentleman that I did not sneer at missionaries or at religion; on the contrary, I hold them both in the very highest reverence.

Mr. CONGER. But the gentleman did say that in order to carry Christianity anywhere in this world experience had shown that you must accompany the missionary with the bayonet.

Mr. FORT. You often do have to do that.

Mr. CONGER. Is that in the teachings of the gospel? Must the Army precede or accompany the missionary? Is the gentleman right in his statement or in his conclusions? Sir, it is the acknowledged history of the world that the missionary who goes forth alone among any people, savage and barbarian as they may be, unaccompanied by the army and unaccompanied by the canteen, is the most successful.

Mr. FORT. The gentleman has not read his Bible very recently.

Mr. CONGER. That may be. We will talk about that to-morrow.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CONGER. I wish that the interruptions should not be taken out of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. They have not been taken out of the gentleman's time.

Mr. PATTERSON. I have heard a great deal this morning from members who opposed this proposed transfer of the Indian Bureau to the War Department of the increased efficiency manifested during the past few years in the management of the Indian Department. As to whether that is true or not may best be determined by the facts, whatever they are. For the purpose of determining that question I desire to call the attention of the House to a little fact in the history of the management of the Indians in the Territory of Colorado that has transpired within the last few years.

In 1874 a treaty was entered into between the Government of the United States and the confederated bands of Ute Indians. By the terms of that treaty a large tract of land was ceded to the Government of the United States and opened up for settlement; a tract of land comprising perhaps as rich mineral resources as are to be found within the limits of the United States. By the further terms of the treaty it became the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury—and Congress by special act ratified the treaty—to set apart United States Government bonds, bearing 5 per cent. interest, in a sufficient amount to make the annual sum of $25,000, which was to be expended for the benefit of the Ute Indians. Although that treaty was made nearly three years ago, although it was ratified by an act of Congress two years ago last August, yet the cry comes up from the Ute Indians in my Territory that not one dollar of that money (although over $50,000 is now due) has ever been expended for their benefit.

Sir, Congress is not remiss in this. The Secretary of the Treasury is not remiss, because he has under the law set apart the $50,000 that it was his duty to set apart up to the 1st of January last. But after Congress has acted, after the Secretary of the Treasury has acted, we find that there is a clog in the Indian Department, because, from the testimony of the Indians of the Territory and of the settlers, not one dollar of that money has yet been expended for the objects for which it was appropriated.

In connection with this matter, I ask the Clerk to read a letter which I received but a few days ago from a member of the late constitutional convention in Colorado, relative to this subject. It goes to show that, on account of absolute failure of the Indian Department here in Washington to do its duty or on account of the misapplication of funds by agents, an Indian war is imminent in my Territory; and those who live in the valley of the Animas who will first be subject to the fury of these red men are calling upon the Government either to pay the money or to send the Army to protect them.

The Clerk read as follows:

DENVER, COLORADO, April 13, 1876.

DEAR SIR: A petition will be forwarded you by this mail from the citizens of La Plata County, (which I represented, as you know, in the constitutional convention,) asking that troops be at once ordered there to prevent the Indians carrying their threats into execution of driving the settlers out of the Lower Animas Valley. I had a long talk with Ignacio, the chief of these Utes, last November, on the eve of my departure for the convention. He said that he had been promised and promised pay for his land but the money had not come. Three winters had gone since the treaty was made and the white men at Washington had not kept faith with him and his people. He could not live on promises any longer. He would wait till this winter was over, and then when the leaves came and the warm days (spring) if the Washington people did not pay the money for the lands he would drive every settler out of the Animas Valley.

He complained very bitterly about the manner in which he had been treated. He said if they had been bad Indians, like the Sioux, the Washington people would have sent out blankets and presents to them and asked them to be good; that the only way to get anything from Washington was to be a bad Indian.

I am not an alarmist, by any means. I have lived over twenty years on the frontier and served through the Oregon Indian war of 1855 and 1856. I was with Governor Isaac I. Stevens in all of his Indian treaty expeditions on the northwest coast and in what is now Idaho and Montana. This long experience has given me necessarily a knowledge of Indian character. I am satisfied in my own mind that Ignacio is terribly in earnest. He means every word he says. Something must be done and done at once, or that whole Animas Valley with its productive farms will be laid waste and the settlers driven out. It is the garden-spot, as Professor Hayden will tell you, of all Colorado. If this should occur through the neglect of the Government to comply with its own solemn pledges, it will be a burning shame. I have written to Captain John Moss, at Parrote City, to see Ignacio at once and endeavor to keep him quiet till you could be heard from. He has great influence with him, and may be able to hold him in check for a few weeks. My sympathies and that of the settlers are strongly with the Indians in this matter.

Ignacio does not want to be a bad Indian if he can get his rights by being a good one. He is a very intelligent man, bold and determined, and of great influence with his people, and will stand no more promises without their fulfillment.

Indian hostilities will retard the settlement of La Plata County for years. It is rich both in its agricultural lands and in its mineral resources. The apprehension of trouble has already materially interfered with its development. If it were not for this there would be this spring a large emigration to that region of farmers and prospectors. Two things ought to be done at once: A military post ought to be established in that region. The best place would be on the Mancos River, twelve miles west of Parrote City. You could introduce a bill making the necessary appropriation to build a permanent post wherever it might be deemed best in extreme Southwestern Colorado. Lieutenant Wheeler and Professor Hayden both know that whole region, and it might be well to consult them on the subject. In the mean time two companies of cavalry could be ordered immediately from the New Mexican department, via Tierra Amarilla, to make a summer encampment in the Animas or La Plata Valley. They ought to start immediately, so as to avoid the high waters of the San Juan, Pinos, and Piedra Rivers, which are not fordable after the freshets in June and July until the fall. They are not more than knee-deep until then.

A commission ought to be appointed to buy out the narrow strip of fifteen miles in the south of La Plata County, extending to the New Mexican line. Ignacio is willing to sell that, and this would make the reservation west and entirely away from the settlements. This commission should be intrusted at the same time with the money or supplies as payment for the lands ceded under the treaty of 1872. It should be composed, not of strangers or outsiders, but of well-known citizens of Colorado. That ought to be insisted on. Governor Routt and Bishop Spalding of the Episcopal Church, with some resident of southwest Colorado, would be the sort of commission that would give most satisfaction to that section. They would be just to the Indians and to the settlers and make a permanent peace.

The expense of the new military post need not be great, as the garrison from Fort Garland, which is utterly useless, could be transferred to it, and also much of its material. That post ought at once to be abandoned. The only use it is at present is to furnish a market for the few farms in its vicinity.

I am sure you will act in this matter promptly, as it is of the most imperative necessity.

With great respect,

HENRY R. CROSBY.

Hon. THOS. M. PATTERSON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PATTERSON. I ask to have printed in connection with my remarks a petition signed by nearly fifty of the settlers in Animas Valley, whose property and lives are threatened by the Ute Indians on account of the failure of the Indian Department to comply with its solemn treaties with them.

Mr. COX. I object to the leave to print, unless consent be given me to print what I asked leave to publish. Objection was made awhile ago.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection to these requests.

The petition presented by Mr. PATTERSON is as follows:

To his excellency John L. Routt, governor of Colorado:

We, the undersigned, residents of the valleys of the Animas, Florita, and Pinos rivers, having been and being continually threatened by the Ute Indians, believe that serious depredations will be committed at an early date unless some immediate measures are taken for their prevention. We are led to believe this from the fact that their chiefs, Ignacio and others, have lately assumed a very hostile and threatening attitude and ordered us to leave the country, a thing they have never done before, the depredations heretofore perpetrated having been committed by the younger men of the tribe against the wishes of the chiefs.

We therefore respectfully petition that you will use your influence to have at least one company of troops stationed in this section of country during the spring and summer.

Dated March 27, 1876.

[Here follow the names of the signers.]

I add my name to the list and earnestly ask that some steps be taken immediately to comply with the requirements of the treaty and the just demands of the Indians. There will be trouble—very serious trouble—this spring if the Indians are not paid.

HENRY R. CROSBY,
Representative from La Plata County to the Constitutional Convention.

Mr. BANNING. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. RANDALL. The understanding was that this debate was to last but an hour. It has now extended two hours.

Mr. BANNING. I believe I have the floor.

Mr. RANDALL. I rise to a point of order. As the House understood, this debate was to take but one hour, at the expiration of which the committee was to rise and the sense of the House was to be tried upon the previous question; if that was sustained, the chairman of the committee was, of course, to have one hour under the rule. Now we have been in Committee of the Whole—with what profit each gentleman can judge for himself—for two hours. I now ask that the gentleman having charge of the bill make a motion that the committee rise; otherwise we had better take a test vote in committee of the Whole on a motion to strike out the enacting clause.

Mr. SPARKS. It was my understanding that the House should resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole, to remain therein but one hour. But a point of order was taken upon that motion, and it seems the rule is against it. Hence debate appears to be limitless. I now propose, whenever I can get the floor otherwise than through a point of order, to move that the committee rise. I have been seeking an opportunity to make that motion for some time.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion was made that debate in Committee of the Whole on this bill be limited to one hour. The Speaker ruled that that proposition required unanimous consent, and objection was made. The rule of the House provides—

That the House may, by the vote of a majority of the members present, at any time after the five-minutes debate has taken place upon proposed amendments to any section or paragraph of a bill, close all debate upon such section or paragraph, or, at their election, upon the pending amendments only.

The right of the House to close or to limit debate applies to a pending section or paragraph, or pending amendments thereto, and not to the whole bill. The point of order raised by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] is not well taken.

Mr. RANDALL. I rose to make that point because it was the understanding, whatever the record may show; and I had no other way to direct the attention of the House to the understanding except by raising a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that he is governed in this position by the record as he finds it made up by the Clerk.

Mr. BANNING. I propose to detain the committee for but a moment——

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted.

The question being taken on the pro forma amendment of Mr. CONGER, it was not agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] upon which debate has been exhausted.

Mr. BANNING. I move to strike out the last two words of the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, and I do so, Mr. Chairman, for one purpose only and will not occupy more than one minute. I am surprised at the amendment moved by my friend from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] and I have reason to be. This bill has been reported favorably to this House by his committee, the Committee on Appropriations; it has been reported favorably by the Military Committee and by a majority of the Committee on Indian Affairs. It proposes to transfer the Indian Bureau from the Interior to the War Department, while the amendment which he makes does not propose any such transfer, but, on the contrary, leaves it, as I believe, in a worse condition than ever before. Therefore it is I am surprised at the amendment and hope it will be voted down. The committees I have indicated have all agreed to this bill, almost unanimously agreed to it, because they believe it will be better for the Indians and better for the Government. They have fully shown, my friend from New York [Mr. COX] to the contrary notwithstanding, that, while in 1848 it only cost in the War Department $874,000 to take care of these Indians, during the last year it cost $6,888,000 under the Interior Department. The proof is furnished by William Welsh of Philadelphia that 75 per cent. of all these Indian Bureau appropriations is stolen or used for political purposes. The committee have considered it good and think therefore it is time to make a change. But they believe furthermore it is impossible to make any change worse than it now is. I yield now to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SPARKS. I move the committee rise and report the bill and pending amendment to the House.

Mr. BANNING. I withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

Mr. SPARKS. I move the committee rise and report the bill and pending amendment to the House. Pending that motion, however, I am ready and willing to allow any amendment which may be suggested by any gentleman to go with the bill into the House for the purpose of being considered and voted on.

Mr. COX. I rise to a point of order on that motion.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I hope the committee will not rise.

Mr. COX. I rise to a point of order on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. COX. My point is that the motion to rise is not in order while an amendment is pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides the point is well taken, and that it is not in order to move the committee rise while an amendment is pending. The question now recurs on the amendment moved by the gentleman from Indiana. The gentleman from Illinois may move that the committee rise for the purpose of closing debate on the pending paragraph, if that be his object.

Mr. SPARKS. Does any member wish to offer an amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The pending question is on the amendment moved by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] on which debate has been exhausted. An amendment to the amendment is in order.

Mr. SPARKS. I hope we will have a vote on the amendment, and then come to the second section of the bill.

Mr. WHITE. I wish to speak to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted.

Mr. SPARKS. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of closing debate on the pending section.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. SAYLER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the special order, a bill (H. R. No. 2677) to transfer the Office of Indian Affairs from the Interior to the War Department, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. SPARKS. I now move the rules be suspended, and the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering the bill for the transfer of the Indian Bureau; and, pending that motion, I move that all debate on the pending paragraph in committee be closed in one minute after its consideration shall be resumed.

Mr. HOLMAN. Say ten minutes.

Mr. SPARKS. Well, I will say five minutes.

Mr. HURLBUT. I wish to ask a parliamentary question, whether it is in order to move the previous question on the bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill is in committee and has not yet been reported to the House.

Mr. HURLBUT. Is in order to move to discharge the committee from the further consideration of the bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Only by unanimous consent.

Mr. SPARKS's motion to close debate in committee in five minutes on the pending paragraph was agreed to.

The question next recurred on the motion of Mr. SPARKS to go into Committee of the Whole, which was agreed to; and accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the bill (H. R. No. 2677) to transfer the Office of Indian Affairs from the Interior to the War Department, (Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House debate on the pending paragraph has been limited to five minutes.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I have submitted the amendment now pending to the first paragraph in fact as a substitute for the entire bill, and I might as well put it in that form at once, as a substitute for the bill instead of for the first section only, as the House will see if my amendment be adopted it will cover the whole scope of the pending bill.

I indulge in the belief, Mr. Chairman, that the main gain on the score of economy in the transfer of the Indians from the Interior to the War Department will be found simply in the employment of the unemployed officers of the Army as commissioners, inspectors, agents, and subagents in connection with the various Indian tribes. To that extent I indulge the hope economy will manifestly be accomplished. I indulge the hope still further that there will be a more honest administration of Indian affairs with Army officers than under the present system. Beyond that, however, I doubt whether anything on the score of economy will be accomplished by the transfer of the Indian Bureau from one Department to another.

My friend from Ohio, [Mr. BANNING,] the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom I propose to yield in a moment, when comparing the expenditures of the Indian Bureau at this time with 1848, overlooks this important fact, that then the entire western country, as it were, the country west of the Mississippi River, was almost within the range of these various Indian tribes. The buffalo covered the plains everywhere, being a source of subsistence to the Indian tribes. But the policy of the Government is now to restrain those Indians on the reservations, devoting to civilization large portions of the vast domain heretofore occupied by them, and providing for their support on these reservations. In this way the expenditure has necessarily been enlarged, although undoubtedly it would be vastly less under an honest administration of Indian affairs than it is now.

The amendment I have offered I propose as a substitute for the entire bill. It preserves all the good there is in the bill, the employment of unemployed officers in the Army in the honest administration of Indian affairs. I trust this amendment will receive at least some consideration. For I hope the House will pause long before it will take a step which will defeat all the results which have been accomplished in late years in the attempt to civilize these Indians by placing them, as in recent years, under the more humane and benevolent influences of the spirit of peace.

Mr. BANNING. I believe I have two minutes and a half. I desire to say one word in reply to the remarks of the gentleman from Indiana. Two weeks ago, before he was sick, he was in favor of the bill as it now is.

Mr. HOLMAN. I cannot allow my friend to misrepresent me.

Mr. BANNING. The gentleman must not take my time.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman must not misrepresent me or indulge in discourteous remarks.

Mr. BANNING. I do not yield. Two weeks ago the gentleman supported the identical bill we have now. His amendment would just save the amount of the expenses of the agencies, which is $180,000; while the bill will save over $5,000,000. That is proven in this way: When the Indians were controlled at the War Department there were 497,000 of them, and then they cost $800,000. Now there are 279,000, and they cost over $7,000,000. Now, as a question of economy this is a matter for us to consider, and consider well; and I am sorry that my friend has been away and forgotten the knowledge he had upon this subject two weeks ago.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio whether the identical experiment proposed by the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana was not tried in 1869, and proved in one year the most disastrous failure of any experiment ever tried in the management of Indian affairs?

Mr. BANNING. Yes, sir. The proof that we should turn the management of Indian affairs over to the War Department is found in this fact, that every one who knows anything of the subject knows that it cannot be made worse than it is now. And the best men in the country, Bishop Whipple, Mr. Welsh, and all that class of men who have been opposed to the transfer heretofore, favor it now, and are in favor of it because where it is it is all wickedness, corruption, and theft, as shown in Mr. Welsh's testimony.

It has been said by my friend from New York [Mr. COX] that this is a republican measure. I do not care whether it is republican or democratic. It is a measure of economy. It is a measure that is right. It is a measure that is demanded by the Indians and by the white people of the frontier. It has been spoken in favor of by all the gentlemen here from the Territories but one. These gentlemen know more about it than we do; and it is only opposed by the gentlemen from the East, who have not suffered as the men have suffered who stand here fighting for the rights of frontiermen and the rights of the Indians.

Mr. DUNNELL. I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio——

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, which he offers as a substitute. For what does the gentleman desire it to be a substitute?

Mr. HOLMAN. For the entire bill.

Mr. BANNING. When the gentleman from Indiana offered his amendment he said it was a substitute for the section.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman states correctly that when I offered the amendment I offered it as a substitute for the first section. I afterward stated that inasmuch as it covered the whole bill I offered it as a substitute for the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection being made to the amendment being treated as a substitute for the bill, the question is on the amendment as a substitute for the first section. If it prevails, the committee may then strike out the subsequent sections of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman from Ohio must see that it makes no kind of difference in what way the question is put.

The question being taken on the substitute, there were—ayes 44, noes 103.

Mr. HOLMAN called for tellers.

Tellers were not ordered, the ayes being 25; not one-fifth of a quorum.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read the third section, as follows:

SEC. 3. That commanding officers of the military departments of the Army in which Indian tribes are located or living shall be ex officio in charge of Indian affairs in their respective departments, and shall, subject to the approval of the Secretary of War, make such details of the officers of the Army serving in their commands as may be necessary from time to time to administer the affairs of the Indian service: Provided, That the officer detailed to take charge of Indian affairs in the War Department shall not be of lower rank than that of colonel, nor shall the officers detailed to discharge the duties heretofore performed by agents at any Indian agency be of lower rank than that of first lieutenant in the regular Army: And provided further, That the Inspector-General of the Army shall discharge the duties of inspector of Indian affairs, and shall be required to make an annual report to Congress of the numbers and condition of the Indian tribes; and such officers shall not be required to give other bonds than are now required of them by law, but shall be held responsible for any neglect of duty or maladministration thereof, and shall be subject to trial therefor by military courts-martial, according to the rules and articles of war; and the provisions of this section shall be applicable to all officers of the Army charged with duties under this act so far as responsibility for neglect of duty and maladministration thereof is concerned.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I move to strike out the last word of the first section, merely to enable me to submit some remarks on this bill. In the few minutes allotted to me, I know very well that I shall not be able to fully discuss the bill, or to state to any considerable extent the objections I have to it. Prior to the year 1849, the Indian service of the Government was under the control of a Bureau of the War Department. Since that time it has been under the control of a Bureau of the Interior Department. It is proposed now to transfer the control of the Indian service back to the War Department. This proposition requires that we should compare the service under the War Department with that under the Interior Department and consider the results under each. We must do more than that. We must not confound results under the Interior Department prior to the "peace policy" adopted by President Grant with results since this wise and humane policy was inaugurated. It is an undeniable fact that the Indian service under the War Department was a total failure. If any gentleman will look at the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for 1868, he will find that the Indian service instead of being economically conducted and, as my friend and colleague [Mr. BANNING] says, at an annual expense of $800,000, in fact it cost the Government, in consequence of Indian wars, millions upon millions of money. Allow me to read an extract from that report:

More than half the period in which this Bureau was under the control of the War Office was occupied in the prosecution of costly and unprofitable as well as unjust wars against the Seminoles, the Sacs and Foxes, and in vexatious and expensive troubles with the Creeks and Cherokees. It should not be forgotten, in this connection, that almost all the Indian wars which have depleted the Treasury and desolated our frontiers, even since the Bureau was given to the Interior Department, had their origin in the precipitate and ill-considered action of the military stationed in the Indian country.

If the mass of our people desire peaceful relations with our Indian tribes—mean to continue to recognize their natural rights, as our fathers have done, and do not desire their violent extermination—then, I submit, the peaceful, and therefore the civil, and not the military agencies of the Government are better adapted to secure the desired ends.

Blight follows the sword as surely as desolation sits in the track of the hurricane or the conflagration.

Has not military management essentially failed in civilizing the Indians? When and where did it turn their minds from war and the chase and fix them upon agriculture or pastoral life? When and where did it reduce the cost of Indian affairs? It has only succeeded in illuminating our historic pages with bloody pictures; in surcharging the hearts of our tribes with hatred and revenge, and spending the money of the people by the fifty million dollars oft repeated.

This War Office management, now proposed, may look to the peace that follows extermination as the great desideratum of the service and the panacea for Indian troubles; but such peace is far in the distance, if it is to depend upon extermination by arms. If we fought five hundred warriors on the little pent-up peninsula of Florida seven years with the regular Army, with many thousand volunteer soldiers, and the Navy thrown in, at a cost of fifteen hundred lives on our part and $50,000,000 in treasure, leaving at least several hundred Seminoles in the everglades who still claim to be free, how long will it require, and at what expense of treasure and blood, to exterminate (not merely subjugate) our 300,000 Indians now occupying and roaming over the plains and mountains of the interior, an area of more than 200,000 square miles?

The report then calls attention to the Sioux war, unnecessarily provoked by men connected with the Army; to the Cheyenne war, provoked in the same manner; to the Chivington massacre; the Cheyenne war costing probably not less than $40,000,000, and so the report goes on. The management of our Indian affairs in the War Department was an utter failure, disgraceful to our civilization, productive of outrages, wrongs, extravagance, cruelty, corruption, fraud, and other crimes and evils so vast and so revolting that I dare not and cannot enumerate or name them. And this report to which I have referred shows the reasons of all this. It says:

Soldiers are educated and trained in the science of war and in the arts of arms. Civilians are taught in the science and arts of peaceful civilization. In lifting up races from the degradation of savage barbarism and leading them into the sunlight of a higher life; in unveiling to their benighted vision the benefits of civilization and the blessings of a peaceful Christianity, I cannot for the life of me perceive the propriety or efficacy of employing the military instead of the civil departments, unless it is intended to adopt the Mohammedan motto and proclaim to these people "Death or the Koran."

It must be remembered the Army is not organized as were our brave, patriotic, and honest soldiers during the late war. Nor do I mean to cast reproach on the regular Army or its officers. These are all necessary and useful, and generally correct, patriotic, and deserving; but a few incautious, indiscreet, or reckless men can provoke an Indian war in spite of the prudence of judicious officers and good soldiers. And so our Indian wars have nearly all commenced.

Let me briefly glance at our Indian history. It has been estimated that when this continent was discovered there were on it 3,000,000 Indians, a large portion of them in what is now the United States. Now there are in the United States, exclusive of Alaska, according to the estimate of the Indian Bureau, 278,953 Indians. These are nearly all located on one hundred and twenty-four Indian reservations, scattered over eleven States, nine Territories, and the Indian country south of Kansas. With the exception of a few "wild" Indians these are all under the care of the Bureau of Indian Affairs in the Interior Department. This Bureau has at its head a Commissioner of Indian Affairs charged with a general superintendence of the whole Indian service. We all know the present Commissioner as an able, honest, philanthropic Christian gentleman, with a business capacity which eminently fits him for the place.

Then, as the Revised Statutes say:

SEC. 2039. There shall be a board of Indian commissioners, composed of not more than ten persons appointed by the President, solely from men eminent for intelligence and philanthropy, and who shall serve without pecuniary compensation.

Their duties are: First, to supervise all expenditures; Second, to inspect all goods purchased for Indians in connection with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs; Third, any member may investigate all contracts, expenditures, and accounts.

Then the existing law provides in substance, as I have condensed it, that—

SEC. 2043. There shall be appointed by the President not exceeding five Indian inspectors.

SEC. 2045. Each Indian superintendency and agency shall be visited and examined as often as twice a year by one or more of the inspectors, who shall investigate all matters.

And then the existing law provides in substance that—

SEC. 2046. The President is authorized to appoint four superintendents of Indian affairs.

SEC. 205. The duties of superintendents are to—

1. Exercise supervision and control over the official conduct and accounts of all officers and persons employed in Indian affairs.

2. To suspend such officers and persons for sufficient reason.

Then a condensed statement of the law shows that—

(Section 2052.) The President is authorized to appoint forty-two Indian agents.

(Sections 2058 and 2060.) Their duties are, first, each agent within his agency to manage and superintend intercourse with the Indians; second, to reside in the agency.

(Section 2065.) The President may appoint sub-Indian agents.

(Section 2071.) The President may employ agents, first, to instruct Indians in agriculture; second, to teach their children.

This is the law in brief as it now stands. When President Grant came into power, to his everlasting credit be it said, he resolved to change the policy which had previously prevailed of appointing agents as a reward for political services, and, without special regard to the qualifications essential to instruct and civilize and christianize Indians, he determined to appoint agents on the recommendation of religious bodies, agents distinguished for philanthropy, agents competent to instruct or superintend the instruction of Indians in agriculture, agents competent to teach or rather to superintend the teaching of Indian children, agents competent to carry to these children and to the untutored Indians of all classes the glad tidings of the gospel of the Redeemer. In this work all religious denominations are recognized, and the Government maintains a purpose far beyond the mere temporal and physical wants of nature, looking to the moral and religious culture of the Indian tribes. This is the source and foundation of all civilization. Without it the Government care of the Indians must be a failure, a mockery, and a sham. With it we may hope for success, for the approval of God and all good men.

This is the so-called "Quaker policy"—the "peace policy," the policy which teaches the practical duties of civilization, based on the moral and religious instincts of human nature and the precepts of religion.

It must be remembered that about one-half of all the Indians are nearly self-supporting. They have been made so by this peace policy. This is shown in the report of the Secretary of the Interior, including the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, pages 505 and 506.

A large portion of the Indians in the Indian country south of Kansas are far advanced in agriculture, have civil governments, civil officers, the administration of justice, schools, churches, and other evidences of advanced civilization. They are to a large extent eminently religious. And this is true in good part of many tribes in many localities.

The bill now before us proposes to abandon all this policy. It proposes to abolish the Indian Bureau and transfer its duties to the War Department. It proposes that the Secretary of War shall detail officers of the Army to administer Indian affairs. The commanding officers of military departments are to be ex officio in charge of Indian affairs in their respective districts.

The duties now performed by Indian agents are to be performed by officers of the regular Army of a rank not lower than a first lieutenant.

This is the change proposed.

Now, sir, so utter a failure was the management of our Indian affairs by the War Department that in 1849 it was transferred to the Interior Department. Since that time we have had a period of comparative peace; there have been no great Indian wars. Since President Grant came into power we have adopted, as I have said, what is known as the "Quaker policy;" a policy of civilization, a policy of Christianity, a policy of peace. I am for the "Quaker policy" because it has been a success. I am for the "Quaker policy" for the reasons set forth in the memorial from the Society of Friends which has been presented by the gentleman from New Jersey, [Mr. DOBBINS.]

Mr. FRANKLIN. Will the gentleman state when Chivington's massacre occurred?

Mr. LAWRENCE. Well, the Indian affairs were formerly managed by the War Department, and the trouble commenced there.

The massacre referred to did not grow out of any act connected with the Indian service. It grew out of no fault of the present system. It was prior to the "Quaker policy," and that is enough for my purpose.

Now, I may inquire, What are our duties toward the Indians? What should be the purpose of the Government?

I think I may safely affirm the purpose should be:

First. To preserve peace and avoid Indian wars.

Secondly. To prevent Indian incursions on white settlements and incursions by white citizens on Indian reservations.

Thirdly. To civilize the Indians and, I may add, to christianize them. This requires instruction in agriculture, the education of Indian children, and moral and religious instruction for all who can be induced by peaceful means to accept it. It requires, to some extent and for some tribes of Indians, supplies of food and clothing.

And, finally, all this should be managed with prudence, honesty, and economy.

And now in what one respect can the control of the Indians by Army officers bring better results or as good as through civil officers of the character now contemplated by law and secured in the mode stated? Will the Army secure greater economy? Military officers receive larger salaries than the agents now employed. There is no economy, then, in the change in this respect.

If it be said employment can be given to Army officers in this mode, I reply, if their services are not now required as military officers, it is better by far to dispense with their services. We might as well turn the members out of this Hall and officers and employés out of the civil departments merely to give employment to Army officers.

Will Army officers be more honest than the agents now employed? I know the inducements they have to be honest, and that the agencies for punishing dishonesty by military tribunals are summary and generally effective if they shall be applied. But reasonable care in the selection of civil officers will certainly secure the highest type of honesty, and the law does or can prescribe effective means of ascertaining and punishing delinquencies. I do not undervalue the integrity of Army officers; but they have not escaped entirely the common infirmities of men, and I am unwilling to believe our civil service is less honest than the military service.

Are the Army officers more competent for the discharge of the requisite duties than civil officers—than civil agents selected as I have indicated? Can a lieutenant instruct in agriculture or superintend it? Can he teach or superintend the teaching of Indian children? Will his religious teaching, example, and influence be superior to that of agents selected as the "peace policy" requires?

No man can be master of all trades. The qualities required of a soldier, and without which he would not be a true soldier, are not those that fit him for civilizing the Indians and pointing them to that higher life to which it should be our purpose to lead them. The presence of soldiers will always bring camp followers and other agencies to corrupt, degrade, and debase the Indian. So it always has been, so it always will be. The "Indian rings" are unable to mangage the agents under the "Quaker policy," and this has made opposition to it. This "Quaker policy" does not make opportunities for men to speculate in war contracts—its abolition will. The policy of force has not one redeeming element to commend it to our favor. It is revolting to human nature and against the enlightened sentiments of humanity. It is totally unnecessary. The experience of the last seven years proves it. The "Quaker policy" has been productive of peace. It is the policy which has always brought peace. It is a duty of men and of nations to cultivate and maintain friendly relations and peace.

From the time when William Penn set the example, born of Heaven, of treating with the Indians without arms to this hour history proves that it is practicable to avoid Indian wars. Even the Mormons in Salt Lake Valley have been able to settle among and live for years surrounded by Indians and yet to avoid all wars.

The presence of soldiers among the Indians must necessarily irritate the Indians and provoke wars. Their presence is a constant menace, and this is by no means calculated to inspire confidence or cultivate a friendly disposition. The peace policy has provoked no war; the war policy has scarcely done anything else but bring crime, war, and extermination.

Gentlemen talk of economy. There is no economy in war; there is economy in peace.

It is true we are expending about $6,000,000 annually in the Indian service. It is too much. There should be greater economy. But the expenditures depend on treaty obligations to pay money, and on appropriations by Congress without such obligation. A transfer of the Indian service to the War Department will not reduce treaty obligations, which require by far the largest part of the expenditures for the Indian service, nor will it furnish any means of reducing appropriations which do not equally exist under the present system.

We are told the civil service for Indians prior to the transfer to the Interior Department did not cost a million a year.

But this is a most imperfect means of comparing the two systems. The circumstances have all changed since 1849. Then our settlements had scarcely crossed over the Missouri River in their advance to the Pacific Ocean. Then the Indian hunting-grounds furnished ample means of subsistence. These are now nearly all gone. The Indian has been driven from his home and his hunting-grounds. These are occupied by our own enterprising and intrepid citizens. The Indians have become the "wards of the nation." New treaties with them have imposed obligations on the Government to expend annually nearly four millions of dollars.

In the name of humanity, in the name of justice, in the name of Heaven, I entreat you not to invite the extermination of the fragmentary bands that remain, but let us lift them up to the blessings of our own civilization and to a knowledge of light and life. Let us carry to them and to their children the Bible and the means of education as a duty enjoined by the instincts of our people and by the precepts of that religion which we profess. Nations have duties as well as individuals, and woe to that nation which disregards them. Their fate will be that of "the nations that forget God."

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, it is impossible for me in five minutes to more than enter my protest against this bill which provides for the transfer of the Office of Indian Affairs from the Interior Department to the War Department.

It occurs to me that gentlemen who have spoken in favor of this bill do not look at the question as statesmen should look at it in discussing a policy that for a series of years will best subserve the interests of the Indians and also the whites. This question cannot be determined by inquiry whether this Indian agent or the other was honest or dishonest, or whether some massacre of the Indians by whites or of whites by the Indians was caused by a bad white man or a bad Indian. There are only two ways by which men can be controlled or governed: one is by bringing to bear upon them the influences of Christianity and civilization, under which they will in the end do right, because a majority of them are for the right at heart, and the other is to govern them by force. In the first, the principal agents are peace, love, Christianity, and civilization, and force is secondary, to be set in motion only as a means of self-preservation, and temporarily, in moments of great excitement and peril, and when the peril passes away the force ceases. In the second the agents are fear, hatred, despotism, force, under the permanent reign of which there can be no true manhood, no genuine civilization or Christianity.

Now I have no abuse for the military arm of the Government. It is sometimes necessary to invoke its aid to suppress the lawlessness and insurrection of bad men against society. It is, however, by its very nature despotic, and I would not place any people permanently under its control. Sir, it sometimes happens in every State in the Union, under great excitement, that law is set at defiance and bad men ride upon the storm, committing outrages that cause humanity to blush, and sometimes it is necessary to declare martial law and invoke the aid of the military arm; but would gentlemen contend for a moment that in such communities military rule should be permanent? Such a proposition would justly hurl any man from position who made it. Then why pursue a policy toward the helpless red men, the wards of our whole people, that all will acknowledge to be destructive only?

But gentlemen say you cannot civilize the Indian and that his fate is to be exterminated. In reply I call attention to the Indian nations in the Indian Territory. As is well known, they have made great progress in civilization and are prosperous as an agricultural people. But gentlemen say that the proposed transfer is in the road of economy. I doubt that. My observation is that the military arm of the Government is not an economical arm; but suppose it would be a little more economical, there are some matters of greater importance than economy. You cannot do wrong or pursue a wrong policy and sacrifice the right and justify it in the eyes of the people by saying that is the more economical way; and I warn gentlemen that the eyes of an enlightened Christian people are upon them and that in the end they will not be justified in enacting the proposed legislation.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I regret that my time has expired. I should have been glad to have spoken further as to the details of this bill.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I will withdraw my amendment.

Mr. HUNTON. I move to amend the pending section by inserting after the words "make such details of officers of the Army serving in their commands" the words "or on the retired list."

Mr. SPARKS. On behalf of the majority of the committee reporting this bill, I will accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. It is for the Committee of the Whole to dispose of the amendment; it will be adopted, if no objection be made.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. SPARKS. I now move that the committee rise for the purpose of obtaining an order from the House to close debate upon the pending section.

Mr. PAGE. I would suggest to the gentleman to ask unanimous consent that debate be considered as now closed.

Mr. SPARKS. Very well; I ask unanimous consent for that purpose.

There was no objection.

No further amendment being offered to section 3, the next section was read, as follows:

SEC. 4. That nothing in this act shall be construed to authorize an increase in the number, rank, pay, or allowances of officers of the Army in excess of that now provided by law, nor shall its provisions be applicable to officers on the retired list of the Army.

Mr. HUNTON. The adoption of the amendment to the third section moved by me makes necessary the adoption of an amendment to this section. I therefore move to strike out the words "nor shall its provisions" and insert the words "and its provisions shall;" also add to the section the following:

And when on such duty shall receive full pay and allowances of the rank in the regular Army held by them at their retirement, as prescribed by law for officers on the retired list.

Mr. SPARKS. As this amendment carries out the previous amendment offered on behalf of the majority of the committee, I accept it.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say one word more. I do not know that I oppose this amendment. The gentleman, I suppose, desires to employ such of the officers as are retired. My idea of economy, as expressed at the beginning of this debate, was to get rid of the supernumerary officers in advance. If they are of no use to us, why not strike them off our rolls? If gentlemen wish this Army to continue as a "skeleton" of some future standing army, why not reduce the skeleton as to the officers in proportion to the body of the Army?

I was informed yesterday (I do not know that I should speak of it here) by the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs [Mr. BANNING] that probably he would bring in a bill cutting down the rank and file ten thousand. I hope he will do it.

Mr. BANNING. The committee have never thought of anything of that kind, I believe.

Mr. COX. I understood the gentleman to say that something of that kind might be done.

Mr. BANNING. That was altogether a misunderstanding.

Mr. COX. Then we have no hope of a reform in that direction.

Mr. BANNING. The only hope of reform in this House is through the Committee on Banking and Currency. [Laughter.]

Mr. COX. I notice that the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. BANNING,] who is fresh from the war and recent in the democratic party, with all the ardor of a new man, thinks himself possessed of a new idea, though it really belongs to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD.] He is so pertinacious about this bill that he and his colleague on the committee seem determined to crowd it through without fair and full debate. They have found out that, though they may eventually pass their bill, they cannot pass it without debate and protest. Next year, if the bill shall pass, gentlemen will see the result: additional appropriations for the soldiers who may be needed for future Indian wars.

The gentleman has told us again and again of Indian appropriations; but he takes care never to tell us the exact amount of the expenditures proper and the expenditures which grow out of our treaties, which a gentleman from Iowa will, I think, hereafter show from the official and authentic records.

No matter for that, sir; I pass that by. After the voting down of the amendment of my friend from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] who is I think about as just a man and as good an economist as the gentleman who now seeks to wear these new honors, I have no hope from this side of the House or from this House at the present session for economy in the War Department.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. COX. For the last time I enter my protest against the bill.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment. I am the very last member on this floor to attempt to obstruct what may be considered wholesome legislation. If I could only conceive that this bill was of that character, I would not raise my voice in opposition to its passage. But it occurs to me that this bill was not conceived in the spirit of justness and equity toward the Indians. In all the treaties we have made with the Indians subsequent to 1849, we have implied, if we have not fully expressed, the idea that it was the determination of the Government to bring them under civil influence. When this Bureau was removed from the War Department to the Interior Department, it was clearly the understanding of the Indians that the purpose of the Government was that they should not be controlled by the sword and the bayonet, but that we should use toward them those civilizing influences which have tended to make us so great a people.

Why, sir, it is a reflection upon our civilization to say to the Indian that the same appliances which have been employed for the civilization of mankind throughout the world are not applicable to them; that the example which we may attempt to set before them from day to day can have no possible effect, and that the only way to deal with this wild and obstreperous people is to bring them fully under the control of the Military Department of the Government.

Sir, General Sherman, after looking over the field in connection with this question, wrote a letter to General Grant in 1868, in which he made these remarks:

I was of opinion, and still am of opinion, that the peace commission should do little or nothing more till our report to Congress of last December, with the bill reported by Mr. Henderson, have been fully and freely discussed in Congress and action taken in form of law The Indians, finding our general promises not sustained by facts, are naturally tending to the conclusion that the treaties we make and the promises held out are of the same nature as others of like kind in former times.

I also find that on the 7th of January, 1868, a commission of which General Sherman was a member made a report on this subject to the President; and in that report the following statement appears:

This brings us to consider the much-mooted question whether the Bureau should belong to the civil or military department of the Government. To determine this properly we must first know what is to be the future treatment of the Indians. If we intend to have war with them, the Bureau should go to the Secretary of War. If we intend to have peace, it should be in the civil department. In our judgment such wars are wholly unnecessary, and hoping that the Government and the country will agree with us, we cannot now advise the change. It is possible, however, that, despite our efforts to maintain peace, war may be forced upon us by some tribe or tribes of Indians. In the event of such occurrence it may be well to provide in the revision of the intercourse laws or elsewhere at what time the civil jurisdiction shall cease and the military jurisdiction begin. If thought advisable, also, Congress may authorize the President to turn over to the military the exclusive control of such tribes as may be continually hostile or unmanageable. Under the plan that we have suggested the chief duties of the Bureau will be to educate and instruct in the peaceful arts; in other words, to civilize the Indians. The military arm of the Government is not the most admirably adapted to discharge duties of this character. We have the highest possible appreciation of the officers of the Army, and fully recognize their proverbial integrity and honor; but we are satisfied that not one in a thousand would like to teach Indian children to read and write, or Indian men to sow and reap. These are emphatically civil and not military occupations.

But it is insisted that the present Indian service is corrupt, and this change should be made to get rid of the dishonest. That there are many bad men connected with the service cannot be denied. The records are abundant to show that agents have pocketed the funds appropriated by the Government and driven the Indians to starvation. It cannot be doubted that Indian wars have originated from this cause. The Sioux war in Minnesota is supposed to have been produced in this way.

In the remarks of General Sherman we see the cause of the discontent of the Indians to-day. Our Government has not dealt in good faith with them. We put certain stipulations in our treaties, and yet despite those stipulations we presume to dictate to them, as though they were children and not entitled to say one word in behalf of their own rights. Sir, if we do not intend to deal fairly with the Indians, if we do not intend to observe our treaty stipulations with them, let us say so directly and at once. Before passing any bill to transfer the Indian Bureau from the civil to the military power, you ought to abrogate all your treaties with these Indian tribes and give them fair notice you mean to subject them to government by the sword alone. Proclaim to them, if you will, that whether they will or not you will nolens volens put them under the iron heel of the military power despite all the treaties you have made with them, notwithstanding all the promises you have given them, and in utter violation of all your Indian treaty stipulations and obligations.

Mr. Chairman, I take this ground, that the manifest cause of the prevailing discontent on the part of the Indians is to be found in the fact that we have not carried out the promises we made to them, that we have not complied with our treaty stipulations; in other words, that we have not acted in good faith toward the Indians. I know gentlemen talk of the appropriations annually made to these Indians, but those appropriations, sir, are not a gift on the part of this Government but money due the Indians. This Government never has given the Indians anything for which they did not receive more than a full equivalent. What have the Indians given you? They have given you countless acres of rich and fertile land now embraced within the limits of our prosperous Western States. For all the lands they have given us we have paid them at the rate of twelve and a half or twenty-five cents an acre, although the lands ceded by the Indians to the Government embrace the richest and most fertile tracts in the whole country. The rich Western States, with their intelligent representation upon this floor, grew up from the cession of lands on the part of these Indians to the Government. Now, after the Indians have complied with their obligations under the treaties in good faith and yielded us up large bodies of lands, shall we presume to go back upon the treaty stipulations and act in bad faith toward them? Shall we withdraw them from the care and guardianship of the Interior Department, from the control of a civil department of this Government, and place them under the control of the military? Shall we take them from under the Indian Bureau where their interests are cared for, under which schools have been established in their midst for the education of their children, by which they have been taught in religion and letters, and transfer them to the control of Army officers? What will that signify? When the Army officers go among them they go surrounded with all the paraphernalia of war, and they strike the Indians with terror and alarm. They go rather as enemies than as friends. I say, Mr. Chairman, let us send among them preachers of the Gospel, school-teachers, and all the appliances for bringing them under the benign influences of Christianity and civilization. Let them believe that we mean to act in the fullest sincerity in carrying out our treaty stipulations with them.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RANDALL. I think this amendment ought to be adopted if the bill passes.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on the pending amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, this amendment ought to be adopted if we pass the bill. If the retired officers of the Army are brought into active duty they should have the full pay. The officer on the retired list only receives 75 per cent. or three-fourths of the pay of the rank upon which he has been retired. The amendment, therefore, is nothing more than just. It is in addition an economical step, because it will employ officers to whom we now pay three-fourths by the payment of an additional quarter, and thus save the Government the enormous expense of Indian agents and superintendents and other officers connected with the present Indian Bureau.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in reference to this bill for the transfer of the Indian Bureau from the Interior to the War Department, as something has been said pro and con in reference to the action of the Committee on Appropriations, I think it due to say that I, as a member of that committee, have investigated this subject and reached the conclusion, first, that it is a great deal better for the Indian the transfer should be made, and in the second place, it is a great deal better for the Government. This will at once appear by a comparison of appropriations for Indian supplies &c., made prior to 1849, when the Indians were under the control of the War Department, and the appropriation during the last year for the care of the Indians under the Indian Bureau. Before 1849 where we appropriated hundreds of thousands of dollars under the War Department we now appropriate by the million under the Indian Bureau.

I have not the least doubt but the entire discontent and the complaints of the Indians arise from the fact that they are unjustly and dishonestly dealt with under the present management of the Indian Bureau and its officers. I do not like to hear the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] by inference or directly reflect, if such was his intention, upon the officers of the Army. Since I have been in Congress I have been constantly in contact with Army officers, and in my judgment a more intelligent, upright set of men it has not been my pleasure to meet anywhere. I say deliberately, that the officer of the Army who is dishonest is an exception; and it will not do therefore to attempt to smirch this bill on the idea that Army officers will not administer Indian affairs with honesty and integrity simply because we have recently discovered some officers who have been proved to be dishonest. The great body of Army officers will administer the affairs of this Bureau with perfect integrity; and, as I have said before in another debate, I firmly believe if this transfer is made there will be millions of dollars saved to the Government in the Indian appropriation bill proper, as well as in the Army appropriation bill. One of the great difficulties is, these Indian agents establish their quarters at remote points from where the Army is established, and by the transfer of this Bureau we will save enormously in the transportation of supplies; for under the War Department the supplies for the Indians can be transported and distributed by the same agents, by the same officers who procure and distribute the rations to the Army.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SPARKS. I wish simply to state that the amendment now proposed has been agreed to by the majority of the committee reporting the pending bill. It relates to Army officers on the retired list, that they may be engaged as Indian agents.

Mr. RANDALL. I withdraw my formal amendment.

Mr. SPARKS. I ask by unanimous consent that all debate on the pending section be terminated.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. HUNTON'S amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That all contracts for supplies or transportation connected with the Indian service shall hereafter be made in the same manner, and as far as practicable at the same time, provided for supplies and transportation for the use of the Army.

Mr. MILLS. I move to strike out the last word.

In answer to the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. LAWRENCE,] in which he characterized the administration of the Indian Bureau during the time it was subjected to the jurisdiction of the Army as an outrage and a disgrace to the country, I wish to ask him and the other advocates of that Bureau remaining in the Interior Department how they characterize the conduct of the Indian Bureau when they find out that within the last four or five years the Indians have been permitted to wage a constant warfare upon the borders of Texas. I have before me the report to the adjutant-general of my State by the officer commanding the frontier battalion of Texas State troops. He states in his report as follows:

There are five or six localities on the frontier that the Indians visited almost certainly every moon for several years previous to the organization of this battalion.

We have had in all nineteen engagements with Indians, in one of which we killed all but three, and in another killed all but two; have pursued about forty bands that we could not overtake.

In a majority of instances we met them coming in or found their trail, followed them in, and prevented them from doing mischief.

We have killed twenty-seven Indians and wounded fourteen that we know of, besides ten or twelve more that we have reason to believe were killed or wounded.

Now, sir, it appears from the report of the adjutant-general of my State that from 1870 until last year, 1875, there have been seventy-three Indians killed in Texas, (four or five hundred miles in some instances from their reservation,) twenty-six wounded, and one captured. What has the gentleman to say for the administration of the Interior Department, when in that reservation they arm these savages with Winchester rifles and Colt's six-shooters, and give them Army rations, and send them down to Texas to scalp our people and steal our property and burn down our houses?

What has the gentleman to say to the testimony of the General commanding the Army of the United States, when he tells you that they have driven back that frontier a distance of two hundred miles; that he has inspected it himself, and does not make the statement from hearsay or from the reports of citizens of Texas? I ask him what he has to say as to the testimony of a Kiowa chief, who, in a conference with this Quaker gentleman, Mr. Battey, said?

If Washington—

And he understands by that the people of the United States or the Government here—

If Washington would put his soldiers all along on the frontier and kill every young man who goes across the line, we would cry for them; but it would be right.

That is what Kicking Bird says, a good Indian. And he says it is impossible to protect the people of Texas against the bad Indians except by military force.

Now, sir, these are the facts which I present to these gentlemen who contend that the Interior Department ought still to have the management of these Indians, furnishing them with subsistence, putting guns into their hands, and starting them down into Texas to commit forays on our people. In July, 1873, the State troops of my State sent out to protect our people encountered one hundred and eighty Kiowa and Comanche warriors, armed with the best guns with which the soldiers of the United States ever confronted their enemies in battle. What has the gentleman to say for an administration which leads to such results as that?

Why, sir, here is the report of the adjutant-general of my State showing that within the last few years Texas has spent $943,808 in the defense of her frontier against the Indians. This is a debt which the Government of the United States owes, for it was the duty of the Government of the United States to have defended its citizens against the Indians.

Mr. CALDWELL, of Tennessee. There is one objection to the transfer of the Indian Bureau, in addition to many others ably urged, which it occurs to me no gentleman has yet presented. Any gentleman who takes the trouble to examine any of the treaties into which we have entered with the Indian tribes of late years will find in them that the Interior Department of the Government is vested with large discretion as to the distribution of annuities and as to other duties in reference to those tribes.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let me read to you one article from the treaty with a portion of the Sioux. It is article 10 of the treaty. (Indian Treaties, page 913.)

The chiefs and head-men located upon either of the reservations set apart for said bands are authorized to adopt such rules, regulations, or laws for the security of life and property, the advancement of civilization, and the agricultural prosperity of the members of said bands upon the respective reservations, and shall have authority, under the direction of the agent and without expense to the Government, to organize a force sufficient to carry out all such rules, regulations, or laws, and all rules and regulations for the government of said Indians as may be prescribed by the Interior Department.

Now, I submit that gentlemen who will take the trouble to examine the numerous treaties that we have entered into with these Indian tribes will find that in them in the main we have recognized the Interior Department as the proper agency with which to manage Indian affairs. I do not undertake to say, Mr. Chairman, that we might not to-day disregard treaties with the Indians as we have disregarded other treaties heretofore made with them equally solemn and equally binding. But I do say that if we had entered into a treaty of that sort with the Queen of Great Britain or any other power on earth save the poor, feeble, and defenseless Indians, we would have felt ourselves bound to respect its provisions. What right have we to make this change in the face of a positive contract with these tribes, who have been declared, as gentlemen will find who will take the trouble to examine the decisions of the Supreme Court of this country—declared to be nations or states, having power to enter into treaties with us? What right, I repeat, have we to set aside the stipulations of these treaties by which it was understood between us and the Indians that a civil and not a military department of the Government should manage his affairs? What right have we, without consulting him, to substitute the Department of War for the Department of the Interior?

Now, sir, I submit that any gentleman who entertains doubt upon this point may satisfy himself by taking the trouble to examine this book, which he will find to contain several hundred treaties with the various Indian tribes; and he will see that in very many of the more recent ones the Interior Department is recognized as the proper Department for the management of our Indian relations.

This then, Mr. Chairman, is one objection I have to the passage of this bill. I am for keeping faith with the Indians.

Again it is insisted that the bill ought to be passed on the score of economy, and I have been astonished at the discrepancy in calculations made by gentlemen upon this floor as to the amount which is to be saved by this proposed transfer of Indian affairs to what I regard as the most wasteful and extravagant Department of Government. By one gentleman it is estimated at one-half million dollars; another gentleman estimated it at a million and a half; and then another insisted the amount would be three millions. The honorable chairman of the Committee on Appropriations I think estimates the amount at $3,000,000; and then comes the honorable chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, who estimates it at $4,000,000. Now, sir, let me submit to you that we are to-day under various treaties with the Indian tribes under obligations to furnish them three and a half millions of dollars in annuities and supplies, as is shown by the Book of Estimates, in satisfaction of our treaty obligations with them; and I call upon gentlemen to take this fact into account, that before the management of Indian affairs was transferred to the Interior Department we had but few treaties with the Indian tribes requiring any considerable appropriations. Our heaviest obligations have been assumed since that time, and necessarily, too, because the country has been settled up and the Indian tribes have been compelled in great part to abandon the chase and we have been forced to contribute largely, whether bound to do so by treaty or not, for their civilization, subsistence, and preservation.

I cannot believe, sir, that this service will be performed either more cheaply or honestly by the War Department than it is now performed by the Indian Bureau, if I am to judge from prices paid by each for the same articles. A comparison of those prices is eminently unfavorable, as shown by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. SEELYE] and the gentleman from Arkansas, [Mr. WILSHIRE,] to the assumption of the advocates of this bill.

But it is said we will secure more efficient service at the agencies. Now, I find by reference to the Official Register that at these various agencies are mills, schools, carpenter and blacksmith shops, shingle-machines, agricultural implements, and all the necessary operations of the farm. I cannot conceive how it can be assumed that captains and lieutenants educated at West Point can be qualified either by taste or education to supervise such work. I must believe, sir, that the agents selected by the various religious denominations of the country, who are selected, as we are assured, by the board of Indian commissioners with reference to their integrity and business capacity, are much better qualified for it. The results thus far of the present policy are good, and it does not seem to me to be wise to put them to hazard by this change.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MILLS. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. SPARKS. I ask unanimous consent to close debate upon section 5.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read section 6, as follows:

SEC. 6. That the Secretary of War shall be authorized to withhold all special licenses from traders, and, under regulations to be by him prescribed, provide the times and places at which all traders complying therewith may present themselves for bargains, barter, and exchange with the several tribes, according to the laws of the United States regulating the same, and subject to the same rules and restrictions as are prescribed for traders at military posts of the Army; but he shall not have authority to authorize any person to sell arms or ammunition to any Indian, but shall prohibit the same.

Mr. WHITE. I move to amend that section by striking out in the first line the word "War" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "Interior." I think that the Committee on Indian Affairs in reporting this bill have gone to the opposite extreme in attempting to correct an evil which must be admitted to exist. It does seem to me that there are but two objects that the committee have attempted to accomplish: one is to save the salaries that are paid to the civilians who fill the offices of Indian agents, &c., and the other is to let the War Department do all of the contracting for supplies and transportation. Now if the committee will change the bill so that the Interior Department shall have control of everything else except this much, I believe the bill will pass and that the object of the committee will be accomplished. I will go that far with the committee; but if the bill shall continue to remain as it is now, I shall be compelled to vote against it, and I suppose some other members will do the same thing.

Now, there can be no question but what those two points are good. In the first place, these Army officers are already on half pay, and many more Army officers might be put on half pay than there are now. I admit that they could perform these duties and that they would not have the same temptation to commit fraud that civilians have, from the fact that they have more reputation to sustain. They hold their offices for life, if they act honorably in the discharge of their duties.

Now, the second point is that the War Department can make contracts for these supplies and their transportation on a much more economical basis than the Interior Department can. It is the duty of the War Department to make contracts for the transportation of supplies for the War Department at present, and they could also make contracts for transportation of supplies for the Indians at the same time, and it could be done at a very limited additional expense to that already expended for the Army.

Those two points are all that I can see in this bill, but the bill to accomplish these two objects proposes to transfer the whole of Indian affairs to the War Department. Now I contend that that is going to an unwarranted extent, and I hope that my amendment will be adopted.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. FRANKLIN. Mr. Chairman, the bill now under discussion meets with my hearty approbation. I shall vote for it most cordially. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAWRENCE] stated to this House that the management of Indian affairs by the War Department was nothing but a history of fraud and corruption. He did not state a single fact in proof of his assertion, but I am informed that the gentleman himself, less than five years ago, made a report to this House in which he said that the management of Indian affairs by the Interior Department showed conclusively that not one-fourth of the annuities due to the Indians ever reached them.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I did not say that it would be better under the War Department.

Mr. FRANKLIN. In face of his own assertion that the Indians were thus pillaged while under the care and control of the Interior Department, he now tells us that their management should be retained by that very Department. Now the gentleman from Ohio—I mean he who has traveled so much, he who has sailed over so many seas, and scaled so many mountains——

A MEMBER. You mean the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FRANKLIN. I mean the gentleman from New York, but of course when I refer to the gentleman who has traveled the House understands whom I mean. That gentleman who has floated on the Dead Sea and drank of the waters of the River Jordan says that this bill ought not to be passed by a democratic House because the Hon. Mr. Taft is now at the head of the War Department. I thought the gentleman had more faith in the ultimate success of democracy. I thought that he had more faith in the people and in the justice of the people, and believed that they desired reform in every branch of the public service, and would soon restore the democratic party to the control of the administration of the Government, and then Mr. Taft will have nothing to do with the administration of Indian affairs.

Now if the gentleman had traveled less and studied the Indian question more he would have been better able to have instructed the House how to act upon this bill. As an author he is quite a success, as a legislator there are many things in his history to admire, but as a teacher on the management of Indian affairs he is a lamentable failure.

Now the management of Indian affairs by the Interior Department may be sufficient for the security of gentlemen in New York, or Ohio, or Pennsylvania. But ask the settler upon the border, and your answer can be read in the blaze of his burning cabin and in the shrieks of the murdered wives and children of the pioneers who have gone forward with the advancing tide of civilization to found new communities and states, that in the future will add so much luster to the glory of our country.

The flings that have been made against the Army of the United States require no answer from me. Their defense has been written upon a hundred battle-fields in this country. But when gentlemen speak, as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAWRENCE] does, of the Chivington massacre, we tell him that not one of those men belonged to the regular Army of the United States, and he is making an argument against his own side of the question; for the Chivington massacre occurred in 1864, and not while the management of the Indian Bureau was under the control of the War Department.

The silvery tongue of the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER,] who so frequently entertains this House, has been heard here to-day, saying, "Send the Bible to the Indian in the hands of the missionary." I tell the gentleman that should he undertake to carry the Bible to the Indian, unless he was protected by the bayonet, his voice would no longer resound in this Hall. They would have his scalp in less than twenty-four hours. The uncivilized Indian knows no law but that of force. I care not under what management he is, if he understands that there is no force behind that management he will rebel. You can control him in no other way.

There are three questions to be considered in the discussion of this bill: Does economy demand its passage? Does justice to the Indian demand it? Does justice to the settler upon the border demand it? I answer that the interest of economy demands it, for it has been abundantly proven in this discussion that we will save by this transfer over $3,000,000 a year. Is not that something worth considering by this House when we bear in mind the burdens of taxation that are now resting upon the people of this country? I say, is it not our duty to lessen those burdens in every manner and by every means in our power?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SPARKS. If the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE] will withdraw his formal amendment——

The CHAIRMAN. It is not a formal amendment.

Mr. CROUNSE. I wish to move a formal amendment.

Mr. SPARKS. I move that the committee now rise, for the purpose of obtaining an order from the House to close debate upon the pending section.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. SAYLER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, pursuant to the order of the House, had under consideration the special order, a bill (H. R. No. 2677) to transfer the Office of Indian Affairs from the Interior to the War Department, and had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

An act (S. No. 764) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to allow Mrs. Minnie Sherman Fitch to receive free from duties a wedding present from the Khedive of Egypt; and

An act (S. No. 727) for the relief of Albert Towle, postmaster at Beatrice, Nebraska.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a joint resolution of the House of the following title:

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 85) to authorize the Secretary of War to issue certain arms to the Washington Light Infantry of Charleston, South Carolina, and the Clinch Rifles of Augusta, Georgia.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed a concurrent resolution for the printing of Professor Hayden's report of the geological and geographical survey of the Territories of the United States for the year 1873, and a concurrent resolution for the printing of the report of the Smithsonian Institute for the year 1875; in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

TRANSFER OF INDIAN BUREAU.

Mr. SPARKS. I move that the rules be suspended and the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of resuming the consideration of the bill transferring the Indian Bureau to the War Department. And pending that motion I move that all debate on the pending section be limited to one minute.

Mr. GARFIELD. I very much desire to speak five or ten minutes on this bill.

Mr. SPARKS. There are other sections upon which the gentleman can speak.

Mr. THORNBURGH. If in order, I move to amend the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPARKS] so as to order that all debate on this bill in Committee of the Whole shall terminate in thirty minutes after its consideration shall again be resumed.

Mr. SPARKS. I would suggest to the gentleman that that motion, as I understand, is not allowable under the rules of the House.

Mr. THORNBURGH. Why not?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair it is competent for the House to make such order in regard to time for debate in Committee of the Whole as it may determine.

Mr. THORNBURGH. Then I move to amend the motion as I have indicated.

Mr. SPARKS. I will accept the amendment if I can.

Mr. PAGE. I would inquire of the Chair under what rule such a motion can be made?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House has power to make such order as it may see fit in regard to debate or the transaction of business in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PAGE. This bill is now under consideration by sections; the whole bill has not yet been read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The entire bill has been read and several sections passed, and debate on all the sections may be closed at any time the House may see fit to order.

Mr. GARFIELD. The motion to close all debate on the bill is certainly not in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion is not to cut off amendment, but to close debate.

Mr. HOSKINS. I raise the point of order that when a bill is being considered in Committee of the Whole under the five-minute rule, no other limit can be placed on the debate except that all general debate shall cease at a given time.

Mr. ATKINS. I rise to a privileged motion. If in order, I move that the House now take a recess until half past seven o'clock.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Such a motion would be in order.

Mr. ATKINS. Then I make that motion.

Mr. SPARKS. I would inquire if I have not the floor?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It would be very difficult for the Chair to tell who has the floor.

Mr. SPARKS. I had the floor and made a motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman made one motion and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. THORNBURGH] made another motion.

Mr. SPARKS. I accepted it.

Mr. PAGE. I call the attention of the Chair to the rule which I send to the desk and ask the Clerk to read for the information of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided further, That the House may, by the vote of a majority of the members present, at any time after the five minutes' debate has taken place upon proposed amendments to any section or paragraph of a bill, close all debate upon such section or paragraph, or at their election upon the pending amendments only.—Rule 60.

Mr. GARFIELD. Until the last section of the bill is reached the House certainly cannot close debate upon it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] to make a motion for a recess?

Mr. ATKINS. At the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPARKS] I withdraw it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is clearly of opinion that the House can limit the length of debate but cannot cut off amendments under the five-minute rule.

Mr. PAGE. The Chair will observe by the rule——

Mr. HOSKINS. It is entirely clear that debate upon a pending paragraph or amendment may be closed by the House, but not upon sections which have not been read or considered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will so hold. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois, that the House now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole for the consideration of House bill No. 2677, and that debate on the pending section be limited to one minute.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, (Mr. SPRINGER in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2677) to transfer the Office of Indian Affairs from the Interior to the War Department.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. WHITE to amend section 6 by striking out the word "War" and inserting "the Interior," it was not agreed to.

The Clerk read the next section, as follows:

SEC. 7. That the offices of Commissioner of Indian Affairs, inspectors of Indian affairs, special commissioners of Indian affairs, superintendents of Indian affairs, agent, and subagent in the office of Indian affairs, board of Indian commissioners, and all officials now employed under the Commissioner of Indian Affairs or Secretary of the Interior, and connected with the administration of Indian affairs, shall be abolished and cease on the 1st day of July, 1876, on which date the officers of the Army designated shall assume charge of the duties thereof, and thus become charged with all the duties now imposed by law upon the officers of Indian affairs thus suspended.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move pro forma to amend by striking out the last word.

In the year 1867 the Committee on Military Affairs, of which I was a member, reported a bill which passed through this House making the transfer which is now proposed. In 1868, in the following Congress I believe, I was myself charged with the duty of reporting a bill which made the transfer of Indian affairs to the War Department. The grounds of our action at that time were very clear, and there is one of those grounds that has troubled me a good deal. As an original proposition I am disposed to believe that on the score of economy and of protecting the expenditures of the Government by the strong grip of a court-martial we could, if this transfer were made, punish frauds upon the Indians and in the use of money for Indian affairs more thoroughly and successfully than we can through any civil establishment. That point I am bound to believe on general principles is sound and correct.

But the main ground in favor of the transfer in 1868 was this: We were then pursuing what might be called a war policy toward the Indians; we were having more Indian war than Indian peace; we were obliged to have recourse to the Army in order to manage the Indians successfully; that mixture of military and civil management was about as bad a system as there could be. The soldiers destroyed the Indians; and the civil department took care of them and paid them money. I then became satisfied, and so said in a speech which I have here in the Globe, that the whole civil part of our Indian service was as rotten and corrupt as corruption could well be, and that we must do something to cut out the cancer if we could not otherwise remove it. I went so far as to vote against the appropriation bill, declaring that while such a policy continued I would never vote another dollar of public money to be expended through that old machinery.

There was another consideration. We were then making treaties with those people all through the West. We were calling those savages a nation and making treaties with them as though two nations were sitting in council. All that seemed to be bad. We passed a bill through the House by a large vote making the proposed transfer. It went to the Senate; and while it was pending there, while we were expecting it would soon become a law, the Piegan massacre occurred, which shocked the sensibilities of the whole nation. The Senate immediately dropped the bill; and it of course failed to become a law.

Very shortly afterward General Grant was inaugurated, and with his inauguration, or very soon afterward, began what is known as the peace policy. Congress followed his lead, and agreed that there should be no further general treaties made with the Indians as tribes, but that, co-operating with the churches of the country, a policy of conciliation, of civilization, and if possible of Christianization should be adopted, instead of the old wretched policy of mixed war and peace which we had pursued for years.

But I was somewhat in doubt about the wisdom of the peace policy. I studied the question with a good deal of care. We had under this new policy, and very early in its administration, one Commissioner who certainly did credit to the country and the service. I refer of course to General Walker. Under his able, wise, and honest management we saw the Indian Department very largely rescued from the slough into which it had fallen. And we have now a Commissioner who is pursuing the same general line of policy, ably and honestly I believe, that was pursued by General Walker.

We have now had five full years of the peace policy, and a large share of all those who were wild, roaming Indians in 1868 are now peacefully employed in taking the first steps toward civilization. If the reports of this Department are to be credited, and of the peace commissioners as well, a great step has been taken in that direction.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SPARKS. I do not propose to make any argument in answer to the gentleman from Ohio, as I am anxious to proceed with the consideration of the bill and get it out of committee as soon as possible. I ask, therefore, by unanimous consent that all further debate on the pending section be closed.

Mr. COX. I object to that.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I rise to a point of order. Under the rule laid down in our Manual when general debate has been closed and the five-minute debate ordered it means that five minutes shall be given on each side. Now, the gentleman from Ohio has occupied five minutes for, and I claim the floor as being entitled to five minutes in opposition. If the Chair sustains my point of order and accords me the floor, I yield whatever time I may have to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] to continue his speech.

Mr. SPARKS. I have the floor and have not yielded it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will decide the point of order.

Mr. O'BRIEN. As nobody rose to claim the floor in opposition to the five minutes' speech of the gentleman from Ohio, I claim it; and if I am entitled to the floor for five minutes I yield that time to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SPARKS. I have the floor. The gentleman from Maryland makes the point of order that he is entitled to five minutes in opposition to the pending amendment for the purpose of giving that time to somebody else. The Chair recognized me. I took the floor, and said I did not propose to make an argument in opposition to the bill and still hold the floor. If necessary, I will move to rise in order to close debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion the gentleman makes that the committee rise is not debatable. The point of order raised by the gentleman from Maryland is overruled. The Chair recognized the gentleman from Illinois and not the gentleman from Maryland. The rule limiting debate to five minutes in the committee contemplates five minutes for and five minutes against an amendment. The five minutes for the amendment have been exhausted on the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Ohio, and the Chair has recognized the gentleman from Illinois as entitled to the five minutes in opposition.

Mr. HAMILTON, of New Jersey. Cannot the gentleman from Illinois waive his five minutes and move the committee rise?

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly he can.

Mr. O'BRIEN. The gentleman from Illinois rose for a specific purpose, and that was to make a motion which the Chair decided not to be in order, objection being made by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX.] The point I make is that I am now entitled to the floor for five minutes in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio. As I understand it, the gentleman from Illinois has not claimed and I do claim it to take the floor in opposition.

Mr. SPARKS. If the gentleman from Maryland will allow me——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is entitled to the floor.

Mr. SPARKS. I do not propose to discuss the pending amendment at all, but having the floor I will yield my five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. COX. That is all we wanted.

Mr. SPARKS. I have more generosity than the gentleman has shown; I have done what he would not do.

Mr. GARFIELD. I thank the gentleman from Illinois for his courtesy.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have stated the condition of the Indian problem as it now exists. There are two facts which show the management of our Indian affairs is a great deal less expensive now than before. While in the first place we appropriate more money through the Indian Department than before, we appropriate less through the War Department for fighting the Indians, far less than we did before, and therefore on the score of economy we are certainly giving less money out of the Treasury than under the old policy. That is the first fact. The second is that it is claimed by those who have looked carefully into the subject that a great and worthy progress has been made in the direction of teaching, Christianizing, and civilizing these Indians. I am not here to say I believe very strongly in the ultimate success of making good citizens of the Indians. I wish it could be done. It is our duty to see the peace plan and policy fairly tried. Now, in the midst of the trial, I do not think we should abandon it by turning the whole business over to a new set of people, with new motives, and new opinions on the subject. After we shall have fairly tried it, if it shall prove to be a failure, I will then go for transferring the Bureau to the War Department; but I believe a fair, honest trial of the peace policy of the Government ought to be had before this bill should pass.

The circumstances under which I maintained the transfer were entirely different from those now existing. The argument on which I sustained it then was an argument based on entirely different circumstances from those which now exist. I hold we ought not now to change it when the circumstances are so different from what they were in 1868. I admit there is a great deal to be said on both sides of this question. I admit that since this debate began I have wavered in my own mind how we should act, but it is not in the remotest degree connected with party feeling that I take the position I do to-day. I would as cheerfully vote, and when this debate began I was inclined to vote with my friends over the way, but the debate has disclosed a greater progress toward civilization and a better state of results as the fruit of our peace policy than I supposed the facts warranted us in believing, and on that ground, and on that ground alone, I insist we should not now, until this peace policy has had full time for development and to show whether it is good or bad, wise or unwise—we should not go back on the plan inaugurated by the Government.

Mr. BANNING. I wish to ask the gentleman if it was not after the Piegan massacre and after the Senate had defeated the bill in 1868 that the President of the United States recommended Army control of the Indians?

Mr. GARFIELD. I think President Grant, whether he was President then or not, recommended the transfer later than the Piegan massacre; but I remember the House and the Senate and the country were shocked at that massacre and we regarded it at that time as the breaking down of the bill. I do not say that was a reason why the bill should not have passed, for I was in favor of passing the bill for some time after the Piegan massacre; and I would still be in favor of it if we had now the old, miserable, semi-civil, semi-military policy that brought war to the country and destruction to the Indian.

Mr. STEELE. Will the gentleman say that the same mixed system of civil and military authority does not exist to-day at every one of these agencies as existed in 1868?

Mr. GARFIELD. I am told not. I hold in my hand the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs on that very subject, in which he says they now have so far subordinated the wild tribes to the management of the agencies that only in two principal districts—one in the Sioux and the other I do not precisely remember—is there any serious necessity for the presence of the Army to keep them in peace. In the whole Indian Territory, the whole of California, the whole of Utah, almost all of New Mexico, the largest proportion of our territory where the Indians now are, we do not need the Army, and there is no prospect of it being necessary to exercise force. But up in the wild Sioux country and, perhaps, in one other district, we still need the presence of troops to prevent threatened outbreaks. So I think my answer to my friend is complete, that the difference is very great between now and then.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. STEELE. Will the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] allow me to make a remark?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I wish to say that in my district these agencies claim troops now.

Mr. GARFIELD. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPARKS] has been recognized to move that the committee rise to close debate on the pending section. If there be no further amendment, that will not be necessary, and the Clerk will proceed to read the next section.

Mr. KASSON. Before this section is passed, I wish to call the attention of the gentleman in charge of the bill to one omission, as I think, in the section. I do not wish to speak on the bill, but simply desire to call his attention to the fact that section 7, in its fifth, sixth, seventh, and eighth lines, abolishes—

All officials now employed under the Commissioner of Indian Affairs or the Secretary of the Interior and connected with the administration of Indian affairs.

This seems to abolish all the clerical force which it is necessary to transfer with the Bureau to the War Department. If I am correct in that understanding, I would suggest the insertion after the word "affairs," in the seventh line, of the words "not including the clerks in said Bureau."

Mr. SPARKS. The gentleman will perceive that provision is elsewhere made for supplying these places. If the gentleman will look further in the bill he will find that.

Mr. KASSON. I have looked further in the bill, which I hold in my hand, and have not found it. Perhaps this is a different print. For the purpose of bringing the matter to the attention of the committee, I offer the amendment which I have indicated.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa will observe that in this section "officials" only are referred to.

Mr. KASSON. Yes, sir; but the language is very broad.

Now employed under the Commissioner of Indian Affairs or the Secretary of the Interior and connected with the administration of Indian affairs.

Of course, the War Department could not get along without these practiced clerks for a while.

Mr. SPARKS. I understand that the Secretary of War would, of course, supply these offices; and provision is made for that, as the gentleman from Iowa will see, in section 3 of the bill. This act will take effect on the 1st of July, when it will be the duty of the Secretary of War to supply these officers in the Department as well as the agents.

Mr. KASSON. The difficulty is that there seems to be no provision in the bill for these clerical officers. Their places are not to be supplied by Army officers and the clerical force in the War Department is limited by existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 7, after the word "affairs," insert "not including the clerks of the Indian Bureau."

Mr. SPARKS. I will accept that amendment, if it is in my power to do so.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CROUNSE. I move to further amend by striking out the last two words.

Mr. SPARKS. I believe I had the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Nebraska that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPARKS] was about to move that the committee rise for the purpose of closing debate on this section.

Mr. CROUNSE. I cannot concede the right of the Chair to say what the gentleman from Illinois was going to do. I claimed the floor and was recognized, and claim the right to make the remarks I was about to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Nebraska that he move his amendment to the next section.

Mr. CROUNSE. I will agree to that, if I can make the contract with the Chairman that he will recognize me.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman as soon as the next section is read.

The Clerk read the next section, as follows:

SEC. 8. That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of War, at as early a day as practicable after the 1st day of July, 1876, to cause a careful enumeration of all Indians in the United States to be made; and such census shall thereafter be retaken at his discretion, whenever there may be reasonable doubt as to the number of any Indians in any tribe or tribes; and all issues of rations shall be upon the basis of the number of Indians reported by said enumerations.

Mr. CROUNSE. I move to strike out the last word of the section just read. Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose to discuss this bill or any portion of it. I simply wish to avail myself of the opportunity offered me by the formal motion I have made to explain the vote that I shall give or rather state the reasons which influence that vote. It is my purpose, sir, to vote for the bill; but in doing so I do not follow my own judgment, but obey what I think are instructions of my constituents, or perhaps I should say of the party with which I am connected in my State. That party, as I recollect, at one of its State conventions adopted as one of the planks or resolutions of its platform one favoring the transfer of the Indian Bureau from the Interior Department to the War Department, as is proposed by this bill. In my judgment, if this bill shall be passed, a very great mistake will be committed. If the purpose were to exterminate this race of people, to subjugate them, to crush out all spirit or disposition toward improvement, to surround them with influences at once demoralizing to them and to the Army itself, why then the passage of this bill would attain the object most effectually. But in this enlightened age, with the advance already made in the civilization, education, and Christianization of these Indians, I say that the passage of this bill, throwing not only the wild Indians, but those in all stages of civilization, advancement, and culture, into the hands of the military, wholly unfitted from education and vocation to continue the work of educating them, is a move in the wrong direction. I can but regard the proposed measure as a most pernicious one, and if successful in going through now it will be but a few short years before it will be abandoned and the supporters of the measure to-day will repent their action.

But, Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose to discuss the bill, and perhaps it would not become me to vote one way and argue the other. I simply wish to put on record this explanation of the vote I shall give and to protest that my own convictions are not in harmony with it. I now withdraw the amendment.

The Clerk read the ninth section, as follows:

SEC. 9. That it is hereby provided that all Christian churches shall enjoy a free and equal right to erect and maintain church and school buildings on any or all Indian reservations, and shall not be molested in their religious or philanthropic efforts to advance the Indians in moral, religious, and literary culture, but shall all equally and alike be perfectly free and encouraged in the prosecution of their christianizing, civilizing, and educational efforts.

Mr. SPARKS. I offer the following as an additional section, to come in as section 10:

That whenever any Indian belonging to any organized Indian tribe or nation having treaty relations with the United States shall desire to become a citizen of the United States, he may become such citizen by appearing in open court in the United States district court nearest to the reservation of his tribe or nation, and making proof to the satisfaction of said court that he is sufficiently intelligent and prudent to control his own affairs and interests; that he has adopted the habits of civilized life, and has for at least five years been able to support himself and family; and by taking an oath to support the Constitution of the United States: Provided, That no Indian who avails himself of the provision of this act shall on that account forfeit any interest which he may have in any improvement or other property in the reservation of the tribe or nation to which he may have belonged; nor shall such act in any manner impair his rights and interests in the lands, claims, or other property belonging, or which may hereafter belong, to his tribe or nation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the tenth section, as follows:

SEC. 10. That all laws and parts of laws inconsistent with the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. COX. I desire to offer an amendment to the ninth section to which I think there can be no objection. It is to strike out in lines 1 and 2 the words "Christian churches" and insert in lieu thereof "religious denominations;" and also in line 7 to strike out the word "Christianizing" and insert in lieu thereof "civilizing and educational efforts."

The CHAIRMAN. The section having been passed, the amendment can only be offered by unanimous consent.

Mr. COX. I think there can be no objection to it.

There being no objection, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPARKS. I move that the committee rise and report the bill and amendments to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. SAYLER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the special order, a bill (H. R. No. 2677) to transfer the Office of Indian Affairs from the Interior to the War Department, and had directed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments.

Mr. SPARKS. I move the previous question on the bill and amendments.

Mr. PAGE. Pending that motion I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and the House refused to adjourn.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. SPARKS. I now yield twenty minutes of the time allotted to me to close the debate to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. TOWNSEND.] [Loud cries of "No, no!" "No debate!" "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. HEREFORD. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. SPARKS. I will say, Mr. Speaker——

[Loud cries of "Regular order!" and "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. COX. I call for the regular order, which is on the motion to adjourn.

Mr. SPARKS. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. HEREFORD. I insist on the regular order.

Mr. SPARKS. What do you want?

Mr. HEREFORD. I want to adjourn.

The question was taken on Mr. HEREFORD'S motion; and on a division there were—ayes 124, noes 38.

So the motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at five o'clock and thirty-five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. BROWN, of Kentucky: The petition of John Bradley, for $200 bounty money paid to another who fraudulently personated the claimant, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. BUCKNER: The petition of John A. Rowland and Henry Turner, property-owners on Sixth street northwest, Washington, District of Columbia, to have refunded certain amounts which were erroneously collected of them for special improvements, to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

By Mr. HOPKINS: Remonstrance of 260 workingmen of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, against the passage of the Morrison tariff bill, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. JENKS: The petition of Joseph Dunkle, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KIMBALL: Resolutions of the Chamber of Commerce of Milwaukee, Wisconsin, favoring the passage of House bill No. 2750, relating to an increase of the efficiency of the Signal Service, to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, the petition of Allen & Hicks and other printers and stationers, against the printing and selling of stamped envelopes and postal cards at below their cost, and against the transmission of the same free through the mails, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. McFARLAND: The petition of James Helton, for a rehearing of his claim rejected by the southern claims commission, to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, the petition of Susan Hutson, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, papers relating to the petition of Mrs. Nancy Brooks, for a pension, to the same committee.

By Mr. PIPER: Concurrent resolutions of the Legislature of California, favoring the early resumption of specie payments, to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. RAINEY: The petition of Frank Deicher, for an increase of pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RIDDLE: The petition of James Mooreland, for a pension, to the same committee.

By Mr. SCALES: A paper relating to a post-route from Lexington, North Carolina, via Yadkins's College, Reedy Creek, and Arcadia, to Midway, North Carolina, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. SHEAKLEY: The petition of citizens of Pennsylvania, for the regulation of commerce and for the prohibition of discriminations by common carriers, to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. THORNBURGH: The petition of citizens of the District of Columbia, for compensation for damages to their property by the late board of public works and the board of commissioners now in charge, by changing the grade of streets, to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

By Mr. WELLS, of Mississippi: The petition of S. P. Pool, for compensation for property taken and used by the United States Army, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. WHEELER: The petition of citizens of New York, for such legislation as will relieve them from injurious competition by the Government, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, April 21, 1876.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. JAMES R. HUBARD, D. D., of Winchester, Virginia.

APPROVAL OF JOURNAL.

The Journal of yesterday was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the Journal as read?

Mr. KASSON. The Journal recites that the preamble and resolution offered yesterday by the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. CATE,] in respect to the remission of some forfeiture by the Secretary of the Treasury, were referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department. When I withdrew my objection to the reference, I understood the motion pending to be to refer it to the Committee of Ways and Means. I was not aware that the reference had been changed after I withdrew my objection until the House was about going into Committee of the Whole. The Chair will recollect that at that time I endeavored to get his attention, and asked if the House was in Committee of the Whole, and the Chair replied that it was. I wanted then to bring up the matter of the reference having been changed.

Mr. HALE. I will state further in relation to that matter that I believe the RECORD does not show that any change was made from the original motion to refer the preamble and resolution to the Committee of Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] is right in his recollection about the first suggestion for reference having been to the Committee of Ways and Means. But afterward, and before the matter was finally disposed of, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CATE] changed his motion to refer, and the Chair inquired of the House if there was any objection. There being none, the Chair declared that the preamble and resolution were referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department.

Mr. KASSON. The Chair will undoubtedly recollect the fact that there was great confusion here. I did not hear the call for objections nor did any of the gentlemen about me. Of course the Chair is quite right in his statement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is right about the original reference being to the Committee of Ways and Means; but it was afterward changed. These changes are often made in this way, and the Chair is free to admit that they are sometimes made quite inaudibly, so that the House is really not always able to fully understand all these changes of reference. That was possibly the case on yesterday in regard to this matter. All things considered, however, the Chair regards that the change of reference was regularly and fairly made.

Mr. KASSON. That being so, then I will content myself with entering a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was referred, and I will ask the House to consider that motion at some early time.

Mr. ELY. I desire to state that the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department are now in such a condition that they can act promptly on this matter, and will do so.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. That being the case, I do not think it would be wise for my colleague [Mr. KASSON] to press his motion to reconsider.

Mr. KASSON. I may not desire to change the reference, but I desire to have a slight amendment made in the resolution; and for that purpose I will some time to-day, if I get the opportunity, call up the motion to reconsider.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I recollect that at the time the subject was before the House yesterday I asked the Chair if the proposition was for reference only, and the Speaker replied that it was. At that time I supposed that the resolution was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

The Journal, as read, was then approved.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HARRIS, of Georgia, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 700) to incorporate the Mutual Protection Fire-Insurance Company of the District of Columbia;

An act (H. R. No. 726) to change the name of the steamboat Charles W. Mead;

An act (H. R. No. 1052) to correct an error in the Revised Statutes of the United States, and for other purposes; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 85) to authorize the Secretary of War to issue certain arms to the Washington Light Infantry of Charleston, South Carolina, and the Clinch rifles of Augusta, Georgia.

REFORM SCHOOL IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. STEVENSON. The bill of the House No. 1345 relating to the Reform School in this District has been returned from the Senate with an amendment. I am instructed by the Committee for the District of Columbia to ask that the amendment of the Senate be concurred in by the House.

The amendment of the Senate was in line 12, page 2 of the bill, to strike out "$5,000" and insert "$20,000."

Mr. HOLMAN. What is the effect of that amendment?

Mr. STEVENSON. It has reference merely to the amount of the bond to be given by the Treasurer and some of the other officers. The amount fixed by the House was $5,000; the Senate proposes to make the amount $20,000, and the Committee for the District of Columbia recommend concurrence in the amendment of the Senate.

There was no objection, and the amendment was concurred in.

PAY OF OFFICERS ON MOUNTED DUTY.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Paymaster-General on allowing pay of mounted men to officers doing mounted duty; which was referred to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws of the United States.

LIGHT-HOUSE REPORT.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the House of March 23, the report of the Light-House Board; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

DEFALCATION OF W. T. COLLINS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a supplementary report upon House resolution of March 14, 1876, relative to the defalcation of W. T. Collins, late pension agent in Washington City; which was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

INDIAN SERVICE IN ARIZONA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a communication from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, with an estimate of an appropriation for Indian service in Arizona; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to taking up for appropriate reference the bills on the Speaker's table?

There was no objection.

PROTECTION OF THE CAPITOL GROUNDS.

Mr. HOLMAN. Before taking up for reference the bills from the Senate on the Speaker's table, I ask that the bill (S. No. 760) to protect the public property, turf, and grass of the Capitol grounds from injury be taken up for consideration now. I think every gentleman, as soon as it is read, will see the propriety of passing it without delay.

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, and read a first and second time.

The bill provides that it shall be the duty of the Capitol police hereafter to prevent any portion of the Capitol grounds and terraces from being used as play-grounds or otherwise, so far as may be necessary to protect the public property, turf, and grass from destruction and injury.

Mr. HOLMAN. The object of this bill will be at once perceived. The tender sod which has been formed within the last year or two upon the Capitol grounds is readily subject to severe injury from great multitudes of persons gathering upon these grounds. It is understood that heretofore the Capitol police have regarded their duties as confined to this building. The object of this bill is to make it their duty to protect these public grounds from injury. The bill has been informally considered by the members of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and they think it should pass.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HOLMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, announced that the Senate had insisted on their disagreement to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. No. 472) changing the time for holding terms of the district court for the district of West Virginia, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. EDMUNDS, Mr. CONKLING, and Mr. CAPERTON.

TAX ON FERMENTED OR MALT LIQUORS.

The first business on the Speaker's table was Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 522) to define the tax on fermented or malt liquors; which were referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

SALE OF CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, ETC.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 749) relating to the sale of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and other public documents; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

DISPOSAL OF PUBLIC LANDS IN ILLINOIS.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 732) to dispose of the lands formerly covered by the waters of Pistakee Lake, in the State of Illinois; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

MENOMONEE INDIAN RESERVATION.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 176) to authorize the Northwestern Improvement Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Wisconsin, to enter upon the Menomonee Indian reservation, and improve the Oconto River, its branches and tributaries; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

REPAVEMENT OF PENNSYLVANIA AVENUE.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 680) authorizing the repavement of Pennsylvania avenue; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia, and, on motion of Mr. BUCKNER, ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. BALLOU for two weeks; to Mr. COLLINS for five days on account of important business; to Mr. FOSTER for ten days; to Mr. TUCKER for five days; and to Mr. ASHE for two weeks on account of important business.

THOMAS SEELY.

Mr. KASSON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3175) for the relief of Thomas Seely; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

WRIT OF HABEAS CORPUS.

Mr. KNOTT, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3176) to regulate the privileges of the writ of habeas corpus in certain cases; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

CORPORATIONS ENGAGED IN DISTILLING.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I am instructed by the Committee of Ways and Means to report back a bill (H. R. No. 2954) concerning corporations engaged in the business of distilling, with amendments, and to ask for its immediate consideration. I desire to make a statement in regard to the necessity for considering it at the present time.

The SPEAKER. It can only be considered by unanimous consent. Is there objection to its present consideration?

Mr. HOLMAN. I should like to hear the bill read first.

The bill was read as follows:

That section 3247 of the Revised Statutes is hereby amended by adding thereto as follows:

"Incorporated companies may carry on the business of distillers; but in such case, in addition to the liability of the corporation to the penalties and forfeitures imposed on distillers, and for the taxes upon spirits produced and taxes otherwise accruing from the carrying on of the business of distilling, each and every stockholder of such corporation shall be held individually liable for all such taxes, and shall also be subject to all the penalties, forfeitures, fines, and imprisonment prescribed by law for offenses committed in the carrying on of said business: Provided, however, That where it shall be shown that such stockholder of a corporation is innocent of any participation in, or guilty knowledge of, an offense charged, he shall not be held individually subject to the penalties, forfeitures, fines, or imprisonment provided by law for such offense."

SEC. 2. That the words "every person in any manner interested in the use of any still, distillery, or distilling apparatus," in section 3251 of the Revised Statutes, shall be construed to mean and include every person so interested as copartner, stockholder, or otherwise.

SEC. 3. That section 3259 of the Revised Statutes be so amended that the notice of being engaged in, or of intention to engage in, the business of a distiller, required by that section, shall contain, in the case of a corporation, in addition to the other matters required to be stated therein, the name and residence of each stockholder of the corporation; and that, in case of any change in the persons interested as stockholders in such corporation, notice thereof in writing, embracing the name and residence of each outgoing and incoming stockholder and the date of the change, shall be given to the collector or proper deputy collector of the district within twenty-four hours after such change. And the punishment provided by said section for failing or refusing to give notice, or giving a false or fraudulent notice, shall apply to the notices hereinabove required.

SEC. 4. That every provision of law relating to a distiller shall be held to apply to a corporation engaged in the business of distilling, excepting such provisions as prescribe the punishment of fine or imprisonment, or both, which provisions shall apply to, and on conviction the punishment thereby provided shall be imposed upon, every person who, at the time of the commission of the offense for which the punishment is prescribed, was either an officer or a stockholder of such corporation, or an agent, superintendent, or manager of the distillery operated by such corporation: Provided, That it shall be a sufficient defense to any proceeding or indictment against such person, for an offense punishable under the provisions last above named, that he was innocent of any participation in or guilty knowledge of the offense committed.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. The Committee of Ways and Means report this bill back with amendments which apply to two sections only. The necessity for an immediate consideration of the bill arises from the fact that licenses are issued and bonds given for the ensuing year on the 1st of May, and whatever action is taken by Congress should be taken prior to that time, in order that the Department may be advised in time.

There has been a doubt expressed whether the law permits corporations to carry on the business of distilling. Section 3247 of the Revised Statutes provides that "every person who produces distilled spirits, &c., shall be regarded as a distiller." Under that a firm consisting of partners and corporations are engaged in carrying on the business of distilling spirits under the laws of some of the States. The question has been raised whether the property of the stockholder is liable as the property of firms in case of frauds or violation of law. Four or five persons might organize as a corporation under State law and engage in carrying on distillation, and thus relieve themselves of the penalties and forfeitures which would apply to them as individuals engaged in the same business. Now, to guard against this it is desired by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue that express permission should be given by law to corporations to carry on the business of distilling and that the provisions of law in regard to frauds, forfeitures, and penalties should apply to all stockholders of such corporation. The committee have recommended an amendment to the first section of the bill, which changes the presumption of guilt in the case of a stockholder where there is an attempt to hold him criminally responsible for a fraud by indictment and the infliction of punishment by fine or imprisonment. It is provided in the bill that "where it shall be shown that such stockholder of a corporation is innocent of any participation in or guilty knowledge of an offense charged, he shall not be held individually subject to the penalties, forfeitures, fine, or imprisonment provided by law for such offenses." The majority of the committee thought in case of a stockholder the law should not hold him criminally guilty unless it should appear he had participation or guilty knowledge of the fraud.

Mr. HARRISON. The gentleman will allow me to ask him one question. Does not the amendment also render innocence sufficient to preclude the stockholder from forfeiture of his property?

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. In the first section of the bill, in lines 10, 11, and 12, it is provided that each and every stockholder of such corporation shall be held individually liable for all such taxes and shall also be subject to all the penalties, forfeitures, fines, and imprisonment prescribed by law for offenses committed in the carrying on of said business; and then comes in the proviso, as it is proposed to be amended by the committee, that, unless it shall be shown such stockholder of a corporation had any participation in or guilty knowledge of the offense, he shall not be held individually subject to the penalties, forfeitures, fines, or imprisonment provided by law for such offense.

Mr. HARRISON. But does not the amendment change that, so that he shall not be subject to the forfeiture?

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I think not. That is specially excepted.

Mr. HARRISON. I gathered that impression from hearing the amendment read.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. The amendments have not yet been read by the Clerk.

Mr. SAYLER. Will the gentleman from Illinois allow me to ask whether it is the purport of the amendment to hold every stockholder in such corporation liable, whether guilty or innocent, to all penalties and forfeitures?

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. That is the intention; to leave the law in regard to stockholders the same as it is in regard to partners.

Mr. SAYLER. It is very important that should be the case; otherwise these parties would put forward irresponsible men. If that amendment is clearly and distinctly made, I see no objection to the bill. Otherwise there are very grave objections to it.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I will ask the Clerk to read the amendments proposed by the committee.

Mr. WALLING. I rise to a question of order. Has the House agreed to the consideration of this bill at this time?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands it has. The bill is properly before the House.

Mr. WALLING. I think no consent was granted on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio should have objected in proper time. It is too late now. The bill is properly before the House.

The Clerk read the amendments reported by the committee to the first section, as follows:

On page 2, section 1, line 14, strike out the word "where" and insert "unless," and strike out the word "shall."

On page 2, section 1, line 15, strike out the words "is innocent of."

On page 2, line 16, strike out the word "any" and insert the word "had."

On page 2, lines 17 and 18, strike out the words "penalties, forfeitures."

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. Now read the proviso to that section as it will be as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, however, That unless it be shown that such stockholder of a corporation had any participation in, or guilty knowledge of, an offense charged, he shall not be held individually subject to the fines or imprisonment provided by law for such offense.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. Read the amendments to the third section.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, section 3, line 11, after the word "given" insert the following: "by the proper officer of such corporation."

On page 2, section 3, line 13, after the word "change" insert the following: "and the liability of such outgoing stockholder shall continue until such notice shall be given."

So that it will read:

And that, in case of any change in the persons interested as stockholders in such corporation, notice thereof in writing, embracing the name and residence of each outgoing and incoming stockholder and the date of the change, shall be given by the proper officer of such corporation to the collector or proper deputy collector of the district within twenty-four hours after such change, and the liability of such outgoing stockholder shall continue until such notice shall be given.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. The object of that amendment to section 3 is to designate with greater certainty who shall give the notice, and to continue the liability upon the outgoing stockholder until notice should be given.

Mr. SAYLER. Under your amendment you only relieve him in any case from the penal portion of the punishment provided; from the fine and imprisonment.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. Yes, sir. It only changes the presumption in case of criminal prosecution.

Mr. SAYLER. I see no objection to it.

Mr. HARRISON. It leaves the stockholder still liable to all the forfeitures?

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. Yes, sir; to all the penalties and forfeitures.

Mr. HOAR. Is there any amendment recommended to the fourth section?

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. There is not.

Mr. HOAR. Does not the fourth section then make an American citizen liable to fine and imprisonment for an offense in certain cases unless he proves his innocence?

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. In the case of persons engaged as partners in the business of distilling, where there are we will say four partners, and it is found impossible to tell under whose direction the offense was committed, but the fraud is clearly proved, it has been, I believe, the rule of the court that the responsibility shall rest upon all the partners unless a member of the partnership shall prove that he had no connection with it or was absent from the country or the district. And this intends merely to leave the law in regard to the stockholders the same as it is in regard to partners engaged in distilling.

Mr. HOAR. Without discussing at this moment the justice or constitutionality of the rule of law which the gentleman from Illinois states is now applied to partners, I cannot conceive of the justice, and I do not believe in the constitutionality, of enacting that, whenever a widow or minor child or administrator or executor or innocent purchaser or any other person becomes a stockholder in a corporation, such a person may be sent to the penitentiary for years for crime unless he proves his innocence.

Mr. HARRISON. That is the present law, is it not?

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. This does not enlarge the law. It merely limits it.

Mr. HOAR. I do not propose at present to discuss the proposition in regard to partners. In my judgment the law, however salutary it may be to impose strict obligations on persons who voluntarily undertake as partners the occupation of manufacturing intoxicating liquors—the law in my judgment, as it is stated, is a gross violation of constitutional principle. And this section proposes to extend this very harsh and extreme exercise of legislative power which is applied to partners, usually persons few in number, having the opportunity and the right at least of making a practical interposition, to the case of stockholders in a corporation, where the case is different. No partnership can do any act or bind a firm by any contract or proceeding when any one partner puts upon record his dissent in the matter. That is a well-settled principle of law. In the case of a partnership it may be proper to hold a partner liable for the guilty acts of the firm unless he has in effect dissented at the time. That is one thing. Whether just or unjust, I do not discuss; but to extend that proposition to the stockholders of a corporation, which acts by a majority, which acts ordinarily not by its corporators but by its officers or the board of directors, and where the act of the corporators is as valid as respects every stockholder, whether the stockholder be in the minority and assents or dissents, seems to me to be a gross injustice, and not only a gross injustice, but a gross violation of constitutional principles. The stockholder may be a widow or child, or an administrator of an estate, or a guardian or trustee, and their dissent makes no difference whatever in their legal relations to the acts of the corporation if they be in the minority. I insist that it is a violation of the principles of constitutional liberty to insist that in such a case a person shall be held criminally responsible for the acts of the corporation unless he in fact shall prove his innocence. I beg the gentleman therefore to admit my amendment.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I have no instruction from the Committee of Ways and Means to permit such an amendment to be offered. The whole object of the bill, it seems to me, will be defeated unless we insist that the stockholders shall be responsible to the extent so far as their assets are concerned as individuals. The adoption of the amendment would open the door to the widest frauds. Persons will organize corporations in every part of the country, and if you relieve the stockholders of such corporations from these pecuniary responsibilities, it seems to me that you relieve them from the guards now thrown by the law about such corporations.

It might perhaps be better that there should be a prohibition upon corporations from engaging in this business, but if corporations desire to engage in the business, if four, six, or a dozen individuals are associated in carrying on this business and desire to carry it on as partners, and desire to carry on the business as a corporation, then we cannot under the present law enforce faithfully the collection of the revenue.

Mr. HOAR here made a remark which was inaudible to the reporters.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I do not think that widows would long engage in the business of distilling.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to ask the gentleman if he has examined the case of The United States rs. Chaffee, and if in that case the Supreme Court did not hold that the provision was unconstitutional and that the burden of proof of guilt must necessarily, under the Constitution, rest with the Government in all cases?

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. My interpretation of the law is that the presumption of innocence would be held to exist under this bill in case of stockholders, and that it would not throw the burden of proof upon a stockholder criminally prosecuted to show that he was innocent of any participation in, and had no guilty knowledge of, a fraud; but that if a stockholder had, from the facts disclosed, appeared to have had any guilty knowledge or had any participation in the fraud he would be held liable as a partner would be.

But, sir, let me answer one remark as to the propriety or necessity of permitting corporations to engage in this business. Corporations are now engaged in this business in several States of the Union, particularly in the State of Kentucky, and I believe there is one in the city of Chicago; and there is a doubt as to whether the provisions of the law extend to them, and whether there may not be a technical defect in the bond given by such corporation, allowing a plea in court that the bond does not bind their sureties, there being no law authorizing corporations to carry on this business. It seemed to the Department and to the Committee of Ways and Means that these amendments of the law should be passed as proposed by this bill.

Mr. SAYLER. I would ask the gentleman whether this bill does not in effect impose exactly the same liabilities on the stockholders in corporations engaged in the business of distilling as are now imposed by law on each member of a partnership engaged in the same business? If it does not, it ought to.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. The original bill was intended to do that. The amendments of the committee except as to fine and imprisonment those who have not willfully violated the law. I now move the previous question.

Mr. HOAR. Will the gentleman from Illinois allow me to offer an amendment to strike out the fourth section of the bill?

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I have no instructions from the Committee of Ways and Means to allow any amendment to be offered to this bill. I move the previous question on the bill and the amendments.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is compelled to inquire of the gentleman from Illinois, because he could not hear in the confusion which prevailed, whether he has submitted from the committee any amendments to this bill?

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I have offered amendments, but I have no authority to admit any but those reported by the committee.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a parliamentary question; and it is whether if the previous question be voted down it will then be in order to move to strike out the fourth section of this bill, and then to move the previous question on the bill with that section stricken out?

The SPEAKER. The Chair would have no difficulty in answering that question, but it can be decided when the occasion arises.

The question was put upon seconding the previous question, and on a division there were—ayes 56, noes 26; no quorum voting.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I will withdraw my call for the previous question if the gentleman insists upon a vote upon his motion to strike out the fourth section of this bill; I have no objection to the House voting on his proposition. I will first yield to the gentleman from Rhode Island, [Mr. EAMES,] who desires to offer an amendment to the fourth section before the motion is made to strike it out.

Mr. EAMES. I move to strike out the proviso of the fourth section, which is as follows:

Provided, That it shall be a sufficient defense to any proceeding or indictment against such person for an offense punishable under the provisions last above named that he was innocent of any participation in, or guilty knowledge of, the offense committed.

And in lieu of the proviso I move to insert the words "participating in, and having a guilty knowledge of, the offense committed." I ask the Clerk to read the section as it will stand if my amendment shall be adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That every provision of law relating to a distiller shall be held to apply to a corporation engaged in the business of distilling, excepting such provisions as prescribe the punishment of fine or imprisonment, or both, which provisions shall apply to, and on conviction the punishment thereby provided shall be imposed upon, every person who, at the time of the commission of the offense for which the punishment is prescribed, was either an officer or a stockholder of such corporation, or an agent, superintendent, or manager of the distillery operated by such corporation, participating in, and having a guilty knowledge of, the offense committed.

Mr. REAGAN. I would suggest to the gentleman that the word "and" should be "or;" "participating in, or having a guilty knowledge of," &c.

Mr. EAMES. I accept the suggestion of the gentleman, and will modify my amendment accordingly. As modified, I think my amendment obviates the objection made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] to this fourth section.

Mr. HOAR. I think it will obviate my objection, but in case the amendment of the gentleman from Rhode Island should not be adopted, I would like to have the fourth section stricken out, and for that purpose I will move to strike out the fourth section.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I have no objection to the amendment of the gentleman from Rhode Island, but I think it would be wrong to strike out the fourth section, because the provision in the first part of that section is of importance. I now call the previous question upon the bill and amendments.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendments reported from the Committee of Ways and Means to the second section and the amendment moved by Mr. EAMES to the fourth section were adopted.

Mr. HOAR. The amendment of the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. EAMES] having been adopted, I ask consent to withdraw my motion to strike out the fourth section.

No objection was made, and the motion to strike out was withdrawn.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BURCHARD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BRIGHT. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being called for, the morning hour will now begin at ten minutes past one o'clock. To-day being Friday, the first business in the morning hour is the call of committees for reports of a private nature; and the call rests with the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. BAGBY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported adversely upon the following, and the same were laid on the table, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. No. 1833) for the relief of John T. Neale;

A bill (H. R. No. 2083) to increase the pension of Jane Conroy;

A bill (H. R. No. 2164) granting a pension to Bridget Rooney, of Bloomington, Illinois;

A bill (H. R. No. 2648) granting a pension to Americus D. Patterson; and

The petition, for a pension, of Annie D. Rundlett, of Boston, widow of Howard M. Rundlett, late past assistant surgeon of the United States Navy.

FAVORABLE REPORTS.

Mr. BAGBY, from the same committee, reported back the following bills; which were referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. No. 1089) granting a pension to Thomas I. Fox, late a private of Company C, Fifty-second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers;

A bill (H. R. No. 1936) granting a pension to John Haley;

A bill (H. R. No. 2159) granting a pension to Aaron H. Miller, late private Company D, Twenty-fourth Regiment Indiana Volunteers;

A bill (H. R. No. 2231) granting a pension to Emily E. Weiss;

A bill (H. R. No. 2302) granting a pension to Eleanor Douglas; and

A bill (H. R. No. 2620) granting a pension to Jonas A. Bigelow, Company K, Fourteenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry.

Mr. SINNICKSON, from the same committee, reported back the following; which were referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. No. 1814) granting a pension to Samuel Shæffer; and

A bill (H. R. No. 2228) granting a pension to Thomas Pulling, of Michigan.

ELIZABETH T. DUBOIS.

Mr. BAGBY, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3177) granting a pension to Elizabeth T. Dubois, widow of Theodore B. Dubois, late acting volunteer lieutenant-commander in the naval service.

SUBSTITUTES FOR PENSION BILLS.

Mr. BAGBY, from the same committee, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 2321, a bill (H. R. No. 3178) granting a pension to Thomas Galloway, late captain Company C, First Maryland Cavalry Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. RUSK, from the same committee, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 2200, a bill (H. R. No. 3179) granting a pension to General Thomas F. Wildes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. RICE, from the same committee, reported back the petition and papers in the case of George Smith, of Culpeper, Virginia, for an invalid pension on account of injuries received in the war of 1812; and moved that the committee be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

OSCAR S. COLLINS.

Hr. HEWITT, of Alabama, from the same committee, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 3027, a bill (H. R. No. 3180) granting a pension to Oscar S. Collins; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BENJAMIN HICKEY.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama, also, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 1896) granting a pension to Benjamin Hickey, a private in Company C, First Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Cavalry; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompaing report ordered to be printed.

PATENT OF HARVEY LULL.

Mr. J. H. BAGLEY, from the Committee on Patents, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (S. No. 608) to enable Harvey Lull, of Hoboken, New Jersey, to make application to the Commissioner of Patents for extension of letters-patent for a self-locking shutter-hinge.

The bill provides that the petition of Harvey Lull, of Hoboken, New Jersey, for the extension of letters-patent for a self-locking shutter-hinge, granted January 2, 1854, No. 10477, and extended by the Commissioner of Patents for seven years from the 2d day of January, 1868, which term expired the 2d day of January, 1875, be referred to the Commissioner of Patents, with full power and authority to hear and determine the same upon the principles prescribed by the acts of Congress of July 4, 1836, and the amendments thereof governing and granting extensions; and if, after hearing the petition, upon due notice to the public, according to the practice of the Patent Office in cases of extension, the Commissioner should decide that the petition ought to be granted, he is authorized and empowered to extend letters-patent to Harvey Lull for seven years from and after the passage of this act. But no damages are to be collected of any person for an infringement of the patent between the time of the expiration of the patent and the time of the renewal of the same.

Mr. KELLEY. We would like to know something about this case.

Mr. J. H. BAGLEY. Let the report be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the petition of Harvey Lull for the extension of letters-patent granted him January 2, 1854, for a shutter-hinge, report as follows:

Letters-patent were granted Harvey Lull January 2, 1854, for a shutter-hinge, which hinge combines a hinge and lock and utilizes an inclined plane. The patent was extended seven years by the Commissioner of Patents on 31st of December, 1867.

The petitioner, Harvey Lull, was the original inventor of the self-locking shutter-hinge, upon which he spent years of toil, and for lack of means was induced to assign half of the patent to Richard Porter, of Wheeling, West Virginia. Afterward he sold the whole of the patent to the said Porter for the sum of $4,000. Upon the extension of the patent by the Commissioner of Patents, Harvey Lull assigned the same to his wife, Hannah B. Lull. Here, then, the claim of Richard Porter and other complications interposed, which stopped the collection of royalties and produced litigation for years. At length, Hannah B. Lull, by mortgaging her individual home, valued at $7,000, to pay expenses of litigation and make compromises with litigants, so as to control the whole patent, was successful. These expenses of litigation, traveling to collect royalties, and the compromises of contestants, have cost the assignee $9,600; besides, the panic has caused failures among the manufacturers, and over five tons of these Lull hinges have been sold as castings and not one cent of royalty paid therefor. The bankruptcy of the manufacturers of these hinges caused the mortgages on Hannah B. Lull's individual property to be foreclosed, and last June the sheriff of Hudson County, New Jersey, sold this property, not leaving even a shelter for the aged inventor and his family.

The hinge has gone into very general use and is an exceedingly valuable invention to the public. From evidence before us this hinge, as compared with other hinges, in its convenient appliances, safety, and durability has saved the public $2,700,000.

No opposition to the extension comes from any quarter, and besides eighty prominent hardware dealers and manufacturers in the cities of New York, Hoboken, Philadelphia, Reading, Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Baltimore, Washington, and elsewhere, have petitioned Congress for the extension now applied for, first, because "the invention is of great value to the public, and for which said Lull has received inadequate compensation;" second, because "the public are protected in having good and substantial castings made under this patent;" third, because "in the Harvey Lull patent the entire weight of the shutter is sustained upon an inclined plane down which it often passes with great velocity, and is brought to a sudden stop by its peculiar mechanism. It is therefore indispensable that none but the best materials and workmanship should be employed in their manufacture."

The royalty for forty-eight hinges, ninety-six castings, and fixtures has been only ten cents.

Your committee are of the opinion, that in addition to the equities in this case, the aged inventor, now seventy-four years, his feeble wife and four daughters, now all homeless, are entitled to the relief asked for, and would therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

Mr. J. H. BAGLEY. Mr. Speaker, it is hardly necessary for me to say anything about this case, as its history and merits are quite fully set forth in the report. Perhaps, however, it may be proper for me to repeat the facts, so that they may be clearly brought to the attention of the House.

Mr. KELLEY. I desire to say that in calling for the reading of the report, I did so simply because I wanted to know something about the case. I see no reason to object to the bill, and I do not propose to make any opposition. The case seems very meritorious.

Mr. J. H. BAGLEY. I shall detain the House but a moment.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I wish to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill whether the committee have any information that the inventor is still the owner of the patent?

Mr. J. H. BAGLEY. The inventor is still the owner of the patent; and it is proposed to extend it for his benefit and the benefit of his family. This patent is for a self-locking hinge. The original patent was granted to the inventor, Harvey Lull, in 1854, and extended for seven years in 1868, which extension expired in January, 1875.

It appears from the evidence that Mr. Lull spent many years in the effort to perfect his invention. When it was perfected, he was forced by lack of money to sell one-half his interest in the patent, and subsequently the other half, for the purpose of paying expenses which had been contracted in the prosecution of the invention. Upon obtaining the extension, the patentee assigned his right to his wife, Hannah B. Lull, as stated in the report. The party to whom the right under the original patent was sold claimed the right to the extension; hence arose complications and lawsuits which continued for several years and which swept away all the little property the Lulls possessed.

The invention, although simple, is a valuable one to the public. This hinge is very generally in use and is probably the best in the market. No person is opposing this extension. I appeal to gentlemen who generally oppose the extension of patents (and undoubtedly they do so on principle) to recognize the fact that this is a very meritorious case. It is a case of real genuine charity, appealing strongly to our feelings of humanity. This aged inventor, seventy-four years old, has a family of four children who are partially dependent on their relatives for support. The committee are unanimous in the opinion that the bill should pass; and I trust it will meet with no opposition.

Mr. HARDENBERGH. I wish merely to say that I concur in all that has been said by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. J. H. BAGLEY.] This petitioner is a constituent of mine, and I have received a great many letters from some of the foremost and best citizens of Hoboken, praying that Congress will grant the relief asked for in this case.

Mr. COCHRANE. I wish to say that ordinarily I am opposed to the extension of patents; but in view of the fact that this bill is reported unanimously from the committee, and the further fact that I have received from a number of gentlemen in whom I have the highest confidence a statement of the circumstances of this case, (and that it is an extreme case there can be no doubt,) I trust there may be no objection to the passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HARDENBERGH moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NICHOLAS WHITEHALL.

Mr. J. H. BAGLEY also, from the Committee on Patents, reported as a substitute for House bill No. 190 a bill (H. R. No. 3181) for the relief of Nicholas Whitehall, of Fountain County, Indiana; which was read a first and second time, and ordered to be printed and recommitted.

WILLIAM WHEELER HUBBELL.

Mr. J. H. BAGLEY. I am further directed by the Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the petition of William Wheeler Hubbell, to make a favorable report upon the same, together with a bill (H. R. No. 3192) for the relief of William Wheeler Hubbell, which I ask may be put on its passage.

Mr. McCRARY. I do not see what reason can be assigned for passing one private bill at this time to the exclusion of all others. I make the point of order this bill must go to the Private Calendar for its first consideration.

Mr. SAMPSON. I think the gentleman is mistaken, as the bill does not make an appropriation.

Mr. J. H. BAGLEY. This bill comes from the Committee on Patents with a favorable recommendation, and, as it does not make any appropriation, I do not see why it should not be considered at this time.

Mr. McCRARY. Does not the bill involve expenditure of money?

Mr. SAMPSON. I will state that it is simply an enabling act, and authorizes the party named to appear before the Commissioner of Patents to prosecute his application. No patent has been issued to him, as he was prevented by sickness and misfortune from prosecuting his application. He claims that his invention has never been made public.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That William Wheeler Hubbell be, and is hereby, authorized to renew and complete his applications to the Commissioner of Patents for letters-patent on his original specifications of a "self-loading and self-firing gun" and "gun to load and fire with great rapidity and effect," and ammunition for the same, filed respectively May, 1853, and April, 1865, in the Patent Office; and that the Commissioner of Patents is hereby authorized and empowered to hear and examine said applications and to grant letters-patent thereon for seventeen years, if in his judgment the said inventions of the said William Wheeler Hubbell are, or either of them is, "a new and useful art, machine, or manufacture, not used by others in this country, and not known, or patented, or described in any printed publication in this or any foreign country before his invention or discovery thereof," the disability of presumptive abandonment being hereby removed: Provided, however, That the granting of said letters-patent shall not be held in any way to interfere with the rights of any person or corporation now using said invention, or parts thereof, to use and enjoy the same.

Mr. McCRARY. I withdraw my objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. J. H. BAGLEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COMMITTEE CLERK.

Mr. ROBERTS, from the Committee of Accounts, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice be, and they are hereby, authorized to employ a clerk for the further term of one month from the 12th day of April, 1876, at $4 per day.

KENDRICK & AVIS AND OTHERS.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 1800) for the relief of Kendrick & Avis, Kuner, Zisemann & Zott, Kuner & Zott, all of Saint Louis, Missouri, and Nachtrieb & Co., of Galion, Ohio, with the recommendation that it do pass; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ALBERT GRANT.

Mr. BRIGHT, from the Committee of Claims, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3182) for the relief of Albert Grant; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JAMES G. HARRISON.

Mr. BRIGHT also, from the same committee, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 1034) for the relief of James G. Harrison, with the recommendation that it do pass; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

J. T. M'GINNIS, UNITED STATES ARMY.

Mr. BRIGHT also, from the same committee, moved it be discharged from the further consideration of a bill (H. R. No. 2257) for the relief of J. T. McGinnis, captain Thirteenth Infantry, United States Army, and the same be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs; which motion was agreed to.

BENJAMIN J. EVERETT.

Mr. BRIGHT also, from the same committee, moved it be discharged from the further consideration of a communication from the Secretary of the Interior relative to the claim of Benjamin J. Everett, and the same be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs; which motion was agreed to.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. BRIGHT also, from the same committee, moved it be discharged from the further consideration of the following cases, and the same be referred to the Committee on War Claims; which motion was agreed to:

A bill (H. R. No. 3045) for the relief of Francis J. Wheeler;
The petition of Otis N. Cutler, of New York, for relief;
The petition of Harlan P. Eggleston;
The petition of Robert Danby, engineer in the Navy;
The petition of George Gwynn, of Portland, Maine;
The memorial of Cane Hill College, of Arkansas, asking for compensation for college building destroyed by United States troops in 1864;
A bill (H. R. No. 2975) for the relief of Andrew B. Battelle and George D. Evans;
The petition of James T. White, of Kentucky, for relief;
A bill (H. R. No. 2793) for the relief of Alvin Rose, of New York City; and A bill (H. R. No. 2746) for the relief of Mrs. Maria H. Walker, widow of Colonel Thomas F. Hunt, late of the United States Army.

CITY OF MACON, GEORGIA.

Mr. ROBBINS, of North Carolina, from the same committee, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, the bill (H. R. No. 781) for the relief of the city of Macon, Georgia; and the same was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

JACKSON T. SORRELS.

Mr. PHILIPS, of Missouri, from the same committee, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, the bill (H. R. No. 755) for the relief of Jackson T. Sorrels; and the same was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

BALTIMORE BRIDGE COMPANY.

Mr. PHILIPS, of Missouri, also, from the same committee, reported back, with an adverse recommendation, the memorial of the Baltimore Bridge Company; and the same was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

APPLETON OAKSMITH.

Mr. PHILIPS, of Missouri, also, from the same committee, reported back, as a substitute for House bill No. 2211, a bill (H. R. No. 3183) allowing Appleton Oaksmith to prosecute certain claims before the Court of Claims; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. NEAL, from the same committee, reported adversely on the following bill and petitions; and the same were severally laid on the table, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

The bill (H. R. No. 166) for the relief of Mrs. O. F. Short, of Kansas;
The petition of L. A. Thrasher and C. C. Short, administratrix; and
The petition of Celia C. Short.

WILLIAM G. FORD.

Mr. CASON, from the same committee, reported back, with amendments, the bill (H. R. No. 492) for the relief of William G. Ford, of Tennessee; and the bill and amendments were referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calender, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

FLOYD C. BABCOCK.

Mr. TARBOX, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 516) for the relief of Floyd C. Babcock; and the same was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

EMERICK W. HANSELL.

Mr. TARBOX also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3184) granting a pension to Emerick W. Hansell; which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying report, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and ordered to be printed.

HENRY GEE.

Mr. MOREY, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 2258) for the relief of Henry Gee, of the State of Florida; and the same was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

CHANGES OF REFERENCE.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 2723) for the relief of John Henderson, and moved that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the same, and that it be referred to the Committee of Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. AINSWORTH, from the same committee, reported back the following petitions, and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the same, and they were referred to the Committee of Claims:

The petition of John D. Clark; and
The memorial of G. H. Giddings.

NEWTON S. MURPHEY.

Mr. McCRARY, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back, with amendments, the bill (H. R. No. 2938) for the relief of Newton S. Murphey; and the bill and amendments were referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

JOSEPH R. SHANNON.

Mr. WARREN, from the Committee on War Claims, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 798, a bill (H. R. No. 3185) for the relief of Joseph R. Shannon; which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying report, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and ordered to be printed.

PHILIP PENDLETON.

Mr. MILLIKEN, from the same committee, reported back, with an amendment, House bill No. 735, for the relief of Philip Pendleton; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MARK DAVIS.

Mr. ELLIS, from the same committee, reported back, with an amendment, House bill No. 402, for the relief of Mark Davis; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

J. M. BRAGG.

Mr. ELLIS also, from the same committee, reported back, with amendments, the bill (H. R. No. 877) for the relief of J. M. Bragg and others, of Tennessee; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MARGARET JANET BURLESON.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3186) for the relief of Margaret Janet Burleson; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

RANDALL BROWN.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, also, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 890) for the relief of Randall Brown, of Nashville, Tennessee; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PETER NODINE.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, also, from the same committee, made an adverse report in the case of Peter Nodine, of Charleston, West Virginia; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

MICHAEL W. BROCK.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania, from the same committee, reported back the bill (S. No. 165) for the relief of Michael W. Brock, of Meigs County, Tennessee, late a private in Company D, Tenth Tennessee Volunteers; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ALVIS SMITH.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania, also, from the same committee, reported back the bill (S. No. 3) for the relief of Alvis Smith; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CHARLES C. CAMPBELL.

Mr. HOSKINS, from the same committee, reported back, with an amendment, the bill (H. R. No. 429) for the relief of Charles C. Campbell, of Washington County, Virginia; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

LAND TITLES IN MISSOURI.

Mr. BUCKNER, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, reported back, with an amendment, the bill (H. R. No. 100) granting legal titles to all New Madrid locations in the State of Missouri for which patents have not heretofore been issued.

The bill was read. It provides that all of the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to all lands in the State of Missouri which have at any time heretofore been located by virtue of certificates issued under the act of Congress approved February 17, 1815, entitled "An act for the relief of the inhabitants of the late county of New Madrid, in the Missouri Territory, who suffered by earthquakes," shall be, and the same are thereby, released, granted, relinquished, and conveyed by the United States, in fee-simple, to the respective owners of the equitable titles thereto, and to their respective heirs and assigns forever, as fully and completely in every respect whatever as could be done by patents issued therefor according to law; but nothing contained in the act shall comprehend, include, extend to, release, grant, relinquish, or convey any land or lands within township 45 north of the base-line, in range 7 east of the fifth principal meridian, in said State of Missouri; nor shall anything in the act contained abridge, divest, impair, injure, or prejudice any valid right, title, or interest of any person or persons in or to any portion or part of the lands mentioned in the act.

Mr. KASSON. That bill, I suppose, goes to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. BUCKNER. Not a bit of it.

Mr. KASSON. I desire to reserve the point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. HOSKINS in the chair.) The gentleman from Iowa raises the point of order that this bill must go to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the Chair will allow the gentleman from Missouri to make a brief statement.

Mr. BUCKNER. Allow me to say that this bill does not affect a foot of land belonging to the United States. The object of the bill is precisely in harmony with the bill introduced by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. LAWRENCE,] to secure titles already declared legal to certain citizens of Missouri. The bill does not convey a foot of land belonging to the United States to any one. The gentleman from Ohio has, as I have already stated, introduced a bill from the Committee on the Judiciary that covers all of these cases.

Mr. KASSON. I made the point of order because in listening to the reading of the bill I found "that all of the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to" all these lands is to be relinquished, &c. While the bill may be perfectly right, it is of that class of bills which require examination.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands the gentleman from Iowa to raise the point of order that this bill must have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. KASSON. Under the rules.

Mr. BUCKNER. There is no rule which requires that the bill shall be so referred. It does not convey one foot of land under the decision of the State courts and of the Supreme Court of the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will read the first few lines of the bill:

That of all the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to all lands in the State of Missouri which have at any time heretofore been located by virtue of certificates issued under the act of Congress approved February 17, 1815, entitled.

This, to the mind of the Chair, shows that the United States clearly by the bill have an interest in these lands, and therefore the Chair rules that the point of order is well taken and the bill must be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

The bill was accordingly referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SPARKS. Has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It has.

Mr. SPARKS. Then I call for the regular order, being the unfinished business of yesterday.

Mr. KASSON. I rise to a privileged question, which I think will not take more than five minutes.

Mr. SPARKS. I will yield for that purpose.

CHARGES AGAINST THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

Mr. KASSON. This morning I entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which the House on yesterday referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department the preamble and resolution submitted by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CATE] in respect to the action of the Secretary of the Treasury concerning the remission of a certain forfeiture set forth in the preamble. The committee to whom the resolution has been referred is without power to act, for the resolution as drawn directs the Committee of Ways and Means to inquire into the said charges, and the reference to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department can only be to determine whether the House should adopt the resolution or not, and the committee has no power except to report the resolution back to the House for adoption or rejection.

For that reason I have moved to reconsider the vote by which the preamble and resolution were referred, merely that the House may give the committee power to inquire and report upon the subject-matter. I do not wish to take the jurisdiction from that committee, but to give it the necessary power to investigate and report. As originally drawn, and as it now stands, the resolution gives power to the Committee of Ways and Means to inquire into and report upon the subject-matter embraced in it. I withdrew my objection to it on yesterday, on the supposition that it was to be referred to the committee named in the resolution. It appears by the Journal as read this morning that it was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department. That committee having no power to do anything except to report the resolution back to the House for its action, I have moved a reconsideration of the reference, and if that is agreed to I shall move to substitute the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department for the Committee of Ways and Means. If that amendment, with two or three other slight amendments, is adopted, I shall then have no objection to the adoption of the resolution.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. KASSON. I now move to amend the resolution by striking out "Committee of Ways and Means" and inserting in lieu "Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department."

Mr. CATE. I do not know that I have any objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KASSON. The preamble, containing several "whereases," recites certain statements as facts. I move to insert after each "whereas" the words "it is alleged," so as not to commit the House to the statements contained in the preamble.

Mr. CATE. I have no objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KASSON. I move to furth er amend the resolution by adding to it these words:

And the proceedings of said committee the reon shall be open to the public, and they shall report thereon as soon as possible.

I presume it will be agreeable to the gentleman moving the resolution to have it adopted by the House, instead of having it simply referred. If adopted it will give the committee power to examine persons and papers.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CATE] accept the amendment just moved by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON?]

Mr. CATE. I do not. I have no objection to the committee carrying on the investigation with open doors, if it shall see fit; but I do not see why this resolution should have a different provision in it from other similar resolutions.

Mr. BRIGHT and Mr. HOOKER called for the reading of the resolution as proposed to be amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department be directed to inquire into the said charges and the circumstances of the remission of said forfeiture, after the same had been decreed by the United States circuit and Supreme Courts, and its remission denied by the former Secretary of the Treasury, and after said committee of experts had decided that it should not be remitted, and upon what grounds and for what reasons said judgment or forfeiture was remitted, and for that purpose the said committee are authorized to send for persons and papers; and the proceedings of said committee thereon shall be open to the public, and they shall report thereon as soon as possible.

Mr. CATE. What object does the gentleman expect to attain by having this investigation carried on with open doors?

Mr. KASSON. The gentleman has asked me a very proper question, why I desire this amendment to be put on this resolution. It is that proceedings in secret, involving the conduct and character of a public officer, without notice to him, without notice to the House, without notice to the public, is a species of injustice that has been regarded as obnoxious ever since the days of the old "star chamber" of England.

Mr. HOLMAN. There certainly should be no objection to that amendment.

Mr. KASSON. For that reason I desire that the House shall say whether it desires to continue that system or not.

Mr. CATE. I have no objection to the committee taking testimony with open doors; but I do not want to conclude the action of the committee in the regulation of their own proceedings.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the amendment?

Mr. HUNTON and others objected.

Mr. KASSON. Then I ask a vote of the House upon it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust there will be no objection to the amendment. It is highly proper that these investigations shall be open to the public.

Mr. MORRISON. I shall not object; but it seems to me that is a matter which should be left to the discretion of each committee for itself.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. "Open to the public" is a very indefinite phrase. A hundred thousand persons might present themselves at the door of the committee-room and demand admission.

Mr. KASSON. Will the gentleman suggest some more appropriate language?

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I would suggest that in this case as in all others the committee should be allowed to determine whether their investigations shall be public or not.

Mr. KASSON. That is what I object to.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. That is what has been done in other cases.

Mr. KASSON. My language is that which is customary. If gentlemen do not wish to accomplish the end at all, but desire this investigation to be secret, they will of course vote down the proposition.

I promised to take as little time as possible; and if no gentleman desires to speak further, I will call for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment, there were—ayes 98, noes 37.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. No quorum has voted.

Mr. HOAR. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. KASSON. If any question is made upon the lack of a quorum, I hope the yeas and nays will be taken.

Mr. HOLMAN. No point is made upon the want of a quorum.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. I made the point that there was no quorum voting; and I insist upon it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] insist on the call for the yeas and nays?

Mr. HOAR. I do. This is a very important public precedent; and I think the yeas and nays should be recorded upon it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question then is on ordering the yeas and nays.

Mr. MORRISON. Was not the amendment carried?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The affirmative vote was in the majority, but no quorum voted.

Mr. MORRISON. Nobody objects, I believe.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] has demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ATKINS. Would it be in order to move an amendment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It would not, for the reason that the previous question is now operating.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 170, nays 38, not voting 82; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Anderson, Atkins, Bagby, George A. Bagley, John H. Baker, William H. Baker, Banning, Bell, Blair, Bland, Blount, Boone, Bradford, Bright, William R. Brown, Buckner, Horatio C. Burchard, Samuel D. Burchard, Cabell, William P. Caldwell, Campbell, Cason, Chapin, Chittenden, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Cook, Crapo, Cutler, Danford, Davis, Davy, De Bolt, Denison, Dobbins, Douglas, Dunnell, Eames, Egbert, Ely, Evans, Faulkner, Felton, Finley, Forney, Fort, Franklin, Freeman, Frost, Frye, Garfield, Gibson, Glover, Goode, Goodin, Hale, Andrew H. Hamilton, Hancock, Haralson, Hardenbergh, John T. Harris, Hartridge, Hartzell, Hatcher, Hathorn, Hendee, Henderson, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Hoar, Holman, Hopkins, Hoskins, Hunter, Hunton, Hurlbut, Hyman, Thomas L. Jones, Kasson, Kehr, Kelley, Ketchum, Kimball, Lamar, George M. Landers, Lapham, Lawrence, Leavenworth, Levy, Lord, Lynch, Edmund W. M. Mackey, Magoon, Maish, MacDougall, McCrary, McDill, McFarland, Metcalfe, Milliken, Mills, Monroe, Morey, Morgan, Morrison, New, Norton, O'Brien, Odell, Oliver, O'Neill, Packer, Page, Payne, Phelps, Pierce, Plaisted, Platt, Poppleton, Potter, Pratt, Randall, John Reilly, Rice, Roberts, Robinson, Rusk, Sampson, Savage, Sayler, Schleicher, Sinnickson, A. Herr Smith, William E. Smith, Sparks, Springer, Strait, Stevenson, Stone, Stowell, Teese, Thornburgh, Throckmorton, Martin I. Townsend, Tufts, Turney, Van Vorhes, Robert B. Vance, Waddell, Waldron, Charles C. B. Walker, Alexander S. Wallace, John W. Wallace, Walsh, Warren, Erastus Wells, Wheeler, White, Whiting, Wigginton, Wike, Willard, Charles G. Williams, William B. Williams, Willis, Wilshire, James Wilson, Woodburn, Woodworth, Yeates, and Young—170.

NAYS—Messrs. Ainsworth, Beebe, John Young Brown, John H. Caldwell, Cate, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, Cowan, Culberson, Dibrell, Gunter, Robert Hamilton, Henry R. Harris, Henkle, Abram S. Hewitt, Hurd, Lane, Lewis, L. A. Mackey, Mutchler, Neal, Parsons, John F. Philips, Piper, Rea, Reagan, Riddle, John Robbins, William M. Robbins, Scales, Siemons, Southard, Tarbox, Thompson, Thomas, John L. Vance, Walling, Jeremiah N. Williams, and Fernando Wood—38.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Ashe, John H. Bagley, jr., Ballou, Banks, Barnum, Bass, Blackburn, Blaine, Bliss, Bradley, Burleigh, Candler, Cannon, Caswell, Caulfield, Clymer, Cochrane, Collins, Conger, Cox, Crounse, Darrall, Durand, Durham, Eden, Ellis, Farwell, Foster, Fuller, Gause, Benjamin W. Harris, Harrison, Haymond, Hays, Hereford, Hill, Hoge, Hooker, House, Hubbell, Jenks, Frank Jones, Joyce, King, Knott, Franklin Landers, Luttrell, Lynde, McMahon, Meade, Miller, Money, Nash, William A. Phillips, Powell, Purman, Rainey, James B. Reilly, Miles Ross, Sobieski Ross, Schumaker, Seelye, Sheakley, Singleton, Smalls, Stenger, Swann, Terry, Washington Townsend, Tucker, Wait, Gilbert C. Walker, Ward, G. Wiley Wells, Whitehouse, Whitthorne, Andrew Williams, Alpheus S. Williams, James Williams, James D. Williams, Benjamin Wilson, and Alan Wood, jr.—82.

So the amendment was adopted.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. J. B. REILLY. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. ALAN WOOD, who is absent by leave of the House. I do not know how he would vote on this question. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote in the affirmative.

Mr. HARDENBERGH. I desire to announce that my colleague from New Jersey, Mr. ROSS, is absent on account of sickness.

Mr. MAGOON. My colleague, Mr. CASWELL, is absent by leave of the House. If present he would vote "ay."

Mr. RIDDLE. The gentleman from Indiana, Mr. HAYMOND, is absent on account of sickness.

Mr. WALLACE, of South Carolina. My colleague, Mr. SMALLS, is absent on leave. If here he would vote "ay."

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CATE] withdraws the motion for the reference of the resolution; and the question is now on its adoption as amended.

The resolution, as amended, was adopted.

Mr. KASSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TRANSFER OF INDIAN BUREAU TO THE WAR DEPARTMENT.

Mr. SPARKS. I call for the regular order—the unfinished business of yesterday.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order being called for, the House resumes the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2677) to transfer the Office of Indian Affairs from the Interior to the War Department. The previous question has been seconded and the main question ordered. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPARKS] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. SPARKS. I yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. TOWNSEND.]

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I believe in the Christian religion. I am a humble member of the Presbyterian Church. I believe in Christian missions. American missions had their birth in the town in which I was raised, amid the prayers of Samuel John Mills. I believe Christianity and Christian civilization are to pervade and conquer the world. I believe the race of man is a unit and that the Indian, the African, the Caucasian, the Mongolian, are all one people and in the end all will be subordinated to one civilization. I have been all my life in favor of aiding the action of our American missionaries, of every form of creed and faith, but I am not and never have been in favor of clerical control in the Government of this or any other country. It is a thing of the past. There is no such thing in Christendom at the present moment as civil government in the hands of religious denominations, however excellent. That time has gone by. Even the states of the Church are in the hands of the people of Italy, under the control of the citizens and the administration of Victor Emmanuel. The only remnant of clerical rule in Christendom is to be found in the British Parliament, where, in holiday guise, the bishops appear in their lawn gowns in the House of Lords to remind the world that there was a day when Wolsey ruled England; that there was a day when Richelieu ruled France; that there was a day when Hildebrand dominated the world. It is the only use the pageant of English bishops subserves in the economy of the British government.

Ah, but good men must rule. I know in Washington an excellent Presbyterian gentleman by the name of Mitchell. I attend his ministrations on the Sabbath. I know an excellent Methodist clergyman by the name of Newman. I know an excellent clergyman by the name of Sunderland. Do any of my friends on this side of the House propose to abdicate and put Mitchell or Sunderland or Newman into power at Washington to control the affairs of the country? Our Christian missionaries have never asked to control the countries to which they have gone. They do not ask the control even of the Indian country and it is crowding upon them what they do not desire. It is outside their calling, outside their office, outside the wishes of the devoted self-denying Christian missionary.

There is another thing I do not believe. I do not believe one word of the charges of maladministration against the Indian Bureau—not one word of it. I do not believe one word against the Interior Department, one word against the President, one word against the Indian Commissioner. It is not for this or any of these reasons that I am in favor of this bill.

And allow me to say another thing. I do not believe one word of the fitness of the comparison drawn by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BANNING] or the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] between the expense of the administration of the Indian Department in 1848 and that of the present day. You might as well go back and make a comparison between the expenses of this year and the year 1621, when Captain Standish, with six soldiers and the firelocks of that day, warred against the Indians and held at bay the entire Indian world. The gentleman from Ohio says we had 400,000 Indians in 1848, but there were probably a million on our present territory in 1621.

Let us go back to 1848. The treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo was signed on the 5th of February, 1848. At that day we had not a post save Fort Leavenworth on the other side of the Missouri. There was an unoccupied country equal almost, if not quite, to the entire continent of Europe, which we have since entered upon, put our railroads through, run our roads over, erected telegraphs upon, and created States and Territories upon, and now, after having made treaties with our Indians, we find ourselves under the necessity, by the Army, by the Military Department of the Government, of protecting and guarding this entire territory. And hence it is that the expenses are so enormous as they are. Not enormous as compared with the country we have gained, because it is not a thousandth part of the interest upon the annual value of these territories.

The reason why I support this bill is because it is for the interest of the administration of the duties devolving upon us in that vast territory that the power there exerted should be a unit, to the end that the administration shall be economical; that safety shall be secured as well to the Indian as to the settler, and that unity of counsels shall obtain. What is the great purpose of our Indian administration? It is an attempt to deal with a race of savages. I do not now refer to the partially civilized tribes, because they do not properly come within the purview of this bill. But when you go beyond the Indian Territory, it is properly dealing with a race of savages, and not only with savages, but savages who by two hundred generations of war have become the fiercest, the bloodiest, the most stealthy, the most cruel which now exist in the world, or ever did exist on the face of the globe. I wish Dr. SEELYE were here, for I would like to say to him what I say to the gentlemen who are here. The Indian on the plains is not a pet lamb, about whose neck you may tie a blue ribbon, and with whom you may lie down in peace. [Laughter.] He would be a bad company under such circumstances. Why the Society of Friends, the men of peace, the men who would resist nothing, have in their plan of government of the Indians this conclusion, be the same more or less, "an adequate police force for the arrest and control of offenders." [Laughter.]

What kind of police would you send there? Would you send to the Indian country a man with a broad-brimmed hat and a locust club? He would find himself in trouble in a very short time. No, sir; you require to have the strong arm of the military power. And I say now that if you were to withdraw the military and leave the missionaries on this ground in less than a year there would not be a man of them with his hair on his head; not a man of them all.

I know that when we get upon such subjects it is a great deal pleasanter to be sentimental and to sing songs and to tell nursery stories and repeat nursery rhymes than to meet the subject as it is. I appeal to the men of the frontier as to how you are to get along with the Indian. My friend from Nebraska [Mr. CROUNSE] told us yesterday that he thought the change to the Military Bureau was extermination. I tell him that within two years the murderous Sioux have crossed his State, the whole breadth of it, to maraud upon the Pawnees and to murder the wives and children of those Indians upon the Kansas border and did murder every living creature they found in the tents, right at his own door and by his own fireside. Such are these pet lambs.

Mr. CROUNSE. I hope the gentleman——

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I am telling this as a fact, and I cannot give way, because I have only twenty minutes. I am ready to have a talk with the gentleman after this is over to his heart's content.

I take the Indian as he is, not as I hope to have him; not as he should be. And I say that the Indian has got to be ruled; ruled with a strong hand. We have got to have the "police" that even our Quaker friends want there. I cannot be asked to go further than the Quakers, and I know of no other police than the military power that can answer the purpose.

But this is not all. This sentimentality in regard to the Indian question is leading to the worst results. What is it leading to? The utter, hopeless extermination of the Indian. Is there a man here who does not know who kills the Indian? It is the Indian who kills the Indian. There are thirty deaths of Indians by the hands of Indians; yes, a hundred by the hands of Indians to one by the hands of white men. Who does not know it? A man is to blame for not knowing it with the means of gaining intelligence which we possess. There are some partially civilized tribes on the Missouri; the Mandans, the Gros Ventres, the Arickarees; and they live every day of their lives in terror of the Sioux, who would murder them in three days. If you were to withdraw your soldiers, every soul of these civilized Indians would be exterminated at once.

Will you tell me how the Indian is to become a civilized man? You leave your laws in a shape to disgrace you before the world. I say to those of the Indian Committee, if there be such who do not propose to vote for this bill and who do not wish to have it adopted, if a white man kills an Indian, the law will hold him amenable; if an Indian kills a white man, the law will hold him amenable. But if an Indian kills an Indian, you cannot punish him in the courts. If an Indian marauding crew from the Sioux go into an Indian reservation and commit wholesale murder and robbery, the military may send them back again to their own homes, but that is all that is done. When they murdered our kindred in Minnesota we hanged some, we imprisoned some, and we broke that portion of the tribe forever. But when the same atrocities are perpetrated upon the Indians by the Indians there is no imprisonment, there is no hanging, there is no reparation. The poor Indian must submit. And what is the result? The Indian must defend his family, as dear to him as my family is to me, with his bow and his spear. You compel him to live a savage, prepared to defend with his own hands or see all that he holds dear destroyed. How is he to settle down as a farmer? How is he to improve his condition?

And let me say to gentlemen on this side of the House, never since God made me was I more surprised than I was yesterday to see the body of you vote against the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPARKS] to allow an Indian when he chooses to come and be naturalized, to have the right to hold land, to have the protection of the law and the protection of the Government. I know I shall be blamed by many of you for the vote I cast. But how are you to wash your hands of this? What the Indian wants is protection. He wants to be put upon the same footing as other citizens.

I have another thing to say. There is much love for the Indian here. I want to ask that this love be shown in action. Why do you not create a territory, either by the name of Oklahoma or some other name, and allow that body of Indians there, who have advanced far toward civilization, the right of governing themselves? If you do not want to make citizens of the United States of them, in heaven's name make them citizens of the territory. Do something for them. Do not prate about it. Do not talk religion, and leave them to utter helplessness and utter destruction.

I know there is a bill before the House that proposes to turn that body of red men and partially red men over to the tender mercies of the squatters in the territory, to create the territory, but to let the squatters rule it, and take away their lands, and by law rob them of their existence. Why not put these men on the footing of other citizens, and give them the rights of other men? And then you will see whether the Indian can be civilized or not.

Here has been the mistake in all our legislation upon the subject of the Indians. I grant you that our relations with them in consequence of treaties have been peculiar, but we occupy the position of guardian and ward, as well as that of a contracting power. As between us and the great world, all this territory is ours. It is our duty to police it at least. It is just like any case in which the Territory belongs to the United States, and the eminent domain is in the people of the United States. While the title is in individuals, the law protects our citizens from an Indian; we punish an Indian if he marauds upon us, but we do not stir a step to protect the Indian and his family when assailed by red men.

Why not make the Indian a citizen in the Territory where he lives? Make him a citizen of the United States or not, as you please, but protect him by law in the region in which he lives, protect him by the laws of the United States, and then this Indian question will be solved.

I have but a minute more, but I want to say another thing. I do not believe that the Indians for the last five years have been peaceful because they were under the control of religious missionaries. There never was a greater fallacy. The missionaries have not made the Indians peaceful. Phil. Sheridan, and men like him, were the persons who made them peaceful. Where now is the great Comanche tribe which twenty years ago dominated the plains north of Texas? Sir, they are a depressed and scattered people. The game is being destroyed on the plains and the Indian has either to resort to agriculture or to be fed by the Government and to be protected or die. How can he raise flocks or cultivate farms? Suppose an Indian, an Arickaree or Mandan, should gather together a flock of one hundred head of cattle or one hundred ponies and he should attempt to go four or five miles from his home to herd them, he would lose his head in less time than a week, and probably lose his family. This is the way I understand the matter. But in the mean time let us try if we cannot do something in the interest of peace, something for the protection of the settlers, something to keep order, something for the preservation of the Indian and to enable him to attain civilization. Sir, I shall vote for this bill.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SPARKS. I now yield to my colleague on the Committee on Indian Affairs, [Mr. TUFTS.]

Mr. TUFTS. Mr. Speaker, I indorse the views of my friend from New York [Mr. TOWNSEND] in regard to civilizing and Christianizing Indians; I indorse his position as to territorializing them, &c.; but it has nothing to do with this bill. Before proceeding to discuss the measure, I desire to notice some of the points which he presented. He is opposed to ministers of the Gospel holding civil positions and has made the acquaintance of several eminent ministers in the city of Wasington, and he has heard no proposition yet to turn the affairs of this city over to them. Is he not acquainted with several very eminent military gentlemen, and has he ever heard a proposition to let them take entire charge of the city?

My friend talks about the police force which the Quakers ask for in their report; there is a police force recommended by that report, but it is to be made up entirely of the best trusted members of the tribe, and to be under the control of the Indian agents. These men, knowing the habits of their comrades, can much more easily arrest and bring for trial the bad men of the tribe than the cumbersome machine of the military, that a few Indians can, by hiding in inaccessible places, carry on war with for years. A mistaken idea has taken possession of some gentlemen that it is the intention of those who oppose this measure to withdraw the military forces from service among the Indians. This is a mistake which has been uppermost in the minds of some throughout the whole of this discussion. It is not the purpose to withdraw the military forces away from the Indian country, but to continue the present policy, that the agents themselves shall have the control of the Indians and the military to do what they were designed to do, what they were educated for—to carry out civil authority. Whenever it is proposed to turn over to the Military Department of the Government what can be carried on by the civil authorities, it is a usurpation that will result in good to nobody. The gentleman says that Phil. Sheridan was the missionary who did the work of civilizing the Indians! Very well; it is the intention of this side of the House to let Phil. Sheridan remain where he now is and work in his legitimate sphere and where he can do the most good.

Mr. Speaker, I should not have detained the House any further in the discussion of this question, but for the fact that statements have been made in regard to this matter which ought to be corrected.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BANNING] in his speech the other day said that the appropriation for the Indian service in 1848 was $874,478 and that the appropriation this year is $7,063,000. I am astonished, Mr. Speaker, that a man of the intelligence of the gentleman from Ohio should make such a statement as this, because I do not believe that he intended to mislead the House. I have the facts and figures before me from the Department, and I will ask the Clerk to read the letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs:

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, D. C., April 20, 1876.

DEAR SIR: In compliance with your request of this date, I have had carefully prepared itemized statements showing the expense of the Indian service for the present fiscal year. This statement does not include any deficiency which has been or may be provided by Congress, nor does it include any funds appropriated for the fiscal year which may remain unexpended. It will be seen that the total is $5,513,507, of which $3,439,827 is paid under treaty stipulations, leaving the total amount of expenses of Indian service outside of treaty obligations $2,073,680. You will further observe that far the greater part of the expense under this last sum is made up of items of expense in caring for Indians who were not in any way provided for by the Government prior to the transfer of the Bureau to the Interior from the War Department in 1849.

The present cost of the Indians who were not under the control of the War Department is $1,626,000; and the cost of subsisting and caring for others, together with the contingent and incidental expenses of the Department, including salaries of the superintendents and agents and of the Commissioner and clerks in his Office, is $447,680; making the total cost of the Indian service, outside of treaty obligations, as before stated, $2,073,680.

These figures are taken from the Treasury appropriation warrants, and are absolutely correct.

It is therefore difficult to see how, without annulling all treaty obligations or leaving to their own resources the Indians now cared for by the Government who were not under the control of the War Department, a saving of over $2,000,000 could be made.

The unexpended balance of funds appropriated for the current fiscal year will probably more than equal the deficiency appropriations which have been or may be asked for.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. Q. SMITH, Commissioner.

Hon. J. Q. TUFTS.

Mr. TUFTS. The facts of the case are these: Out of $5,513,507 that was appropriated—not $7,000,000, as stated by the gentleman—$3,439,827 is to carry out treaty stipulations; not for the support of the Indians, but to pay them for lands that the Government has bought of them. For pay of agents there is appropriated $158,300, and for Office of Commissioner $77,880. The fact is, that the expenses of the Indian Bureau to-day, outside of treaty stipulations, is in all but $2,073,000, instead of $7,000,000, as stated by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. BANNING.] I call attention to the following itemized statement of the expenses of the Indian Bureau for 1876:

Itemized statement of incidental and contingent expenses of Indian Bureau, for 1876, showing, first, expenditures for Indians who were not under care of the Bureau in 1849, and second, expenditures for Indians who were under care of the Bureau in 1849, together with the other incidental and contingent expenses of the Bureau.

Amount appropriated for fiscal year 1876		$1,837,500
1. Expenditures for Indians not under care of Bureau, 1849:
Captive Indians, Kansas	$300,000
Indians at Fort Berthold	85,000
Indians at Fort Peck	100,000
Indians in Indian Territory	300,000
Indians in Oregon	100,000
Indians in California	65,000
Indians in Nevada	35,000
Indians in Utah	20,000
Indians in Wyoming	5,000
Chief of Utes	1,000
Modoc and Wichita Indians	60,000
Apaches in Arizona and New Mexico	555,000
		1,626,000

2. Expenditures for Indians who were under care of Bureau in 1849, and also contingent and incidental expenses:
Payment to Flatheads	$5,000
Payment to Pawnees for lands	6,000
Subsistence of Kansas Indians	20,000
Expenses of board of Indian commissioners	15,000
Expenses of council with Indians	3,000
Incidental expenses	81,000
Civilization in central superintendency	10,090
Support of schools	7,000
Statistics and historical data	3,500
Expenses of Indian inspectors	15,000
Contingencies, repairs, &c	46,000
		$211,500
		1,837,500

RECAPITULATION.

Incidental and contingent expenses as above	$1,837,500
Pay of agents, &c., statement 1	158,300
Office of Commissioner, statement 1	77,880
Total outside treaty stipulations	2,073,680

Appropriations for Indian service in 1876.

Treaty stipulations	$3,439,827
Incidental and contingent	1,837,500
Pay of agents, &c	158,300
Office of Commissioner	77,880
Total	5,513,507

The gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. SCALES,] who opened this discussion, had a great deal to say about frauds that had been perpetrated by Indian agents. He gave the items in the different accounts of Indian agents and made some very funny showings. He said that he had found in looking up this matter an item of forty dozen pairs of elastic garters. I would not call attention to this matter now had not reference been made to it by many democratic gentlemen during this discussion. One would think they have had elastic garters as a special diet, judging from the elasticity of their statements. The gentleman from North Carolina, in place of giving it to the House as the reports give it, forty dozen pairs, says there were forty thousand garters.

Now I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the garters must have been a number one superb article, if they were as elastic as the statements of my friend from North Carolina. As the gentleman seems fond of that kind of literature, he will find in looking through the itemized accounts of Indian expenses in 1848 that there were some very interesting items, that he can carry home and show his constituents what angelic creatures the Indian Bureau was composed of before it was transferred to the Interior Department. He will find contingencies, &c., sundries, etc., tavern bill, &c., whisky, &c., furnished to the Indians under the War Department before 1849, when everything connected with the Indian service was so pure.

Again, in looking over the discussion upon this subject in the Senate during this period, I found that one Senator arose in his place and charged that one Indian account of $40,000 had been paid by the Government three times over. I will say for the credit of the pure system under which they were operating that another Senator arose in his place and, with all the virtuous indignation he could command, declared that the account had been paid but twice. [Laughter.] General MacDowell, on his oath before the Indian Committee, says that Indian affairs before the transfer from the War Department were just as corrupt as they are now.

It has been charged that there are Indian rings; the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs [Mr. SCALES] says that there are Indian rings in existence. Now that gentleman is a member of a committee of investigation, and if he believed the charge he made he ought to have gone before that committee and presented it to them, where the investigation could be carried out and the guilty parties brought to justice.

Allow me to say that politics has nothing to do to-day with the appointments in the Indian service; not a single politician has been appointed an Indian agent during the last two years. The evidence before the Committee on Military Affairs has been of military men, because, as the gentleman says, they know all about the matter. I submit that it is natural for every committee and for every Department to desire to control all that they can. We see on the floor of this House every day almost committees eternally quarreling as to who shall have control of this matter or of that, and it is but natural for the military to desire control of this Bureau.

It is said that General Sherman and other military men are in favor of this transfer. The fact is that at one time the testimony of General Sherman is one way and at another time it is another. It is a fact, however, that there is one statement he has never changed: He says that, if you want war, then turn the Indians over to the War Department; if you want peace, then leave them where they are. And Mr. Welsh says that General Sherman, whom he knows well, has no faith whatever in the policy of civilizing and christianizing the Indians.

Allow me to call attention to another fact. In the Indian Territory there are five civilized tribes; there is not a blanket Indian among them. They are an intelligent people, a civilized people. They have no particular interest in this bill, because neither the War Department nor the Interior Department has but little to do with them. Every delegate or member from those civilized tribes who has been here protests against this proposed change.

Many of these military men say that it would be a good thing for the Indian, but a bad thing for the Army, to make this transfer to the War Department. That very argument itself is enough to condemn this proposition, for if there is anything under heaven that is a curse to a nation it is a demoralized army.

Mr. EAMES. I thank the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TUFTS] for his courtesy. It is not my purpose to make any remarks of my own in relation to this bill; but I desire before the discussion closes to have incorporated in the RECORD as a part of the debate upon this question the views which are expressed by the board of Indian commissioners in the last report which they have made. Those views are my own on this question, and coming from the source they do I think they are entitled to very great respect. I send to the Clerk's desk and ask ot have read that portion of their report relating to this subject which I have marked.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the present time the proposition to turn the government of the Indians over from the Department of the Interior to the War Department is gravely discussed, and finds many adherents among those who have heretofore given but little thought to the solution of what is called the "Indian problem." The opinion of the board on this important subject having been sought, officially and otherwise, we present the following as representing our views:

It should be remembered that the Indians once owned this broad continent from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean, and that our ancestors and ourselves have acknowledged their original ownership, and have purchased and acquired by treaty and by force all the lands we now possess. On the discovery of this continent it is estimated that it was occupied by about three millions of Indians. Now there are less than two hundred and eighty thousand remaining within the limits of the United States. We have removed them, by treaties and otherwise, before the tide of white population until they are confined within a comparatively narrow space. Now, the conscience of the very large majority of our fellow-citizens insists that we should be both just and generous with them, as they are rapidly dwindling away under the adverse influences to which they are greatly exposed by vicious and greedy white men with whom they are surrounded. The only hope of saving this remnant of a noble race lies in their education, civilization, and Christianization. During the last seven years, under many difficulties of administration, there has been a set purpose to improve their condition, which has borne good fruit and has succeeded beyond any reasonable expectation, as can be established by indubitable evidence. During this time, however, there have been those who have cruelly asserted that these Indians should be exterminated to make room for white men. Such advocates are found plentifully on the borders of Indian reservations and on the march to the Black Hills. Indeed, wherever the Indian has desirable lands men of this class can be found looking eagerly for an opportunity to enter in and possess them. These men to-day are all of the opinion that the Indians should be handed over to the care of the military. There is another and more respectable class who think it the "manifest destiny" of the white race to wipe out the aborigines, and that their extinction is only a question of time. Therefore they, too, are quite in favor of putting them under military control. But the vast majority of the American people, when their attention is directed to the subject, will, under a conscientious impulse, oppose any such measure.

While we have the highest respect for the ability, courage, and humanity of our military officers, we cannot close our eyes to the fact that the men who enlist in the Army in time of peace are among the most vicious of our population; and there is unquestionable and abundant evidence, as may be seen by the correspondence published herewith, that wherever the latter are brought into close contact with the Indians, the debauchery of the women and the demoralization of the men inevitably follow. If the Army are given the charge of the Indians, the camp and the agency will be in close proximity, and bad results are certain to follow.

In addition to this, it is worthy of consideration that military rule is everywhere, and in the nature of the case must be, arbitrary. Under its supremacy, force will be brought to bear upon the Indian; this will beget resistance and end in war; and war will, of course, though white men are slain, destroy the Indian.

It can hardly be a question with thoughtful men, whether it is not better to educate the Indians, to build houses and schools and churches for them, to teach them to cultivate the soil and acquire useful trades, to civilize and Christianize them, than to hand them over to a government that we do not choose for ourselves and our children; a government that would feel no interest in and would make no effort for the advancement of those whom it governed; a government which is opposed to the genius of liberty and the progress of the race. We cannot see any benefit whatever that is likely, or even possible, to result from relegating the care of the Indian to the Army. The Army is admirable in its place, but its function is not that of civil government in a republic like ours.

Mr. SPARKS. I now yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. HANCOCK.]

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Speaker, it will be impossible in the short time allowed me to do more than take a very cursory view of the subject under consideration. The question is one of considerable moment, in fact of very great importance to the Indians, the parties to be more immediately affected by the proposed action; and that we may act understandingly, it is proper that we should contemplate the present condition of the Indians as well as the future disposition that we propose to make of them.

All must understand that situated as the Indians are, territorially and with reference to the means of subsistence, (with which nature at one time provided them in great abundance, but of which from that source they are now almost entirely deprived,) they have become to a very great degree, and as respects many of them absolutely, dependent upon the people of the United States. The Government has assumed toward them a policy that is usually termed the "peace policy," with which we have no disposition to find fault. By that peace policy it is proposed not only to feed but to civilize the Indians so far, if possible, as to make them self-supporting. It is a fact attested by every page of our history that as regards ameliorating their condition or civilizing them the people of the United States and their Government have entirely failed. The only advancement in civilization to be now found among the Indians is rather incidental than the result of any measure or line of policy adopted toward them. There is but little evidence of civilization to be found anywhere among the pure-blooded, unmixed Indians, even among the five tribes that have been alluded to; and the little civilization that they have is traceable directly to two causes—their proximity to, and frequent communication with, the whites, and the necessities that have surrounded them forcing them to a locality. Without these conditions the Creeks, Cherokees, Choctaws, Chickasaws, and Seminoles, who comprise the five tribes spoken of as further advanced in civilization than others, would probably be but little further advanced than the mass of that people. From this we might draw some conclusion to direct us in our legislation—a business that we should undertake with calmness and deliberation, and with a full understanding, if possible, of the effect that is to follow our action.

But if we wish further light, we might not refuse to draw some from a source which we are accustomed to look upon with a certain degree of contempt, especially in the exercise of the powers of Government. The only people who have succeded at all in civilizing the Indians upon this continent are those who claim to be the descendants of the Latin race. They have succeeded, and succeeded in a very eminent degree. They have pursued a course different in some respects from that which the Anglo-Saxon would adopt, and a course which the Anglo-American has repudiated wherever he has gone. We do not amalgamate with any of the inferior races; nor will we do it. Whether we are better in consequence is not a question to be considered; I state the historical fact.

But that is not the only reason, probably, why this other branch of the human family have succeded so well in civilizing the Indians. There is another feature connected with their treatment of that race which is somewhat similar to that which by circumstance was applicable to the five tribes already named. The first step that they have taken everywhere has been to localize the Indians; and, Mr. Speaker, this is a necessary step to civilize any of the savage tribes. There has never been an advance of one step toward the civilization of any savage people until they have been localized by some means that became obligatory upon them.

With these hasty allusions to analogies from which we might draw some light, let us see the present condition of the Indians over whom we have jurisdiction. Under the peace policy we are attempting to localize them, and to some extent have succeeded in doing so; but we are enabled to do so simply by the interposition of the military power. There is not, so far as I know, an Indian reservation to-day that is not under the control of a military force in near proximity or within supporting distance, unless it may be in the Territory of Dakota, where at one place the military have been taken away; but I understand a petition has gone up for their return.

I was a little astonished at the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] the other day, when he stated, if I understood him, that there were but two or three places where a military force was now used in connection with the Indian service.

Mr. GARFIELD. Districts, I said.

Mr. HANCOCK. They are used, my friend, in every district and every reservation within the whole Indian jurisdiction. The instance in Dakota where the military have been taken too far away may be said to be almost the only exception; and now from that place there is a clamor for the military to be returned. The reason, then, of my friend's change of position is dependent upon an error in his information; and if he would recognize the facts as they exist, he might entertain the same opinion upon this subject that he did in 1870 and 1871. At Fort Sill there are eight companies of United States troops and one or two Indian agents. The same is substantially true of Camp Supply and the reservation at Fort Stanton. The case is the same in Arizona, New Mexico, Dakota, Idaho, Montana, and Wyoming. The case is the same all along the Pacific coast where there are Indians in charge of the Interior Department under the jurisdiction of the Indian commissioners.

Here, then, is a practical illustration of the present working of the system. Some one has properly characterized it as duplex—partly military and partly civil. If you go to Camp Supply or Fort Sill, you find eight companies, commanded at the present time by a brigadier-general, with a colonel, a lieutenant-colonel, a major, and some forty-eight other commissioned officers, as well as an Indian agent and his assistant. The military stand off to give protection to the Indian agent while he goes on to administer the laws we pass for the purpose of controlling and managing the Indians. For doing that we not only pay him a compensation, probably not more than it should be, but we also submit to a different mode for the purchase and transportation of supplies, as well as to a different mode of distribution from that which prevails in reference to the purchase, transportation, and distribution of supplies for the Army. We say, this being the case all over the country, it is not necessary, and one mode applicable to both, and of course less expensive, should be adopted; that we have a surplus of Army officers now unemployed peculiarly fitted to discharge this business, not for the purpose of making war against the Indian, but for the purpose of enforcing a policy toward him by which he shall recognize the fact not only that he is amenable to military authority, but also that the military authority will see to it he shall receive that protection which he is entitled to under the laws, and especially that he shall receive every dollar appropriated by Congress for the amelioration of his condition. Without seeking to reflect, for I have no disposition to do so, upon the Indian Bureau or the efficiency of any officer connected with that branch of the service, I feel warranted in saying that we can confidently rely upon the Military Department of the Government, the Quartermaster, Commissary, and the Paymaster, performing these duties as well, not to say better, than the men picked up here and there, whether politicians or otherwise.

I will not controvert the statement of the gentleman that for two years there have been no political appointments, for I do not know how that is. Nor will I run off, either, to consider the true object of keeping this thing in politics. This bill proposes to take it out, and to put it under the control of a set of men removed from all political influence. I have not time, however, to pursue that branch any further.

Another objection raised to this proposition is that religious denominations object to it. That is very likely to be the result of the misrepresentations which have been indulged in. Why, to hear gentlemen speak who oppose this measure one would suppose that its purpose was to declare war and pursue the Indian to extermination. Now, on the contrary, the object, the purpose, the aim of this bill is to protect the Indian in his rights, to locate and to civilize him, to make him, as far as possible, self-sustaining, and thereby materially improve his condition.

I grant you, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, that if your object is to give to the present generation of Indians the greatest enjoyment their nature is capable of receiving, then this bill should not pass, for the greatest pleasure the Indian can enjoy—the greatest his nature is capable of enjoying—is to engage in the chase, to go out into the forest and upon the plains to pursue, if not war, all the pleasures which belong to him in a state of nature. But, sir, he is not civilized in that way. He would rather pursue that course if he can be freed from all liability and responsibility, and have some one else to supply the wants of himself and family. At the expiration of this generation, however, if you pursue that course, with the consequent diminution of numbers, the chances are that the next generation of Indians will be far less expensive than the present one. It is inevitable there must be rapid diminution of the numbers of Indians so long as the present policy is pursued. Looking, then, to his future real benefit, to his welfare, exercising toward him really and in fact that high philanthropy which seems to agonize the very soul of my friend from New York, [Mr. COX,] until, Achilles-like, he charges upon all the military of the land, it seems to me we had better pursue another course. In doing that we do not in the slightest degree propose to interfere with these religious denominations. This bill would not do so in any way. It seems, wisely enough, the committee reporting this bill anticipated a hue and cry would be got up in this regard by parties opposed to the measure, and, therefore, incorporated a special provision whereby every Christian denomination of every kind is not only permitted but invited to erect schools and churches at any and all Indian reservations it sees proper. And they are guaranteed protection in doing whatever they may deem proper in educating and Christianizing the Indians; or, if they wish to do still better, they are to be protected in whatever may tend to assist the Indians in learning the arts of peace. Civilization must commence at the foundation-stone, in compliance with that injunction placed by the Creator upon man, that he shall earn his bread by the sweat of his brow. Until he has laid that foundation, none of the savage races ever have advanced in civilization. When they have so far advanced, they are then prepared for another step—to receive the truths of Christianity. When they have learned to provide for their own support, when they have advanced in education, Christianity, and civilization, they will then be able to occupy the position of citizens, and to discharge the duties belonging to it.

Now as to the question of economy. There is one thing which is certain, that if the present system is kept up, while we do not appropriate directly as much as $8,000,000, yet in point of fact the Indian service of the Government does cost the people of the United States nearly $20,000,000.

I observe a gentleman shaking his head at my statement about the cost of the Indian service under the present system. Let me show how it is. Every regiment of United States troops now costs over $1,200,000 a year. There are over ten of them—even more; I think there are twelve—exclusively used for this service; and but for this we should have no use for them; but for this necessity we could reduce the Army as low down or lower than my friend from New York [Mr. COX] insisted upon. But so long as this system is kept up there is an absolute necessity for this military power which costs the Government of the United States the large amount of money which I have stated in addition to the direct appropriation that is made to the Indians; that is, to their agents and the special agents and the board of Indian commissioners and all the paraphernalia that are gotten up simply for the benefit of these people that seem to be taking such a deep interest in the action of Congress.

I have been here going on six years, and I have observed more lobbying about this little measure than any I have witnessed since I have been in Congress, although some measures of great importance have come up during that time. I do not mean exactly that there have not been measures about which there has been more lobbying than about this, but those measures did not directly touch the officials and they do not come upon the floor, as we have seen them day after day with reference to this bill. They did not happen to reach the agents who are occupying positions exceedingly pleasant and agreeable to them, of course not by reason of any pecuniary consideration, but because they bring them into daily association with the Indians in whose welfare they have a most lively interest. Perhaps it is on account of that we have seen this demonstration.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is one other view I desire to present. The Indian is entitled I grant you in this connection to our first consideration. For the reasons to which I have hastily alluded, it is necessary that we should give him our protection. Without it the Indians of the present generation, like their progenitors, are destined to fade away, and very speedily, too. Turn the Indian loose, and day by day he is brought in contact with those influences which hasten his extermination, and very soon will consummate it. But while we are spending this money and striving to ameliorate his condition and advance him on the plane of civilization so that he may become self-sustaining, we should not forget the interests of the border people. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] said that all the border people, except his friend from Arkansas, [Mr. WILSHIRE,] want to exterminate the Indians. The gentleman's assumption in that respect is as groundless and as little reliable as are his historical allusions, all of which were in contrariety to the facts, and especially the last one. Even after he had been set right in regard to his allusion to the condition of the people in Algeria, he made a reference to our own neighborhood, to the management of Indian affairs in Canada, desiring to leave on the minds of the House the impression which seemed to be on his own mind that the civil authorities had the charge of the Indian department of Canada, while the fact is that it has been under the charge of the military all the time, exercising absolutely monarchical power and control over the Indian. I hope his statement as to the border members will not be regarded as any more founded on fact than his historical allusions, when he says they are all in favor of the extermination of the Indians. They have given evidence of no such disposition here. They have simply advocated the policy which they believed best for the interests of those they represent as well as of the Indians, and there need be no conflict between the two.

But, placing the Indian within limits, you must each and every one of you admit that if he can be kept there and properly treated, in the course of a generation at least he will be in a very different and greatly improved condition as compared with what he is at the present time. When you do that you will be giving protection to the settler against the marauding propensity of the Indian, and you will not be having those scenes of bloodshed and rapine from which sometimes the white people upon the border are the sufferers, but which seem not to have reached the understanding, or at least not to have touched the sympathy, of the gentleman from New York.

As to the course pursued by the military toward the Indian I have nothing to say. I think it has nothing to do with that question, and that is the reason why I have nothing to say about it. It does not determine the wisdom or propriety of the course pursued here. Those were the acts of men in war, and I presume the military discharged their duty as soldiers commendably and in such a way as to deserve, as they have received, the gratitude of their country and their Government.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HANCOCK. I desire to have published as part of my remarks a letter of Professor Marsh, which I hand to the reporters.

There was no objection. The letter is as follows:

YALE COLLEGE, NEW HAVEN, April 20, 1876.

SIR: In reply to your request for my opinion as to the propriety of transferring the Indian Bureau to the War Department, I have respectfully to say that I believe the proposed change a most desirable one.

During the past eight years my explorations in the West have given me an opportunity to become acquainted with the present system of Indian management, and also to judge what this service would be if intrusted to the Army. In my judgment, the transfer should be made without delay, for the following reasons:

First. Economy. The Government has now very perfect machinery for furnishing the Army on the frontier with food, clothing, and pay, and by the same means could easily supply the Indians also. The present system for supplying the Indians is loose and irresponsible, and tends to invite fraud. I believe the Government could save one-half of the annual appropriation for the Indians if the latter were under the War Department.

Second. Peace on the frontier would be greatly promoted by the change. Indians have a great respect for visible power, and this alone would often prevent disorder. A proper census of the Indians, now impossible, could be made, and all would be kept on their reservations, thus avoiding one of the most frequent sources of hostilities. There would then be no conflict of authority, as now, between agents and Army officers and no promises made that could not be kept.

Third. The best interests of the Indians themselves demand the change. What the Indians now need especially is justice and a firm, uniform policy. I am convinced that these can best be secured under Army management. Officers of the Army, as a class, are not unfriendly to the Indians, and those on the frontier are good judges of Indian character. Many of them take a deep interest in all that pertains to the welfare of the Indians. All efforts to improve and civilize the Indians could be made even better under Army officers than now, and I feel confident that the true interests of both the Indians and the Government would be advanced by the proposed change

I remain, with high respect, very truly yours,

O. C. MARSH.

General H. B. BANNING,
Chairman of Committee on Military Affairs,
House of Representatives.

Mr. GARFIELD. In answer to the criticism of my friend from Texas, [Mr. HANCOCK,] I quote the following paragraph from the recent letter of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs:

It is safe to assert that the days of Indian wars are almost over; throughout the wide West there is now peace. There are but two points along our borders where it would seem possible to provoke an open conflict, except by extreme hard usage. One of these is among the northern Sioux and the other with the most southerly tribe of Apaches. Of course there are marauding Indians as there are marauding white men, and generally from the same cause, namely, outlawry and vagabondism. This general peace is partly due to the fact that the Indian, pushed on all sides, deprived by fair means and foul of lands and game, has at last been brought to acknowledge both his helplessness and his dependence. During the past year the Sioux, the most powerful tribe on the continent, have borne unresistingly provocations which five years ago would have lighted the fires of an Indian war.

Mr. WALLING. Not having had an opportunity to deliver the remarks I had prepared in opposition to this bill, I ask leave to have them printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as part of the debates.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is first on the pending amendments, which the Clerk will read.

Mr. RANDALL. I would suggest that where a separate vote is not called for the amendments shall be considered as adopted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will inquire if any gentleman desires a separate vote on any of the amendments?

Mr. PAGE. I would like to hear the amendments read.

The amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union upon which no separate vote was asked for were read and agreed to.

The Clerk read the following amendment:

Insert as section 10 the following:

That whenever any Indian belonging to any organized Indian tribe or nation having treaty relations with the United States shall desire to become a citizen of the United States, he may become such citizen by appearing in open court in the United States district court nearest to the reservation of his tribe or nation and making proof to the satisfaction of said court that he is sufficiently intelligent and prudent to control his own affairs and interests, that he has adopted the habits of civilized life and has for at least five years been able to support himself and family, and by taking an oath to support the Constitution of the United States: Provided, That no Indian who avails himself of the provision of this act shall on that account forfeit any interest which he may have in any improvement or other property in the reservation of the tribe or nation to which he may have belonged; nor shall such act in any manner impair his rights and interests in the lands, claims, or other property belonging, or which may hereafter belong, to his tribe or nation.

Mr. PAGE. I would ask the gentleman who reported this bill if that amendment does not change the existing law?

Mr. SPARKS. I do not know whether it does or not.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The question was on the passage of the bill.

Mr. WILSHIRE and others demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 130, nays 94, not voting 66; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ainsworth, Anderson, Atkins, Bagby, George A. Bagley, Banning, Beebe, Bell, Bland, Blount, Boone, Bradford, Bright, John Young Brown, William R. Brown, Samuel D. Burchard, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, Candler, Cate, Caulfield, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, Clymer, Cook, Cowan, Crounse, Culberson, Davis, De Bolt, Dibrell, Douglas, Durham, Egbert, Faulkner, Finley, Forney, Fort, Franklin, Fuller, Gause, Gibson, Glover, Goode, Goodin, Gunter, Andrew H. Hamilton, Robert Hamilton, Hancock, Hardenbergh, John T. Harris, Harrison, Hartzell, Hatcher, Henkle, Hereford, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Hoge, Hooker, Hopkins, Hunton, Hurd, Hurlbut, Jenks, Thomas L. Jones, Kasson, Lamar, George M. Landers, Lane, Levy, Lewis, Lord, Luttrell, L. A. Mackey, Maish, McMahon, Meade, Metcalfe, Mills, Money, Morrison, Mutchler, O'Brien, Odell, Parsons, Payne, Phelps, John F. Philips, Piper, Plaisted, Randall, Rea, Reagan, John Reilly, James B. Reilly, Rice, Riddle, John Robbins, William M. Robbins, Roberts, Sayler, Scales, Schleicher, Sheakley, William E. Smith, Southard, Springer, Strait, Stenger, Stone, Teese, Thomas, Thornburgh, Throckmorton, Martin I. Townsend, Turney, Robert B. Vance, Waddell, Charles C. B. Walker, Gilbert C. Walker, Alexander S. Wallace, Walsh, Ward, Erastus Wells, Whiting, Wigginton, Wike, Alpheus S. Williams, Jeremiah N. Williams, Fernando Wood, and Woodburn—130.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, John H. Bagley, jr., John H. Baker, William H. Baker, Blair, Buckner, Horatio C. Burchard, William P. Caldwell, Cason, Chittenden, Cochrane, Conger, Cutler, Danford, Darrall, Davy, Denison, Dobbins, Dunnell, Eames, Ely, Evans, Felton, Freeman, Frost, Frye, Garfield, Hale, Haralson, Henry R. Harris, Hathorn, Hendee, Henderson, Abram S. Hewitt, Hoar, Holman, Hoskins, Hunter, Hyman, Kehr, Kelley, Ketchum, Lapham, Lawrence, Leavenworth, Lynch, Edmund W. M. Mackey, Magoon, MacDougall, McCrary, McDill, McFarland, Milliken, Monroe, Neal, New, Norton, Oliver, O'Neill, Page, Pierce, Platt, Potter, Pratt, Rainey, Robinson, Rusk, Sampson, Savage, Sinnickson, Siemons, A. Herr Smith, Stevenson, Stowell, Tarbox, Thompson, Tufts, Van Vorhes, John L. Vance, Wait, Waldron, John W. Wallace, Walling, G. Wiley Wells, White, Willard, Charles G. Williams, William B. Williams, Willis, Wilshire, James Wilson, Woodworth, Yeates, and Young—94.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Ashe, Ballou, Banks, Barnum, Bass, Blackburn, Blaine, Bliss, Bradley, Burleigh, Campbell, Cannon, Caswell, Chapin, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Collins, Cox, Crapo, Durand, Eden, Ellis, Farwell, Foster, Benjamin W. Harris, Hartridge, Haymond, Hays, Hill, House, Hubbell, Frank Jones, Joyce, Kimball, King, Knott, Franklin Landers, Lynde, Miller, Morey, Morgan, Nash, Packer, William A. Phillips, Poppleton, Powell, Purman, Miles Ross, Sobieski Ross, Schumaker, Seelye, Singleton, Smalls, Sparks, Swann, Terry, Washington Townsend, Tucker, Warren, Wheeler, Whitehouse, Whitthorne, Andrew Williams, James Williams, James D. Williams, Benjamin Wilson, and Alan Wood, jr.—66.

So the bill was passed.

During the roll-call,

Mr. ELLIS said: I desire to state that upon this question I am paired with Mr. ROSS, of New Jersey; if he were here he would vote "ay" and I would vote "no."

Mr. A. S. WILLIAMS. I desire to state that my colleague, Mr. DURAND, is absent by leave of the House; if present he would vote "ay."

Mr. SPARKS. I desire to say that I am paired upon this question with the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. SEELYE; if he were present he would vote "no" and I would vote "ay."

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I am paired upon this question with the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. CANNON; if he were present he would vote "no" and I would vote "ay."

I desire also to say that Mr. WHITEHOUSE is paired with Mr. FOSTER on this question; if Mr. WHITEHOUSE were here he would vote "ay" and Mr. FOSTER would vote "no."

Mr. JAMES B. REILLY. I desire to state that my colleague, Mr. ALAN WOOD, is absent by leave of the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am requested to state that the gentleman from New York, Mr. COX, is paired upon this question with the gentleman from Virginia, Mr. TERRY.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I desire to state that I am paired upon this question with my colleague, Mr. EDEN.

Mr. EAMES. I wish to announce to the House that my colleague, Mr. BALLOU, is absent by leave of the House; if here he would vote "no."

Mr. MORGAN. I am paired upon this question with Mr. CASWELL, of Wisconsin; if Mr. CASWELL were present he would "no" and I would vote "ay."

Mr. CONGER. My colleague, Mr. BRADLEY, is absent on account of important business; if he were here he would vote "no."

Mr. CLARKE, of Kentucky. My colleague, Mr. BLACKBURN, is absent from the House on account of sickness.

Mr. RAINEY. My colleague, Mr. SMALLS, is absent by leave of the House; if present he would vote "no."

Mr. FULLER. I wish to state that Mr. HAYMOND is absent from the House on account of sickness.

Mr. ATKINS. I desire to state that my colleague, Mr. WHITTHORNE, is absent on business by leave of the House.

Mr. HARDENBERGH. My colleague, Mr. ROSS, is absent on account of sickness.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. SPARKS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOHN R. WATKINS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting all the papers on file in the claim of John R. Watkins for property alleged to have been taken during the war; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims.

A. H. HICKS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, in response to an inquiry from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, relative to the claim of A. H. Hicks, pilot of the Queen of the West; which was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

NAPOLEON B. GIDDINGS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, in response to a request from the Committee on Military Affairs, relative to the claim of Napoleon B. Giddings for powder taken from him in 1847 at Santa Fé, New Mexico; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

WOOD AT CHEYENNE AGENCY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting copies of papers in the case of Captain Davis, relative to a contract for wood at the Cheyenne agency; which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department.

W. T. BUCK.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting the report of the Adjutant-General on the case of W. T. Buck, Company B, Seventieth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

JESSE H. WEIRICK.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting papers relating to the claim of Jesse H. Weirick for services as a clerk in the Quartermaster's Department; which was referred to the Committee of Claims.

GEORGE S. GUSTIN.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report of the Adjutant-General on House bill No. 2533, for the relief of George S. Gustin, Company D, Seventy-fourth Illinois Volunteers; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SYLVESTER D. AND SUSAN WILLARD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting papers relating to the claim of Sylvester D. Willard and Susan Willard, for rent and damage of property at Murfreesborough, Tennessee, during the war; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Delaware, was granted leave of absence until Wednesday next.

Mr. CASWELL was granted leave of absence for ten days on account of important business.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois, was granted leave of absence for ten days on account of important business.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania, was granted leave of absence for one week on account of the death of a friend.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House now adjourn.

MERCHANT SEAMEN.

Pending the motion to adjourn,

Mr. WARD, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on Commerce a bill (H. R. No. 3187) to amend title 53 of the Revised Statutes, relating to merchant seamen; which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed, and recommitted to the Committee on Commerce.

SEA-STORES IN BOND.

Mr. FROST, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3188) to authorize the purchase and consumption of sea-stores in bond; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

CANAL FROM KENTUCKY TO THE SEA.

Mr. WHITE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3189) authorizing the survey of a canal-route to extend the slack-water navigation of the Kentucky River to the sea via the South Fork of the Kentucky River, Richland Creek, Cumberland River, Yellow Creek, Cumberland Gap, and the Yellow, Tennessee, Hiawassee, and Savannah Rivers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

TARIFF.

Mr. WHITE also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3190) to amend section 2505 of the Revised Statutes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

MARY J. LEBOW.

Mr. MORGAN, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3191) for the relief of Mary J. Lebow; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL IRON-MOLDERS' UNION.

Mr. STENGER, from the Committee on Education and Labor, by unanimous consent, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 243) to incorporate the National Iron-Molders' Union; and moved that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the same, and that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL,] that the House now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock and thirty-five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. ANDERSON: The petition of citizens of Illinois, in relation to the manufacture and sale of stamped envelopes by the Government, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. ATKINS: Papers relating to the petition of H. Johnson and others, citizens of Henderson, Madison, and McNairy Counties, Tennessee, for the refunding of taxes illegally collected from them, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. BLAIR: The petition of Charles W. Lolley and 100 others, for a change in the pension laws so as to increase pensions for those who have lost an arm below the elbow or a leg below the knee, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. O'BRIEN: The petition of 35 business men and firms of Baltimore, against tariff changes, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. O'NEILL: Memorial of the Board of Trade of Philadelphia, urging the permanent organization of the Signal Service and adequate appropriations for its maintenance, to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. PIPER: Resolutions of the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco, California, urging the passage of the bill providing for carrying into effect the treaty with the Hawaiian Islands, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. RIDDLE: The petition of J. Bloomstein, for compensation for goods taken and for damages sustained on account of imprisonment by the United States military authorities, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. RUSK: The petition of Leopold Schmidt, by his guardian, Jacob Weidemann, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SOUTHARD: Memorial of A. F. Cassell and 140 other citizens of Zanesville, Ohio, against any change in the tariff laws at the present time, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. WALKER, of New York: The petition of Sally A. Smith, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, the petition of Zenas Bradley, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of citizens of the twenty-ninth district of New York, for the transfer of land adjoining the Brooklyn navy-yard to that city, for a public market, to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. WALSH: The petition of William Walter, for compensation for property taken by United States troops, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. WIKE: The petition of Barney and Hugh McKenna, that steps be taken to secure the release of Edward O'M. Condon, confined in a British prison as a political prisoner, to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Also, the petition of E. O. Cochran and others, relative to the rights of settlers on the Des Moines River lands, Iowa, to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. WILLIAMS, of Indiana: The petition of 115 citizens of Dubois County, for a post-route from Huntingburgh, via Brentsville and Saint Anthony, to Schnellville, Dubois County, Indiana, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Rroads.

Also, joint resolutions of the General Assembly of Indiana, favoring the passage of a law granting, without favor or discrimination, to those who served in the Mexican war for a period of sixty days or more, and were honorably discharged, the sum of $8 per month during their natural lives, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WOODWORTH: The petition of Henry S. King and 78 other citizens of Columbiana County, Ohio, that existing tariff laws be not disturbed, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

The following petitions and papers have been presented at the Clerk's desk, under the rule, without having indorsed thereon the name of any member of the House, and referred as stated:

The petition of William Wheeler Hubbell, for the establishment of a commercial money currency equal to gold and silver coin, to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The petition of citizens of Iowa, for a post-route from Prairie View to Westerville, Iowa, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

The petition of Thomas K. Davis, for a rehearing of his claim rejected by the southern claims commission, to the Committee on War Claims.

The petition of the clergy of South Washington for the removal of the Baltimore and Potomac and the Orange, Alexandria and Manassas Railways from Maryland and Virginia avenues and Sixth street southwest, to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

Three petitions of vessel-owners and others, protesting against the passage of House bill No. 523, to the Committee on Commerce.

The petition of William Zantzinger, secretary of the rear-admiral commanding United States naval forces Asiatic station, for relief, to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The petition of soldiers of the late war, for the equalization of bounties, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The petition of Amasa T. C. Dodge, for compensation for damages to his property by the District of Columbia board of public works, to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

Memorial of John J. Johnson and 106 other members of the bar of Washington, District of Columbia, relative to the license tax on members of the legal profession, to the same committee.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, April 22, 1876.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. I. L. TOWNSEND.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

MERCHANT SEAMEN.

Mr. WARD. I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill (H. R. No. 3187) to amend title 53 of the Revised Statutes relating to merchant seamen was yesterday recommitted to the Committee on Commerce.

CERTIFICATES OF DISTRICT BOARD OF AUDIT.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Second Comptroller of the Treasury, transmitting, in conformity with the joint resolution of March 14, 1876, the register of certificates issued by the board of audit of the District of Columbia; which, with the accompanying documents, was referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

ELECTION CONTEST—LEE VS. RAINEY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House testimony in behalf of the sitting member in the contested-election case of Lee vs. Rainey, from the first congressional district of South Carolina; which was referred to the Committee of Elections.

RIGHTS OF CITIZENS ABROAD.

Mr. FAULKNER. I ask unanimous consent that the bill which was made a special order for to-day after the morning hour may be now taken up for consideration. In this request I have the concurrence of gentlemen interested in the business of the morning hour. If the bill be taken up, I wish to offer some amendments from the Committee on Foreign Affairs and then to explain the provisions of the bill, after which I shall be content that the bill lie over for further consideration.

The SPEAKER. By order of the House the bill (H. R. No. 2245) to carry into execution the provisions of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution concerning citizenship and to define certain rights of citizens of the United States in foreign countries and certain duties of diplomatic and consular officers, and for other purposes, was made a special order for to-day after the morning hour and from day to day until disposed of. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] now asks unanimous consent that, dispensing with the morning hour, the House proceed at once to the consideration of the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That for the purposes of this act, the words "domicile" and "reside" are to be construed as implying a fixed residence at a particular place, with direct or presumptive proof of an intent to remain indefinitely.

SEC. 2. That in order to assure to all persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, the full enjoyment of the right to be citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside, it is hereby declared:

First. That all persons shall be regarded as entitled to the privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States and as subject to the duties imposed upon such citizens who may have been born and are residing within the United States and subject to the jurisdiction thereof; and also all married women whose husbands may be such citizens as against all powers except the power within whose jurisdiction an alien woman married to a citizen of the United States may have been born and shall continue to reside. But a child born within the United States of parents who are not citizens and who do not reside within the United States, and who are not subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, shall not be regarded as a citizen thereof, unless such child shall reside in the United States, or unless his or her father, or, in case of the death of the father, his or her mother, shall be naturalized during the minority of such child, or such child shall, within six months after becoming of age, file in the Department of State, in such form and with such proof as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of State, a written declaration of election to become such citizen, or shall become naturalized under general laws.

Secondly. A child born abroad, whose father may be a citizen of the United States and subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, shall be regarded as a citizen of the United States at the time of birth, and shall follow and have the domicile and citizenship of the father during minority.

Third. The following persons shall be regarded as not subject to the jurisdiction of the United States within the intent of the said fourteenth amendment, or as not residing within the United States, within such intent, namely: First, citizens of the United States who become naturalized as citizens or subjects of another state, or who, in any foreign country, enter into the civil, naval, or military service of any foreign prince or state, or of any colony, district, or people foreign to the United States, while such service continues; secondly, citizens of the United States who may be domiciled abroad, unless registered as hereinafter provided; commercial establishments shall not be regarded as creating a domicile unless made with an intent not to return; citizens of the United States engaged in them may, by registering themselves as hereinafter provided, preserve presumptive proof of intent to return; thirdly, naturalized citizens of the United States who may, by the terms of any treaty, be regarded as having resumed their original nationality; fourthly, a citizen of the United States becoming the wife of an alien who shall not reside within the United States; but such citizen may, on the death of her husband, become again a citizen of the United States by residing within one of the States or Territories, and becoming subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, and filing in the Department of State, in such form as may be prescribed by the Secretary of State, a written declaration of her election to become such citizen.

SEC. 3. That citizens of the United States who are, or may hereafter be, domiciled in a foreign country may, if adults, within six months of the time of first acquiring such domicile, and if minors, within six months after becoming of age, register themselves as such citizens at the legation of the United States in the country in which they may be domiciled, or if there be no such legation, then at a consulate to be designated by the Secretary of State. The registry shall be made by a written declaration signed by the person making it, stating in full his name, and the place and date of his birth; if naturalized, the time and place of his naturalization; his place of previous domicile in the United States; how long since he actually resided in the United States; whether he intends to return; if married, the name and nationality of his wife and the names and ages of his minor children, if any, and the dates and places of their birth. The diplomatic or consular representatives of the United States, as the case may be, shall, at the close of each calendar year, make return to the Department of State of such registries in such form as the Secretary of State may direct, and the Secretary of State shall annually transmit copies of such returns to Congress; and citizens of the United States of adult age, who shall remain out of the jurisdiction of the United States, and within the jurisdiction of some other power, continuously for two years, shall be held as domiciled in a foreign country, except as herein before provided.

SEC. 4. That the foregoing provisions of this act shall not be construed as affecting the right of inheritance or succession to real or personal property in any State. Within the Territories and within the domain subject to the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States real and personal property of every description may be taken, acquired, held, and disposed of by an alien in the same manner in all respects as by a citizen of the United States; and a title to real and personal property of every description may be derived through, from, or in succession to an alien in the same manner in all respects as through, from, or in succession to a citizen of the United States.

SEC. 5. That a marriage in a foreign country between citizens of the United States, or between a citizen of the United States and an alien, unless forbidden by the law of the country in which it takes place, may be contracted and solemnized in such manner and form as may be prescribed by the Secretary of State, in the presence of the principal diplomatic agent of the United States in such country, or of a consul-general or consul for the district in which it takes place, and shall in such case have full force and effect, and shall be valid to all intents and purposes throughout the United States. It is made the duty of such diplomatic agent or consul-general or consul, on being satisfied of the identity of the parties, and that at least one of them is a citizen of the United States, and that the marriage is not prohibited by the laws of the country, and on being requested to be present at any such marriage, to indicate a time and place when and where it may be solemnized in his presence, and to be present at such time and place, and when the marriage shall have been solemnized, to give to each party a certificate thereof, in such form as may be prescribed by the Secretary of State. At the close of each calendar year, he shall make a return to the Secretary of State of all marriages so contracted or solemnized in his presence within the year, showing, with respect to each party, the name, the age, the place and date of nativity, the place of residence, and such other facts as he may think necessary. Section 31 of the act of June 22, 1860, entitled "An act to carry into effect provisions of the treaties between the United States, China, Japan, Siam, Persia, and other countries, giving certain judicial power to ministers and consuls or other functionaries of the United States in those countries, and for other purposes," is hereby repealed.

Mr. FAULKNER. I now submit, in accordance with the recommendation of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, the amendments which I send to the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

First, amend second section, ninth line, by inserting after the word "born" the words "or naturalized."

Second, strike from the second section thereof, commencing with the words "and also all," in the tenth line, page 2, all down to and including the word "reside," in the fourteenth line thereof.

Third, strike from the same section, commencing with the word "fourthly," in the fiftieth line, page 3, all down to the end of the section.

Fourth. Insert in the same section, after the thirty-second line, page 3, the following new subdivision:

"Thirdly. A married woman shall be deemed to be a citizen or subject of the State of which her husband is for the time being a citizen or subject; but an alien woman, married to a citizen of the United States, shall not, while within the jurisdiction of the country of her nativity, be entitled to claim the protection of the United States as against the country of her nativity, unless by the laws of such country her marriage to an alien divests her of her natural allegiance. A citizen of the United States who has become the wife of an alien may, on the death of her husband, become again a citizen of the United States, by residing within the United States and becoming subject to the jurisdiction thereof, and by filing in the Deparment of State, in such form as may be prescribed by the Secretary of State, a declaration of her election to become such citizen."

Fifth. Strike from the fifth section, commencing with the twenty-seventh line all down to and including the thirty-second line, and insert "4082 of the Revised Statutes is."

Sixth. Strike out from the ninth line of section 5 the word "full" and insert the words "the same;" in line 10, after the word "be," insert the word "as;" from the same line strike out the word "throughout" and insert the words "as if solemnized within."

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman from West Virginia allow me to offer a substitute for this bill or to give notice of it?

Mr. FAULKNER. Certainly.

Mr. COX. The bill, I understand, is not to be voted on to-day; and as it will go over, I would like to have my substitute printed.

The SPEAKER. If the substitute is to be offered, it had better be submitted now.

The substitute was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and insert the following:

That any citizen of the United States who has at any time before, or may at any time after, the passing of this act voluntarily become naturalized as a citizen or subject of a foreign state, or who in any foreign country shall enter into the civil, naval, or military service of any foreign prince or state, shall cease to be a citizen of the United States, and be regarded as an alien. Such person may be re-admitted to citizenship in the manner prescribed by law for the naturalization of aliens: Provided, That a citizen of the United States, having become the wife of an alien, may on the death of her husband become again a citizen of the United States, by appearing in person before any court of record of any State or Territory having common-law jurisdiction, and a seal and clerk or prothonotary, or before any circuit or district court of the United States, and producing satisfactory proof of her citizenship before marriage and of the death of her alien husband, and filing a written declaration under oath of her intention to again become a citizen of the United States, which proceedings, together with the order of the court thereon, shall be recorded by the clerk of the court.

SEC. 2. That nothing contained in the preceding section shall be construed as affecting the right of inheritance or succession to real or personal property in any State or Territory in the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.) The question first recurs on the amendments to the bill submitted by the Committee on Foreign Affairs; and if there be no objection the question will be taken upon them in gross.

There was no objection, and the amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now recurs on the substitute submitted by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX.]

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I did not know it was intended by the gentleman from West Virginia, who has charge of this bill, to ask for a vote upon the amendments or for any action at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendments reported from the committee have been agreed to.

Mr. O'BRIEN. The amendments were not read from the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. They were stated by the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I did not understand the amendments reported from the committee were to be voted on before they were printed. I hope the gentleman will not take advantage of what has taken place as it were without objection, but, on the contrary, that he will allow the question to be reconsidered.

Mr. FAULKNER. What question?

Mr. O'BRIEN. Why, the question on the amendments.

Mr. FAULKNER. They are amendments which the Committee on Foreign Affairs have asked to be put to their own bill, and surely no gentleman will object to the committee amending their own bill.

Mr. O'BRIEN. That will depend very much on what the amendments are.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendments have been agreed to, and the gentleman from West Virginia is entitled to the floor.

Mr. FAULKNER. Mr. Speaker, the questions presented by this bill do not possess that domestic interest which usually attaches to the legislation of this House, and they are especially devoid of those sectional and political fascinations which seem to exercise so powerful a sway over the attention of this body. They are nevertheless worthy of its careful consideration.

The President of the United States, in his two annual messages to the last Congress, and again in his annual message to the present Congress, has invited our attention to the necessity of some appropriate legislation upon the subjects embraced in this bill. So in like manner the attention of the Committee on Foreign Affairs has, during the present session, been directed by the Department of State to the propriety of legislation on this subject. The extensive correspondence which the Secretary of State necessarily has with our ministers and consuls abroad has made him familiar with the embarrassments and perplexities which have resulted from the want of some precise and well-defined rules regulating many constantly-recurring questions of nationality; and an effort has been made in this bill so to define and prescribe these rules as to produce more uniformity of doctrine between ourselves and those nations with whom we have intercourse, and to relieve this subject from some of the difficulties which now surround it.

I desire here in limine to remark that this bill in no respect conflicts with the right of expatriation. That we recognize as a fundamental doctrine of our free Government. We claim, indeed, to have been the first nation—certainly in modern times—to have recognized this principle in practice; and while many of our most eminent and distinguished jurists, trammeled by the feudal principles derived from the common law of England, have maintained the doctrine of perpetual allegiance, yet from the earliest history of this Government the executive department in its intercourse with foreign nations has maintained the doctrine of expatriation, and the question is now forever set at rest by an act of Congress passed in July, 1868, declaring it a fundamental doctrine of this Government. It will therefore be found that this bill, so far from conflicting with that recognized doctrine, if liable to any objection on that score at all, is subject to the charge of too great facility in enabling American citizens to throw off their national character.

Again, sir, this bill makes no distinction of any kind between native-born and naturalized citizens. It places them all upon the same footing of perfect equality which the Constitution, laws, and policy of this country designed that they should occupy; and we adopt in its fullest extent the principle embraced in the act of July 27, 1868, that all naturalized citizens of the United States, while in foreign states, shall be entitled to and shall receive from this Government the same protection of persons and property that is accorded to native-born citizens in like situations and circumstances.

Again, sir, this bill in defining citizenship does not propose to affect in any manner the rights of inheritance or succession to real or personal property in any State, but leaves those questions to be determined by the law regulating such subjects in the several States. The main and leading purpose of this bill is to prescribe the law by which the personal rights of American citizens may be ascertained and determined in foreign countries, and to furnish our ministers and consuls abroad the rules by which they shall be governed in determining the status and personal rights of those citizens when called upon in the discharge of the delicate duty which so often devolves upon them of vindicating and protecting those rights by the power of this Government.

I now propose to present some general remarks explanatory of the objects and provisions of this bill. I will then have it read by sections, when it will be open to amendment and for such detailed explanation of its provisions as may be required by any member of this House.

It must strike every gentleman who has given the least attention to this subject that nothing can more contribute to the peace of nations and to the comfort of the people than uniformity of doctrine and decision among the Christian and civilized nations of the world upon all questions of private international law touching personal rights and, I might add, property. But this bill relates alone to personal rights. Unfortunately, in this connection, England and the United States have drawn their systems of jurisprudence from sources differing from those of the continental nations of Europe. While the latter have largely based their jurisprudence within the last half century upon the broad and comprehensive principles of the Roman civil law, and the Code Napoléon, which is itself largely based upon the Pandects of Justinian, England has been governed by the narrow, technical, and feudal principles of the common law, all of which we have inherited rather than adopted from the mother-country. Perpetual allegiance, nationality by locality of birth, the exclusion of the wife from the nationality of the husband, are all doctrines of feudal origin which England has abandoned only within the last few years and upon which we have but partially legislated within a recent period. The tendency of modern progress is to attain to something like uniformity upon all these doctrines, and throwing aside all effete, obsolete, and merely prescriptive views of these questions, to base our doctrines upon the broad and comprehensive principles of right, justice, and common sense. Hereditary error, though founded in the sanction of centuries, is rapidly disappearing before the lights which knowledge and international intercourse are casting over the practical affairs of life. At no former period of the world has this social and commercial intercourse between nations been so intimate and extensive. Commerce has become universal; the means of travel have become so extended, cheapened, and facilitated; the tide of immigration is so largely mingling the elements of different nationalities; Europe and America have become, by means of steam, so much like one vast family, that all must see not merely the theoretical but the practical value of uniformity and harmony upon these heretofore controverted questions of nationality among the civilized nations of the earth.

It is gratifying to observe the rapid diffusion of liberal ideas among the nations of Europe within the last half century. There is scarcely now one nation on that continent that does not open its arms to receive foreigners into the bosom of its society, with privileges almost equal to native-born citizens. There is not one, England included, that does not permit aliens to hold real and personal estate and transmit it by inheritance or devise. There is not one that does not recognize, to some extent, the rights of expatriation and emigration, where half a century ago these doctrines were received with distaste and abhorrence. Such, then, is the progress of modern civilization upon these points; and we may well anticipate that, by means of treaties, legislation, and the efforts of those learned international societies which are specially directing their attention to this subject, we shall in a few years see a perfect uniformity of doctrine upon all essential points of nationality, and thus one of the most ordinary causes of international discord will be forever removed.

The first section of this bill defines the sense in which the words "domicile" and "reside" are to be received throughout all its provisions. It is important to bear this definition in mind, otherwise the true intent and character of the bill will be misconceived. Many definitions of domicile may be found in the writings of our public jurists, but that has been selected which has the merit of being called the "American definition," and which is preferred even by Sir Robert Phillimore and other distinguished European writers. It is "a residence at a particular place, accompanied with positive or presumptive proof of an intention to remain there for an unlimited time." In this bill the essential part of that definition is the purpose not to return and intention to remain for an unlimited or indefinite period of time.

The second section, after prescribing who shall be regarded as entitled to the privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States as prescribed by the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution, then proceeds to touch upon some of those points of private international law which at one time were the subjects of great diversity in the doctrine and practice of nations.

First, then, in regard to married women: In every country except where the common law of England prevails, the nationality of a woman on marriage merges in that of the husband; she loses her own nationality and acquires his; whereas, by the common law, an English woman, marrying an alien, still remains a British subject. The law in this country was the same; an American woman, married to a foreigner, retained her American nationality. This common-law doctrine was changed in England by an act of Parliament passed in 1870, as it has been to a certain extent modified in the United States by the act of Congress of 1855. With the passage of the present bill, the doctrine may be considered as settled and alike accepted and adopted by all Christian and civilized nations, that the nationality of a married woman is merged in that of her husband. I know of no exception to this doctrine in any nation of Europe.

The same section touches upon the controverted question of nationality by birth.

Nationality by birth is in some countries determined by the mere locality where the child happens to be born; in others it is determined by descent, or by the national character of the parents without regard to the place of birth. By the common law of England nationality by birth is determined by the locality in which the child is born; so that every person born within the dominions of the Crown, no matter whether of English or foreign parents, and no matter whether the parents were only temporarily sojourning or visiting in the country, and no matter whether the father had ever set his foot upon English soil, was an English subject. No effect whatever was given to descent as a source of nationality. Such, also, has been the fixed American doctrine, derived from the common law of England, except so far as it has been partially modified by the act of Congress of 1855.

This rule of determining nationality by locality of birth was of purely feudal origin. It belonged to the adscripti glebæ, and was originally established in England as suitable to the isolated position of that island and to the absence of intercourse of foreign nations in Norman times. This was also the prevailing doctrine of Europe until the French revolution, when, under the influence of the Code Napoléon, it was discarded as a sound principle by the continental nations. A vigorous effort was made in 1868 by the minority of the learned commission appointed by the Queen of Great Britain to inquire into the law of naturalization and allegiance to abrogate the English principle altogether and to conform English legislation to the doctrines on the continent. That minority only succeeded partially in ingrafting their views upon the legislation of Great Britain. We have to some extent conformed to continental theory and practice in our act of 1855. The provisions of the present bill upon that subject are based upon the principles recognized by our statute of 1855, and now, as I before remarked, universally adopted upon the continent of Europe. This bill provides that a child born within the United States of parents who are not citizens and who do not reside within one of the States or Territories, and who are not subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, shall not be regarded as a citizen thereof, unless such child shall reside in the United States and unless his or her father shall be naturalized during the minority of such child, or unless such child shall, within six months after becoming of age, file in the Department of State, in such form and with such proofs as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of State, a written declaration of election to become such citizen or shall become naturalized under general laws.

It further provides that a child born abroad, whose father may be a citizen of the United States residing in one of the States or Territories, shall be regarded as a citizen of the United States; thus discarding in the two cases referred to the doctrine of nationality by locality of birth, and adopting that of nationality by descent.

The same section proceeds to declare who shall not be regarded as citizens of the United States. They are—

First. Such as have become naturalized as citizens or subjects of another state. This proposition is too plain to require any explanation.

Secondly. Such as while in a foreign country shall enter into the civil, naval, or military service of any foreign prince or state. This does not affect that class of men who, living in this country, accept consulates or other similar appointments from foreign governments. It applies only to those who leave the country, and while abroad enter into such foreign service. But so soon as they retire from such foreign service, and return to this country, they are remitted to their rights of American citizenship.

Thirdly. Such as may be domiciled abroad without intent to return to the United States, unless they shall repel the presumption arising from this foreign domicile by registering themselves as American citizens in the mode prescribed by this bill.

Fourthly. Naturalized citizens of the United States who may, by the terms of any treaty, be regarded as having resumed their original nationality.

Now I approach that provision of this bill which will incur most opposition, at least I so infer from the remarks of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX,] who, when I reported this bill from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, took occasion to express himself in strong reprobation of that feature of it.

This section—the third—provides that born or naturalized citizens of the United States who are or may be domiciled in a foreign country may register themselves as such citizens at the legation of the United States in the country in which they may be domiciled, or if there be no such legation, then at a consulate to be designated by the Secretary of State.

The bill further provides the mode and details of such registry, and requires the diplomatic or consular representative of the United States, as the case may be, at the close of each calendar year to make return to the Department of State of such registries, and directs the Secretary of State annually to transmit copies of such returns to Congress.

Now, sir, we have been told by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX,] and probably shall be told so again, that there is something degrading in requiring an American citizen to register himself at a legation or consulate. Degrading! How can such an act be degrading? Besides, sir, to what class of American citizens does this requisition apply? Is it required of the thousands who every year crowd our steamships and visit Europe, Asia, and the isles of the sea for the purposes of health, pleasure, education, or business? Certainly not, sir; and while the vast majority of these persons would do better to spend their superfluous cash in visiting the unequaled scenery and attractions of our own country, they are the masters of their own money, they may waste it where they please, and we take no control over their movements nor impose any obligations of registry upon them. To whom, then, does this law apply? To those who have domiciled themselves in foreign countries; who have left the United States with no intent to return, but with a fixed purpose to make their home in a foreign land, leaving all care of their country behind them. It applies to those who have substantially abandoned their country, have taken their wealth or their talents into foreign countries, there to stimulate the industries and add to the strength of alien governments; to those who contribute nothing in the form of taxes to the support of our Government, and who, in their fondness and admiration for foreign manners and society, have estranged themselves in interest, feeling, occupation, and pursuit from their own country. Now, is it this class of American citizens who have so earnestly excited the sympathies of the gentleman from New York? These persons who have thus practically abandoned their country are yet prompt, when they get into any difficulty, to appeal to this Government for protection, and would ask that we should even embroil ourselves in a war to vindicate their rights as American citizens. Now, as we know that by the principles of international law a national character may be acquired by domicile, and, as we know by our numerous naturalization treaties, expatriation may be presumed by a prescribed residence abroad, is it asking too much of this class of American citizens that they shall, for their own sakes and for our peace, preserve at the legation or consulate the evidence of their claim to American nationality? In my opinion, sir, this bill shows a most extraordinary tenderness for the rights of American citizenship when it permits this class of persons, who have really but little claim upon our protection, by this simple registration of their names to invoke all the physical powers of this Government to vindicate their rights if they should be assailed. Sir, I am unable to comprehend how any American citizen can feel himself degraded by recording the proud title of his citizenship in the face of a foreign population. If there be any man who feels himself humiliated it must be one who is ashamed of his birthright, and who has exchanged the pride of an American citizen for the flunkeyism of European subserviency.

There are reasons which render this registry proper as an act of justice to this Government. It is our duty to extend the arm of protection to every American citizen, wherever he may be found upon this habitable globe. Now give us the means, in at least certain ordinarily occurring cases, to know who are and who are not entitled to demand our protection. It is not every person who claims to be an American citizen, in this day, that is entitled to that character. The manufacture and sale of naturalization papers have become a regular business. The traffic has been on so large a scale as to attract the notice both of the courts and of the Executive. Cases are frequently brought to the attention of our ministers of persons in possession of naturalization papers, regularly authenticated, who have never been within the limits of the United States, and whose claims to American citizenship, by virtue of such fraudulent papers, would never have been disclosed but for some difficulty in which they had become involved, and from which they sought to extricate themselves by an appeal to the protecting power of this Government.

These frauds upon the right of naturalization, when the cases occur within our own jurisdiction, are probably beyond remedy. Their certificates are judicial acts. As judgments of a court of competent jurisdiction they are held conclusive, and no mode has been yet provided by law by which they can be canceled and set aside even for fraud. Where, however, they are brought to the notice of our diplomatic agents in foreign countries, a larger and more liberal discretion is allowed in dealing with them.

But it is not so much for this class of persons that a registry is needed. Such certificates would rarely be brought to the legation for the purpose of registration. There is another class to which I will now refer. It is a well-known fact that there are hundreds of persons who emigrate to this country with no bona fide purpose or intent to become permanently a part of our population, and especially young men prior to the period when military service has been exacted of them. They reside here the time prescribed by law, and having thus acquired American citizenship, they return to their native countries there to remain the residue of their lives, using American citizenship for the sole and selfish purpose of escaping those burdens and obligations which fall in common upon all the inhabitants of that country. Of the existence and numbers of this class, our diplomatic correspondence furnishes the most abundant proof. It is they whose equivocal relations to the country consume three-fourths of the time of our ministers, and fill the pages of our diplomatic correspondence. No honest American citizen abroad should for one moment desire that his nationality should be ambiguous and involved in doubt. Here is a simple and inexpensive formula that enables him at once to remove all doubt as to his national character, and serve as a safe guide to our ministers and consuls.

This registration will operate in the general not only as a safeguard to the citizen himself and a guide to our diplomatic agents, but it has become a necessity under the numerous naturalization treaties which have been ratified between this and other governments. It is useless here to discuss whether all the provisions of those treaties have been made in sound policy. I know that objections have been made to some of them. I have upon a former occasion discussed one of those treaties, and have expressed my opinion that it was a brilliant diplomatic triumph upon the part of this country; but it is idle to discuss that question here. Those treaties are contracts with sovereign states, and are of the supreme law of the land. We are bound by their terms until they shall upon due notice be abrogated. By those treaties we have agreed that citizens of the United States may cease to be such, and may at their pleasure become citizens or subjects of other powers. We have agreed that residence abroad without intent to return shall of itself work expatriation. We have further agreed that a continuous residence of two years in the country of his origin shall afford presumptive evidence of such expatriation, to be repelled, however, by proper evidence that he still retains his American nationality. Now, sir, what simpler, what less expensive, what more convenient and satisfactory mode for the authentication of his intention could be devised than the registry of his name as such in the archives of our legation.

The practical value of some such means of preserving American citizenship abroad by those who come under the operation of our treaties, or under the law of domicile, was well illustrated in a case in diplomatic history which occurred nearly thirty years ago. Austria had a law that all foreigners who resided ten continuous years in the empire without adopting some means of freeing themselves from the Austrian citizenship acquired by such residence, by giving notice that they had no intention by such residence of becoming Austrian subjects, should be held to be subjects, and as such liable to all the burdens of that condition. During the Venetian insurrection in 1848, and while Venice was a part of the Austrian Empire, some British subjects who had resided ten years in that city became under that law Venetian citizens, as they had adopted no means to repel the presumption arising from residence. Forced loans were demanded of them, and they appealed for relief to the British government. But Lord Palmerston, who was then secretary of foreign affairs, refused to interpose on their behalf, upon the express ground that, having resided there ten years without adopting any steps to preserve their British character, they were liable in common with all other Austrian subjects to the forced loans demanded of them. Now, sir, if a registry so plain and simple as that provided for by this bill had existed there at that time and they had availed themselves of its terms of protection, they would have escaped the oppressive exactions to which they were compelled to submit.

I now approach the subject of marriage in foreign countries between citizens of the United States and between a citizen of the United States and an alien. This bill provides that, unless forbidden by the laws of the country in which they take place, such marriages may be contracted and solemnized, in such manner and form as may be prescribed by the Secretary of State in the presence of the principal diplomatic agent of the United States in such country, or of a consul-general or consul for the district in which they take place, and shall in such case have the same force and effect and shall be as valid to all intents and purposes as if solemnized within the United States. I omit here the further details of the bill upon this point.

It will be here observed that this section gives no authority to the minister or consul to solemnize marriages by pronouncing a form of espousal, but only to give them a valid sanction by their official presence.

The first question that naturally presents itself in this connection is, what necessity is there for any legislation upon this subject by Congress? It is the received doctrine throughout the civilized world that between persons sui juris marriage is to be decided by the law of the place where it is celebrated. If valid there, it is valid everywhere. In the language of Judge Story, "It has a legal ubiquity of obligation." If invalid there it is invalid everywhere. Now it may be said, if such be the universal law of the Christian world, why not leave our citizens who may be in foreign countries to conform to the law of such countries? Why should Congress concern itself about their marriages at all? This would, indeed, be a cold and selfish policy and not in accordance with the practice of other enlightened governments. Citizens abroad and citizens at home are alike entitled to the paternal consideration of their governments. Laws are enacted not simply to punish crime, but to promote the convenience and relieve the doubts and perplexities of the people. The difficulties which an American citizen most usually encounters in having marriage solemnized according to the law of foreign countries result from their municipal regulations prescribing a fixed period for the matrimonial domicile. In some countries, like France, it requires a residence of six months, in others, I believe, a year, and perhaps longer. There are many other requirements, such as the formal evidences of birth, &c., which it is difficult and sometimes altogether impracticable to comply with when absent from their country. Again, a marriage solemnized in many of the Catholic countries of Europe, if performed in accordance with their local law, would be deemed incapable of dissolution; and, while in England and the United States the law of the domicile would be held to prevail over the law of the place of the contract, there are other countries in which it would not be so held; and, no matter what the future conduct of the parties might be, there could be no divorce a vinculo matrimonii. In many of the Oriental and unchristian nations of Europe and Asia, conformity to their local laws would be out of the question. It may not here also be a matter unworthy of consideration that all patriotic American citizens in a foreign land have a very natural wish to have a contract of so much interest to them solemnized under the flag of their own country and upon that spot where, according to the courtesy and principles of international law, the power of this nation has a residence in the person and habitation of its minister.

It is because of considerations of this kind that all the enlightened nations of Europe have made provision for the celebration of these marriages at their legations and in the presence of their diplomatic and consular agents. The practice has prevailed for many years at the several legations of the United States, although no positive statute like the present was ever passed by Congress. The validity of those marriages has rested upon the principle of extraterritoriality accorded to the residence and office of the minister. When I was minister at Paris I was repeatedly called upon to have marriages celebrated at the legation. I then gave to the subject a careful consideration and reached the conclusion that such marriages were valid. I never assumed, as I understand some ministers have done, to perform the marriage ceremony myself, but it was done at my legation by some clergyman or rabbi in accordance with the religious forms, Jewish or Christian, that the parties interested selected. Mr. Hoffman, in a letter to the Secretary of State, of August, 1874, states that during the seven years that he was secretary of legation at Paris one hundred and fifty marriages were celebrated at the legation in that city.

I am well aware that some of our public jurists, William Beach Lawrence among the number, deny this principle of extraterritoriality as embracing the validity of marriages celebrated at the legations. He informs us that General Cass, when minister at Paris, had so much doubt of the doctrine that he would not permit his daughter to be married to his own secretary at the legation, but required the marriage to be celebrated at the mairie according to the strictest formalities of the French local law. This may have been a very prudent and discreet exercise of parental solicitude upon the part of General Cass, and while there may be some ground for diversity of opinion I am well satisfied that the weight of legal authority supports the validity of those marriages. But in a case of this kind there should be no ground for doubt, if it is in the power of legislation to remove that doubt. Marriage is too sacred an institution, its consequences to the parties, to their offspring, to the questions of inheritance and succession, to the peace and interests of society, are too important to permit a shade of doubt to rest for a moment on its validity. We should either absolutely forbid all marriages at the legation or remove all doubt as to their validity by the passage of such a bill as that which is now before us.

The question then is, will this law remove all doubt upon that subject? In other words, has Congress the power to give validity to a contract of marriage made in a foreign country when solemnized there between its own citizens in the presence of one of its own officers, and in conformity to its requirements? When I speak of validity I of course mean validity within the United States, not beyond its territorial limits. It is said that marriage is one of those domestic institutions which is under the exclusive control of the States. This is undoubtedly true in regard to all marriages within the limits of the Union; they can derive their validity alone from the laws of the States where solemnized. But while the States have properly reserved this right to be exclusively exercised by them within their own limits, they assert no right to exercise it in foreign countries. There cannot, therefore, be any conflict in such a case between the State and Federal authority. The States are unknown in our intercourse with foreign nations. They have no political existence, so far as foreign powers are concerned. An American in Paris is not a citizen of Pennsylvania or a citizen of West Virginia, but a citizen of the United States. The Constitution has created this a nation, and has endowed it with all the attributes and powers that belong to any other nation in its relations to the world at large. However limited or restricted may be its powers when acting in co-operation with the States in the joint administration of the varied internal concerns of this Republic, there is no such partnership of power when this Government acts in its relation with the other nations of the world. Then its powers are supreme and exclusive. It is clothed with every attribute of national sovereignty which public law accords to any nation. Perfect equality of right and privilege among nations is a fundamental doctrine of modern international jurisprudence.

The practice of one nation by its legislation and within its own limits to give validity to acts done within a foreign country is of constant occurrence and has been universally recognized. Great Britain, Germany, France, Italy, and other powers have freely exercised the authority of giving validity to contracts of marriage solemnized according to their own laws at their legations in foreign countries. Can a power thus exercised by all other nations be justly denied to the United States? It is no answer to this to say that ours is a government of limited and defined powers, while those in Europe just referred to are without any such limitations. Ours is indeed a government of restricted authority so far as its relations to the States and the people are concerned. But as the representative of our sovereignty in its intercourse with foreign governments it has no limitation upon its sovereignty beyond that which international law imposes alike upon Great Britain, Germany, and France. It would indeed be a curious anomaly in the system of nations if the United States did not possess the power of giving validity to the acts of its own citizens done in foreign countries in pursuance of its own laws, when that right is conceded to all other nations, and when if it does not exist in Congress it cannot exist anywhere. It is difficult to see what right of any State is infringed by recognizing a contract of marriage made in France. If the marriage was performed at the mairie, according to French law, that contract, thus deriving validity from the local law of France, would be accepted as conclusive by every State court in the Union. Would they be less disposed to accept as conclusive a contract made by American citizens in France under an American law passed for the special benefit of our own people, and which can work prejudice to no one?

I have remarked that an American citizen in Paris is not a citizen of Pennsylvania or West Virginia, but a citizen of the United States. If involved in any difficulty with a foreign government, he can look for no relief from the interposition of his State. His appeal for protection can alone be to the United States. The duty of protection upon the part of the Government involves the reciprocal duty of allegiance on the part of the citizen. As the States have divested themselves of all power to protect their own citizens in foreign countries, and have devolved that duty exclusively upon the National Government, it must follow by necessary implication that this Government possesses all the powers necessary to that protection. This leaves its discretion unrestricted as to the mode and manner in which this protection shall be given; and if this Government believes, as do those of Great Britian, Germany, France, and others, that a proper and necessary part of that protection is to provide for and legalize marriages contracted by its citizens abroad, it falls fully within the scope of the powers conferred upon it.

This is not the first time in the history of this Government that Congress has exercised by legislation that power which the Constitution and nature of our Government devolves upon it, of protecting the rights of our citizens in foreign countries in cases of this kind; but I believe it is the first time that this power has been seriously questioned. Some years ago it was quite usual for our consuls to perform the marriage ceremony between citizens of the United States and citizens and aliens without observance of the laws of the particular country in which the ceremony was performed. The opinion of Attorney-General Cushing was asked by Mr. Marcy, when Secretary of State, as to the validity of such marriages. His opinion, marked by his usual ability and profusion of learning, was clear and decided that a consul possessed no such authority, and consequently that the marriages were invalid. He drew a distinction between ministers and consuls, and showed very conclusively that while the doctrine of extraterritoriality applied to the one, it did not to the other. Congress acted upon this opinion of the Attorney-General, and passed the law of the 22d of June, 1860; and while it omitted by statute to confer any authority upon our diplomatic agents, regarding them under that opinion as already possessed of it, it provided that marriages in presence of any consular officer of the United States in a foreign country, between persons who would be authorized to marry if residing in the District of Columbia, shall be valid to all intents and purposes, and shall have the same effect as if solemnized in the United States. This law has now been in operation for sixteen years. Many marriages have been solemnized under it, and I have never yet heard that the validity of these marriages, or the power of Congress to pass such a law, has been questioned.

Laws have existed upon our statute-book for many years authorizing the secretaries of legation and all consular officers to administer oaths, to take depositions, and to perform notarial acts in foreign countries, and provisions are contained in the same laws for punishing in any district court of the United States the crimes of perjury and forgery, when committed in foreign countries in violation of those acts. These last provisions for punishing extraterritorial crimes will no doubt strike the technical common-law jurist as a departure from all sound principle; but it is only one of the indications of the revolution now in progress in the doctrines of private international law, and results from a growing conviction on the part of England and the United States of the duty of punishing offenses committed against their own laws beyond the limits of their territory and to concur with the balance of the Christian world that the country of arrest should in some cases have jurisdiction as well as the country of the commission of the crime.

I have now concluded all that I propose to say in general explanation of the character and provisions of this bill, and unless some gentleman desires to reply to the views which I have presented I will, at the request of several gentlemen around me, move to postpone its further consideration until some day next week, when a full opportunity will be afforded for such amendments as may be offered to the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I have now said all I desire to say on the subject. I do not desire to press the consideration of the question further at this time but will yield the floor to any other gentleman who desires to address the House.

Mr. COX. I have proposed a substitute for this bill. I have endeavored to extract what virtue there was in the bill and place it in my substitute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question first recurs on the gentleman's substitute.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, at the beginning of this session I offered a resolution for the rescinding of the German treaty. The committee have reported against it. They give good reasons for their opinion. I agree to their report, because I desire no hasty action upon a treaty which is so soon to expire. What I desire is that the recommendations of the committee and the best wisdom of our diplomacy shall be exerted in improving our relations with Germany.

No one can overstate the importance of a good understanding with Germany. Her people are the salt of the earth. They go and come and bring and make thrift. In despite of their domestic police and other regulations against emigration, they are going to every part of the world. They carry the virtues and economies, the energy and the glory, that belong to the great race which held Rome at bay in her proudest days and which to-day dictates policy to Europe.

My reason, sir, for not urging the rescission of the treaty with Germany is well stated by the honorable gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] in the report of the Foreign Affairs Committee (No. 96) which was laid upon our table on the 10th of February:

> But if the object of this proposed notice is simply to stimulate our Government to ask a revision of that treaty; to have it extended to the entire German Empire, including Alsace and Lorraine; to define with more precision some of the points of controversy growing out of subjects of expatriation, naturalization, and nationality; to incorporate into it some provisions that subsequent experience has introduced into our later treaties on that subject, the resolution of inquiry addressed to us is unobjectionable and indeed worthy of commendation.
>
> If our opinion of the future action of the German government is too favorable there will yet be ample time to apply the appropriate corrective. By the fifth article of that treaty it went into effect immediately on the exchange of ratifications, to continue in force for ten years from that day. Ratifications were exchanged on the 9th of May, 1868. A previous notice of six months is required to be given if we desire to terminate it at the end of ten years. A notice, therefore, given by the 19th of November, 1877, will terminate the treaty. We can therefore well leave twelve months more for diplomatic negotiation, and if by that time any evils resulting from alleged ambiguities and omissions in that treaty are not remedied, it will be in the power of Congress at its next session to direct a notice to terminate it, if in its judgment it would be wise and expedient to do so.

During the next twelvemonth the diplomacy of our country may well be employed in perfecting our relations with Germany.

The Germans have a proverb that a sparrow in the hand is better than a pigeon on the roof of the house. Let us therefore keep the treaty until we get something better. While we would do everything to stop the abuse of American citizenship by German-Americans abroad, it should always be with the reservation that they are treated on the same footing with native citizens, and that no abnormal views like the present proposed measure shall enter into legislation as to citizenship.

I think that I express the German-American sentiment and the American sentiment when I say that the main defect of the German treaty is that we are left entirely to the good-will of the German governments. In a revision of the treaty, or rather in concluding a treaty comprising all the states of Germany, the Department of State should exact from the German government provisions tending to place upon a perfectly equal footing naturalized American citizens and their children, so far as their sojourn in Germany is concerned. If, under the existing treaties, a naturalized German returns to Germany and resides there for two years, the German government is not bound to recognize his own or his children's citizenship, while a native American may reside, with his children, in Germany as long as he pleases without justifying the German government in the assumption that he has no intention of returning to the United States, and that he has renounced his American citizenship. It is this unequal treatment against which the opposition of the German-Americans is chiefly directed. I admit that the assumption of an intended abuse of the American citizenship for the purpose of residing, with children, in Germany without being compelled to perform the duties of subjects, is more applicable to naturalized than to native citizens, and we cannot, therefore, censure the German government for being somewhat rigid in demanding proofs that such American citizens sojourn in Germany for transient purposes only. But a revised treaty should, on the other hand, afford naturalized citizens and their children better protection against annoyances by the German governments than they enjoy under the existing treaties.

My friend from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] exaggerates somewhat in asserting that in ratifying the Bancroft treaties the German governments have unreservedly admitted the right of expatriation. If such were the case, our naturalized citizens would not have been placed on an exceptional footing by these treaties. In the case of Steinkauler, the German government has claimed as a German subject a native-born American, on the ground that his father, by his return to Germany, has renounced his expatriation, and the American Government has refused to grant the young man the protection due to an American citizen. There is evidently ample room for further concessions on the part of the German government, and the Secretary of State would render the German-Americans an important service if he could secure such concessions.

Admitting, Mr. Speaker, all the abuses which belong to our German-American people resident abroad, the question I propose to discuss is of larger moment. I discuss it in no "Federal" light. I have no prejudices, no democratic traditions to gratify at the expense of justice to our foreign relations.

Allow me then, while keeping my mind on the treaty with Germany, which was so incautiously made and which deserves so much amendment, to discuss in detail the bill presented by the gentleman from West Virginia. Then I may be permitted to add some general observations on the treaty and our right by treaty stipulation to limit or destroy citizenship.

First, as to the present bill:

The honorable gentleman from West Virginia, [Mr. FAULKNER,] on reporting the bill from the committee to the House, March 30, (Congressional Record, March 31, page 5,) was not explicit or exact in replying to my question that the bill is not the same which was in the House two years ago. It is true that it is not wholly the same bill of two years ago, which was forced back into committee; but it returned to the House last year, January 7, 1875, as a report of Judge E. R. Hoar from the same committee, was recommitted, and that was the last ever heard of it again outside of the committee-room, until the gentleman from West Virginia took it up, and his bill, unless greatly changed by the amendments just offered, is word for word, punctuatim et literatim, the identical bill which last year perished in the hands of Judge Hoar, and which was substantially—all but two clauses omitted and some changes of phraseology—the same bill killed in the House the year before. (Congressional Record, April 24, 1874.)

1. The bill starts out—as did the bill in 1874 and again in 1875—with declaring its purpose to be "to carry into execution the provisions of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution, concerning citizenship." In this it can only refer to the first clause of the first section of that amendment, which reads:

> All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside.

It is only the first section of the bill (and possibly the second clause of the second section, of which hereafter) that has any remote relevancy to this subject of the amendment, in that it seeks to provide that the words "reside" and "domicile" "are to be construed as implying a fixed residence at a particular place, with direct or presumptive proof of an intent to remain indefinitely."

Let us see. The Constitution declares that citizens of the United States are "citizens of the State wherein they reside," and this bill declares virtually that they shall be citizens of the State in which they may be, "with direct or presumptive proof" to remain indefinitely. In all our statutory jurisprudence, State as well as Federal, the words "reside" and "residence" have acquired a technically well-defined significance. In the State of New York a period of one year constitutes the "residence" required for the acquisition of citizenship of the State, which includes the right to vote. It is so, probably, in every other State in the Union; and nowhere a mere "tramp," as it were, who comes into the State at hap-hazard, presumably intending to remain indefinitely, can acquire the legal "residence" entitling him to the privileges of citizenship of the State until he "resides" within such State one full year. The fourteenth amendment, in adopting the term "reside," has necessarily adopted it with its settled construction, as meaning a residence legally acquired according to the laws of the place of such residence. This first section of the bill goes apparently further. It would eventually override all the constitutional and statutory provisions in the various States concerning the acquisition of the privileges of local citizenship by residence alone. The words in this section requiring "a fixed residence at a particular place" do not avail against this objection, since, by making the mere presumption of an intent to remain sufficient, the "fixed residence," like a "fixed idea" in metaphysics, becomes an unrealizable fancy; and again, because, if the acquisition of a really permanent habitation in a State can make a man a citizen of the State, it does so from the very moment he acquires such habitation, regardless of all the contrary provisions contained in the State constitutions. No such violence to the rights of States was intended by the fourteenth amendment, and therefore this section, being liable to this objection, ought to be stricken out.

2. The second section has three distinct clauses or subdivisions, two of which are again subdivided into clauses or paragraphs. Every one of these more or less independent provisions should be considered separately.

After the first five lines of introduction, which are really but a pleonasm and should be expunged for that reason alone, this section proceeds in line 6:

> First, that all persons shall be regarded as entitled to the privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States and as subject to the duties imposed upon such citizens who may have been born and are residing within the United States and subject to the jurisdiction thereof.

Were Congress to declare by a solemn enactment that the sun shall shine by day and that by night there shall be darkness subject to occasional incursions of the moon, it would be just as sensible a proceeding as to pass this declaration in the bill. As in the matter of the sun and of the changes of the day and night, so in this respect has there a higher power intervened. The Constitution, to whose jurisdiction even Congress is subject, has declared that "all persons born in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States;" and there is as little need for Congress to enact the Constitution into a law as there is for an attempt to paint snow white. That citizens of the United States are entitled to the privileges and immunities of such citizenship and subject to all the duties imposed upon such citizens follows so logically as a matter of course as effect follows cause. This is not legislation; it is a stump speech. In one sense, however, it may prove mischievous and give rise to endless difficulties. "Persons" includes the male and the female gender. Without arguing whether this paragraph, by recognizing "all persons" born and residing within the United States as endowed with the "privileges" of citizens, might or might not be claimed to confer upon women the privilege of voting or of practicing as attorneys "in the State where they reside," it is proper to refer to the sentence which declares that they are also to be "subject to the duties imposed upon such citizens." One of these duties is to serve the country in war, carry the musket to the front and defend her against all enemies. Can "all persons," without discrimination of age or sex, be made subject to that duty? Of course not; and, if not, then this lofty style of legislation explodes itself.

But this paragraph does even violence to the fourteenth amendment. Does it leave out all reference to persons "naturalized in the United States" and add an additional qualification of citizenship, not known to the Constitution, by confining its operation to persons who "are residing within the United States?" The amendment makes "all persons born or naturalized in the United States" citizens of the United States, no matter where they may be residing at any given time, and confers upon them citizenship of the State only "wherein they reside;" that is, where they have acquired a legal residence according to the laws thereof. The latter is local citizenship, the former national, and this, by force of the Constitution, depends solely upon birth or naturalization and not upon residence at any particular place, as does the citizenship of a State. This paragraph, therefore, is useless, improper, mischievous, and contrary to the fourteenth amendment at the same time; and for these reasons it ought to be dropped.

3. The next paragraph of this first subdivision of section 2, beginning with line 10, refers to alien women who become the wives of citizens of the United States.

I can say nothing better on this part than what has been said in my previous remarks in 1875 concerning this same identical provision of Judge Hoar's second bill, except I may add that the question is already covered by the second section of the act of February 10, 1855, section 1994 Revised Statutes United States, and by the principles of law governing matrimonial relations, now universally recognized.

4. The next subject, beginning at the end of line 14 and ending with line 26, is indeed rare phraseological architecture, of the composite order. To one not accustomed to the anomalies of law terms and their meaning, it must appear as a paradox to read of "a child born within the United States of parents who" "do not reside within the United States," since to the common understanding this would indicate a physical impossibility. The lawyer knows that by the word "reside" in this section is only meant that undefinable "fixed residence in a particular place with direct or presumptive proof of an intent to remain indefinitely," which is mentioned in the first section, and meaning simply the place of "residence." It does not necessarily imply the bodily presence of the parents at their "residence." Why not say so, then, and make the language intelligible to all? Such child born within the United States of parents who do not reside in the United States "shall not be regarded as a citizen thereof, unless such child shall reside in the United States." Should this paragraph be adopted in its present form, there is no end to the puzzles to which it may give rise. The law presumes the "residence" of an infant—and all minor children are considered in law as infants—to follow the "residence" of his parents; if the parents have no "residence" in the United States, how can their child have a "residence" here? Moreover, minors are not free agents, but remain under the control of their parents, without whose consent they acquire no domiciliary rights. How, then, can an infant secure for himself even the legal fiction of a "domicile" or "residence" in this country away from the "domicile" or "residence" of its parents elsewhere? Should the parents, after the child is born here, leave it either to the care of friends or strangers, and the child grows up in the United States to man's estate, then the fourteenth amendment steps in, and by that constitutional provision he is a citizen as a "person born in the United States." It needs no act of Congress to make him such, nor could an act of Congress deprive him of that constitutional right. That portion of this conglomerate paragraph which provides that "a child born within the United States of parents" "who are not subject to the jurisdiction of the United States shall not be regarded as a citizen" is completely superfluous, inasmuch as all persons born under such circumstances are specially excepted from the operation of the fourteenth amendment, and no additional negative is required from Congress to make the exception any more valid. How an infant born under circumstances not entitling him to citizenship by right of birth may acquire it through the naturalization of his parents during his minority is already amply provided for by long existing laws, and all such new requirements as the filing of a declaration with the State Department, which this paragraph seeks to establish, are obnoxious innovations. They break into the accepted principle that naturalization is a judicial proceeding terminating with a solemn adjudgment of a court of competent jurisdiction, and not dependent on the favor or discretion of an executive officer of a department. The attempt to introduce the system here is a weak copy of the English practice, where naturalization is a favor granted or withheld by the Crown as it chooses. Even the British naturalization act of 1870, in its seventh section, fully recognizes this royal prerogative. In this Republic naturalization has ever been a right founded in law to be adjudged by a court, and the executive branch of the Government should have neither control over nor part in it.

5. The second subdivision of this section, from line 27 to 32, is thoroughly objectionable. In the first place it is useless, since the status of children born of American citizens in foreign countries is clearly defined by the first section of the act of February 10, 1855. That act declares these children to be citizens of the United States during their natural lives, but such citizenship does not descend to children whose parents have never resided in the United States.

The present bill would limit the duration of citizenship only during the minority of such children of American citizens, and in that it is utterly wrong. A person is either a citizen or he is not. In the latter case we have nothing to do with him. But if he is a citizen, that quality clings to him through life, or until he shall have voluntarily changed his nationality by assuming another. To declare a person to be a citizen for a term of years only, as a land-owner parcels out an estate among tenants, is an absurdity. Again, this clause declares that a child born abroad, whose father may be a citizen of the United States, shall follow the domicile of his father. It is this provision that has some connection with the purposes of the bill as announced in the first half of its title. The "domicile" mentioned can only be the domicile of the father somewhere in the United States, and not any transitory domicile the father may have acquired abroad, because in regard to that Congress has no jurisdiction to legislate at all. But a citizen of the United States and of the State of Massachusetts, resident and domiciled in Boston, goes to Europe and remains there ten or twenty years with his family. Children are born to him while abroad. Under the act of 1855 they are citizens of the United States, and they are also citizens of Massachusetts, because by a universally accepted rule the child follows the domicile of the father, and the father's domicile in the supposed case is in the city of Boston until the father shall have gained a domicile elsewhere in the United States. This rule is the common law not of this country and of England alone, but of the whole civilized world, and what is already so universally recognized needs no statutory affirmation.

But there is in this second subdivision a little phrase of only nine words which has a very suspicious bearing. The clause reads: "A child born abroad, whose father may be a citizen of the United States and subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, shall be regarded as a citizen of the United States," &c. What is the meaning of this requirement that the father must be "subject to the jurisdiction of the United States?" We can quickly arrive at it by the logical process of putting the sentence in its converse form, thus: "A child born abroad, whose father may be a citizen of the United States but not subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, shall not be regarded as a citizen of the United States." Consequently this provision contains a novel limitation upon the descent of citizenship from father to son, in that citizenship descends to a child born abroad from the father only in case the father remains subject to the jurisdiction of the United States. How? Nobody will pretend that the United States can exercise any direct or corporeal jurisdiction over an American citizen residing in London or Paris or Dresden or anywhere else outside of the limits and local jurisdiction of the United States, except in countries where by treaty stipulations the United States, like other Christian countries, exercise consular jurisdiction over resident citizens. But these exceptions do not come in question here. How, then, can any American citizen traveling or sojourning in Europe remain personally "subject to the jurisdiction of the United States?" Was George Peabody, for over thirty years a resident of London, while there ever personally subject to the jurisdiction of the United States? Not at all. And the same applies to every American in Europe, whether he remain away a month, a year, or fifty years. Is the citizenship of these fathers not to descend to their children born abroad because they are not subject to the jurisdiction of the United States? The act of 1855 says yes; this bill would imply no. Why change the rule as it has now existed for twenty-one years, since there is no necessity for a change? But the third clause of this second section, together with the third section of this bill, explain why this objectionable phrase has been interpolated here. Yet inasmuch as the act of February 10, 1855, being now section 1993 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, has for so many years been found sufficient and giving no cause for just complaint, it seems best to let well enough alone.

6. In the opening clause of the third subdivision of this section there is the first glimpse of desirable legislation of a nature that has been wanting and should be supplied; but it is so crude and incorrect in terms that it should be amended. It reads:

> Thirdly. The following persons shall be regarded as not subject to the jurisdiction of the United States within the intent of the said fourteenth amendment, or as not residing within the United States, within such intent, namely: First, citizens of the United States who become naturalized as citizens or subjects of another state, or who in any foreign country enter into the civil, naval, or military service of any foreign prince or state, or of any colony, district, or people foreign to the United States, while such service continues.

There is a fundamental error and misdirection of meaning in the use of the words "subject to the jurisdiction of the United States," as here quoted in the bill from the fourteenth amendment. In the Slaughter-house cases the Supreme Court say:

> The phrase was intended to exclude from its operation children of ministers, consuls, and citizens or subjects of foreign states born within the United States.

From this authoritative interpretation it follows that the words in the fourteenth amendment, "subject to the jurisdiction of the United States," have no reference whatever to those persons who by birth or naturalization are constitutionally and legally citizens of the United States. The reference to this proviso has logically no place in this bill, which deals with the rights of citizens only, and not with the rights of those who are specially excepted by this proviso from becoming such citizens.

That persons on becoming naturalized elsewhere or entering the public service of any foreign power should cease to be citizens of the United States is perfectly right and proper, and a declaratory act to that effect should have been passed long ago. But this clause of the pending bill does not say so, and in that it falls short of being satisfactory. It only declares them "not subject to the jurisdiction of the United States," which of course would deprive them of all right to protection while they are abroad, but leaves their citizenship in abeyance, and to revive in case of their return to the United States. And here is the wrong in the bill. A citizen of the United States becoming naturalized in another country has left us; he has abjured his allegiance to the Republic, and has assumed the relation of a citizen or subject to another power. He thereby has become an alien to the United States, the same as if he had been an alien throughout life. We have no claims upon him, and he has none upon us. Should he return to this country, desirous to resume his lost citizenship, the way stands open to him, as to every other alien, in the process prescribed by our naturalization laws. Those who take public office in foreign states place themselves in the same category. They must necessarily take an oath of allegiance to the sovereign or state that employs them, and as no man can be assumed to owe allegiance to two nationalities at the same time, they deprive themselves by their own act of their American citizenship, thus accepting voluntarily the status of aliens to the United States. They also may again be naturalized here, by going through the same proceedings in court as other aliens.

This is the American doctrine of the effect of naturalization. The rule so lucidly laid down by General Cass, that a native of Germany, naturalized in the United States, when returning to the country of his birth, returns there as an American citizen and in no other capacity, is the only true guide in this question, and should be applied to our own people also. When a native of the United States is naturalized in France, when returning to the country of his birth, he returns here as a French citizen and in no other capacity. Let us exact observance of this rule on both sides and we shall be right and will need no such questionable legislation as is proposed in this bill.

7. The "thirdly" of this third subdivision of section 2 brings up the deeper and wider question, whether the "naturalization treaties," especially those with the German states, are to be sustained as wise and politic. This clause deprives of the protection of the United States "naturalized citizens of the United States who may by the terms of any treaty be regarded as having resumed their original nationality." The adoption of this clause would be tantamount to a legislative approval of the treaties themselves by the House. Of that hereafter in full. It would also tend to establish it as a principle that a naturalized citizen is such only in a qualified sense; a principle opposed not only to the plain terms of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution, but also to all previous legislation, notably that of 1868, found in the Revised Statutes as sections 2000 and 2001.

On this subject I have heretofore spoken so much on Judge Hoar's bill that nothing new is to be added.

8. To the fourth clause of this subdivision, beginning in line 50, the only objection is that it again introduces the "Department of State." The declaration mentioned should be required to be made before either one of the courts named in the first subdivision of section 2165 of the Revised Statutes, which is the act of April 14, 1802. The Secretary of State should have no power whatever over any step in naturalization, for the reason that it offends the republican principle. Admission of aliens to allegiance in European countries is, as a rule, a prerogative of the crown, because the obligation of allegiance runs to the sovereign, and the secretary or minister acts for his master, the sovereign. Here allegiance runs to the country, the people, the Constitution, and the laws; admission to allegiance is regulated by law, and every application for admission or re-admission is a matter for judicial determination, or at least judicial supervision.

9. The third section seeks to establish a most objectionable system of registration for American citizens journeying abroad. The details of the registry comprise the inauguration of a system of espionage over the private affairs of citizens against which every manly spirit must revolt. The whole scheme is largely borrowed from monarchical Europe, not of the present day, but of earlier times, when every traveler was compelled to have a passport about him, duly countersigned by the consular agent of the sovereign of his native country in the place he last visited. With these consular agents the traveler had to register all the particulars of himself and family if traveling with him. If this bill had added to the other requirements a demand that the citizen journeying abroad should also exhibit proof to the consul that he had enough ready money to pay the expenses of his journey and that he should be sent back to the United States if he had not, the draughtsman of the bill would only have imitated the ancient European system of consular surveillance still more clearly. Such legislation implies going back more than a hundred years, to the days when the relation of the subject to the state was yet that of a slave to his master. The passport was the collar of servitude placed upon the individual on his venturing beyond the domain of his sovereign, and it was his duty to have that passport registered and countersigned in every place where there was an official representative of his king. Only with that mark upon him was he permitted to go abroad. He was to be branded as the Texas stock-breeder brands his cattle before letting them roam over the prairie. Shall we return to that feudal system, subject our own citizens traveling abroad to a kind of surveillance which every monarchy in Europe, except, perhaps, Russia, has wholly abandoned? Shall we declare by law that, unless our citizens submit to it freely, they shall forfeit their right to be protected by the United States if they remain away continuously for two years? Is not this virtually a forfeiture of their citizenship while they remain abroad? Is Republican America, the champion of the freedom of the individual, to become the laughing-stock of the civilized world? Is she now, in this centennial year, to attempt putting her own citizens, while tarrying in foreign lands, in the chains of bureaucracy, and make her consuls and other officials their overseers or head-keepers? Are American citizens, like babes, to be held in leading-strings for fear that they might peradventure go astray?

But why should we adopt this innovation and introduce a system hitherto unknown to our laws? It is accepted as a rule that a law is enacted either to cure some evil or to advance some good, and if made for neither of these purposes such law is itself an unmixed evil. What, then, are the evils to be remedied? What good is to be achieved? Is it so great an evil that many thousands of our countrymen travel in all parts of the globe without sending a record home through the consuls to the State Department, showing where they have been, where they did go, whether they are single or married, and with how many children they are blest, and what is the name of their dear spouses and little ones? There is no evil in existence which this information would remedy, nor is there any useful purpose it could subserve.

The number of American travelers, taken altogether, is not large enough to affect the census returns as to population, nor is it pretended that this proposed registration of Americans abroad is to aid any census at home. But the effect of such a law, whatever its purpose or object, will undoubtedly be to restrict, as never before, the freedom of movement of citizens of the United States in foreign countries. It imposes as a penalty the forfeiture of their citizenship and of all rights under it, for the time, unless they submit to these restrictions. Such an effect of legislation is a wrong in itself of which Congress should never be guilty. Looked at from a strictly logical stand-point, it is a penalty imposed on going beyond the limits of the United States, as it would permit traveling and sojourning abroad with full rights of citizenship only on the conditions prescribed in this section.

If Congress can prescribe one string of conditions, it may prescribe others more or less severe. It may direct that a citizen, on being registered at a legation or consulate, shall pay a fee of a hundred or two hundred or any number of hundreds of dollars. It may even demand that any citizen on leaving the United States for a journey to foreign lands shall deposit with the Secretary of State a stipulated sum as security that he will return within a stated time; that he will not get into trouble while abroad; and that while gone he will pay all taxes at home that may be imposed during his absence. All this would be deemed absurd; yet it is the same in principle as the registration proposed in this section. Obsta principiis is a good rule, and should be followed in this instance.

10. The fourth section, except the first three lines, has nothing whatever to do with the general scope of this bill; and, though its object is good and salutary, it should be incorporated in some other act, or in the substitute which I offer to this bill.

11. The fifth and last section seems to have been specially framed for the purpose of reducing emigration to the United States. Its repealing clause is aimed at section 31 of the act of June 22, 1860, found at section 4082 of the Revised Statutes, page 792, in the following words:

> Marriages in presence of any consular officer of the United States in a foreign country, between persons who would be authorized to marry if residing in the District of Columbia, shall be valid to all intents and purposes, and shall have the same effect as if solemnized within the United States. And such consular officers shall in all cases give to the parties married before them a certificate of such marriage, and shall send another certificate thereof to the Department of State, there to be kept; such certificate shall specify the names of the parties, their ages, places of birth, and residence.

Now, mark how the pending section would change this. It would require that at least one of the parties so married be a citizen of the United States. The act now in force makes no such limitation, and it is well that it does not. Let me explain. Dating back to very ancient times, there are still in existence in Germany many obstacles to marriage, particularly among the working classes. Some of them may have been removed, others liberalized of late, but quite a number are still in force, and prevent thousands from marrying when and whom they like. This country has received a very large accession to its German population from this very cause. Thousands of young people have looked longingly across the ocean as the land where no arbitrary distinction would prevent their union, and they saved their scant earnings for years to enable them to pay their passage. These people on reaching the seaboard at Bremen, or Hamburg, or Havre, and preparing to go aboard the ship that was to carry them to their new home, generally applied to the American consul at these ports to be married by him and thus start upon their ocean journey as legally man and wife. Among these emigrants as I have heard, are many older people, men and women, who but for the laws of their own country would have been married years before, but they waited to accumulate the money for their emigration, and in the mean time children were the result of their intercourse. These also legitimatized their offspring by their marriage in presence of the consul before leaving for America. Such had grown to be the practice for many years prior to the passage of the act of 1860, and even without that act courts have held such marriages valid, except as a foundation for prosecution for bigamy as being a binding civil contract evidenced by the consular certificate. The opportunity of getting married by the consul before going on shipboard induced many thousands of women to consent to emigration, and without the women the men would not have come. In this way the practice of consular marriages greatly increased emigration and benefited this country.

Under the pending section, consuls would be prohibited from solemnizing any such marriages, as they would be authorized to act only in cases where both parties are already citizens, or at least one of them is. Moreover, nearly all such marriages are directly forbidden in Germany for one reason or another, reasons which do not operate as obstacles to marriage in this country; yet being forbidden, our consuls in that country would have no power under this section to solemnize such marriages between persons on their journey of emigration to America neither of whom is yet a citizen. The passage of the pending provision would consequently cut off one of the many influential inducements of emigration to the United States, and that at a time when we should stimulate every means in our power to increase it if possible. Why is this liberal act of 1860 to be repealed? Why is this section of the pending bill, with its prohibitory and restrictive clauses, to be substituted for it? Who asks for the change? Surely no one who knows anything of the beneficial effect which the law as it stands and the practice prevailing before its passage in 1860 have had upon immigration. But as we alone should suffer by complying with this request and by aiding in keeping emigrants away from the United States, it would be unwise to make the change involved in the passage of this bill.

On the 22d of April, 1874, arguing against a bill similar to this, reported to the House by Judge Hoar, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and which sought to recognize in congressional legislation the leading principles of the naturalization treaty between this country and the North German Confederation, I had the honor to remark:

A variety of thoughts strike me here. * * * Among others, whether Congress has the constitutional power to pass any such act as this. Would it not be to some extent in the nature of a bill of attainder to legislate a citizen out of his rights? If Congress has the power to denationalize a citizen for being away from the country two years, could it not impose the same penalty for going abroad for any time, or at all?

That obnoxious bill fell with the adjournment of the last Congress, but the principles on which it rested face us to-day in the treaties concluded in 1868 by Mr. Bancroft with the North German Confederation and with several minor German states, all now parts of the German Empire, as well as in the bill before us.

Two years ago I hinted at the possible unconstitutionality of the proposed legislation. If the power be wanting in Congress to pass any such act, as some firmly believe, the inquiry naturally presents itself, Can two-thirds of the law-making power—the President and the Senate—do what all three parts—the President, Senate, and the House—conjointly cannot do? This is not expressing a flippant doubt, but stating a very serious question that goes to the root of the entire subject, as a brief argument will make clear.

GERMAN TREATY.

I make no apology for the general discussion of the relations of citizenship abroad under all our treaties, and especially the treaty with Germany. I had no opportunity for that discussion when my resolution was reported back adversely, as "it was laid on the table." But for future guidance this treaty should be analyzed in order to be ameliorated.

The treaty under consideration is generally known as the naturalization treaty of May 27, 1868, between North Germany and the United States. Its whole object is to regulate the relations of naturalized citizens between the two countries, and it culminates in the fourth article, which is its most objectionable part:

If a German, naturalized in America, renews his residence in North Germany without the intent to return to America he shall be held to have renounced his naturalization in the United States. Reciprocally, if an American, naturalized in North Germany, renews his residence in the United States without the intent to return to North Germany, he shall be held to have renounced his naturalization in North Germany. The intent not to return may be held to exist when the person naturalized in the one country resides more than two years in the other country.

As this provision is reciprocal, an American who has been naturalized in Germany is an alien here to all intents and purposes and as fully as if he had lived in Germany from his birth. But returning to this country as such alien and residing here more than two years he may claim and exercise, under this treaty, all the rights of American citizenship without being naturalized in the manner provided, which the Constitution and the law require of other aliens.

This treaty therefore establishes primarily two things: first, it is a rule of naturalization; and, secondly, it makes a different rule in our intercourse with the people of Germany than prevails in our intercourse with people of other countries.

It is a well-settled rule of constitutional and statutory construction—and it were wasting time to quote from elementary text-books in its support—that where a power is granted and the person or body to exercise that power is designated in the grant, such power is vested in the authority thus designated, and nowhere else. That power may remain in abeyance by neglect or refusal to use it, yet no other authority can intervene. If that be so—and I believe none will deny it—then it seems clear, as a principle of American constitutional law, that naturalization cannot be regulated by treaty. The eighth section of article 1 of the Constitution of the United States says:

The Congress shall have power: * * *
4. To establish a uniform rule of naturalization.

The first section of the same article declares that—

All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives.

And the second and third subdivisions of section 7 of this article make the President a part of the law-making power, by conferring upon him the right to approve or veto any bill or concurrent resolution or order before either becomes a law.

It would be supererogation to attempt arguing any further that to establish a rule of naturalization is by these provisions of the Constitution declared to be one of the legislative powers granted to the Congress composed of both the Senate and the House, and subject to the President's approval or veto; and it seems not to be within the jurisdiction of the President and Senate alone under the treaty power vested in them by the second subdivision of section 2 of article 2. Hence any regulation concerning naturalization must proceed from the concurrent action of both Houses, with the approval of the President; and since this treaty does establish a rule concerning naturalization, yet as the treaty does not proceed from the concurrent action of both Houses with the approval of the President, but only from the President with the advice and consent of the Senate, there is no constitutional authority to sustain its validity.

It may be said that this treaty concerns itself principally with the relations of American citizens abroad, and its conclusion was therefore a proper exercise of that power which the law of nations attaches to every sovereignty in its intercourse with other sovereignties, and which is preserved in the Constitution by clothing the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, with the power "to make treaties;" this grant being general and unlimited, excepting nothing from its operation. Tested by the most ancient rules of logic—and modern philosophers have not improved upon those left to the world by Aristotle—this claim of almost omnipotence for the treaty power cannot be sustained. If the legislative power of Congress can be invaded by the making of a treaty in one case, it can be invaded in all. "To borrow money on the credit of the United States" is given to Congress in the same section which confers upon it the power to establish a uniform rule of naturalization. If the latter can be constitutionally done by treaty, why could not the President alone, the Senate advising and consenting to it, "borrow money on the credit of the United States" from the government of England, for example, by simply entering into a treaty with that government? "To declare war" is another power of Congress. If the extent of the treaty power be as is claimed, then the President might to-day, with the Senate consenting, enter into a treaty obligation with England, France, Germany, or with other powers, to send the American Army and Navy to Cuba, ostensibly for the pacification of the island, and thus virtually declare war against Spain. As the President under the treaty power can do neither of these things, which all will admit, so also can he not interfere with the jurisdiction of Congress over the question of naturalization.

The ninth section of the second article enumerates various restrictions upon the legislative powers of Congress. Can the President and Senate override any of these by making a treaty with some foreign country? No. The fifth clause of the section provides that "no preference shall be given by any regulation of commerce or revenue to the ports of one State over those of another." The man who should pretend that the President and Senate could nevertheless make a valid treaty, say with Great Britain, that all ships carrying cotton from the port of Mobile, and only those, should be exempt from paying tonnage dues and wharfage at Liverpool, would be laughed at as an idiot. Yet the claim put forward in favor of the validity of this naturalization treaty, on the ground of the treaty power, runs on all fours with that absurd pretense.

The Government of the United States is a limited sovereignty, limited not only by the restrictive clauses but also by the grants of power in the Constitution. Each department must move within the bounds fixed for it by the fundamental law and cannot exceed them. Not only can that not be done which is prohibited, but the powers granted must be exercised by that authority or department only to which they are intrusted, and by no other. Hence, as the establishing of a rule of naturalization is among the express powers of Congress, no other department of Government has any power over the subject.

Perhaps some will contend that this treaty, in its main provisions, does not refer to naturalization at all, but only to the rights or rather limitation of rights of the citizen after he has become naturalized. Such a narrow construction can be founded neither in logic nor in law; in both the major always includes the minor, and the use of a generic term covers all co-related branches implied in it.

In that view naturalization means not only the act of being naturalized and all the precursory steps to that end, by which an alien is invested with the attributes of a citizen and taken into the full fellowship of the nation, but used in the Constitution in its generic signification the term also includes the subsequent relation which the new citizen and the government of his choice shall bear to each other. It follows from this, ex necessitate rei, that all rules of naturalization must, either expressly or impliedly, cover not only the method in which an alien may assume citizenship, but also all the rights, privileges, and immunities which that citizenship confers. This the Congress of the United States has done by the passage of the act of July 27, 1868, precisely two months after the proclamation of this treaty with the North German Union; and the second section of that act says:

All naturalized citizens of the United States, while in foreign countries, are entitled to and shall receive from this Government the same protection of persons and property which is accorded to native-born citizens.

This provision is again found in section 2000 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, adopted by Congress on June 22, 1874, six years and one month after this treaty went into effect. But the two are antagonistic. The treaty does not give the same protection to all naturalized citizens, but makes a distinction as to the country of their nativity, inasmuch as a naturalized American of English birth receives more protection in England than a naturalized American of German birth in Germany, nor does the treaty give to all naturalized citizens the same protection accorded to native-born citizens, since it makes a marked distinction between the two classes. The law of Congress, passed subsequently to the treaty, being diametrically opposed to the treaty, that one only of the two which has a constitutional warrant for its existence can stand, and the other must give way.

One reason why this treaty finds no support in the Constitution has already been given—that making rules concerning naturalization is not within the province of the President and the Senate, constituting the treaty power. It must be said further that this treaty, like those with other nations, is in its very nature a compact of reciprocity and seeks to secure to the citizens or subjects of the other contracting power the same rights here which American citizens are to enjoy there. Heretofore all such treaties were confined to their legitimate limits. In our first treaty with France in 1778 reciprocal civic rights in regard to entering into business, to acquiring property, to removing from place to place, and the like, were guaranteed to Americans and Frenchmen in the two countries, but the question of citizenship, of assuming or renouncing allegiance, was not touched.

Again, in a similar treaty concluded with Switzerland in 1850, reciprocity of rights was conceded by each country, but the theory of presumptive naturalization, as it may be called, found no place in that document. During that interval of seventy-two years many other treaties of more or less like character were entered into, but never until 1868 has this theory been broached, and no statesman of the country had advanced the doctrine that the rules of naturalization and the rights of naturalized citizens, as established by Congress, could be regulated, changed, or abrogated by treaty.

The act of Congress of 1868 is not only in full harmony with the original Constitution but also with the fourteenth amendment, which was adopted July 28, 1868, two months after proclamation was made of the treaty, and says:

All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States.

There is no distinction in this provision between persons born and those naturalized. As to their subsequent rights, they are both citizens of equal degree, entitled to the same fundamental rights, privileges, and immunities. The words "and subject to the jurisdiction" of the United States do not affect this argument at all and do not exclude from citizenship and its privileges those citizens who sojourn in other countries and are in body for a longer or shorter period beyond the immediate "jurisdiction" of the United States. The meaning of this phrase in the amendment has, however, already received an authoritative interpretation by the Supreme Court of the United States in the well-known "Slaughter-house cases," where the court in their majority opinion say through Mr. Justice Miller:

The phrase "subject to its jurisdiction" was intended to exclude from its operation children of ministers, consuls, and citizens or subjects of foreign states born in this country.

The native and naturalized citizens being thus placed upon complete equality as to their rights, we turn again to the same majority opinion of the Supreme Court, where Mr. Justice Miller says:

"Another privilege of a citizen of the United States is to demand the care and protection of the Federal Government over his life, liberty, and property when on the high seas or within the jurisdiction of a foreign government. Of this there can be no doubt, nor that the right depends upon his character as a citizen of the United States.

Mr. Justice Field, in a dissenting opinion, quotes approvingly from Mr. Justice Washington in Corfield vs. Coryell, 4 Washington, C. C., page 380, that the fundamental privileges of a citizen of the United States might well be "all comprehended under the following general heads: Protection by the Government; the enjoyment of life and liberty," &c. It is therefore clear that the act of Congress of 1868 and 1874, declaring that all naturalized citizens shall receive the same protection abroad as native-born citizens, is in full harmony with this amendment to the Constitution as interpreted by our highest tribunal, and that the treaty is not.

The Constitution requires the rule of naturalization, which Congress was given the sole power to establish, to be uniform, and all the acts passed on the subject from 1791 to 1874—excepting some of the provisions of the "alien and sedition acts" of 1796—complied with this constitutional demand for uniformity. But how is it with these naturalization treaties? Secretary Fish himself complains of their utter want of uniformity. In a dispatch to Mr. Bancroft, dated April 14, 1873, he writes:

It is much to be desired that there should be a revision of the treaties respecting the status of naturalized Germans (other than Austrians) in the United States. They were all negotiated by you and you are doubtless familiar with their practical defects.

And as one vital defect in these treaties, Mr. Fish refers to the fact that "they make different and, in some respects, conflicting provisions respecting the naturalized citizens." It is evident, on the authority of Secretary Fish himself, that "different" and "conflicting" provisions respecting naturalized citizens do not constitute "a uniform rule of naturalization," as imperatively required by the Constitution. A very serious distinction is made in these treaties between naturalized citizens, natives of different countries. An Austrian, naturalized in the United States, may, under the treaty with that country, return to the land of his birth and remain there to the end of his days, yet he will be considered an American citizen and an alien to his native land, unless he voluntarily resume his former allegiance and renounce his American citizenship. But if a native of either Bavaria, Denmark, Hesse, Mexico, North Germany, Sweden, Norway, or Würtemberg, who has become naturalized in the United States, return to the country of his nativity and reside there for more than two years, he is held by virtue of the treaty to have forfeited his citizenship and his right to American protection. An American by birth may roam the world over, or settle permanently in any country, for business or pleasure, and he remains an American still, unless he has of his own free will renounced his citizenship, became a naturalized subject of the foreign state, and an alien to his native country. There is certainly no "uniform rule" in this as regards naturalization and the rights of citizens. But here is an extract from the analytical index to the "Treaties and Conventions of the United States with other Powers," which gives a still better view of the confusion which these treaties have caused:

NATURALIZATION.—Citizens of one nationality are to be deemed and taken to have become citizens of the other, who during a continuous residence of five years in the territories of the other have become naturalized—Austria, Sweden, Norway; who have resided uninterruptedly there five years, and before, during, or after that time have become or shall become naturalized—Baden; who have become or shall become naturalized, and shall have resided there uninterruptedly five years—Bavaria, Hesse, Mexico, North Germany; as explained in the protocol—Würtemberg; who may or shall have been naturalized there—Belgium, Denmark; who have become or shall become naturalized—Great Britain. The declaration of intention to become a citizen has not the effect of citizenship—Austria, Baden, Bavaria, Hesse, Mexico, North Germany, Sweden, Norway, Würtemberg. A naturalized citizen may renounce his acquired citizenship—Austria, Baden, Bavaria, Hesse, Mexico, North Germany, Sweden, Norway, Würtemberg; but this renunciation does not entitle him to recover his former citizenship—Bavaria. A return of the naturalized citizen to his original country is not of itself a renunciation of his acquired citizenship, and no fixed period of residence in his original country works of itself a renunciation—Austria, Baden. A residence in the old country without the intent to return works a renunciation, and the intent not to return may be held to exist when the residence is for more than two years—Bavaria, Denmark, Hesse, Mexico, North Germany, Sweden, Norway, Würtemberg; but in Mexico that presumption may be rebutted by proof.

From this enumeration is seen the diversity and conflicting character of these treaties. Against some of them, like those with Austria and Great Britain, nothing can be said, as they are simply a recognition by international agreement of the municipal laws of this country on the subject—the only basis on which naturalization treaties should be concluded. But the treaty with the North German Union, now embracing the whole German Empire, upsets our municipal laws in this respect, since it deals with our naturalized citizens as citizens only in a qualified sense, (an expression invented by Judge Hoar when Attorney-General,) who retain their original nationality in a dormant state, to revive, even against their will, by the mere residence in their native country for more than two years. This arrangement is contrary to the Constitution of the United States, contrary to the interpretation put upon the fourteenth amendment by the Supreme Court, and contrary to the act of Congress of 1868, re-enacted in 1874.

If this treaty be a law at all, it is as much a law concerning Americans naturalized in Germany and returning here as it is concerning naturalized citizens of German birth returning to their first country. In that respect it conflicts with all the acts of Congress passed on the subject, and never yet has that body seen fit to change its laws in order to conform them to this peculiar treaty. Nor could it do so. For then the rule of naturalization would not be uniform, and any such act would be held unconstitutional.

There are repeated decisions of the Supreme Court that "under the general law of nations a treaty does not operate of itself to effect the purposes of its provisions, but requires, as respects infraterritorial operation, to be carried into effect by the sovereign power," which for this purpose rests in Congress. (Foster vs. Neilson, 2 Peters, page 253; United States vs. Arredondo, ibid., page 692; United States vs. Perchemann, 7 Peters, page 51.) And "a treaty which requires the action of Congress to give it effect is not the supreme law of the land until such action is taken." (Turner vs. American Baptist Missionary Union, 5 McLean, page 344.) And still more explicit is the decision that "though a treaty is a law of the land under the Constitution, Congress may repeal it so far as it is a municipal law, provided its subject-matter is within the legislative powers of Congress." (Taylor vs. Morton, 2 Curtis, C. C., page 454.) The act of 1868, re-enacted as section 2000 of the Revised Statutes of 1874, being supplemental to the general naturalization act of 1802 and its various amendments, and as all must necessarily be construed together, being in pari materia, is therefore now the law of the land, and should control the executive branch of the Government in its dealings with citizens of the United States, whether native or naturalized, and not this treaty, the provisions of which have never been given effect to in this country by appropriate legislation proceeding from the only body that has constitutional power over the subject, and that is—Congress.

But suppose I were mistaken in this argument, there is another very grave objection to the validity of this treaty. It proposes to take from a naturalized German, and against his will and even protest, his rights of an American citizen upon a mere residence for two years or more in his native country. "Naturalization," as was said by the Supreme Court at a very early day, "is a judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction," (Stark vs. Chesapeake Insurance Company, 7 Cranch, page 420,) and "the decree of the court is conclusive evidence of the legal naturalization of the party." (Spratt vs. Spratt, 4 Peters, page 393.) This doctrine has been steadily adhered to, and it was afterward held that "an order naturalizing an alien is conclusive, if by a court of competent jurisdiction, upon the question of citizenship, it cannot be impeached collaterally." (The Acorn, 2 Abbott's C. and D. C. Reports, page 434.) Here, then, we have an alien clothed with full citizenship by a solemn decree or judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction; by that decree he has acquired, as it were, a sacred right of property in such citizenship, just as he would have in lands, houses, or ships, had the decree been concerning them. Can it be assumed that without any voluntary act on the part of that citizen himself, without his consent, and even against his protest, the Federal Government may step in and of its own mere motion and pleasure, either through the treaty power or by an act of Congress, could strip him of his rights of citizenship, and thus practically reverse and annul the judgment of a court? It cannot be done. "Congress has no judicial power, and therefore cannot award a new trial or reverse a judgment." (Nock vs. The United States, 2 Nott & Huntington.) It is true that the citizen may expatriate himself, assume a new allegiance, or resume his old one; but that is a voluntary act, and cannot be made compulsory, as it would amount to a deprivation by treaty or act of Congress of those rights which a court of competent jurisdiction adjudged him to possess and enjoy. "Expatriation is a fundamental right," (Stoughton vs. Tailor, 2 Paine, page 652,) and whatever some of our courts may have decided in this respect, that fundamental right was fully and fitly recognized by Congress in the act of 1868, (15 Statutes at Large, page 223, and section 1999 Revised Statutes of the United States.) The only thing that may be said in favor of these treaties is that they recognize this fundamental right of expatriation; but even in this tardy acceptance of the American doctrine the treaty with the North German Union is defective, as it concedes only a qualified recognition of the principle, and still maintains the original allegiance to resume its sway and its hold upon the man, whether he will or no.

But "expatriation means not only emigration to a foreign country, but also naturalization in that country," said Judge Black as Attorney-General of the United States, and he was within the law as expounded by the Supreme Court. In the case of Murray vs. The Charming Betsy, 2 Cranch, 64—by the way, not a breach of promise suit, as might be presumed from the names of the parties, but an admiralty case—that court held that "an American citizen, domiciled in a foreign country, who has taken an oath of allegiance to the foreign sovereign is not under the protection of the United States." According to this rule the converse is also true, that the gaining of a domicile abroad, without the voluntary assumption of allegiance to the foreign state, does not deprive the American citizen of his right to the protection of his Government; but being such citizen, either by birth or by virtue of a judicial decree of naturalization, he is entitled to demand it as a matter of right.

Having shown that this treaty in its very inception had no warrant in the Constitution, that its provisions are opposed to the will of Congress expressed as late as 1874, and that its fundamental idea has been ruled against by our courts, it is now proper to inquire whether it could be defended on any grounds of necessity, policy, or expediency.

There was really no necessity for it. The chief and only trouble arose from the steel-clad militaryism of Prussia, which compels every able-bodied male subject of the age of twenty to serve for three years in the army. From this liability to military duty sprang the demand of the Prussian government, that an American citizen of Prussian birth, even in case he had been brought to this country by his parents in tender childhood, but who in after life, and at mature age, revisited the home of his youth, was liable to punishment as a "deserter from the army" in which he never served. There have been numerous instances of this kind, and they gave occasion for a protracted correspondence between the American minister at Berlin and the Prussian authorities, and the latter, with pardonable unctuousness, pointed to a dictum of Henry Wheaton, the American writer on international law, to the effect that whenever a Prussian naturalized in the United States returns to his original country, his "native domicile and natural character revert." Even such an eminent jurist and statesman seems to have overlooked for the moment that on the 1st of May, 1828, a treaty was concluded between the King of Prussia and the American Republic, which in article 1 declares that "American citizens" are at liberty to sojourn and reside in all parts whatsoever of Prussia, and shall enjoy security and protection." Mr. Bancroft, however, was not unaware of the existence of this treaty, for he himself, in an official note of October 1, 1873, to Mr. von Balan, the German under-secretary of state, calls the latter's attention to it. The terms of that treaty are broad enough to insure the safety of every American citizen, whether native or naturalized, while residing within the dominions of Prussia. Since 1828 that kingdom has become greatly enlarged, having, by the force of events in 1866, absorbed a number of minor states. By this enlargement the kingdom of Prussia, at the time Mr. Bancroft made the treaty of 1868, contained within its limits all those parts of Germany whence perhaps two-thirds of our German emigration had come, and by the rules of international law the treaty of 1828 with the Prussia of that year applied in 1866, and since, to all the other provinces that had been incorporated with the kingdom. And with the other states now in the German Empire we have long had similar treaties like that with Prussia of 1828.

It was undoubtedly upon this treaty that General Cass predicated his memorable declaration contained in the dispatch he sent as Secretary of State to Mr. Joseph Wright, American minister at Berlin, on July 8, 1859, and also in his letter to Mr. A. V. Hope, of June 14, 1859, that "a naturalized citizen, should he return to his native country, he returns as an American citizen, and in no other character," and, as such "American citizen," was entitled to the protection of the treaty of 1828. Hence, so far as the kingdom of Prussia and, in fact, all the other German states with whom we had similar treaties were concerned, there seems to have been no necessity for any such new arrangement if, as should have been done, the position taken by General Cass, and known and spoken of all over Europe as the American doctrine, had been strongly maintained. On September 28, 1858, Mr. Wright wrote home to the State Department that "if a decided and firm stand be taken by our Government it will lead to good results." That "decided and firm stand" was taken by General Cass, who informed the Prussian foreign minister, Baron Mannteuffel, that "the demands of the government of Prussia were inconsistent with the rights of United States citizens under the treaty," meaning the treaty of 1828. This "decided and firm stand" did "lead to good results," as no further conscription of American naturalized citizens of Prussian birth into the military service of that kingdom is mentioned in the records until some time between 1862 and 1864, when we ourselves had recourse to conscription, and the military ardor then prevailing in our Government and among the people led many to look with scorn upon those who evaded military service. Secretary Seward was probably guided by the same sentiments when, in September, 1863, he wrote to Minister Judd, at Berlin, that as some Europeans, naturalized in America, return to their native country to avoid military service here and impertinently invoke the protection of the United States to avoid military service there also, Mr. Judd should make no further applications in these military cases without specific instructions. But when our war had closed the correspondence was resumed, and culminated finally in the treaty of 1868 upon the suggestion of Chancellor Bismarck himself.

A more resolute maintenance of the rights of American citizens secured by the treaty of 1828 would have been the proper course to adopt, and then there could have arisen no cause for the making of a new treaty. It was therefore unnecessary and, as an abandonment of the true American doctrine proclaimed by General Cass and recognized as such in Europe—an abandonment, too, made at the solicitation of the German chancellor—the proceeding was undignified.

But it was also impolitic. It created a distinction between the rights of American citizens not known to the Constitution and the laws, nor ever before raised in any previous treaty. If permitted to stand it will only cumulate the difficulties it was avowedly framed to blot out. To what extent the confusion wrought by this treaty has already grown is evident from the fact that even so able and clear-headed a lawyer as Attorney-General Pierrepont could, by interpreting this treaty, in his opinion of June 26, 1875, in the Steinkauler case, come to the remarkable and rather startling conclusion that a man may have two nationalities, one natural and the other acquired. Had he said unnatural in juxtaposition to natural, Judge Pierrepont would have been nearer right—at one and the same time—which is about as true as saying that a horse of one color is also a horse of another color.

> Young Steinkauler (says the Attorney-General) is a native-born American citizen; there is no law of the United States under which his father or any other person can deprive him of his birthright; he can return to America * * * and become President of the United States.

Yet this native-born American citizen, with a prospective claim to the Presidency of the Republic, is held to be also a subject of the German Empire by virtue of this treaty, and bound as such to serve three years in the German army, five or seven years after that in the reserve, and for any number of years, and until the white locks of age cover his temples, in the Landwehr and Landsturm. Should Judge Pierrepont's prophecy turn true and young Steinkauler be one day chosen President of the United States, it could happen under this peculiar interpretation of this treaty that upon the outbreak of war in Europe we might see a German officer walk coolly into the White House and serve an order upon the President to report immediately for active duty at the military barracks of Berlin or some other garrison of the empire. Of course, this is the reductio ad absurdum, but a most apt process of reasoning to expose the complications resulting from the treaty, and which are so great that even the clear and logical mind of the Attorney-General has been befogged.

It is this very case of Steinkauler that brings into prominence all the incongruities and inconsistencies of this treaty perhaps more glaringly than any other of which the public have yet heard. His father was, as the Attorney-General says, a Prussian by birth, who emigrated to this country in 1848, was naturalized in 1854, and his son was born in Saint Louis in 1855; hence they were both at the time citizens of the United States. In 1859 the father went to Europe with his family, as he had a perfect right to do, and took up his residence at the celebrated and fashionable summer resort and watering-place, Wiesbaden, in the Duchy of Nassau, visited annually by many American tourists. There he has remained ever since. Now, the Duchy of Nassau was, until 1866, an independent and sovereign principality, in its government as foreign to Prussia as any other country. Hence Steinkauler, being a Prussian by birth, did not return to his native country, and to him not even the antiquated dictum of Wheaton applied, that "his native domicile and natural character had reverted." He lived there unmolested as an American citizen, and had as little obligation to the King of Prussia as to the Emperor of China. But in 1866 war came and the Duke of Nassau sided with the Bundestag at Frankfort and with Austria against Prussia. The result was that Nassau, along with Hanover and Hesse-Cassel, was conquered and merged as a province in the Prussian kingdom. These events had really nothing whatever to do with the nationality of Steinkauler and of his family, who, as American citizens, were foreigners in Nassau. The conquest of the territory and its native inhabitants did not, as it could not, transfer the allegiance of resident foreigners, and if Steinkauler, the father, had himself been an American citizen by birth, such would doubtless have been the ruling of the Attorney-General. But here comes in the impolitic and mischievous distinction made by this treaty. Steinkauler, the elder, was only a naturalized citizen, and therefore the conquest of Nassau by the Prussians in 1866, when he was legally a foreigner, changed him and all his family into Prussian subjects, though his son is admitted to be an American citizen by birth, and but for this treaty both father and son would have been protected by the treaty of 1828. This is precisely a case foreshadowed in my speech in this House two years ago in these words:

A native of any part of that country, (the German Empire,) naturalized here, is by the terms of that treaty re-incorporated among the subjects of the emperor after a residence anywhere in Germany, though hundreds of miles away from the place of his birth, for even a day over two years.

What was then supposed as merely a remote possibility has now actually happened in the case of Steinkauler, père et fils, and has been ruled by the Attorney-General to be according to the treaty of 1868, though it would seem that an inspection of the treaty of 1828, securing to American citizens the unmolested enjoyment of residence anywhere in the Prussian dominions—and Nassau has been a Prussian province since 1866—might have brought the State Department as well as the Department of Justice to a different conclusion.

A treaty that is so unnecessary and impolitic, like the "naturalization treaty" of 1868, and involves also an undignified submission to a foreign demand, cannot be expedient. Aside from the want of constitutional authority to make it and which destroyed its validity ab initio, it proved itself in its results the reverse from beneficial. In a letter from Berlin to the State Department, written June 30, 1874, Mr. Bancroft congratulates himself "upon the degree of comfort secured to our German fellow-citizens by the peaceful security which they obtain for their visits in Germany by the treaty of naturalization." But this "peaceful security" was solemnly pledged to them, in common with all other American citizens, in the treaty of 1828, and a firm resolution by the Government of this Republic to exact faithful and rigid compliance with the stipulations of that treaty would be far better and more in accordance with the true American spirit than is done by the provisions of the treaty of 1868.

Whatever may be done with the German treaty, our duty is plain. Let us unfurl the proud flag of the Republic, with the declaration inscribed on its folds that an American citizen, no matter where born, remains such wherever he may be, and his country will defend and protect him in his rights until he himself renounces his allegiance by voluntarily assuming another. Let us proclaim to the world that all may come and find a home under the banner of our Union; and, once assimilated with ourselves as citizens of the United States, no power on earth except their free volition shall despoil them of the high privileges inherent in American citizenship, nor interfere with their right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

When next year this treaty shall expire and our diplomatic agents shall consider what may take its place, let us not have the humiliation of the old treaty; and, above all, let us avoid the incorporation of the un-American doctrines of this bill in the sacred relations with the great German power.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire now, as I may not have an opportunity again, to move two amendments to the bill to be considered as pending.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. REAGAN. I move to amend section 4 of the bill by striking out all of the section after the word "State" in line 3, and also to amend by striking out section 5 of the bill.

I have only read the bill since the gentleman from West Virginia has been discussing it, and am not therefore prepared to discuss the questions raised by these amendments in any satisfactory manner. I propose to limit what I have to say to stating what occurs to my mind as the exceptionable features of the two portions of the bill I propose to strike out.

The part of the section I propose to strike out has for its object to confer upon the alien the same rights citizens have of inheriting ownership of real estate anywhere within the jurisdiction of the United States—I mean where the jurisdiction of the United States extends within the United States. I only have this to say, and I say it now more for the purpose of calling the attention of the gentleman from West Virginia and those who take an interest in the bill than for the purpose of discussing it. It makes an innovation upon the laws of our own country. It goes further than the laws of any civilized country under the sun within my knowledge. The policy of all governments, so far as I am advised, and I have somewhat carefully looked into this subject in connection with other questions in a judicial point of view within the last year or so—the policy of all countries is to exclude foreigners from ownership of the soil within their several limits. This proposes that all aliens or foreigners may inherit and hold realty in this country the same as natives or naturalized citizens. Foreigners cannot inherit or hold land in Great Britain. They cannot inherit or hold land in France. They cannot inherit or hold land in Spain They cannot inherit or hold land in Prussia or in Austria. They cannot inherit or hold land in Mexico or in any of the Central or South American governments I know of. That rule which is of so universal application, that rule which has been maintained traditionally by all nations, must rest on a great political philosophy which no nation should attempt to overthrow without the strongest inducements and upon the clearest reasons.

I will not attempt now to go into the discussion generally of the reasons which prevent governments from alowing aliens to hold lands within their limits. There are in history some striking instances of the effect of allowing aliens to hold land. It is known that under the reign of Catharine she induced her emissaries to go into Poland and acquire territory there, in order to give her power within that territory to help her in her scheme to destroy that country and turn it to her own use. The general theory is that the land should belong to the citizen. The common law is that there is no inheritable blood in the alien. I believe in this the civil law agrees with it. But whether it does precisely in this or not, it is true that the principle that aliens cannot inherit and hold land is recognized by all countries.

I know that in a treaty entered into some time ago with Prussia we have a stipulation that citizens of Prussia shall have the rights in our country which American citizens are given by the government of Prussia in that country. But this, if I remember correctly, relates to personalty and not to realty. And there is no treaty or law which goes to the extent, in regulating the property rights of aliens, of recognizing their right to inherit and hold lands in this country. There are good reasons why the law should not be changed. I do not enter into the discussion of them now, but merely call attention to them to induce examination and discussion of the subject by others who have the bill in charge and feel an interest in it.

The other amendment I propose is to strike out section 5 of the bill. Without having given the subject full consideration, it is not to be expected that I can enter into an argument at this time very satisfactory to myself or convincing to others. But I simply desire to state a few reasons why it seems to me this section should not be allowed to stand in the bill.

In the first place it undertakes to determine who is married, and to some extent to regulate marital rights. My understanding is that there is no power in this Government to regulate the subjects of marriage and divorce, the settlement of successions, or the determination of the line of descent, unless it may be so far as relates to the legislation of the Federal Government for the District of Columbia and for the Territories. But this goes beyond that. In lines 10 and 11, it provides that the marriages spoken of in this section 5—

Shall be valid to all intents and purposes throughout the United States.

This, then, undertakes to determine what shall be a lawful marriage in the State of Virginia or in the State of Maryland, or in any other State in this Union. I do not apprehend that the State courts administering the State laws would be likely to respect this as a law which the Constitution and their duty would require them to enforce to that extent.

But there are other objections to this section it seems to me, to which I desire to call attention. The section provides:

That a marriage in a foreign country between citizens of the United States, or between a citizen of the United States and an alien, unless forbidden by the law of the country in which it takes place, may be contracted and solemnized in such manner and form as may be prescribed by the Secretary of State, &c.

Now rights as a general rule in this country are made to depend not only upon the power possessed by the authority legislating but upon legislative authority. This seems to me to this extent to make the Secretary of State a legislator to prescribe the rules under which marriages may be solemnized. If that be so, it seems to me to be an innovation upon our ideas of separating the different departments of the Government one from the other and limiting each to the discharge of its own constitutional duty. It seems to me it should be the law-making power of the Government that prescribes how marriages shall be celebrated, and that it is not competent for this Congress, if it has jurisdiction of the subject, to delegate to an executive or any other officer or person the authority to make laws. The power of legislation cannot be delegated by Congress. Legislation must be performed by Congress where it has jurisdiction to enact laws. But this authorizes the marriages to be solemnized in such manner and form as may be prescribed by the Secretary of State.

As I have said, the several States prescribe the mode of solemnizing marriage, and the effect of it, and who shall do it. Their laws are only to a limited extent of extraterritorial authority. The rights acquired and possessed by the marriage relation depend upon the law of the forum in which the parties appear and where they live, with a few limitations; but that is the rule. This undertakes, it seems to me, to do what this House ought not to attempt to do. It undertakes to regulate a domestic relation which belongs, it seems to me, to the legislatures of the different States. This section attempts to extend the authority of Congress in this matter not only to the District of Columbia and to the Territories, but to extend its authority in the regulation of domestic relations, the manner of marriage, and the effect of marriage into the several States. I cannot think that such a law can be constitutional.

But in addition to the objection that in the first place this seems intended to confer legislative authority upon the Secretary of State, and to give an effect to marriages under this law which, it seems to me, can hardly be sustained under the Constitution, it goes further and clothes the diplomatic agents, consuls-general, and consuls with certain judicial functions, if I understand the meaning of the bill. And if I am correct in assuming that from line 11 down on page 6 it does attempt to invest these consular officers and diplomatic agents with judicial functions, it seems to me that it is in that respect unconstitutional, and that we ought not to attempt to do such a thing. The section says:

It is made the duty of such diplomatic agent or consul-general or consul, on being satisfied of the identity of the parties—

He has to pass judgment upon this matter, and judicially determine as to the status of these persons and their relations to the Government by determining the identity of the parties—and that at least one of them is a citizen of the United States, and that the marriage is not prohibited by the laws of the country, and on being requested to be present at any such marriage, to indicate, &c.

These constitute briefly some of the objections which have occurred to me to section 4, which I have proposed to amend, and to section 5, which I propose to strike out. I do not ask for a vote on the amendments now. My object was to bring them before the House and to the attention of those in charge of this bill, in whose ability to grapple with these questions I have great confidence—more indeed than I would have had in my own if I had been charged with the investigation of the subject. I place these amendments before the House with these crude suggestions merely for the purpose of directing attention to these provisions of the bill, which seem to me to introduce new features, dangerous features, unconstitutional features in some respects, and features that cannot fail to give trouble to the judicial tribunals and involve difficulty in their consideration and future determination.

Mr. COX. Before the gentleman takes his seat, I would like to inquire if he has considered the proposition whether there is any authority in the treaty-making power to regulate naturalization or citizenship. Is not that matter to be determined judicially?

Mr. REAGAN. It is to be fixed by the legislative authority, and its interpretation is to be made by the judiciary.

Mr. COX. That is the principal question which I desire to have considered.

Mr. FAULKNER. The Committee on Foreign Affairs are very much pleased to hear any objections that can be made to this bill, and also to receive and consider at as early a day as possible any amendments to the bill which may be proposed by gentlemen. I do not design to ask for a vote upon this bill to-day; I have made arrangements to occupy only time enough now to explain the character of the bill and to move such amendments as have been directed by the Committee on Foreign Affairs. I now propose that the further consideration of the bill be postponed until Thursday next, at one o'clock, and that the bill, with the amendments reported from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, the amendments moved by the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. REAGAN,] and the substitute proposed by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX,] be printed for the use of the House.

Mr. KELLEY. I would suggest to the gentleman that the tariff bill comes up on next Wednesday as a special order for that day and from day to day until disposed of. That, I think, was the order made upon motion of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, [Mr. MORRISON.]

Mr. FAULKNER. I then would have only to yield my position, if that is the case.

Mr. KELLEY. I thought it proper to make the suggestion to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] modify his motion?

Mr. FAULKNER. There is no need to modify it. This bill will take its place, to be superseded by any prior order that may have been made.

The motion of Mr. FAULKNER was then agreed to.

REDEMPTION OF LANDS SOLD FOR DIRECT TAXES.

Mr. YOUNG. On Tuesday last I introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3144) to provide for and regulate the manner of redeeming lands sold for direct taxes. It was by mistake referred to the Committee on Public Lands. I ask that the Committee on Public Lands be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

J. C. BEALES AND ANITA ESETER.

Mr. COX, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3193) for the relief of John Charles Beales and Anita Eseter, citizens of the United States and residents of the city of New York; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims, and ordered to be printed.

FREEDMAN'S SAVINGS AND TRUST COMPANY.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I now call up the special order for to-day, being the bill (H. R. No. 2828) to amend the act entitled "An act amending the charter of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, and for other purposes," approved June 20, 1874.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That in case of the resignation, death, or disability of any of the commissioners of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, selected and qualified under the provisions of section 7 of the act entitled "An act amending the charter of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, and for other purposes," approved June 20, 1874, their survivors or survivor and successors shall be invested with the possession and legal title to all the property of said company for the purposes of this act and the act of June 20, 1874, and shall have all the rights, prerogatives, and privileges, and perform all the duties that were conferred and enjoined upon the three commissioners mentioned in said act of June 20, 1874: Provided, That, if all of said commissioners shall resign, die, or become disabled before the final execution of their trust, then the Secretary of the Treasury shall appoint a commissioner to perform the duties imposed by this act and the act to which it is amendatory, who, upon giving a bond for the amount of $100,000, in the manner and form provided for in the next succeeding section, and taking an oath honestly and faithfully to perform his duties, shall be clothed and invested with the same rights, powers, privileges, and prerogatives, and shall perform the same duties that were conferred and enjoined upon the three commissioners mentioned in the act of June 20, 1874, and upon their survivors or survivor and successors by this act: And provided further, That no change hereafter made of said commissioners, or any of them, shall in any way impede or delay any case or cases instituted by or against said commissioners or commissioner, but every such case shall, upon suggestion of such change, and due entry thereof on the dockets of the respective courts in which they may be pending, be proceeded with in the same manner as if such change had not been made.

SEC. 2. That, in case of vacancy by the resignation, death, or disability of any of the present commissioners, the same shall be filled by the Secretary of the Treasury, and the survivors or survivor and new commissioners or commissioner shall give new and separate bonds to the United States, with good sureties, in the penal sum of $100,000, conditioned for the faithful discharge of their duties as such commissioners, and shall take an oath faithfully to perform their duties, which bonds shall be executed to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury, be approved by him and filed in the office of the First Comptroller of the Treasury, and shall operate as a discharge or cancellation of the joint bond of said present commissioners as to any and all subsequent acts of said survivors, survivor, and successors.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed, if in his judgment not detrimental to the trust imposed upon them, to accept the resignation of any of the commissioners of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company which may be tendered to him; and if all said commissioners shall resign he shall appoint one to succeed them and to complete the work of closing up the business and affairs of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company: Provided, That such sole commissioner so appointed shall not be one of the former commissioners nor a trustee of said savings and trust company, and shall not be vested with any powers, rights, or privileges as such until he has executed bond with good security in the penal sum of $100,000, as provided for in section 2 of this act.

SEC. 4. That said commissioners or commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall have the right and authority to compound and compromise debts due to and liabilities of the company.

SEC. 5. That whenever said commissioners or commissioner shall be prepared to make a dividend to the depositors, the United States Treasurer shall, at their or his request, place in one of the depositories of the United States, located in each of the cities where the several branches of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company were located, an amount sufficient to pay the depositors of said branch, and for the purpose of securing the safe-keeping and proper disbursement of said funds so placed, they are hereby declared to be public moneys of the United States; and the officers of said depositories shall pay the depositors, or their assignees, and take receipts from them in such way and manner as shall be prescribed by said commissioners or commissioner, and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That where there are no depositories of the United States, then said commissioners or commissioner may, with the advice and consent of the Secretary of the Treasury, pay the depositors in said localities in such way as they or he may deem best.

SEC. 6. That said commissioners or commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may prescribe such forms as they or he may deem right and proper for the depositors to transfer their claims; but no assignment of such claims shall be valid unless it is signed by the depositor, or, if dead, by his legal representative, and is accompanied by the pass-book or other evidence of the company's indebtedness, and sworn proof to the satisfaction of the commissioners or commissioner that the assignment was executed by the proper person in good faith and for valuable consideration: Provided, That in case the person making the assignment is unable to write, a sworn statement of two witnesses, setting forth that they witnessed the execution of the assignment, and know the person who executed it to be the depositor, the execution of the assignment of whose account they witnessed: And provided further, That no commissioner shall be directly or indirectly interested in any assignment or purchase of any depositor's claim or interest on pain of immediate dismissal by the Secretary of the Treasury, forfeiture of salary or arrears of salary due him, and also shall be deemed guilty of misdemeanor, and punishable by fine and imprisonment as other cases of misdemeanor are punished by law.

SEC. 7. That said commissioners or commissioner shall make payments to those depositors only whose pass-books have been properly verified and balanced, unless said pass-books have been lost or destroyed; then, upon satisfactory proof of such loss or destruction, and the amount due them, they or he may pay as though they had pass-books; but all claims not presented to the commissioners or commissioner for examination and audit within two years from and after the passage of this act, as well as all dividends declared upon audited accounts not called for within two years from the date of their declaration, shall be barred, and their amounts shall inure to the benefit of the other depositors of the company.

SEC. 8. That said commissioners or commissioner are hereby authorized and directed, by consent and approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to employ some suitable and proper attorney-at-law to look into and investigate the manner in which said company has been managed by its trustees and others having control of the same; and if, in the judgment of said attorney, the affairs of said company have been mismanaged, or managed fraudulently and corruptly, then, upon the advice of the said attorney, and with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, they or he shall cause such civil and criminal proceedings to be instituted in the courts against those participating in said mismanagement, or fraudulent and corrupt management, as they or he shall deem right and proper to attain the ends of justice. They or he shall pay fees and costs of suits and all other proper expenses out of the funds in their or his hands as commissioners or commissioner aforesaid.

SEC. 9. That said commissioners or commissioner shall, by the fifteenth day of each annual session of Congress, make a written report to Congress of the progress made by them up to the first day of said session; and, upon the final execution of their trust, they or he shall render an account of their receipts and expenditures to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall cause the same to be examined by the accounting officers of the Treasury, and, if found correct, the bonds or bond of said commissioners or commissioner shall be surrendered to them.

SEC. 10. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to said commissioners or commissioner, out of any public money not otherwise appropriated, interest, at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum, on their average monthly balances in the Treasury of the United States, accounting from the time they commenced to make deposits; which interest shall, by said commissioners or commissioner, be accounted for in the same manner as the other assets of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company.

SEC. 11. That the compensation of said commissioners shall not exceed the sum of $6,000 per annum, and shall be apportioned among them by the Secretary of the Treasury according to the services rendered and time given by each; but no one commissioner shall at any time receive more than $4,000.

Mr. DOUGLAS. It is not my desire to enter into any extended discussion of this bill at this time; but the committee reporting it not having been unanimous, and a desire having been expressed by my colleague on the committee from Alabama [Mr. BRADFORD] to move some amendments to this bill, I will yield the floor to him.

Mr. BRADFORD. I move to amend the bill by striking out the first three sections and inserting in lieu thereof that which I send to the Clerk's desk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to select and appoint, without unnecessary delay, a good and competent man to take charge of and wind up the affairs of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company; and the person so appointed shall be styled commissioner of the Freedman's Bank, and before entering upon the duties of his office he shall be required to execute a bond, in the penalty of $100,000, with good and sufficient sureties, payable to the United States, and conditioned that he will well and faithfully perform all the duties required of him by law, which said bond shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, and filed in the Office of the Comptroller of the Treasury.

SEC. 2. That the said Secretary shall have and retain supervision over the conduct of said commissioner, and for malfeasance, incompetency, or other cause, to the said Secretary seeming sufficient, he shall remove the said commissioner and appoint another in his stead, who shall qualify in like manner as is hereinbefore prescribed, and shall succeed to all the rights, powers, duties, and liabilities attaching to the office of commissioner under this act. And the appointment and qualification of the said commissioner shall operate the removal from place of the present commissioners of the said company, who shall, upon the demand of the commissioner herein provided for, make immediate settlement with him and give him a full and circumstantial account of their management of the affairs of said company and of the condition of its assets and liabilities, and shall deliver to him all the property, books, papers, conveyances, evidences of debt, and other things belonging to said company, and shall thereupon be discharged from all liability upon their bond, except for breaches thereof theretofore committed.

SEC. 3. That for the purposes of this act the title to all property, real and personal, all rights, credits, equities, and powers heretofore belonging or attaching to said company or to said commissioners shall vest in the said commissioner instantly upon his qualification as aforesaid; and in his name as such commissioner he shall institute and defend any and every suit or legal proceeding which may be necessary to enforce or protect the rights of said company or of the commissioners thereof; and any and every pending suit or legal proceeding to which said commissioners are a party shall be reviewed in favor of or against said commissioner, as the case may be, upon motion of the party seeking the revivor; and no such proceeding shall be abated or delayed by the removal of the said commissioners herein declared.

Mr. HURLBUT. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. The last I knew of this bill it was in Committee of the Whole, and I would like to know by what process it has got out of Committee of the Whole into the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair was informed by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DOUGLAS] that this bill was not in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DOUGLAS. That was a mistake in the journalizing of the proceedings of that day, which I had not observed until my attention was called to it. There was no necessity for its going to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HURLBUT. It is so stated on the Calendar.

Mr. DOUGLAS. That is a mistake in the Calendar, which I hope will be corrected.

Mr. HURLBUT. The gentleman states that the Clerk informs him that there was a mistake in the Journal or the Calendar, one or the other. We ought to have that corrected before we go on with the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed by the Clerk that this bill is in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. HURLBUT. In that case any further discussion of it in the House is out of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Then the motion of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DOUGLAS] should be that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering this bill.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Very well. So that we get at the bill, I do not care whether it be considered in Committee of the Whole or in the House.

Mr. DUNNELL. I would inquire whether there is any intention to bring this bill to a vote to-day——

Mr. DOUGLAS. Not at all.

Mr. DUNNELL. Or whether we are to gain anything by the continuance of the session?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Virginia move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Yes, sir.

Mr. DURHAM. Before that motion is put, I desire to give notice to the gentleman in charge of this bill that at the proper time I shall move to strike out one of the sections of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No discussion on the bill is in order in the House. The bill is in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DURHAM. I supposed we had the right to give notice in the House of intended amendments.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to inquire whether it is proposed to take any final action on this bill to-day?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is not informed on that point.

Mr. HOLMAN. If it is not proposed to act finally on the bill to-day, I would suggest to the gentleman from Virginia the propriety of permitting the Committee on Appropriations to proceed with the legislative appropriation bill for an hour or an hour and a half, and then have an early adjournment. [After consultation with several members.] I will make no further suggestion on the subject.

Mr. HURLBUT. Before the House goes into Committee of the Whole on this bill, I wish to be informed distinctly by the gentleman in charge of it whether any action is to be taken upon it to-day?

Mr. DOUGLAS. None whatever.

The motion of Mr. DOUGLAS was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. HOSKINS in the chair,) and proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2828) to amend the act entitled "An act amending the charter of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, and for other purposes," approved June 20, 1874.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that this bill has already been read in the House. If there be no objection, the first reading of the bill in Committee of the Whole will be dispensed with.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BRADFORD] desires to submit certain amendments. These amendments will not be in order until the general debate on the bill is terminated. When the bill comes up for amendment and discussion under the five-minute rule the amendments can be offered.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I suppose the gentleman's amendments can be read as part of his argument.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that the amendments have already been read before the House went into Committee of the Whole. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BRADFORD] is entitled to the floor for one hour.

Mr. BRADFORD. Mr. Chairman, there is a duty devolving upon Congress to provide by appropriate legislation for the honest and competent marshaling and administration of the assets of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company. This duty we owe to more than 70,000 poor and ignorant colored people, principally of the South, who are creditors of this institution. It is a duty that this Congress ought not to shirk. It is a duty that arises not only out of the general supervision of matters of this sort which inheres in this body, but it is a duty that springs also out of the fact that Congress is to some extent responsible for the losses that have been occasioned to the numerous depositors of this bank.

True, there is legislation now in the statute-books of the country affecting this question. Provision is already made by law to collect and distribute the assets of this concern. But, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that further remedial legislation is needed in order that these poor colored people may realize all that they are entitled to receive from these assets.

There has been a disagreement in the minds of members of the committee as to what legislation is needed. That disagreement has sprung from a doubt of the constitutional competency of Congress to remove from place the three commissioners who now have charge of the bank and to substitute in their place a single commissioner. The majority of the committee concur with me in the propriety of doing such a thing, if they could believe that Congress has the power to do it. The doubt is simply as to the law—not a doubt as to the propriety of the measure. So far as I know all concur in the propriety of reducing the number of commissioners to one, and giving him the sole management of the entire concern.

Now, Mr. Chairman, what are the objections to this change? It is said by the chairman of the committee, [Mr. DOUGLAS,] who does not concur with me in opinion upon this matter, that the amendment which I propose at the proper time to offer is retroactive in its effect, and therefore would be unconstitutional and void should it ever ripen into a law. Sir, I cannot assent to this proposition for various reasons. The position which I assume in regard to this matter is founded in law as well as in reason, and judging from the testimony which has been adduced before the Committee on the Freedman's Bank, it would be wrong, grievously wrong on the part of Congress to leave the affairs of this bank longer in the hands of these commissioners. To this matter I shall call attention directly and to all the facts in the history of the concern that reflect any light upon the character of the legislation proposed.

Now, what sort of an organization is this? It was instituted by an act of Congress approved March 3, 1865. Divers persons, men eminent for various services, for high character, and all that sort of thing, were selected from different parts of this broad land as trustees of this institution. One would think that these were the persons who were to have controlled the institution, the persons into whose management it was to be committed. In the charter of the company there is a section which indicates the purposes for which this great, this colossal banking institution was organized.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That the general business and object of the corporation hereby created shall be to receive on deposit such sums of money as may be from time to time offered therefor by or on behalf of persons heretofore held in slavery in the United States or their descendants, and invest the same in the stock, bonds, Treasury notes, or other securities of the United States.

Now, Mr. Chairman, some time in the year 1874, after millions of money had been gathered into the coffers of this institution, Congress amended that charter. It is an amendment to that amendment which I propose, and which I think the circumstances of this institution imperatively demand.

Ah! as soon as it was ascertained that it was possible for the officers of this bank to gain the control of many millions of money, that very moment they applied to Congress for more liberal measures in regard to the investment of its funds. Too narrow, far too narrow for those who were thus interested in this matter was the field of investment prescribed to them by law. It will be observed that, by the section I have just read defining the scope and purpose of this institution, investments were limited to United States securities. If that section had continued to be the charter of the rights, privileges, and duties of this bank, it would, under competent management, have been the grandest and most beneficent fiscal institution ever established upon this continent. But, sir, its plethoric coffers were too tempting to those who were its managers. They wanted an opportunity to loan out its money upon some sort of insufficient security, and to disburse it without restraint from any safeguards of the rights of those who were interested in it. Therefore, I say, they applied to Congress to have enacted into a law the amendment which is found in the act approved the 20th of June, 1874.

Mr. DOUGLAS. It was in 1870.

Mr. BRADFORD. No; I allude to the amendment of 1874.

Mr. DOUGLAS. The first amendment was in 1870.

